Film Men Hold Mass Meeting

WILL TAX THEATERS THREE CENTS PER SEAT FOR CAMPAIGN FUND

IF anyone doubts that the film men are in earnest in their fight against the Sunday closing law their opinion would have been changed if they had attended the motion picture industrial rally held in Wurlitzer Hall, which was attended by owners, managers, exhibitors and influential factors of the motion picture industry, clergymen, and scores of disinterested onlookers. This mass meeting was conducted under the auspices of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and the Exhibitors' League of America.

The text of every speech and plea was the determination to fight any law which closes the motion picture houses on the Sabbath day. Some of the speakers pointed out that the entertainment obtained in a motion picture theater is an influence for good morals, good citizenship and the maintenance of law and order on Sunday. There appeared to be a unanimity of opinion that not only are pictures, properly presented, instructive and uplifting, but a deterrent on crime in any large community.

For the purpose of fighting the recent decision of the Appelate Division the theater owners and managers have engaged legal talent represented by John B. Stanchfield, Samuel Seabury and William M. Seabury. It was estimated that a fund of $40,000 will be sufficient to carry on their campaign. To raise this necessary money a resolution was passed to tax each theater proprietor on a basis of three cents per seat in his house, which will mean a sum of more than $10,000 in New York City alone.

Mayor Mitchel Sends Message

Mayor Mitchel sent to the meeting as his representative Fire Commissioner Robert Adamson and the latter read the following letter from the city's chief executive:

"I am in favor of the Sunday exhibition of clean, instructive motion pictures. Since Sunday is the one day of the week when the great majority of the people of this city are able to enjoy relaxation and diversion. Occasionally I enjoy this sort of entertainment myself and certainly see no harm in it. As to pictures devoted to educational subjects certainly there is as much reason for permitting their exhibition as for permitting lectures on Sunday. If the Court of Appeals should render against this rule, the question would become one of public policy for the Legislature to deal with. If it should do so by enacting appropriate legislation, along the lines I have indicated, I would give my approval to such legislation."

Many Opinions Expressed

Commissioner Adamson said that the city and the mayor stood ready to aid in any possible way a change in the law. He also lauded the instruction offered by the pictures and expressed his opinion that it was no crime to receive instruction even on Sunday, and he was quite sure the Legislature could be made to see the matter in this light.

State Senator John J. Boylan described the feeling in the Legislature, and he warned the motion picture men that they had a fight on their hands. He offered his help and said he would introduce a bill to meet the situation. Similar assurance of help was given by Assemblyman Joseph M. Callahan.

The one note of dissension during the meeting was due to a desire to thank the Democratic County Committee for having indorsed the idea of Sunday pictures. No sooner had the motion been proposed than an attempt was made to include in the motion those Republicans who have come out for the measure. There was considerable discussion about the matter and a warning that the injection of politics would mean certain trouble, and finally the resolution was tabled.

Sunday Shows Ruled Legal

A strong blow was dealt the Sunday closing law when Supreme Court Justice William P. Platt, at White Plains upheld the legality of Sunday shows in the First and Second Departments of the Appellate Division. This decision is directly contrary to the law laid down by the Third Department of the Appelate Division a few weeks ago, and will go far toward assisting the film men when their appeal is urged before the Court of Appeals next month in Albany. This ruling covers Greater New York, Long Island, and all the Hudson River towns south of Ulster and Columbia counties.

This ruling was brought out in a case in which the village of Ossining was the plaintiff. President Albert W. Twigger endeavored to force Louis Rosenberg, proprietor of the Alhambra Theater, to keep his house closed on Sunday. This brought out another good friend of the film industry for when President Twigger endeavored to engage Corporation Counsel Fagan to prosecute Rosenberg, Fagan refused to take the case and would have nothing to do with it because he claimed that motion picture shows are legal.

Justice Platt, in making his ruling, declared that the only law applicable to the prohibition of Sunday motion picture shows is Section 265 of the Penal Code. This section prohibits certain specific performances or shows, but Justice Platt pointed out, it is inactive when applied to the films for the simple and all-sufficient reason that motion pictures were unknown when the law was adopted and nobody at that time had even conceived of operating films for pay.

TRIGGER LEAGUE PRESIDENT

Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Manhattan Elects Samuel Trigger President, Needle Treasurer and Howard Secretary

The annual election of officers of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Manhattan resulted in the following officers being chosen: Samuel Trigger is the new president; first vice-president, C. R. Martinau; second vice-president, Ike Harstall; treasurer, M. Needle; secretary, T. Howard; chairman of finance committee, William Hilkemeier; sergeant-at-arms, Gus Keonigswald; chairman board of directors, Sidney Ascher; chairman arbitration committee, Charles Steiner; chairman grievance committee, Sidney Cohn; chairman welfare committee, S. L. Rothapfel, Rialto Theater; chairman ways and means committee, Charles Haring; chairman house committee, I. Hartstall; chairman publicity committee, M. Oestreicher; chairman auditing committee, Charles Steiner.

Immediately after his election Lee A. Ochs introduced the new president of the league and Mr. Trigger responded with a brief talk in which he urged his fellow officers to co-operate with him in his effort to make the organization even more significant than it has heretofore been in the industry in the past.

Lewis Blumenthal, the retiring treasurer, turned over to Mr. Needle more than $6,000.

New Members for St. Louis Association

At the weekly meetings of the Theater Managers and Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of St. Louis, held on December 8 and 15, the following new members were accepted: Fred Demko, Shenandoah Theater; Christ Zotos, Family Theater; J. F. Brinkmeyer, American Theater; and Spyros P. Skoures, New Lafayette; Mr. Seivers, New Grand Central; Steve Kaiman, O'Fallon; W. Slinger, Excello and Nick Angellich, Rainbow.

The following interpretation was made to the resolution adopted by the association covering deposits on serials: "Members of this association are not to pay any deposit or in any way advance money on any episode of serials, but if exchanges require it members should pay C. O. D. for each episode."

The legislative committee called on Governor Frederick D. Gardner and the governor invited them to appear before the special taxation committee where the exhibitors can present their view on the proposed new taxation by the state on motion picture theaters.

Peacocke Writes Book of Poems

Captain Leslie R. Peacocke, well known for his many successful photoplays, has issued a little book of verses entitled "Devil Visits" which are very much worth while and contain a humorous and satirical twist which makes them mighty good reading.

The poems making up the book include "The Devil's Invention," "The Devil's Advice," "The Devil Dances," "The Devil in Love," "The Devil in Heaven," "The Devil's Warning," and "Sisters of the Great White Way," "On the Beach," "Don't," "Unshriven," "The Sidewalk Is the Stage," and "My Masterpiece."

Captain Peacocke is now writing original feature scenarios for the Balboa Feature Films. He has just completed a five-reel story "The Lure of Innocence" in which Jackie Saunders is to be starred, and is now collaborating with Dan F. Whitcomb on a five-reel story in which Kathleen Clifford will make her initial bow on the screen.

FILM STUDIOS FOR HAWAII

Large Patronage of Picture Theaters and Ideal Climatic Conditions Leads to Proposed Establishment of Film Colony on the Islands

The scope of the film industry is ever broadening, and not only the finished pictures are being shown in all parts of the world but also the production of the films is spreading over a greater area. Now comes forward an advocate for the Hawaiian Islands as possessing ideal locations and suitable climate for the taking of motion pictures.

A. P. Taylor, a correspondent of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, foresees the establishment of a film colony in the islands. Negotiations are at present under way for the founding of a film studio there, about $50,000 capital to be furnished by persons already on the ground, the rest by producers of this country.

In addition to this, Mr. Taylor writes that so large has the patronage of the "movies" grown in the islands that a theater in Honolulu has installed a $10,000 pipe organ of a well-known make. The transportation charges from the factory to the city of Honolulu added fully $1,000 to the price of the instrument.

"Motion picture theaters," he goes on, "were first established here about ten years ago, and were then merely 'holes in the wall.' With the rapid development of the artistic side of motion picture filming, the class of theaters in Honolulu has been raised, until at present the city has several first-class houses. The largest has a seating capacity of 1,800. The architecture of this place of amusement is suited to the climate; plenty of ventilation is afforded through rows of shutter windows.

"Ten years ago the highest price paid for admission to motion picture theaters was 15 cents, ranging from that figure down to 5 cents. Today the standard high price is 30 cents for reserved seats, with a 50-cent charge for box and loge seats. The Honolulu public, with its large tourist population, demands the best pictures, and the leading theaters are now on the circuits of the foremost producers of New York and California.

"The exchange system permits the same pictures to be sent to the outlying islands, so that even in small plantation towns on the island of Kauai, the westernmost of the Hawaiian group, 2,400 miles from San Francisco, the pictures that are produced in the leading theaters of Honolulu are given before an audience composed principally of Japanese, Chinese, Koreans, Filipinos, Porto Ricans, Spaniards and Siberians. Where no theaters have been built, in some of the outlying districts, enterprising motion picture managers have large tents of the circus type erected. By a system of rotation a tent is seen in a village about every two weeks."

"The Cruise of the Alden Besse," a five-act sea drama, is nearing its completion at Universal City. Myrtle Gonzales plays the principal role.

"What the Picture Did for Me"

ACTUAL CRITICISM OF FILMS BY EXHIBITORS, FROM A BUSINESS STANDPOINT

(Editorial Note:—"The trade paper that can give the most accurate information about current features is the paper every exhibitor wants," said a prominent manager recently. In addition to its regular reviews, Motography will each week hereafter print the actual unvarnished opinions of exhibitors on films they have run in their houses, with the idea of aiding other exhibitors in making up their programs. The theaters mentioned here are in Chicago, unless otherwise noted. Managers and bookers like to get various opinions concerning a feature before they run it. Upon request Motography will gladly furnish the opinion of men who have run the feature in question. Give both titles and makers of pictures about which you inquire. Simply address, Motography, Chicago.)

THE SUNBEAM, with Mabel Taliaferro (Metro)—"Very good picture. A fair box office attraction. This star is well liked by the people and is always a pretty good drawing card."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater.—Very high class patronage.

THE HONOR OF MARY BLAKE, with Violet Mersereau (Bluebird)—"This was a very good picture for one of its kind. The acting is good and the people liked the story."—George L. Madison, Logan Square Theater.—Catering to a high-class patronage.

THE HONOR OF MARY BLAKE, with Violet Mersereau (Bluebird)—" A very good little production. This went over very good with my audience. The star is not well enough known to be a good drawing card but nevertheless I had a very good attendance that evening. I think that the title was a catchy one and drew the people."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater.—Very high class patronage.

HEART OF A HERO, with Robert Warwick (World)—"Very good story. It is well acted and well directed. The picture was liked by everyone."—Ed Dlouhy, Vitagraph Theater.—Catering to the middle classes.

A CORNER IN COLLEENS, starring Bessie Barriscale, ably supported by Charles Ray (Triangle)—"A five reel production above par. This comedy-drama is one which will please any audience. Action and photography good. A wonderful Sunday show."—F. W. Burke, Strand Theater, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.—A very high class theater.

UNCLE'S WARD (Mutual's regular program)—"This is a fine offering and a very good subject for any mixed program. The photography is good and the star is good."—George L. Madison, Kozy Theater.—Downtown house.

THE SINS YE DO, with Frank Keenan (Triangle)—"This is the best picture Frank Keenan ever appeared in. It is too bad that the Board of Censors made it come out under a pink slip because this hurt the business greatly. The receipts were fair, however."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater.—Very high class patronage.

THE CHALLENGE, with Helene Chadwick (Pathe)—"The photography is very good in this picture. The story and acting are also good but the ending is poor—the people did not like it."—George L. Madison, Logan Square Theater.—Catering to a high-class patronage.

JIM GRIMSBY'S BOY, starring Frank Keenan (Triangle)—"This production proved to be a real disappointment to my audiences. The picture is rather repulsive to the female photoplay fans as it deals with the cruel manner a backwoods girl is treated by an alleged beastly father. Story is overdrawn and sub-titles too coarse for the average audience. A very good Sunday show."—F. W. Burke, Strand Theater, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.—A very high class theater.

THE TAINT, with Creighton Hale (Pathe)—"The actor takes his part very well. This is a fair subject for a split program."—George L. Madison, Kozy Theater.—Downtown house.

ROMEO AND JULIET, with Frances X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne (Metro)—"Took a real flop on three days showing of this Shakespearian production. If you can rely upon college students and followers of Shakespeare no doubt the show will go over for you. The photoplay fan does not want this costumed stuff and it was ably demonstrated with me. As a Shakesperian production the picture is great. Francis X. Bushman as Romeo and Beverly Bayne as Juliet take their respective roles in splendid style. The Metro production is much better than Fox's version of Shakespeare's immortal masterpiece." F. W. Burke, Strand Theater, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.—A very high class theater.

THE MEN SHE MARRIED, with Gail Kane (World)—"This picture did not turn out very good. The people did not seem to care about it."—M. J. Weil, manager Lake Shore Theater.—Very high class patronage.

THE CHILDREN OF THE FEUD, with Dorothy Gish (Fine Arts-Triangle)—"Fine picture, well liked by patrons. The star's acting is very good. This is a fair box office attraction." Ed Dlouhy, Vitagraph Theater.—Catering to the middle classes.

"LIBERTY" (Universal)—"This serial sure is great. It gets the money. My patrons can hardly wait for the next episode. I would welcome the news that this serial was to be extended."—Jos. Zinkl, Parke Theater, Milwaukee, Wis.

THE LASS OF THE LUMBERLANDS, with Helen Holmes (Mutual)—"This is a great picture and is packing the house both afternoon and evening performances. Have had to close the ticket window several times as there was no standing room to sell. We can draw crowds where Helen Holmes is."—Mrs. Laura Hathaway, Theatorium, Indianapolis, Indiana.

The Blue Envelope Mystery, with Lillian Walker (Vitagraph)—"This is a very weak offering for a Vitagraph production. The photography, however, was good and the star did her part to make it as good as possible."—George L. Madison, Logan Square Theater.—Catering to a high-class patronage.

Road to Love, with Lenore Ulrich (Paramount)—"Very good production. Great box office success. The people were well satisfied with it."—M. J. Weil, manager Castle Theater.—Downtown house.

Atta Boy's Last Race (Triangle)—"To the admirers of Dorothy Gish 'Atta Boy's Last Race' is one of the best she ever appeared in. It is a corking story of the race track, nothing exceptional, but a very pleasing show. Will get an exhibitor money."—F. W. Burke, Strand Theater, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.—A very high class theater.

Less Than the Dust, with Mary Pickford (Artcraft)—"This production is about the biggest lemon that the exhibitor has had handed to him in a long time. It is a failure as a box office attraction. The public does not want that sort of subject. They have seen too much of these uninteresting and tiresome subjects. Then along comes one of our biggest stars with a picture of this class and the exhibitor is compelled to charge the public fifteen cents admission. The public see the picture and come out and say 'stung.' So that when the exhibitor has a chance to run a subject that he can get fifteen cents for and it is worth it the public won't bite again. When a manufacturer thinks that the public will pay big admission prices to see big stars without any story or plot—he's wrong. The public today demands the story as well as the star. Another production like this one will not help the popularity of Mary Pickford."—George L. Madison, Logan Square Theater.—Catering to a high-class patronage.

Battle of Life, with Gladys Coburn (Fox)—"Fine picture and was liked by the patrons. It is, however, a very poor box office attraction."—Ed Dlouhy, Vitagraph Theater.—Catering to the middle classes.

Oliver Twist, with Marie Doro (Paramount)—"Very good production. This is a good money getter and it appeals to everyone that reads books."—M. J. Weil, manager Castle Theater.—Downtown house.

Arms and the Woman (Pathe)—"This is a great picture. It was a splendid attraction in my house."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater.—Very high class patronage.

Plain Jane (Triangle)—"Bessie Barriscale and Charles Ray get over fine in this exceptional photoplay from the pen of C. Gardner Sullivan. It is a story dealing with life in a college town and one that should please any audience. Picture will prove to be a great money getter in a community where a college is located providing the exhibitor uses the right form of publicity and advertising."—F. W. Burke, Strand Theater, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.—A very high class theater.

Then I'll Come Back to You, with Alice Brady (World)—"Very poor picture. It was not liked by the patrons. The film brought fair business."—Ed Dloughy, Vitagraph Theater.—Catering to the middle classes.

The Price of Silence, with Dorothy Phillips (Bluebird)—"This was a pleasing box office attraction. The patrons liked both the story—which is very good—and the acting of the star."—George L. Madison, Logan Square Theater.—Catering to a high-class patronage.

World and the Woman (Pathe)—"This picture was only fair. The story went over pretty good with my patrons and I did a fairly good box office business."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater.—Very high class patronage.

A Dream of Two Ago, with Mary Miles Minter (Mutual)—"This picture will please all classes of people. The star's acting is perfect and she is a very good drawing card. The story is also pleasing."—George L. Madison, Logan Spuare Theater.—Catering to a high-class patronage.

His Busted Trust (Keystone)—"A comedy starring Slim Summerville that is not up to the usual Keystone standard. Just fair and nothing to brag about. Some patrons think is as funny as a crutch. I'll second the motion."—F. W. Burke, Strand Theater, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.—A very high class theater.

"Tillie's Terrible Tumble," with Dan Russell and Alice Howell (L-Ko)—"One big scream from start to finish. My patrons think these two stars are the best comedy people the picture field has."—D. S. Pruitt, Gem Theater, Tilton, Oklahoma.

Moss Play Clean

"Diogenes struck the father when the son swore."
—Robert Burton.

Diogenes knew where to place the blame, yet in all the intervening centuries society has failed to learn this lesson as applied to the erring daughter who is far oftener the victim of parental neglect.

It is on this subject that the latest Moss photoplay sensation, "The Girl Who Doesn't Know" has to deal. Marie Empress has the leading role.

To those who are shocked even at the mention of this subject, "The Girl Who Doesn't Know," will assume the aspect of heresy even though it is handled with rare delicacy.

True, the very nature of the subject necessitates outspoken, frank presentation but those who view such things in a broad-minded way—those who are ready to accept the message as a serious preachment on a vital topic will find no speck of unseemly suggestion—not wit of immodesty.

Association Spreads to Pacific Coast

EMBLEM OF THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION WIDELY USED IN INDUSTRY

THE organization of an advisory committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry on the Pacific coast will probably be completed in January, when P. A. Powers, treasurer of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, a member of the executive committee of the National Association, and Donald J. Bell, president of the Bell & Howell Company of Chicago, and a vice-president of the National Association, will be in Los Angeles and San Francisco. A joint meeting with the film interests of the coast will be called, and the plans for the advisory committee, already inaugurated under the auspices of Judge A. P. Tugwell of Los Angeles, a director of the National Association, will be completed.

The California committee will include representatives of all the film interests in San Francisco, Los Angeles, and other parts of the coast. This move has already received the endorsement of a number of the executive officials of the big producers and distributors who founded the National Association. The recent official statement of the Board of Directors, explaining that exchanges owned by the big distributors who are members of the association were never expected to pay the initiation fee of $50 set for independent exchanges, has removed a misunderstanding which has delayed the organization of the important exchange branch of the California committee.

Dinner for General Division

The general division of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry will hold its quarterly meeting in January in the form of a dinner and entertainment. The plans for the party will be in the hands of the entertainment committee.

The general division is made up of the personal members of the National Association, such as stars, actors, studio directors, camera men, employes of motion picture companies, newspapers, trade and general magazines, program publishers, architects and builders, bill posting companies, transportation and express companies, insurance companies, banks, employment agencies and advertising agencies.

Many Calls for Cuts of Emblem

The call for the cuts of the emblems of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry indicates that before the new year is very old the spreading eagle of that insignia will be familiar to the trade through the advertising and stationery of such distributors of pictures as Artcraft, Cosmofotofilm, Ivan, Erbograph, Evans Manufacturing Company, Gaumont, International, Metro, Pathe, Paramount, Thanhouser, Universal, Vitagraph, World, etc., besides such supply men as J. H. Hallberg, J. P. Seeburg Piano Company, Motion Picture Supply Company of Cleveland, Ohio, etc., and the individual members who are using the emblem on their personal letterheads.

In addition to the cuts, the National Association is issuing proofs of the emblem for the use of artists in incorporating into advertising designs. These were sent out to the advertising members last week.

Two Reels for "Annual Review"

Films are already coming in for the first issue of the "Annual Review" of the year's great pictures to be distributed by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry shortly after the first of the year. The first two reels, "Greatest Love Scenes" and "Greatest Fights of the Films," will be assembled at the same time, and will be released through the exchanges of one of the members of the National Association.

Special posters will be prepared, publicity sent out, and the merchandising of the reels handled in the usual manner. While the "Review" will go out one reel at a time, it will be booked as a "feature," as the interest already created, and the publicity given it in the daily newspapers of the country indicate that the "Review" will appeal to the public and to the exhibitors wherever it is spoken of.

NEW JERSEY SUNDAY SHOWS

Charles H. Hesspe, President of New Jersey League, Urges Exhibitors of State to Fight for Sunday Picture Shows

Every exhibitor in the state of New Jersey, every owner of motion picture theaters, and hundreds of owners of candy, cigar and drug stores, baseball parks, etc., are urged by President Charles H. Hesspe, of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of New Jersey to join in a campaign for a modification of the Blue Laws of the state which will allow the Sunday entertainments in motion picture theaters.

"The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the state of New Jersey proposes to enter this campaign and not let up until its efforts are successful.

"The exhibitors of New York state at the present time contemplate legislative enactment that will assure them the protection of the Sunday show for all time. It will be of material benefit to the exhibitors of New Jersey to have a bill for Sunday pictures before their legislature at the same time.

"The president of the state league has every assurance that the common people of this state not only have no opposition to the Sunday shows but have a strong desire for them.

"At the last legislative session a Sunday bill was introduced and at its hearing fifty ministers of the state opposed it and one-half dozen of exhibitors were for it. Had we the same number of exhibitors and showed the same co-operation as our opponents, we would by this time have been well on the road for Sunday shows.

"I would like to meet you personally and talk over with you matters of general interest. If you have a local organization in your district I would be glad to visit you at any time you can arrange a meeting. If you have no local send $6 to our secretary and enroll yourself as a state member. The protection of your business demands it.

"Join this organization and let New Jersey stand foremost in the ranks of organized exhibitors."

New York Rector's Views on Films

St. Michael's Episcopal church in the borough of Manhattan, New York, comes in definite contact in its religious and social work with about 3,000 people. In addition, the parish exerts an intangible influence upon many other persons in the vicinity. Its rector, the Rev. John P. Peters, D. D., is vitally interested in all matters affecting his community and has lately made a study of motion picture theaters in the neighborhood. His opinions upon the subject are interesting.

"What we need and have needed lamentably in this country is healthful places of entertainment for families and family groups. The saloon has developed its evils because of the lack of something of this sort. If the motion picture shows will fill this need their doing so will cover the multitude of sins. While I cannot say of my own observation that pictures have quite done this, as I have observed the motion picture shows in small towns they have certainly furnished a much needed form of amusement for the people. Our country and small town life was lacking in some rational form of social amusement, and so far as I have been able to observe the motion pictures, they have come nearer to filling this gap than anything else.

"Something of the same sort they have done in the city, but there they were not so much needed. In my own very decent neighborhood I have visited the shows and had their pictures and their presumptive effects tabulated to attempt to draw some conclusions as to their general influence mentally and morally. My conclusion is that there is very little uplifting or educative in the picture shows hereabouts. On the other hand, there is very little which is immoral, and that of an insidious and elusive character which it would be difficult to censure. What is to be hoped for is that in the moving picture business, as in the press and on the stage, there may be a sufficient number of idealists struggling for higher standards to exert a gradual influence of uplift in conceptions of humor, of art, of intellect, and socially and morally. The possibilities of the motion picture are enormous, if up to the present time they have not been as effective as some enthusiasts had hoped they might be."

Baseball Played With Screen

That the scope of the motion picture is unlimited is again illustrated by "Movie Baseball," a new game which bids fair to push the ancient, "knock the nigger baby down" game into oblivion.

The apparatus has just been perfected and the first equipment is now in use in Chicago. As seen by the spectator it consists of what is apparently a regulation motion picture screen. It is placed at the end of a hall or room with the projection machine twenty-five feet from the screen. A counter or shelf, similar to those used in all ball games, is placed about thirty feet from the screen, in front of which the player stands.

The picture of a catcher and a home plate is projected on the screen, a pictured batter walks to the batter's box and the projection machine is stopped, the picture remaining stationary as shown in the illustration. The player now starts throwing the ball in an effort to put one over the home plate. When he is successful, the projector automatically starts, the pictured batter swings his bat and then starts toward first base. It now devolves on the player to put out the runner at all four corners of the diamond, which requires some speedy action as well as accurate throwing. The writer, an ardent baseball fan, spent about fifteen minutes playing the game and developed as much interest as he ever manifested during a big league game. That "shadow baseball" will become a popular game can hardly be doubted considering the universality of our national pastime.

"Screen baseball"—a new angle of motion pictures. When the player throws "over the plate" the projector automatically starts, showing the batter running the bases. The player must hit a base to put the runner out.

Argosy Presents New Style Comedy

"Where D'ye Get That Stuff," the first release of the Argosy Films, Inc., claims to be the craziest picture ever filmed. It was written by H. C. Witwer, whose stories in the Saturday Evening Post have amused thousands, and H. H. Van Loan, who is recognized as the greatest humorist in the film world.

It has been asserted time and again by eminent authorities on motion pictures that it was absolutely impossible to produce a feature film burlesque that would ever be a success. They declared that there was no market for such a film, but when the material of Mr. Witwer and Mr. Van Loan was submitted to Mr. H. J. Shepard of the Argosy he decided that here was a rare opportunity to test the critical opinion.

"Where D'ye Get That Stuff?" was produced entirely with the object of creating laughs, which it accomplishes tenfold, and it is a very distinct departure from the hackneyed slapstick, custard pie, funny walk, type of comedy.

This comedy was tried out at the Stanley Theater on an audience of blasé Broadwayites, and at the North Star Theater, a typical neighborhod playhouse. In each instance it invoked hearty laughter and the managers pronounced them the funniest pictures they had ever seen.

There is a novel twist to the story of "His Sweetheart" in which George Beban is to be starred on the Paramount Program by the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company, in that the innocuous golf ball is turned into a deadly weapon by the Italian in his search for revenge.

MOTOGRAPHY, Chicago:

I wish to state that I think MOTOGRAPHY is the livest and most advantageous motion picture trade journal on the market today.

Sincerely yours, G. F. FULLERTON, Liberty Theater, Seattle, Washington.

Rare Treats for the Youngsters

LOS ANGELES THEATER HAS MODEL ENTERTAINMENTS FOR THE LITTLE FOLKS

By B. F. Barrett.

IF you were a boy or girl boasting of from five to twelve years and received an invitation reading: "Boys and Girls: Have you seen the Woozy? Do you know what became of the three hairs from the end of his tail? Do you know the Patchwork Girl? and Ojo? and Unc Nunkie? and the beautiful Jesseva? and the wicked Jinjuir Girl? Come and see them at the Children's Matinee at the Theater De Luxe, Saturday morning at 10:30 and hear the fascinating story. Bring father and mother—it will do them good. Remember this is your very own matinee"—don't you think that your interest and enthusiasm would immediately be aroused and you would accept that invitation with alacrity?

That is just what the children in the vicinity of the De Luxe Theater, Los Angeles, California, are doing. They let nothing interfere with the acceptance of the invitations for Saturday mornings for they know some rare treat is always in store for them.

The parents were not forgotten when this invitation was sent to the kiddies, for with it went a message to them explaining just what these special performances would mean to the child. Their message read: "Parents: Do you want to have a part in making it possible for your children to see the class of pictures best fitted for their entertainment and development? Of course you do. These Saturday morning matinees at the Theater De Luxe are a part of a nationwide movement for better films for children. The programs will be clean and entertaining, and only films especially adapted for children will be shown. Many special features, such as story telling, whistling solos, bird calls, and special music will be introduced, making a real morning of joy for the boys and girls. If it isn't the liveliest and best program you have ever seen don't be afraid to tell us. A reception committee of prominent women will act as hostesses each Saturday to look after the little ones who come alone. We desire the active support and co-operation of every father and mother and everyone interested in the welfare of children. Express your approval by coming out Saturday morning."

These special matinees for the children at the De Luxe are under the personal supervision of Mrs. Clara M. Greening, and that she knows just what the children like and how to give them a royal good time each Saturday morning is shown by the programs chosen and the surprises planned.

This first program, the invitation to which is quoted, included as the feature the whimsical extravaganza "The Patchwork Girl of Oz," augmented by a travelogue, a juvenile comedy, a story teller, a whistling girl, and special music by Dr. Bruce Gordon Kingsley, the theater organist.

Each week the entire back page of the house program is given over to the children's matinee, carrying a special invitation to the children and telling what new pleasure is in store for them. The price paid for these mornings of "real sport," which begin at ten-thirty and end at twelve, is only five cents for children and ten cents for adults.

Among the pleasures planned for the little folks was the appearance of Baby Marie Osborne herself at the time the film of "Little Mary Sunshine" was shown. The diminutive star not only appeared but talked to the children, and as each one went out she presented them with a picture of herself as a souvenir of the happy morning they had spent together.

Another week Mary Pickford in "Cinderella" was shown, accompanied by the usual juvenile comedy, travelogue, story teller and special music.

"The Patchwork Girl of Oz" proved so popular that the children asked for another Oz story, so "The Wizard of Oz" was given them, and not only the picture was shown but Frank L. Baum, the author of the books, was present and spoke to the children, and they in turn had an opportunity to talk to him about his fascinating characters at an informal reception after the program was completed.

Other pictures which have been used on these programs and were real joy givers are: "The Little Lumberjack," "The Spirit of Audobon," "Sunny Jim," "Midnight Ride of Paul Revere," "The Three Bears," Marguerite Clark in "Still Waters," "Too Much Turkey," "The Submarine Pirate," "Little Red Riding Hood," "Children of the Netherlands," "The Land of Oz," "The Birth of the Star Spangled Banner," "Little Boy Blue" and "Kittens."

Mrs. Greening, in panning these entertainments, has not depended upon the pictures entirely to hold the interest of the kiddies, but has instituted a contest each week, in which the children write letters telling about the program they saw at the theater that morning. A prize of one dollar is awarded for the best letter. Also at each entertainment the child who won the one dollar the week before tells the other children how he spent the money.

To make the children feel a real personal ownership in the morning performances she allowed them to help her manage these breakfast matinees. The lady hostesses were replaced by six chosen from the little girls, and twelve boys were also selected as ushers. These hostesses and ushers are changed at each performance so that all the children have a chance to assume this responsibility.

The De Luxe, of which Frank L. Schaffer is manager, is one theater which is running an ideal entertainment for children. They are not only being amused and educated by the pictures chosen for their pleasure but are also learning to assume responsibility themselves, and the writing of the letters about the pictures they have seen and the little speech telling how they spent their prize money is splendid practice for them. The scheme as worked out by Mrs. Greening shows what great things can be accomplished along this line if the theater manager will give the proper thought and attention to the matter. These matinees are a great success financially in California. Why cannot they be made equally attractive from the box office standpoint in other places?

Frank Daniels, the irresitable comedian, is working in a new style comedy under the direction of Van Dyke Brooke.

TEN KINDS OF INSURANCE

First Bulletin of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry to Be Issued Soon Treats of Fire Insurance

The producers, exchange men and exhibitors of the whole country will soon get a straight-from-the-shoulder talk about fire prevention measures from the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry in the first of the Fire Prevention Committee's bulletins. A four-page leaflet, to be distributed the first of the year, headed "Stop the Fire Before it Starts," which makes a frank pocket-book appeal in these terms:

You want lower insurance rates.

We believe the insurance companies want to give you lower insurance rates.

And here is the way for you to get lower insurance rates.

It is pointed out that fire losses will decrease, the confidence of the insurance men will increase, and the rates will drop when better conditions prevail.

The meat of the pamphlet is on the last page, however, where are listed "Ten kinds of fire insurance that won't cost a cent of premiums." This list not only tells what ought to be done, but why the precautions are desirable. The ten kinds of insurance are as follows:

1. Keep plenty of water handy: (a) In an automatic sprinkler system suitable to your conditions. (b) In convenient buckets. (c) In faucets with an inch and a quarter hose and nozzle attached. (d) Furnish fire extinguishers which everybody is shown how to use. (e) Keep sand bags handy. Sand will smother a small film fire quicker than anything else, and does not ruin the stock.
2. Keep film in containers when not actually in use. The time loss in replacing it is nothing. Naked film is the one condition that guarantees that a little fire will get beyond control in a few seconds.
3. Throw film scraps into self-closing metal cans; never into open waste baskets.
4. Keep the cutting room, etc., well swept. The tiny pieces of film that fly about make the dust as dangerous as so much gunpowder.
5. Have a professional electrician do all your wiring, in accordance with every city ordinance, no matter how "unreasonable" it seems. Have the light globes caged—a broken globe may make only one spark, but that can ignite $1,000 worth of film. Handle no film by any artificial light but electricity.
6. Box your radiators and steam pipes. The film that touches a hot pipe and crinkles up might just as easily have burst into flame.
7. Enforce the "no smoking" rules. Give the boys a smoking room if they need it, and make the boss and his guests who are looking over the place leave their cigars, cigarettes and pipes outside, as they would if they stepped into a theater for a glimpse of the picture.
8. Banish the "strike anywhere" match. Furnish boxes of safety matches free, if necessary. But don't have anything that will light except when it is intended to.
9. Keep only enough cement, gasoline or collodion on hand for the day's work. They are all highly inflammable, and should be stored where they can do no harm.
10. Appoint one man or woman as fire monitor and let him know it is all his job is worth to fail to call the boss or the office boy for any carelessness.

Lesser and Supreme Combine

Sol Lesser, president of the All Star Features Distributors, Inc., of San Francisco, has sold out his Denver holdings, including the Triumph Film Corporation's production, "The Libertine," and the Mutual's special production "Purity" featuring Audrey Munson, for the states of Colorado, Wyoming, New Mexico and Utah, to the Supreme Photoplay Corporation of Denver. The Supreme Photoplays Corporation will handle all of the big independent features that Lesser buys for that territory. As a result of this arrangement, Mr. Lesser will, in the future, include these four states in his state right feature purchase; making a total of twenty-four states.

Hobart Henley is producing at Universal City a five-reel feature, "Enmeshed."

Universal Director George Cochrane is filming "The Web," featuring Cleo Madison.

EXHIBITOR'S NEW YEAR'S RESOLUTION

I promise not to run, rent, steal or give Censorable pictures while I live.
From all misleading advertising I'll abstain;
And never take the name of producers in vain.

GLUCK AUF!

The Cinema Camera Club of New York is now issuing a magazine. May their columns be clean and may they never lack material to filum. Our only comment is that the editor is likely to get cranky in his editorials.

COMEDY EFFICIENCY

Manager Davis of the New York Unicorn Exchange has discovered a new prodigy in the comic line. Here's the letter that unearthed him:

Deer Sir:—I am (double jointed) and have all of the (latest) funny walks. Only one like Chaplan. I am a (contorsionist and a achrobate). Have you any sircus pictures or any kind comedies. I have never ben in pictures or vandeville. I would like to get in the pictures. I want to get in comedies.

Mr. Davis do you know of an companies that want double jointed men for funny walks. I have heard that moving picture actors pant their faces yellow. I could save you much money on greese pant, as I have already jaundice. Harold Krist, 119 Broadway, Elmhurst, L. I.

When a certain Chicago celluloid gentleman read the announcement that Apollo Pictures would give a prize of one hundred dollars for the best trade mark design his entire artistic nature was aroused. He at once resolved to induce an artist friend to sketch some designs. "The figure of Apollo Belvidere may be used in the design," read the notice. When he came to that phrase the film man's indignation was stirred:

"What the deuce do they want to go and use some ham actor's picture for?—for a trade mark! Where in thunder can I get a picture of that geek?"

Exhibitor Establishes Charity Event

BY A. R. M. SUTTON.

EVER since writing the article entitled "Trials and Triumphs of an Exhibitor," featuring H. T. Moore, manager of the Colonial Theater, Tacoma, released by MOTOGRAPHY last July, I have thought of going over to Tacoma to see Mr. Moore's theater and to pay a visit to the other exhibitors whom I so often meet in Seattle. At last I went this week.

At the Colonial we stood and watched the people coming in crowds to see Mary Pickford's film, "Less Than the Dust." I soon discovered, however, that, in spite of Miss Pickford's popularity, it was not the picture alone which drew the patronage. In the lobby was a card announcing that this was Thanksgiving Fund Week, and Mr. Moore explained that he had proposed to donate the entire net profits of the week to fill Thanksgiving dinner baskets for the destitute families of the city. He had laid his plan before several of the charitable organizations of the city, saying that he would turn over the money to them for distribution, that he might be sure that deserving families received the gifts.

The societies accepted his proposal gladly and went to work to help him make his Thanksgiving Fund Week a success. The Orpheus Club, the city's well known Glee Club, furnished special music for the opening day, and there were three other days with added attractions, viz., solos by a boy soprano, contralto solos by a society girl and soprano solos by a society woman. That the affair was going over big was quite evident and Mr. Moore said that they had found that to the 53 destitute families already reported they could give shoes and clothing for the children, as well as the Thanksgiving dinners. For this same purpose last year a special children's matinee was given at The Colonial, and he intends to make the Thanksgiving Fund Week an annual event. In this way Mr. Moore not only finds satisfaction in doing a great deal of good in a big way, but he is adding materially to the prestige of his theater.

Busy though he was the Colonial's manager kindly acted as my guide on my visits to the other exhibitors. At the Apollo we found A. C. Anderson just back from Seattle, where he has been convalescing for several weeks from an operation on his knee. During his absence Grattan Guerin, leader of the Apollo orchestra, has been acting manager, and Mr. Anderson said that he didn't believe that the theater or anybody had missed him one bit, but that he was glad to get back to work just the same, even if he did have to go about it on crutches. The Apollo is not a large house, having a seating capacity of only about 650, but it is a very good looking theater both outside and in. The interior decorations, in fact, are very unusual for a house of its size. The painting and decoration of the ceiling is beautiful and a very attractive feature are the side windows curtained in thin colored silk with colored lights behind them.

Clarence Summerville was holding the fort at the Hippodrome, which has just been turned from a picture house into a legitimate theater. He opened it November 12 with musical comedy and road shows. This and the Melbourne, which is only a few doors down the street from it, are two of the oldest picture houses in the town. Mr. Summerville manages both.

At the three smaller five-cent theaters, the Shell, the Palace, and the Bijou, where the respective managers are Mr. Berg, Mr. Drinkwine, and Mr. MacNish, business seemed to be going on very smoothly.

These six complete the list of downtown motion picture houses in Tacoma, since the Regent was transferred from the picture to the vaudeville field. This theater was originally built by Sullivan and Considine as one of their string of Empress vaudeville houses. After several years under this management it was bought last year by the Greater Theaters Company of Seattle and, after being entirely redecorated, was opened as The Regent. A few months ago it again changed hands when it was bought by Ackerman and Harris to be used as one of their Hippodrome circuit, and was opened last week with six acts of vaudeville, two Gold Rooster plays and Pathe News service.

When we returned to the Colonial the crowds were still coming and inside a very clever speaker, who Mr. Moore said had been an actor, was telling the people that the manager wanted them to feel that this charity event was theirs, that the dinners and clothes given to the poor of Tacoma this Thanksgiving were their gifts. It seemed to be hitting the audience in the right spot. Mr. Moore's progressiveness is shown no less by the house which he has built than by his clever and original ways of going out after the people. The Colonial is true to its name in architecture, its front of red brick and white columns making a striking picture, while the interior decorations and fittings are richly simple. The seating capacity is something over a thousand.

New Lighting Idea Conceived by Exhibitor

A. G. Schubert, manager of the Arcadia Theater, Gooding, Idaho, recently conceived a very clever idea for the projection of pictures which added not only to the attractiveness of the features shown on the screen, but also to the wonderful effect produced by the simple usage of green, red and amber lights backed with reflectors.

In speaking of his latest conception he said, "I would like to call your attention to this lighting effect by which I have been obtaining a much better, in fact a wonderful picture, by using colored lights on the screen. We use red, green and amber lights with a reflector above and below the screen, sitting out about ten feet, and throwing the light directly on the screen as evenly as possible. The picture positively cannot be compared with a picture projected without lights. The light gives a wonderful effect, and upon demonstrating it to a number of fellow-exhibitors, they all remarked upon the wonderful effect."

Adventures of Chicago Theatrical Man

By Ralph T. Kettering.

"I am going to America to earn my fortune and when I have succeeded and made good in that great new land I will come back for you—until then, auf wiedersehn."

Speaking thus, the dark-eyed young man kissed his boyhood sweetheart and embarked for America. This was in 1892.

Adolph Linick, prominent Chicago film man.

This youngster was born in Frankfort on the Main, Germany, in 1869, and was the second boy of nine children. In 1884 he graduated from public school and was apprenticed at the age of 14 to a wholesale notion house at the large salary of one dollar per week, which amount was turned into the household treasury to help feed eleven mouths. For eight years he remained with the firm and then came the burning desire for America.

He landed alone in Chicago with a note to a friend who ran a dry-goods store on Milwaukee avenue. He was employed there for $6 per week, but remained only long enough to acquaint himself with the language when he became a clerk in a wholesale notion house in the loop. In 1896 he decided to embark in business for himself, and taking his life's savings he chose the manufacture of slot machines.

Two years later the young man's fancy turned to thoughts of love, and taking an ocean gray-hound he sped across the deep to the town where he was born, and there in the spring of 1898 Adolph Linick was married to Augusta Faller.

He brought her back to America, and on his return enlarged his business and formed a partnership with a young man friend of his by name Aaron J. Jones. Linick & Jones organized the Midland Machine Company and began building and operating penny arcades in Chicago, starting with one on State street near Van Buren and branching out all over the country. Soon they had branches in St. Louis, Kansas City, New Orleans and Atlanta.

In 1905 he became active in the building of White City, Chicago's $2,000,000 amusement park of which he has been a director for the past ten years. The following year with his partner, Jones, he formed the Hyde Park Construction Company, which built scenic railways, roller coasters, figure eights in all amusement parks of America.

The story of Jones, Linick & Schaefer is the story of the first motion picture house in the state of Illinois, for Linick and Jones in company with Peter J. Schaefer, whom they had met in White City, formed the firm of Jones, Linick & Schaefer and opened what is said to be the first motion picture house in the state of Illinois, in Chicago on State street, on the location now occupied by Browning, King and Company. In 1907 they began operating Hale's "Tours of the World" and built the Orpheum Theater.

While Adolph Linick prospered he did not forget his brothers, sisters and parents back in the old country, for when he had made his fortune he brought them to America and has provided for them and built for them a great fortune. Mr. Linick has two children, Elsie, aged 18, and Leroy, aged 10.

His hobby is farming.

His country home is in Flossmore, Illinois, and is one of the show places of suburban Chicago.

He is a member of the Elks, Dearborn Lodge, Corinthia Chapter, St. Bernard Commandery, Oriental Consistory, Mystic Shrine, Illinois Athletic Club, Idlewild Country Club, and the Rotary Club.

New "Duplex" Cleveland House

The new Mall theater, the only duplex theater in Cleveland, was recently opened. It has two auditoriums, one with an entrance on Superior avenue and another above it with an entrance on Euclid avenue. The Euclid avenue auditorium will not be ready for occupancy until after January 1.

At 9 a. m. of the day set for the opening the theater was opened free of charge to the general public. The program consisted of several short pictures, special musical numbers by vocal soloists and the concert organ. The theater remained open, with invitation to all to visit it, until midnight.

The manager of the theater, Louis H. Becht, is one of the pioneers in motion picture exhibiting business in Cleveland. He has incorporated many original ideas in the old Mall. Among other things Mr. Becht proposes to give midnight shows on Saturday nights for those employed during night hours.

Two Potatoes Admission Price

"ADMITTANCE, 2 POTATOES"

That was the sign above a moving picture theater in Waukegan, Illinois, recently. The theater is owned by Mr. and Mrs. Carl Muller, and the day's receipts totaled nearly three barrels of potatoes.

"Groceries are so high that the poor will have a hard time getting along Christmas this year," said Mrs. Muller. "Next week the admission will be an onion or a cabbage, and then I am going to try to get the bakers and grocers to indorse the movement with some mince pies and coffee.

"We are going to provide materials for a number of good dinners to the poor."

Frederick Warde, Thanhouser star, is now in the first scenes of a modern photodrama, following the completion of "The Vicar of Wakefield," a painstaking version of Goldsmith's classic novel which is to be released through Pathe exchanges in March. Mr. Warde's Thanhouser series has included "Silas Marner," "King Lear," and "The Vicar of Wakefield."

"Split Reel" Notes for Theater Men

HOW OTHERS ARE STEERING THE SHIP

THE Parkway Theater, Baltimore, Maryland, showed "An Enemy to the King" for the entire week before Christmas and gave a percentage of the receipts to the Auxiliary of the Maryland Branch of the American Red Cross Society.

Denham Palmer has been transferred from Denver to take charge of the new Vitagraph office in Omaha.

D. C. Branson, proprietor of the Electric Theater, Clear Lake, Iowa, has decided to retire from the motion picture business.

W. V. Bahmer, of the editorial staff of the Pittsburgh Press, has been engaged as publicity agent for the Pitt Theater of Pittsburgh.

C. B. Price, general manager of the Mutual exchanges in Canada for the past two years, has resigned to become a division manager for Super Pictures, Inc.

Edward Greene, of the Mutt & Jeff Film Company, has left for Argentine, where he will be film supervisor for the South American Films Service Corporation.

M. Chivers, who has been operating the opera house at Necedah, Wisconsin, two nights a week, will show every night in the future. Mr. Chivers also plays five other towns in the vicinity of Necedah.

C. A. Watson, a former automobile salesman, has joined the World Film Company's forces, succeeding E. R. Haas, who resigned to assist Sidney B. Lust in marketing the Louis J. Selznick productions.

C. E. Holah will be manager of the newly opened branch office of the International Film Service in Cincinnati. Mr. Holah says he has always been ambitious to be connected with the Hearst organizations.

A reel of film that had been placed behind a steam radiator, according to firemen, caused a small fire recently in the room used as headquarters for the Motion Picture Machine Operators' Union in Indianapolis. The loss was estimated at $100.

Thomas Hildebrand, who recently resigned from the Fox sales forces to assume management of the Strand Theater, Baltimore, Maryland, has been succeeded by Frank A. Brown, who was formerly with the Metro Film Service of Washington.

The mayor of Springfield, Missouri, is a good friend of the motion picture theater exhibitor. He takes the stand that if there is any censorship of films it should also include musical comedies as well as pictures as some shows are worse than most theaters.

A fund is being collected by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry to fight the anti-Sunday legislation. Telegrams urgently requesting contributions were sent to the heads of all film concerns by William A. Brady and Lee A. Ochs of New York.

The Garden Theater, Des Moines, Iowa, dedicated its new $15,000 Kimball pipe organ on Thanksgiving. In addition to the pipe organ there is an orchestra of eight pieces and the pipe organ and the orchestra alternate during the twelve hours that the theater is open daily.

The Hoyburn Theater, Evanston, Illinois, issues a program consisting of eight pages. It contains besides the program for the week a synopsis of two of the most important features and a number of local advertisements. The admission price charged is ten cents in the afternoons and fifteen cents in the evenings.

According to Le Cinéma, of Paris, says the London Bioscope, the Russian picture theaters are about to be nationalized. "In order to create an additional source of revenue," says our contemporary, "a new law, now awaiting the Tsar's signature, will give the state the trading monopoly of all cinematograph establishments."

Exhibitors: Here's another new manager to get acquainted with. B. M. Moran, who has been traveling through the West and Northwest as a special representative of George Kleine, has been assigned as manager to the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay New Orleans Branch, where, until Monday, December 18, J. C. Ragland was in charge.

An abrupt halt was called on prosecutions of motion picture theater owners under the Sunday "blue law" in Indianapolis, enacted more than fifty years ago when a jury acquitted A. C. Zaring in the court of Justice Holm. Zaring admitted his theater was in operation on Sunday. The case has been watched with much interest by exhibitors in all parts of the country.

N. M. Trafton, of Trail, B. C., and head of the O-Row-Nay circuit of theaters, has just announced that the local Knights of Pythias Lodge, No. 23, of which he is a member, has decided to build a theater for pictures on a plot of ground 75 by 100 feet, which is owned by the lodge. The building is to cost $20,000, and on completion will be leased to Mr. Trafton, who will add it to his string of houses.

Exhibitors of Cuba are soon to have a new exchange to draw from. Through Louis Camer, veteran exchange manager in Cuba and in Mexico, the Signal Film Corporation is at present negotiating for the opening of an exchange for the handling of their films in the Island Republic. As planned at present, the agency will be located in Havana and through it the entire Cuban territory will be handled.

Authentic report has it that theaters in Quebec Province will remain open on Sunday, if the action of the Casino Theater, Sherbrooke, is unquestioned. Mr. Grequire, manager of this house, states that he has had his lawyer go fully into the question, but there is not anything in the laws of the province to prevent them from opening on Sunday. Montreal shows at present remain open seven days in the week; therefore it seems very likely that theaters in the province will follow suit.

E. O. Weinberg, manager of the Elmwood Theater, Elmwood, New York, issues a very neat little three-page folder program printed in black on orange stock. The program is changed four times a week and a double feature program is run. The back page of the folder contains a form on which it is asked that the patrons write criticisms of the program and hand to the doorman or usher. For the week of December 18 an additional little folder 1½x2½ was included. On the first page is printed "The funniest man in the world." Inside are two drawings of Charlie Chaplin and the announcement of the run of his new play, "The Rink."

The program of the Stillman Theater, Cleveland, Ohio, under the caption "What You May Expect to See Here" carries the following message:

"Broadly speaking the Stillman intends to show the best films it can buy—excluding only long spectacles, such as Griffith's 'Intolerance' and Ince's 'Civilization,' etc. Any feature film which is not more than six or seven reels in length, and is so good that it stands out among current releases, properly belongs on the Stillman program—and we will secure it if we can. We will not show any film, whatever name it bears, whoever it features, or under whatever auspices it is released, that we do not believe to be a good film—a film notably better than the average production. We intend to show only such picture plays as will make you feel sure of always finding a good feature here."

The Folly Theater at Oklahoma City, has been unionized, and the pickets withdrawn. As a consequence of renewed activity of the pickets at the Lyric, Peter Sinopoulo Monday caused the arrest of P. Walker, L. E. Irwin, Mrs. Eva Sweitzer, Sid Pollard and W. A. Salter, whom he charged with disturbing the peace and his audience by loud talking on the street immediately in front of the theater. Sinopoulo swore out warrants against all the defendants, as patrolmen declined to make arrests under the ruling of the criminal court of appeals, which had granted a writ of habeas corpus in the case of Mrs. Sweitzer, who was arrested to make a test case of the emergency city ordinance which prohibited picketing. In police court Walker was fined $10, Mrs. Sweitzer and Irvin $5 each, and Pollard $1 and costs. The charge against Salter was dismissed. The cases will be appealed to a higher court for review and action.

Selig at Work in Chicago

Director Al Green and the members of the Selig Stock Company are home in Chicago after a sojourn in Mississippi and Tennessee, where they filmed scenes for "The Princess of Patches," the Selig Red Seal play soon to be released in Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service. Southern scenes called for in Mark Swan's play, including cotton plantations, etc., were filmed. The company is now hard at work in the Selig studios, Chicago, taking interior scenes for the new drama.

Sherman Sells Rights on "The Crisis"

Harry A. Sherman, president of the Sherman-Elliott Company, has completed the sale of Selig's production, "The Crisis," in the territory in the United States. It is just six weeks since Mr. Sherman started negotiations for the sale of state rights for "The Crisis," and he has completed sales totaling half a million dollars.

Mr. Sherman started showing "The Crisis" in his western territory on December 24, opening at Minneapolis, Chicago, Milwaukee and Denver.

H. M. Warner, president of the Dispatch Film Corporation, New York City, has purchased from Sherman-Elliott the rights for the state of New York for $50,000. Mr. Warner announces he opened "The Crisis" in a Broadway theater the second week in December and shortly after sent out two road companies to the larger cities.

Fred W. Faulkner, manager of the Master Photoplay Company of Newark, N. J., has purchased the rights for New Jersey.

John H. Kunsky of Detroit, Michigan, opened "The Crisis" at the Washington Theater, Detroit, to a packed house. The Detroit papers were very enthusiastic and laudatory in their remarks.

Form Exchange for Christie's Comedies

Charles Christie, business manager of the Christie Film Company, producers of one and two reel comedies, during his stay in the east has interested William H. Kemble and H. Clark Mooney, prominent film men of Brooklyn, in the output of the company with the result that they have formed the K. & M. Film Exchange for the purpose of marketing these pictures in New York state. The present office of the exchange is located at 587 Fulton street, Brooklyn, but Messrs. Kemble and Clark are already planning to open exchanges and offices in other districts of the state. The Christie comedies are already running on the Loew and Keith circuits in New York, while from time to time they have held the screen at the Strand and have been very well received. A. W. Blankmeyer, a well known exchange man of Detroit, Mich., operator of the Tri-State Film Exchange, Inc., has signed for Al Christie's comedies for the states of Ohio and Kentucky.

Exchange Man Fined

By William Noble

Special Correspondent for Motography.

A traveling representative for a moving picture supply house at Dallas, Texas, was fined $15.00 in police court at Dallas on evidence of Fire Marshal F. F. Bennett. According to Mr. Bennett, he happened into the salesrooms of a moving picture company at Dallas and found about 1,000 reels of films scattered about the room and on the floor, where a number of young women were working. He testified that if a fire had started in the building or if one of the films had caught fire the entire block of buildings would probably have been set afire and been destroyed because of the highly inflammable material used in the films. Under the city ordinance the films must be kept in fireproof vaults. The traveling representative explained that the company was preparing to ship the films out of Dallas. An appeal will probably be taken.

The Ever-Changing Exhibitor

THE majority of film brands are as well known to the average exhibitor as his own name. The makers of pictures have it to their credit that they have been able to establish their trademarks as household words. That the trade papers have been the chief means to this end we can assert without egotism; for the film trade paper is the only place where producers gather on an equal basis to talk to exhibitors. The individual producer's house organ flies but a single banner; a complete collection of all producers' house organs distracts by its diversity and multiplicity. But the convenient and compact trade journal goes on, week after week, pounding home the names that become more and more familiar.

One might suppose that in due time, by this means, everybody would know everybody else, and repetition would be useless. And so it would if anything in life were permanent; if established theaters continued to operate under the same management forever. But in every line of business there is continual change; and in the motion picture theater business the rate of change is extraordinary.

MOTOGRAPHY'S list of picture theaters in the United States and Canada carries about seventeen thousand names. Of these approximately ninety-three hundred are paid subscribers; the rest are "prospects." It requires the time of three employes to keep these lists straight. Notification cards from the post office, returned first class mail, and changes of address ordered by subscribers totaled something like three thousand items in the last year; and of course there were many more changes of ownership of which we were not notified because the subscription order was in the name of the theater and not of the owner.

These many changes mean that there are thousands of new exhibitors and new managers entering the field every year. Doubtless they all know some of the film names; but that is about all they do know. Their useful information is no more extensive than that of the average man on the street. Indeed, it is from the ranks of the average man, who knows little about the film business, that the new exhibitors are recruited.

We are all prone to overestimate the extent of our reputations. We think, because we have worked hard and advertised and achieved big success, that everybody knows us. Then when we find someone in our own business who never heard of us we are shocked by his extraordinary ignorance. And ignorance it is, of course—the common human characteristic that so often upsets our fine egotism and keeps us everlastingly at work building up a greater and greater names for ourselves.

The biggest and most widely known companies advertise the most instead of the least. The fact that reputation is established does not mean that it is self-sustaining. The price of commercial fame and honor is eternal publicity, ceaseless advertising, constant hammering of the old facts into the ever new and ever changing public mind.

A Bill to Diminish Trade Paper Reading

A DEFICIT in a branch of governmental public service so universally important as the Post Office Department has no real significance. The object of the post office is to serve the people, not to make money out of them. If there were stockholders in the enterprise who demanded dividends on pain of electing new directors, it would be a simple matter to increase letter postage fifty per cent. A three-cent rate instead of a two-cent on first class mail would pay a handsome profit; and it would not appreciably diminish business, because the majority of sealed mail must go whatever the cost. And as the post office has a monopoly of its business, the public would have to stand it.

But the post office is not a stock company. It is a mutual organization whose stockholders are the public. They get their dividends in cheaper postage and better service. The only point of similarity is that they do, most emphatically, elect the directors of the organization. Those directors work under the real necessity of delivering good service at a minimum cost, and under the urge of vanity and ambition to establish a record by showing a proper profit. It is easier, and more desirable for internal reasons, to increase revenue than to reduce expenses. The groping mind of the post office systematizer, seeking the branch of its activities where public resentment will be least, accepts eagerly the superficial evidence that the second class department is the logical victim.

But any meddling with second class rates must give immunity to the newspapers. The unfortunate fate of a former attempt to impose a level two-cent rate demonstrates that. Those who live in the public eye must retain the friendship of the newspaper press. A cleverly arranged zone system is the politically obvious answer. It throws the whole burden on the educational publications (which includes all trade papers); and, as everybody knows, they have little political influence and control few votes.

The rider to the regular post office bill, which the House Post Office Committee has reported favorably, establishes the following rates on second class matter: Under 300 miles, one cent; 300 to 600 miles, two cents; 600 to 1,000 miles, three cents; 1,000 to 1,400 miles, four cents; 1,400 to 1,800 miles, five cents; more than 1,800 miles, six cents. The average increase is one hundred and fifty per cent over present rates. Postmaster General Burleson himself advocates an increase of but thirty-three per cent, and recommended a postponement of the question pending investigation. Not the least remarkable feature of the situation is that Representative Randall, the author of the rider, is from California; and his constituents are in the six-cent zone, figuring from the only publishing centers in the country!

Postage is one of the big expense items of the trade paper publishing business. Of the thousands of trade papers which perform their weekly or monthly educational tasks in this country, we know of many in other industries whose net profit scarcely equals their postage bills. A one hundred and fifty per cent increase in postage would put them out of business. If the bill with its rider should pass, the weekly paper with ten thousand subscribers and an issue weighing one pound would have to pay an extra postage tax of over seven per cent on one hundred thousand dollars!

We can conceive of no greater calamity to the industries of this country than to be deprived of their trade papers. They represent the highest development of practical educational method; they are the agents of industrial and commercial efficiency, and the mediums of inspiration to ambitious workers. Not because we are trade paper publishers, but because we are where we can observe the readers of all three classes of periodicals—the newspaper, the popular magazine, and the trade paper—we unhesitatingly give first place in importance to the trade paper. There can be no question that it has done more than any other class of reading matter to build up the business supremacy of this nation. To place a prohibitive tax upon it is to strangle the industrial progress of America at a time when encouragement is most vital to its future welfare.

Even the post office never seems to grasp the truth that trade papers originate more first class mail—the profitable class—than any other kind of periodical. One page of advertising in MOTOGRAPHY a few weeks ago, for example, has been responsible so far for nearly three thousand two-cent stamps. The total amount of first class mail set in motion by every issue of a trade paper exceeds the second class postage of the paper itself.

Vitagraph Announces Six Week Schedule

ELEVEN VITAGRAPH STARS AVAILABLE UNDER NEW PLAN

ACCORDING to the new release schedule recently announced by Walter W. Irwin, general manager of Vitagraph-V.-L.-S.-E., which promises that henceforth all the Blue Ribbon box-office stars will be seen regularly in rotation every six weeks, commencing in January, Anita Stewart; Earle Williams; Edith Storey, Antonio Moreno and William Duncan; Alice Joyce and Harry Morey; Peggy Hyland and Marc McDermott; and Lillian Walker and Walter McGrail will be available to exhibitors, and every sixth week the stars will return in the groupings just named.

The productions in which these Vitagraph stars will be seen have been selected under the personal care of J. Stuart Blackton and Albert E. Smith with the sole idea of the fitness of these stories for the stars and for their remarkable variety of theme. A cameo synopsis of the new schedule is as follows:

January 1—"Indiscretion," by William Addison Lathrop, featuring Lillian Walker, in a story dedicated to youth and showing the tragedy that lies beyond the wall of convention.

January 8—"The Man of Mystery," by Archibald Clavering Gunter, featuring the most famous actor of the stage, E. H. Sothern, supported by the popular stage favorite, Charlotte Ives. "The Man of Mystery" is the dramatic story of a man who returned from the valley to live again among those who thought him dead.

January 15—"The Glory of Lolande," by Mabelle Heikes Justice, featuring Anita Stewart in a drama of a girl who chose Siberia and the man she loved to luxury and pretense.

January 22—"Blind Justice," written and produced by, and featuring Benjamin Christie.

January 29—"Her Right to Live," written by Paul West, featuring Peggy Hyland and Antonio Moreno in the heart story of a child-waif whom Fate has made mother-bird to the fledglings in the family nest.

February 5—"Money Magic," from Hamlin Garland's novel, featuring Edith Story, Antonio Moreno, and William Duncan, in the story of a woman's sacrifice on the altar of duty and a man's payment of life itself.

February 12—"Who Shall Cast the First Stone?" by Milton Nobles, featuring Alice Joyce and Harry Morey in an intense story concerning the mistaken love of a noble woman for a man who leaves her heart an empty shell.

February 19—"Kitty Kackay," the big Broadway stage hit of last year by Catherine Chisholm Cushing, featuring Lillian Walker.

February 26—"The More Excellent Way," from the book of the same title by Cyrus Townsend Brady, featuring Anita Stewart in a story that tells of man's duplicity and his escape by the aid of the one he holds most dear.

March 5—"Arsene Lupin," the famous detective play of the same name by Paul Potter, featuring Earle Williams; the story of a master criminal's regeneration through a woman of his own class.

March 12—"The Grand Duke," by Mabelle Heikes Justice, featuring Peggy Hyland, Marc McDermott, and Bobby Connelly in a story illustrating the resourcefulness of a woman contesting with unscrupulous diplomatic agents of a foreign principality.

March 19—"Aladdin from Broadway," from the book and play of the same name by Frederick Isham, featuring Edith Storey and Antonio Moreno: the adventures of a good fellow who wins love and fortune.

March 26—"The Countess," by Adrian Gil Spear, featuring Alice Joyce and Harry Morey, in a story showing the strength of the weak in crises that call for the supreme heights of self-denial.

April 2—"Sally in a Hurry," by A. Van Buren Powell, featuring Lillian Walker in a drama of a lowly girl.

April 9—"Happiness," by Marguerite Bertsch, featuring Anita Stewart, a beautiful conception written especially for Miss Stewart.

April 16—"The Hawk," the famous stage play produced by William Faversham, featuring Earle Williams: the heart tragedy of a man who buries his better self and is redeemed through a woman's love.

April 23—"The Green God," from the book of the same title by Frederick Arnold Kummer, featuring Peggy Hyland and Marc MacDermott; an absorbing mystery story revolving about the loss of a sacred relic and the murder of the man who stole it.

April 30—"The Captain of the Gray Horse Troop," from Hamlin Garland's famous book of the same name, featuring Edith Storey and Antonio Moreno: the battle of a man for a downtrodden people, aided by a big woman.

May 7—"Northward Ho!" by Harry James Smith, featuring Alice Joyce and Harry Morey; a thrilling drama of a man and a woman in the Arctic.

May 14—"Princess of Park Row," by Paul West, featuring Lillian Walker in a romance of a little princess who flees a royal match and is won by a prince of good fellows.

May 21—"Babbette," from the book of the same name by Berkley Smith, featuring Anita Stewart: the influence of an innocent girl who saves a criminal from a terrible vengeance.

May 28—"Apartment No. 29," by E. J. Montagne, featuring Earle Williams in a story that proves truth stranger than fiction.

June 4—"The Agony Column," from the Saturday Evening Post serial story by Earl Derr Biggers, featuring Peggy Hyland and Marc MacDermott in the quest of a wife for a man through a number of astounding mysteries.

June 11—"The Magnificent Meddler," by Laurence McCloskey, featuring Edith Storey and Antonio Moreno; the struggles of a young man who set honor above love.

June 18—"The Human Desire," by Violet Irwin, featuring Anita Stewart in a story of a convent girl who gave all for love.

Three Special Features

In addition to these regular program features from the Vitagraph studios, there will be at least three special features. Miss Stewart will shortly be seen in "The Girl Philippa," by Robert W. Chambers, which has been booked by S. L. Rothapfel of the Rialto Theater to inaugurate his new Vitagraph program; "The Battle Cry of War," written and produced by Commodore Blackton; and Alice Joyce and Mary Morey in "Within the Law," Bayard Veiller's famous stage play which made Jane Cowl a star over-night.

Re-Issues Also Available

Mr. Irwin believes that no company has ever been able to go before the exhibitors with such an assured profit-making program, and for so long in advance. Besides preparing these new productions for Vitagraph exhibitors, de luxe edition reissues have been prepared of "My Official Wife," "A Million Bid," and "The Christian." The ensuing six months are, therefore, filled with Vitagraph value to every theater and Mr. Irwin has increased the importance of the Greater Vitagraph schedule by adopting a booking policy which permits all exhibitors to use these program features.

ANITA STEWART IN NEW ONE

"The Girl Philippa," Sumptuously Staged, Opens at Rialto on December 31 for Its World Premiere

"The Girl Philippa," the eight-reel Vitagraph presentation of Robert W. Chambers' recent story of the same name in the Cosmopolitan Magazine and with charming Anita Stewart in the title role, will have its premiere performance at the Rialto Theater, New York, on December 31.

"The Girl Philippa" is the picture with which, says Samuel L. Rothapfel, presiding genius of the Rialto, "will start the New Year right." Mr. Rothapfel will shatter all precedent by opening the doors of the Rialto at ten o'clock every morning during the run of "The Girl Philippa."

Anita Stewart was never seen to greater advantage than in this colossal dramatic version of Mr. Chambers' equally stirring story. S. Rankin Drew directed "The Girl Philippa," and plays the leading male role opposite Miss Stewart, leaving the spectator bewildered as to whether Mr. Drew is greater as an actor or as a director. The whole production was made under the supervision of Albert E. Smith, president of Greater Vitagraph.

This eight-reel Greater Vitagraph special is the first of the Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. pictures to enter the Rialto under the new contract by which the Blue Ribbon program features become the basis and nucleus of Mr. Rothapfel's 1917 feature entertainment.

To comment on Miss Stewart's loveliness in "The Girl Philippa" is to "paint the lily and adorn the rose." The whole picture is bewildering in its masterliness; it is a composite of splendid acting by Miss Stewart and her stellar supporting cast, of real genius in directing, of unusual skill in assembling and cutting, of the utmost daring in staging.

For probably the first time in motion picture production there is, in "The Girl Philippa," a dramatic story and not merely a spectacle in an eight-reel photoplay. Many of the exterior scenes are in themselves Corot-like in their arrangement and composition. Whole villages were built to accommodate the swiftly moving spirit of "The Girl Philippa."

There is a brief prologue—all too brief the public will find it—of about 400 feet which is the most remarkably lighted series of pictures that the writer has yet seen on the photoplay screen. This prologue shows the capture of a tiny Balkan princess after the assassination of her parents. The princess is the girl, Philippa. But to try to tell the plot of a Robert W. Chambers story in a few words is to attempt the impossible. "The Girl Philippa" is its own best story.

Bessie Love in "The Doll Shop"

At the Triangle Fine Arts studio Bessie Love is busily engaged in "The Doll Shop," now being produced by Director Eddie Dillon. In the role of the girl who has an intense hatred toward all rich people and then falls in love with a millionaire's son, whom she thinks is a chauffeur, Miss Love has a splendid opportunity for displaying her remarkable ability for enacting light comedy roles, while at the same time blending with this her characteristic sweet appeal.

Roy Stuart plays opposite Miss Love. Max Davidson appears as the uncle, while Carl Stockdale has the role of the factory owner. "The Doll Shop" was written by Anita Loos.

Director Swickard is filming at Universal City a five-act drama, "Beyond the Pale."

The vivacious and popular Anita Stewart in the new eight-reel Vitagraph version of Robert W. Chambers' story, "The Girl Philippa," which is to be presented at the Rialto in New York for the first time on New Year's eve.

Fourth Mutual-Richard Bennett Feature

OVEY COMEDIES TO REAPPEAR ON MUTUAL PROGRAM STARTING JAN. 4

THE Mutual Film Corporation's first offering for the year 1917 will be Richard Bennett's fourth Mutual Star Production, "The Gilded Youth," which will be released January 1. In this picture Mr. Bennett impersonates a young scion of a wealthy family, who is reduced to poverty and want through gambling and drink. There are some good race track scenes in the production in which the hero wins and loses a fortune, finally becoming a jockey in order that he may follow the horses.

Supporting Richard Bennett are Rhea Mitchell as a little boarding house slavey, Adrienne Morrison, as a wealthy girl, George Periolat and Alfred Hollingsworth.

On January 1, also will be released "Pangs of Jealousy," a two reel drama in which Ethel Grandin is starred.

"Tours Around the World," in one reel picturing Rio de Janeiro (capital of Brazil) and a ramble around Luchen will be offered on Tuesday, January 2.

"Mutual Weekly" No. 105, presenting the world's most important and interesting happenings together with "See America First" a one-reel scenic showing the beautiful scenery around Pasadena, California, "The City of Roses," on the same reel with "Miss Catnip Goes to the Movies," "Kartoon Komics" by Harry Palmer will be released on January 3, 1917. On Thursday, January 4, a one-reel comedy will be offered. J. Warren Kerrigan in a one-reel American drama will be shown on Friday, January 5.

Lois Meredith in "The Girl Who Can Cook," another of the one-reel Mutual Star comedies, will appear on Saturday, January 6. The story of this comedy tells of how the uncle of a rich young bachelor tries to make a match between a girl at a house party and his nephew. Finding that she cannot cook, he decides on a plainer and simpler girl, who cooks a delightful meal, in the absence of the cook. Of course the nephew is also fond of good cooking and asks the simpler miss to marry him.

"Reel Life" the film magazine from the Gaumont studios and "The Land of Nowhere" a two-reel Vogue comedy featuring Rube Miller, will be released on Sunday, January 7. "The Land of Nowhere" is a typical Vogue comedy and deals with the mishaps Rube has in a Bowery dance hall.

Ovey Comedies for Mutual

President John R. Freuler of the Mutual Film Corporation, and David Horsley, manufacturer of the Cub brand of comedies, have closed a contract whereby George Ovey in Cub comedies will reappear among Mutual short feature releases.

Ovey is making a series of one-reel comedies of the type in which he gained his name and fame with the Mutual. The first to be released is entitled "Jerry's Double Header," which will be offered to exhibitors on January 4.

Press Book on "Girl Reporter" Series

The publicity department of Mutual has compiled a very clever press book presenting to the exhibitors stories on the Edith Sessions Tupper novels "The Perils of our Girl Reporters," which were released on December 28. A new story will be presented each week for fifteen weeks. The initial release being "The Jade Necklace." In this book press stories on each of the releases and cuts of the stars are offered.

These are column length stories on each of the fifteen releases, together with synopsis and short press stories. Cuts of Helen Greene, Earl Metcalfe, Zena Keefe and William Turner, who are starring in the "Perils" series are also presented in the book with a short biographical sketch on the life of each of them. These cuts may be purchased by the exhibitor from any of the Mutual exchanges.

Nell Shipman Writes for William Russell

William Russell's next Mutual-American drama will be a play of southern life during the reconstruction period, and it is from the pen of Nell Shipman, the well known motion picture actress. The title of the picture is "A Son of Battle," and in it are depicted the hostilities of two families, formerly warmest friends, after the war with the north, in which the menfolk of the households had fought in opposing armies.

"A Son of Battle" makes a charming introduction for Francelia Billington's charms to Mutual Star Productions. It will be her first drama in support of William Russell since her recent contract with the American.

Agnes Eyre to Support Nance O'Neil

Frank Powell has engaged Agnes Eyre to appear in a prominent part in support of Nance O'Neil in the picturization of Gertrude Atherton's novel "Mrs. Balfame." The first of the O'Neil series of feature pictures now being produced by the Frank Powell Producing Corporation and which will be distributed through Mutual.

Miss Eyre has won for herself a wide following through her work in Essany and Selig productions. In "Mrs. Balfame" Miss Eyre appears as "Alys Crumley," one of the most appealing characters in that engrossing mystery story.

Miss O'Neil is also supported by Robert Elliott, Anna Raines and Frank Belcher, players of note, in this production.

Douglas Fairbanks to Work in East

Compliments of the season from the west to the east were carried to Mayor Mitchel of New York from Mayor Woodman of Los Angeles by Doublas Fairbanks, the Triangle Fine Arts star when he reached New York last week. Fairbanks, with his famous contagious smile, received the Christmas message from Mayor Woodman, in the latter's office, which was delivered to Mayor Mitchel Christmas morning. Fairbanks left for New York to put on his next comedy, now being written by Anita Loos. Mildred Harris, the new fifteen-year-old leading lady, will play opposite Fairbanks. John Emerson, who directed "The Americano," Fairbank's latest comedy, will direct the New York production. Included in the party who made the trip to New York were cameraman Victor Fleming, Jack Scott, Emerson's assistant, Glen MacWilliams, assistant cameraman, and Anita Loos, who will write all the Fairbanks' comedies. Bennie Zeidman, Fairbanks' personal representative, also accompanied the party.

Mary Miles in Pink Pajamas

Never before has Mary Miles Minter been so stunningly, not to say astoundingly gowned in any picture drama in which she has ever appeared as in her next Mutual Star Production, "The Innocence of Lizette," which has been completed at the studios of the American Film Company at Santa Barbara and will be released Christmas week.

Her costume is sometimes a pair of dainty pink silk pajamas. Again it is a severe black riding habit, with a shiny black hat. And then, still again, it is the sort of costume the screen public has come to love best when watching Mary Miles Minter on the screen—that of the appealing child of poverty.

The story of "The Innocence of Lizette" is built on one of those delightfully humorous plots which are seldom found among picture plays. Because of the innocence of her innocence, Lizette, a poor child, daughter of a once famous actor now dead, adopted into a rich and adoring family, tries to pass off a baby she has taken from its rightful mother as her own. The results prove highly dramatic as well as amusing, and the play is as full of thrills and big suspenses as it is of delightful humor and heart appeal.

Dustin Farnum, one of the latest additions to the imposing array of William Fox luminaries, has begun work on his first Fox production, under the direction of William Desmond Taylor, who came with Mr. Farnum from the Morosco company.

ART DRAMAS BOOMING

Applications for Distributing Franchises Received From Practically Every Independent Exchange —First Release, "The Lash of Destiny"

Remarkable confirmation of the Art Dramas theory of film distribution is seen by the officials of that company in the number of applications for the territorial rights that have been received by them. Despite the fact that the advertising matter of the company carries the names of the distributors who are to handle Art Dramas pictures, wires and telegrams are still coming in.

The plan of operation of the Art Dramas, Incorporated, contemplates the elimination of the profits of the central exchange inasmuch as the company is owned directly by its producing factors. By reason of this also it is expected that Art Dramas features will be of a higher quality than is customary in the ordinary five reel program pictures.

Speaking of the progress of the new organization since its inception a few months ago one of the officials of the company said:

In all my experience as a manufacturer and distributor of motion pictures, I have never seen such unanimity of opinion among the exchange men as exists in the case of the Art Dramas proposition. As is well known, the greater part of the territory for the distribution of our pictures was sold before any public announcement was made concerning the formation of the company. The few states that had not been sold before the announcement were quickly purchased. As a result of the wide latitude which rested with us for our choice of distributors, we have secured as our representatives in the various territories a group of men whom we consider to be the foremost exchange people in the country.

Since the announcement of our first four releases, our exchange representatives have advised us of the great number of inquiries and advance bookings they have received from the exhibitors in their territories. Our first release, "The Lash of Destiny," featuring Gertrude McCoy, was manufactured by the Van Dyke Film Corporation. The release date of this production has been set for December 14. It is a story of wide appeal, and I am sure that it will prove profitable to the exhibitors who show it. On the week following the U. S. Amusement Corporation production "Whoso Findeth a Wife," featuring Jean Sothern, will be released. In addition to a strong story picturized from a well known novel which was written in answer to Hall Caine's "The Woman Thou Gavest Me," this production will carry with it the advantage of a national publicity campaign inaugurated by the McCauley Company, who published the original book.

Our third release will be founded on one of the few really great plays of recent years, "The Rainbow," in which Henry Miller and Ruth Chatterton achieved such great success. The calibre of this play makes it worthy of production as a special release, as indeed was contemplated by Mr. Sherrill, the head of the William L. Sherrill Feature Corporation. However, it will go out on the Art Drama program featuring Dorothy Bernard with Robert Conness and Jack Sherrill in supporting parts.

"Intolerance" in Two Other Cities

The number of organizations presenting D. W. Griffith's "Intolerance" was increased last week by openings in Philadelphia at the Chestnut Street Opera House, in Pittsburgh at the Pitt Theater, and in Montreal at His Majesty's Theater.

This week will be the final one of the big spectacle's long and successful run at the Liberty Theater, New York.

Ruth Stonehouse is filming another of her "Mary Ann" series, this one being entitled "Mary Ann's First Love Affair." Miss Stonehouse in addition to having written the story is also playing the lead.

First Aid to Theater Men

PRACTICAL HELP ON THE PROBLEMS OF RUNNING A PICTURE HOUSE

THE young theater man—that is young in experience in the motion picture theater game—is liable to become rather discouraged this time of the year for during the holidays business is very slack, and it does not pick up again while the weather is so cold and unsettled. Do not let this dishearten you, however, for you know every business has its slack periods and this is the "off time" for the picture shows. As soon as the thermometer comes up and the storms cease the people will flock back in greater numbers than ever, hungry for the pictures which they have been missing.

Advertising Relatives

116—While visiting in an adjoining town I noticed that one of the exhibitors there was running a film with Lottie Pickford in it and he had a great big banner out in front reading "Mary Pickford's Sister," and the people were going in in crowds which I know Lottie Pickford never would bring and I believe that his advertising that way was what did it. It just occurred to me that I am going to run a picture soon which has Owen Moore in it and I wondered if it would not be a good stunt to advertise him as "Mary Pickford's husband," or do you think this is rather a flashy and foolish way of doing things?

Almost any kind of advertising is legitimate that will bring the money into your box office—that is as long as it is honest advertising. A man has no right to deceive the public by his publicity into believing that he has something which he has not and he will hurt himself and his house very much if he does so. It is a fact, however, that Lottie Pickford and Owen Moore are related to Mary Pickford and I think the man was a clever advertiser who took advantage of this fact and heightened the value of his film in this way. The name of Mary Pickford is good as a drawing card any time and while her husband and sister probably would much prefer to stand upon their own honors a little advertising of this kind does not hurt them in the least, and is perfectly legitimate. Exploitation of this kind because it is out-of-the-ordinary, will cause comment and anything which attracts attention in a genuine way is good advertising. Go ahead and copy your fellow exhibitor—he is evidently a man quick to grasp opportunities.

"Would You Drop to Five Cents?"

117—I have been running a theater for the last year charging ten cents admission and am making money on it, but I wonder if I would not make more money if I charged five cents. There are four other theaters in this part of the city in pretty close proximity and they all charge ten cents and fifteen cents when they have a special feature. Don't you think I would be showing originality and perhaps get in strong with the people if I put my price down to five cents? I believe I would get a whole lot of the trade that I do not get now if I did this.

A couple of years ago your scheme might have been a good one but nowadays the public has become accustomed to ten-cent shows as the average and also to fifteen and twenty-five-cent shows. The old idea that the exhibitor has no right to charge more than five cents for his show has been overcome. As the conditions are at present and with the increased expenses which a good exhibitor has to meet I do not think it is feasible to try this scheme and believe that you will regret it very much. Remember that it takes just twice as many nickels to make a dollar as it does dimes. Look at the matter squarely from this standpoint—do you think by charging five cents you can get just twice as many people to come into your theater as you have now? This plan has been tried before but almost without exception has failed. It is a fact that quality films in nickel houses rarely pay.

My advice to you is do not try it. As long as you are making a success with your house as it is why try an experiment which will undoubtedly lead to a falling off of your box office receipts. The people have grown to be rather afraid of five-cent theaters for they think they are not going to see the best pictures there. They have been educated to the ten-cent price for the good show and why not keep up the standard.

"What Shall I Do With the Kids?"

118—Here's another one for your elastic think tank. It is real nice to have someone standing near with broad shoulders upon which we can shift our problems. I am running a downtown theater which is right at a busy corner and my trade is made up entirely of shoppers who stop in to rest for an hour. I am doing a splendid business, have a line standing outside waiting most of the time. But I have had a good many complaints lately because so many of the women have small children with them and the kids have been dragged around all day shopping and are tired and cross and they cry a lot and wiggle around and don't care anything about the picture and cause a lot of disturbance to which the other patrons object. I can't very well keep all children out because that would mean a big loss of patronage and probably cause a lot of hard feelings besides. Can you tell me what the dickens to do with those kids?

There is no doubt whatever that crying children or youngsters who are talking out loud all the while do irritate the people in motion picture theaters very much and you cannot blame them for complaining. Also if you have a line of people waiting all the time you could use to advantage the seats which are occupied free of charge by these children. Have you no available space about your theater which you could partition off and make into a regular nursery for the youngsters? This would not have to be very large and could be down in the basement or up off the gallery or any out-of-the-way corner which is not used for anything else. Have a maid in charge to look after the children and some couches where they can lie down and have a nap or rest if they are tired, and also have picture books and toys for them. This would not only take care of the children nicely and remove the irritation from the other patrons but would also allow the mothers to enjoy the show much better when relieved of the responsibility of the children. I believe that this little plan would increase your patronage greatly if you advertised this nursery for all the mothers would rather come to yours than any other house downtown. I know this scheme has been tried out successfully in neighborhood theaters and see no reason why it should not be just as feasible in a downtown house.

TRIANGLE HANDLES KEYSTONE

Advertisement of Open Booking Plan Gives Many Impression That Keystone Would Be Released Independently

Charles Kessel, speaking for Messrs. Kessel and Bausann, wishes to correct a mistaken impression which appears to have been created by an advertisement in the trade papers of last week concerning the Keystone comedies. Mr. Kessel says:

"Since the advertisement of last week concerning the new open booking policy for Keystone Comedies has seemingly caused the belief that Keystone Comedies would be released independent of the Triangle offices, I wish to state that there is no ground whatever for this impression. As heretofore Keystone comedies may be had only through the Triangle exchanges, and by arrangement with the Triangle Film Corporation or its associated organizations.

"The new releasing plan is created in deference to the demand for Keystone Comedies on the part of exhibitors who may have contractual arrangements with other programs. Under the new plan, as stated in the advertisement referred to, these comedies may be had quite independently of any program arrangement that may exist or that may have existed. If an exhibitor wishes to arrange for Keystones it will be his privilege to do so, but the arrangements must be made through the Triangle exchanges, for our product will only reach the exhibitor through those channels. We believe that the new arrangement is a distinct step in advance, and one that will work for the advantage of the exhibitor throughout the country. All inquiries for bookings for the Keystone Comedies should be addressed to the Triangle branch offices."

J. Warren Kerrigan Company

While the destiny of J. Warren Kerrigan was apparently flying in every direction through space, with many rumors crediting him with having affiliated himself with practically every motion picture producer throughout the country, this screen hero has been quietly negotiating to settle his own future, with the result that he will shortly be seen as the head and star of his own company.

Backed by eastern capital, Mr. Kerrigan has placed his signature to a long term contract. Work on the construction of a studio for the new Kerrigan company, it is said, will be started immediately, the location being Hollywood, California. Everything will be in readiness for the filming of the first story by March 1.

The supporting company for the star is now being considered and negotiations are under way to secure one of the most successful directors in the film world. Powerful dramas are being carefully selected for Mr. Kerrigan, each subject to be taken from the best books obtainable for picture purposes.

"Womanhood" is the name finally chosen for the huge production upon which J. Stuart Blackton has been working for the last year, and for which a release announcement is awaited from Vitagraph at an early date. The working title of the great film epic has been "The Battle Cry of War." It is the sequel to the immensely successful special feature "The Battle Cry of Peace." The theme is on American military preparedness and the vital interest of woman in national welfare. The principal players include Alice Joyce, Harry Morey, Joseph Kilgour, Peggy Hyland, Walter McGrail, and other favorites.

OLGA PETROVA A LASKY STAR

Former Metro Star Signs Long-Time Contract With Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company— First Release in April

The Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company has taken another gigantic stride forward in the signing of a contract with Mme. Olga Petrova, who has created a sensation in the photoplay world by her marvelous emotional acting in Metro productions. In order to give ample time for the presentation of her first photoplay for the Paramount program the release date of her initial appearance under the new management has been set for April.

Mme. Petrova will spend half of each year at the Lasky studio in Hollywood, California, and the other in New York.

The fact that Mme. Petrova and Jesse L. Lasky are now allied on the Paramount Program recalls the fact it was Mr. Lasky who first introduced the great actress to America. A few years ago, while Mr. Lasky was making his customary trip to Europe in search of new talent for his "Folies Bergere," he heard of a remarkable young girl at the Tivoli in London, who had created a sensation by her singing. He attended the performance, was greatly impressed, and proceeded to negotiate with her to make her American debut under his management.

Two Fifteen-Year Stars with Triangle

Two of the fifteen-year-old leading ladies at the Triangle Fine Arts studio appear in "The Bad Boy" featuring Robert Harron. They are Mildred Harris, who will play opposite Douglas Fairbanks in his next comedy, and Pauline Starke. Chester Withey is directing the production. The scenario was written jointly by Frank E. Woods, manager of productions of the Fine Arts plant and Director Withey.

Six genuine, dyed in the wool, "hoboes" appear in the Triangle Fine Arts production, "The Bad Boy." Director Chester Withey was not satisfied with the way in which some of his players made up as "knights of the road." He determined to secure the real stuff and went to one of the outlying railroad yards where he picked up six of the "bummiest" bums that every were thrown off a railroad train. The hoboes registered beautifully but after Withey finished with them, they didn't want to quit. Each thought he had a brilliant future in pictures, if only given half a chance.

Carlyle Blackwell, who usually has Ethel Clayton as vis-a-vis in World-Brady picture plays, will be seen opposite the sumptuously lovely Gail Kane in "On Dangerous Ground," the next release of this company. The secene of this drame is laid in Cologne and on the Belgian frontier at the outbreak of the war, and concerns the efforts of a French spy (Miss Kane) to escape with valuable military secrets to her native country. She is aided by a young American surgeon, personated by Mr. Blackwell, who is very nearly bereft of his life and completely loses his heart during the progress of the story.

70 Features and 52 Comedies for Fox

WINIFRED KINGSTON ENGAGED TO PLAY OPPOSITE DUSTIN FARNUM

THESE are William Fox's picture promises for 1917:

For the next year Mr. Fox will present to the exhibitors and the public 70 productions varying in length from 4,500 to 6,000 feet. These cinema features de luxe will be on a magnificant scale and will maintain the Fox standard.

William Fox will also produce 52 comedy features of 2 reels each, released one every week.

These are William Fox's picture achievements during 1916:

Mr. Fox produced and presented to the public "A Daughter of the Gods"—the picture beautiful—with Annette Kellermann.

He also produced "The Honor System"—the greatest human story ever told, staged by R. A. Walsh, which will be the sensation of the coming season.

He also produced 52 big features during 1916, headed by 100 celebrated box office names. The William Fox organization includes such notables as: Theda Bara, William Farnum, Annette Kellerman, Virginia Pearson, Gladys Brockwell, June Caprice, Winifred Kingston, George Walsh, Harry Hilliard, Anna Luther, Mary Martin, Dustin Farnum, Jane and Katherine Lee, Charles Arling, Hank Mann, Walter Law, Valeska Suratt, Tom Mix, Carmen Phillips, Stuart Holmes, Vivian Rich, Gladys Coburn, Jewel Carmen and 500 others.

Beginning with "The Price of Silence," on January 8, William Fox inaugurates his policy of giving the public film masterpieces starring Theda Bara and William Farnum—each appearing in eight or ten. Miss Bara's premiere production for the super de luxe cinema achievements is "The Darling of Paris," a remarkable photoplay suggested by Victor Hugo's deathless story, "The Hunchback of Notre Dame."

During January, "A Daughter of the Gods," now playing in its fourth month in New York City to capacity business at the Lyric Theater will have its New York showings at the Academy of Music.

Fox Engages Winifred Kingston

Winifred Kingston, who has appeared in support of Dustin Farnum in photoplays during the last three years, will continue in her "playing-opposite" capacity with Mr. Farnum, for Miss Kingston also has been added to the William Fox forces in the California studios.

The first picture in which Miss Kingston and Mr. Farnum acted together was "The Squaw Man." That was late in 1913. Since then, the two have been working before the same camera almost completely.

Miss Kingston came to the United States from England just six years ago. Previous to this, she had been acting through the provinces and in London productions. Her first part on the stage was as Polly Love in "The Christian."

In America she joined one of the road companies of "The Servant in the House," and later had an important part in the New York production of "Thais" which starred Tyrone Power and Constance Collier.

Motion pictures followed. Beginning with the Lasky company, Miss Kingston's career continued through work with Thanhouser, Famous Players, Bosworth, Morosco and Pallas. Her present change to the William Fox company is her most important since entering the silent drama.

Fox Signs Ralph and Vera Lewis

In continuance of his policy of increasing still more his great list of photoplay luminaries for 1917, William Fox has just signed two stars who are one. They are Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Lewis. Mrs. Lewis is known professionally as Vera Lewis.

Ralph Lewis, who has been hated in every country in the world where motion pictures are projected, undoubtedly achieved his biggest success in the silent drama when he gave his remarkable impersonation of Stoneman, the ruler of the South, in "The Birth of a Nation."

Within a few days, the new Fox player will begin acting before the camera in the role of a genial, kind-hearted father, whose son accomplishes wonders and then returns to the parental roof.

Vera Lewis, who will be seen in the same production with her husband, also enjoys a long record of stage and screen successes. She comes, too, from Griffith's Triangle company. She acted recently in "Intolerance," where she had the part of Miss Jenkins, the selfish philanthropist.

June Caprice a Modern Cinderella

June Caprice is more charming than ever in the "neglected sister" role which she plays in "A Modern Cinderella," which William Fox announces for release on January 8, 1917.

Miss Caprice is ably supported by Frank Morgan.

The rest of the cast is made up of Betty Prendergast, Stanhope Wheatcroft, Grace Stevens and Tom Brook.

A Plea for Child Factory Slaves

A stirring plea for the little slaves of the factory, is the theme of "The Price of Silence" William Fox's newest photodrama with William Farnum playing the leading role, and directed by Frank Lloyd. Supporting Mr. Farnum in this wonderful production aptly called "The Uncle Tom's Cabin" of to-day are, Vivian Rich, Charles Clary, Frank Clark, Brooklyn Kellar, Ray Hanford and Gordon Griffith.

"The Price of Silence" is a wonderful story of love and renunciation, woven into a theme of great public interest—"child slavery." What "Uncle Tom's Cabin" did for the negro slaves, William Fox's "The Price of Silence," will do for the underfed, illy-nourished, hard-working little factory slaves.

The picture is released for January 8, 1917.

President and Mrs. Wilson See Fox Film

President and Mrs. Wilson attended the opening performance of the William Fox million dollar picture beautiful, "A Daughter of the Gods," starring Annette Kellermann, at the Belasco Theater, Washington.

Both the President and Mrs. Wilson have seen motion pictures before, but never at a theater. Hitherto they have seen photoplays either at the White House or at private entertainments. They selected "A Daughter of the Gods" as their entertainment for their first wedding anniversary which occurred Monday.

The President was greatly pleased with the picture. He thanked Manager Taylor, of the Belasco, personally and said that "A Daughter of the Gods" was a wonderful and unusually beautiful film.

The presence of the President and his wife at a theater is considered the highest compliment that can be paid an attraction. It is only during the administrations of the last two or three Presidents that theater-going has been popular with the Chief Executive.

By his attendance at the opening performance of "A Daughter of the Gods" President Wilson has not only endeared himself to Washington's motion picture fans, but to the 70,000,000 or 80,000,000 photoplay patrons in the United States.

All feel a closer and more personal touch with the nation's head and his wife since their attendance at a regular film entertainment.

Exhibitors and others now believe they can truthfully say the motion picture is the American diversion; not peculiar to the "four hundred" or the "million" but for the masses and the classes.

Exhibitors in Washington feel that the President's attendance has given a distinct impetus to the comparatively new industry which now ranks fifth among this country's. His visit stamps officially with his approval the motion picture as an institution. It furnished renewed proof that he and his wife are essentially of the American people.

Frank Lawrence New Vitagraph Manager

Frank Lawrence, recognized as one of the cleverest film cutters in the business, has been made manager of the largest film factories in the world, those of the Greater Vitagraph.

Ever since his boyhood Mr. Lawrence has been employed by this concern. At first in the capacity of an operator he was employed by William T. Rock in an amusement house in 125th street, New York City. In his new capacity, Mr. Lawrence controls Vitagraph's negative room, cutting room, printing department, joining room, perforating, developing, drying, shipping and still-picture departments.

Building Operations at Fine Arts

When improvements now under construction are completed, the Triangle-Fine Arts studio in Los Angeles will be one of the most complete and splendidly equipped picture plants in the country.

To make room for a greatly increased volume of production and in anticipation of a winter season that is expected to be one of the busiest and most prosperous in the history of the studio, a large new light studio and elaborate scene docks are being built, in addition to two new stages. The property rooms also are being remodeled and the old light studio greatly enlarged.

With these facilities it will be possible for more than a score of companies to work at the plant simultaneously. The improvements are listing approximately $10,000.

Standing is Mary MacIvar, Triangle ingenue opposite Bill Hart, encircled below. The turbaned smile is Carmel Myers, new Fine Arts star. Keith Armour and Roy Stuart, in the panels, are Fine-Arts-ers. The seated lady is Miss Betty Marsh, niece of Mae Marsh and youngest Keystone comedienne.

What Artcraft Distribution Means

GEORGE M. COHAN WILL RUN GUM FACTORY FOR WEEK

FEWER and better pictures has often been preached but never has an organization pointed toward this trend more effectively than Artcraft. Our very foundation indicates bigger and better pictures with longer runs which of course mean fewer releases. This is undoubtedly the trend of the motion picture future and that Artcraft will play a most important part in the evolution of the photoplay which will have its effect during the next twelve months, is readily apparent.

The advent of any new force in the motion picture industry is often looked upon with fear by exhibitors, particularly when it calls for a longer run of the attraction, a higher charge of admission and an increase in the cost of rentals. At the same time, many exhibitors realize that it was due to the entrance of just such forces into the business several years ago that resulted in the great improvement evidenced during the past few years. Exhibitors who at that time feared to raise their admission price from five to ten cents are today selling their twenty-five cent seats faster than their ten cent seats.

Thus when Artcraft entered the field several months ago and offered new ideas and policies to the exhibitor, many managers did not realize that this was merely another step toward their own advancement as well as that of the industry in general. Artcraft is primarily intended for the improvement of conditions affecting the exhibitor—the fifty-two-weeks-a-year exhibitor whose theater is a regular motion picture house, whether it is a palatial institution or a small town odeon. In the past this exhibitor has shown pictures of ordinary merit year in and year out and when a big production came to his town it was given to the opera house or the regular dramatic theater, whilst he was forced to offer as opposition his mediocre pictures. This is the situation in which Artcraft protects the exhibitor. In other words, Artcraft gives the exhibitor a chance at the big stuff which in the past was given to the owner of the regular "legit" theater.

In place of running the mediocre film three days and a week, Artcraft supplies these houses with productions that will not only stand an increase in admission price but a longer run. In other words, Artcraft not only places the unusual attraction within the reach of the regular exhibitor whose palatial theater is the logical place to show the production, but gives him the opportunity of placing his house on a still higher plane by increasing the run of the subject and justifiably asking more for admission.

As to the smaller exhibitor, Artcraft offers to him the very thing for which every live-wire showman is ever on the lookout, namely, a "special attraction" or stimulus for his business. To the small exhibitor who is showing the usual film Artcraft is as important as it is to the owner of the immense motion picture palace. Where heretofore it has been impossible for him to secure the big production until long after its initial appearance, Artcraft now makes it possible for him to show the so-called "big stuff" occasionally, thus not only increasing the prestige of his house but actually injecting new blood into the box-office veins of his business.

To the producer Artcraft offers a distribution such as has never been evidenced before. It not only saves him the laborous and expensive proceedings in connection with the simultaneous presentation of a big production throughout the country but places at his disposal the very best theaters in the land. At the same time Artcraft's scope is not limited to the activities and ideas of a set of producers. Any author, artist or producer will find in Artcraft an outlet for ideas or productions that are in keeping with the standard it has already established.

Geo. M. Cohan Annexes Gum Factory

And now George M. Cohan has added another vocation to his remarkable career. As an actor he first gained wide fame, then as an author his plays and songs proved big hits, finally as a producer of plays he added even greater laurels to his previous fame. Now he is entering a new enterprise, something entirely different from any previous undertaking, namely, the management of an immense chewing gum factory.

It is his idea to give the public a gum that will not only meet with its instantaneous approval but will be in great demand immediately after it makes its initial appearance on the market.

For this purpose the famous actor-author-producer of the theatrical and motion picture world has taken over the gum plant of William J. Wischmann, in Brooklyn, N. Y. It is understood that he will personally take hold of things immediately after Christmas and will assume the management of the Wischmann plant —for one week, or as long as it takes to obtain the necessary scenes for his first Artcraft photoplay, "Broadway Jones."

Mary Pickford's second Artcraft release appears on January 8. As is well known to the trade now, its title is "The Pride of the Clan," in which "Little Mary" becomes a Scotch lass for the first time. The picture below shows a scene from the play in the filming.

The little "Scutch lassie" with the tam, the plaid and the pail is Mary Pickford at work. The scene is one in the creating of "The Pride of the Clan," the newest Artcraft play featuring America's best girl.

Theda Bara Signs Strange Contract

It is said that one of the strangest contracts ever entered into between star and manager was consummated when Theda Bara, the world famous screen star, a few days ago signed a new three years contract submitted to her by William Fox.

Hereafter only the camera is to gaze on these features.

In signing this unusual document Miss Bara virtually becomes a recluse. The terms of the agreement prohibit her showing her physical features to the public, but can be only shown through the medium of the screen, or by photographs supplied by the William Fox organization. Immediately after leaving the studios, Miss Bara must seclude herself from the gaze of the multitude. No one, according to the terms of the contract, is allowed to look upon her strange features.

Miss Bara has agreed, and has bended herself to abide by the following stipulations:

Miss Bara will not marry within a period of three years.

Miss Bara is not to appear in public unless heavily veiled.

Miss Bara must not ride in a street car, in the subway, or on the elevated.

Miss Bara must not go shopping unless heavily veiled.

Miss Bara must not go to her costumer unless her features are entirely covered.

Miss Bara must not appear in any theater for a period of three years.

Miss Bara must not take her daily constitutional by the light of day. She must do so at night, and then must be veiled.

Miss Bara, when riding in her limousine car, must have the window curtained.

Miss Bara must not permit any snapshot photographs to be taken of herself.

Miss Bara must have all photographic negatives for which she poses delivered to the office of William Fox.

Mr. Fox, in view of Miss Bara's acquiescence to the contract, promised his world-famous star that he contemplated sending her to Morocco and Tangier, in Egypt in the coming spring, where he has under consideration the production of several photodramas.

Elfs Service Company Formed

Frederick Russell Clark, president of the Fort Dearborn Photoplays Company, has organized another company to be known as the Elfs Service. The name is taken from the service which the company wishes to give—education, lectures, films, service. The plan of this new organization is to furnish programs to churches and schools for appropriate motion picture entertainments. A list of educational subjects, films suitable for churches, and juvenile pictures, has been compiled. The company will not only furnish the pictures but also the projection machine as well as it is handling different makes of machines, and will also furnish a lecturer or supply the lecture to be given by someone else. It will plan special programs for exhibitors if they desire, or arrange benefit entertainments for the churches and schools to he held in the theaters.

Mr. Clark's plan is to ultimately go further than this and picturize the text books which the students use in schools—to go right into the laboratories and take pictures of the experiments, tests, etc., and also to produce in pictures the literature which they are studying, thus having a complete supplementary course of pictures to be given in connection with the school course.

MOROSCO-PALLAS STANDARDS

These Companies Aim for Perfection in Pictures Through Efficiency and Art in Studio Work as Well as Carefully Chosen Casts

The Morosco-Pallas Companies have set as their goal the manufacture of the best photoplays in the world, and to attain this end are working toward efficiency in the studio which will gain the results on the screen, as well as the "typical Morosco casts." This desired perfection will be due to the application of the best known efficiency methods of the mechanical end of the Morosco and Pallas studios.

In describing this efficiency, Carl H. Pierce, B. A., says: "On one occasion not long ago I stood on the stage at the studio two hours before the set was shot. The stage was empty and there was no sign that there would be anything doing in that particular quarter during the morning. To my surprise on returning two hours later, the entire set had been erected and everything was in perfect order for the taking of an exact reproduction of the best New York studio which it has been possible to find. There was no confusion. There was no loud or harsh words, but so perfectly had the units, which comprised this set, been ordered and made that the entire set seemed to fall together as if by magic. Those who are familiar with the old time conditions at the studios still marvel at the system which has been installed at the Morosco-Pallas plant.

"If exhibitors will take such points as these mentioned above in exploiting to their patrons the means used by Paramount Manufacturers to produce the best pictures in the world, it is reasonable to suppose that this information will not only be interesting to the public but will tend to increase the attendance in their theaters because such matters are really of news interest. Having been told about the new method of constructing pictures, 'fans' will talk these items over with their associates, and people who perhaps have not been previously interested in pictures will come to see the new style productions.

"For example, the exhibitors can say to their patrons in a little press notice which might be issued in the house organ that the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company and the Pallas Pictures do not use the ordinary faked-up sets of stereotyped stock or of stuff built after out-of-date motion picture tradition, and this is one of the reasons that everyone is remarking at the excellence of their sets."

Joseph Maurice Attie, the French tragedian, will sever his connections with the Palace Players after the first of the year. Mr. Attie was leading man and assistant director of the company for the past year.

Edith Ellis Joins Goldwyn Pictures

CRITICS HAVE VARIOUS OPINIONS OF MAE MARSH BUT ALL PRAISE HER

Mae Marsh.

THE Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, with an organization made up of well known playwrights, has added another to its role in the person of Edith Ellis, author of "Mary Jane's Pa," and half a dozen other successful plays produced here and abroad.

Miss Ellis is to be the literary adviser and judge of all manuscripts and stories submitted to the producers of Goldwyn Pictures. Working in co-ordination with Margaret Mayo and Edgar Selwyn, these three playwrights will, from the outset, insure quality for Goldwyn pictures and impart to them a definite standing, not merely for individually brilliant films but for all of the productions of the company.

Among Miss Ellis' manifold activities in the dramatic field in recent years are a dramatization of Tolstoi's "Anna Karenina;" an adaptation of Ferencz Herczegh's "Seven Sisters;" the production of a musical comedy, the "Charity Game;" and the libretto of an operetta, "The Love Wager," in which Fritzi Scheff was starred; the dramatization of E. P. Roe's "He Fell In Love With His Wife;" and a three-act light operetta, "The Amethyst Ring."

Goldwyn Pictures entire fabric is being perfected on the basis of expert service—executive management by men identified with the better phases of the industry from its beginnings; the co-operation of a group of internationally known authors and playwrights and stars of only the first magnitude.

The greatest safeguards have been placed around the manuscripts and stories to insure the first requisite—perfection of dramatic elements and their production.

Critics Praise Mae Marsh

Mae Marsh, the first star announced for Goldwyn Pictures, has been universally praised by the critics, on whose estimates hinge the success or failure of a man or woman on the stage or screen.

Ashton Stevens, Chicago Examiner: "The most wonderful of Griffith's women stars is not beautiful at all. She is Mae Marsh and as monkeyish as Maude Adams. She is the first actress in my experience to possess a mental magnetism translatable to celluloid."

Kitty Kelly, Chicago Tribune: "Mae Marsh is one of the sort who give us hope that brains, not beauty, will be the acid test of the future in establishing screen stars."

Charles Darnton, New York Evening World: "Mae Marsh is a vivid, electric actress."

Louella Parsons, Chicago Herald: "Mae Marsh is the best actress on the screen."

William Hardy, Boston Post: "Mae Marsh is a girl of smiles and tears—a remarkable screen figure."

Rob Reel, Chicago American: "Mae Marsh is becoming the most popular star in America and deserves to attain that eminence."

R. G. McCoy, Pittsburg Leader: "Mae Marsh's ever-changing, mood-adapting face is the most valuable in all the long list of film favorites. She is the girl of a thousand faces."

Life of Mae Marsh

Mae Marsh, the first great star of Goldwyn Pictures, is just twenty years old and David Wark Griffith, who discovered, trained and featured her in all of his greatest pictures, has predicted that she will become the greatest of all screen celebrities.

Miss Marsh is a little "railroad girl" and was born in Madrid, New Mexico. Her father was the auditor of the Santa Fe Railroad, and her earliest recollections are of eating tortillas while seated on the dirt floor of a Mexican cabin.

Mae Marsh was at Sacred Heart convent when the big fire and tremblor hit San Francisco. For three days she and her mother lived in a tent in Golden Gate Park with thousands of other refugees. After the San Francisco disaster the Marsh family moved to Los Angeles and there an older sister went into motion pictures. Soon after this Mae Marsh entered screenland. David Wark Griffith saw an appealing and pathetic little extra girl sitting on a tree stump outside a studio waiting for work and immediately picked her out of more than three hundred other children waiting for the one open job. The very first part she ever played was that of Applepie Mary in "Home Sweet Home."

In screenland Mae Marsh is looked upon with the same sympathetic regard that the intellectual and thoughtful critics bestow upon Maude Adams, Mrs. Fiske or the great Bernhardt.

Mae Marsh is slender and delicately fragile. She is golden-haired and blue-eyed. A matter of great importance is that she has not the faintest trace of "big head." She has little idea of her own importance and by no means realizes the extent of her popularity.

New Ivan for New Year

The Ivan Film Productions, headed by Ivan Abramson, who during the past year has created numerous highly interesting and timely photoplay subjects, will open the 1917 period with what he terms the most remarkable of all his documents—"Enlighten Thy Daughter."

Next in importance to the story, which is in eight reels, comes the highly illuminating cast of players.

No less than ten principals characterize the important parts.

Frank Sheridan, who starred in "The Struggle," Zena Keefe, formerly with World Film and Vitagraph, James Morrison, former Vitagrapher, and Marie Shotwell, recently co-starred in "The Witching Hour," share honors with the noted screen and stage personage, Katherine Kaelred. Miss Kaelred secured her screen experience with both Equitable and Triangle, and before that was the vampire in "A Fool There Was," during its stage popularity.

The assembling of characteristic casts, such as have obtained in former Ivan features, asserts itself in the general satisfactory tone of "Enlighten Thy Daughter" also. The production is a special release, and will reach the market about January 10.

FULL OF GASPS AND GRINS

McClure Pictures Makes Announcement Regarding Features in "Envy," Opening Play of "Seven Deadly Sins" Series

McClure Pictures has announced the details of "Envy," the initial one of the "Seven Deadly Sins," the series of five-reel features to be released by Superpictures, Inc., through the Triangle exchanges beginning in January.

Ann Murdock, star of "Envy," will be supported by Shirley Mason and George Le Guere. Miss Mason, talented sister of Viola Dana, has played many leading parts in Edison pictures. Others in the cast are Lumsden Hare, Jessie Stevens, William Wadsworth and Robert Cain.

The opening play of the group of the "Seven Deadly Sins" introduces Eve Leslie (Miss Mason) and Adam Moore (Mr. Le Guere), whose love story is carried through the entire series.

Eve is first tempted by envy. She is a little country girl and she wishes she could have the things seemingly possessed by Betty Howard, a great actress. Miss Murdock plays "Betty Howard."

The country lass is willing to do almost anything to attain her ambition. She is ready to cast aside Adam Moore, who loves her, to marry a rich man she does not love, in order to attain what she believes to be happiness. Betty Howard, the famous actress, is far from happy. She has found her lost brother in a low dive. She tries to help him, but does not tell of her relationship. Complications ensue.

An accident throws Eve and Betty together. Betty's sweetheart turns to Eve. The brother begins blackmail. Eve finds herself in a terrible predicament, learns that Betty after all is not to be envied, and her troubles all are straightened out when Eve realizes that the life of a little country girl is the happiest after all.

The play abounds with touches of comedy, as well as with thrilling moments. A battle for Eve's life aboard a yacht ends with Miss Murdock and Miss Mason diving overboard to escape, after Miss Murdock and Mr. Le Guere have reached the yacht in a wild ride through a raging storm in motor car, motor boat and aquaplane.

Having conquered Envy, Eve is tempted by the second of the "Seven Deadly Sins," "Pride," which is the second of the series of five-reel features. Holbrook Blinn is the star.

Kerrigan to Tour Country

In his new capacity as star and head of the J. Warren Kerrigan Feature Film Corporation, Mr. Kerrigan will shortly leave Los Angeles on a three months tour which will take him to the principal cities of the country. Mr. Kerrigan is aiming for closer relationship between the photoplay star, the motion picture loving public and the exhibitor, and this tour is a response to the thousands of letters and telegrams he has received during his screen career.

During his absence from Los Angeles the construction of a new studio in Hollywood will be pushed so that everything will be in readiness for his first production when he returns. Before his departure the more important members of his company will be selected and a contract with a successful director will be signed.

The schedule of Mr. Kerrigan's tour, with the exception of a number of side trips, is as follows: El Paso, San Antonio, Waco, Fort Worth, Dallas, Houston, Galveston and Beaumont, (Texas); New Orleans, La.; Mobile, Montgomery and Birmingham, (Alabama); Nashville, Tenn.; Atlanta, Ga.; Charlotte, S. C.; Richmond and Norfolk, Va.; Washington, D. C.; Wilmington, Del.; Baltimore, Md.; Philadelphia, Pa.; New York City, N. Y.; Boston, Mass.; Buffalo, N. Y.; Cleveland, Toledo and Cincinnati, Ohio; Detroit, Mich.; Chicago, Ill.; Milwaukee, Wis.; Minneapolis, St. Paul and Duluth, Minn.; St. Louis, Mo.; Kansas City, Mo.; Omaha, Neb.; Denver, Col.; Salt Lake City, Utah; Spokane and Seattle, Wash.; Vancouver, B. C.; Tacoma, Wash.; Portland, Ore.; Sacramento, San Francisco and Los Angeles, Cal.

Recently there has come the announcement of the organization of the Technicolor Motion Picture Corporation of Boston, a concern which claims the perfection of natural color motion picture photography and which concern has been quietly at work for many years in the perfection of its inventions. Associated with the Technicolor Company in the capacity of director of policy and manager general of productions is "Doc" C. A. Willat. For the past eight months, "Doc" has been in close consultation with the inventors of Technicolor at their Boston laboratories.

"Doc" is at present in Jacksonville, Florida, having preceded his cast of players who will enact Technicolor's "The Little Skipper," an eight reel production in natural colors which is expected to create a good deal of attention.

According to William Fox's present plans, Gladys Coburn's second photoplay will be released for the week of January 22, 1917. Fritz Leiber, the Shakespearian actor, plays opposite Miss Coburn in this film.

Tom Mix Will Make Foxfilm Comedies

VICTORIA FORD WILL CONTINUE TO PLAY FEMALE LEADS FOR MR. MIX

FOR the first time in his screen career Tom Mix, cowboy, rough rider, motion picture actor, scenario writer and director, will appear under other than the Selig banner. Mr. Mix has signed with the William Fox forces and will immediately begin work on a series of western comedies for the Foxfilm comedy program.

The Mix pictures will be the most pretentious comedies ever offered by any producer and men in the film industry are confidently expecting that Mr. Fox will write another chapter to motion picture history. For staging these offerings, Mr. Fox has leased a large tract of land on the Winna Brown ranch near Los Angeles, erected a complete western city from dance hall to undertaking establishment and arranged for the maintenance of a large stock farm to furnish horses and cattle for the films.

Opposite Mr. Mix when he begins work for Foxfilm comedies will be Victoria Ford who has played his female leads ever since he has been in pictures.

Tom Mix is one of the most picturesque figures on the Pacific Coast. He is typically a westerner and unmistakably a cowboy, always wearing a sombrero which fits exactly with his rugged virile features.

The career of Tom Mix is fully as picturesque and romantic as is the man himself. It began in the western country. He was a cowpuncher.

Then came an international argument involving the United States and Spain and Tom Mix enlisted with the Rough Riders.

The Rough Riders came home covered with glory and Tom Mix sought new worlds to conquer. Motion pictures sounded interesting and finally he tried them. He is now one of the best known exponents of the silent drama.

Lehrman Making First Fox Comedy

Motion picture comedy in its highest development today is the product of the brain of one man. That man is Henry Lehrman, hardly thirty years old, who has gained fame for himself as director, actor and producer.

Within a few weeks Mr. Lehrman's first comedy for William Fox's Foxfilm brand will be released. He is making it now and all the genius which has been manifested in his previous comedies will be used to evoke laughs from the most serious-minded observer.

Henry Lehrman began work in motion pictures while they were still in their infancy. He started with the Pathe company as an extra, but quickly rose to the fore as a comedy actor.

He soon joined with Mack Sennett in forming the Keystone company. This partnership lasted about three years. Then Lehrman withdrew and took charge of the Ford Sterling company which released through Universal.

A short time later he formed the L-Ko company, continuing to release on the Universal program. With this company he remained until his recent arrangement with William Fox.

The first comedy which Mr. Lehrman is making for William Fox has a cast headed by himself, Billie Ritchie, Gertrude Selby and Dot Farley, "Montana Kid," the famous comedy dog, is also down among the principals.

Billie Ritchie Adds to Foxfilm Fun

Billie Ritchie, comedy idol of screen followers all over the world and creator of a make-up that is much copied by screen comedians, is now working with the Henry Lehrman company which is producing Foxfilm Comies in Los Angeles.

Ritchie has been on the stage and in pictures the greater part of his life. His stage career covers vaudeville and musical comedies. His debut in England was in 1887, wearing a replica of his present attire.

In the character of the young Londoner, Mr. Ritchie created a new style of comedy. It was a combination of unusual facial expression and acrobatic ability and it had not been seen in the United States up to that time.

In his picture career he follows the same style. Practically all his motion picture work has been done with the L-Ko-Universal companies, for which he appeared in one, two and three-reel farce comedies.

Hank Mann Begins New Foxfilm Comedy

Hank Mann, noted picture comedian who has been starring in Foxfilm comedies under the direction of Charles Parrott, will begin a new picture for the Fox forces Christmas week under his own direction.

This adds another comedy company to William Fox's already big organization. At present six companies are at work on Foxfilm comedies.

Mr. Mann is rapidly organizing his new company, although no word as to its personnel has as yet been given out. Four of the Foxfilm comedies have featured the Mann mustache, eyes and feet. These are "Chased Into Love," "The Cloud Puncher," "There's Many a Fool" and one not yet named.

Director Parrott is soon to bring out another leading man to fill the place left vacant by Mr. Mann's move.

Sothern Talks at Chicago Theater

E. H. Sothern appeared in person at the Ziegfeld Theater, Chicago, on December 21 and reveiwed the production in which he has been featured by the Greater Vitagraph Company, "An Enemy to the King."

The afternoon had been set aside for Mr. Southern's appearance, and the house was filled with the most representative society people of Chicago, all eager to see Mr. Southern and hear what he had to say.

After viewing himself as others see him, Mr. Southern made some very pleasing and interesting remarks, proving conclusively that the motion picture screen cannot be regarded as anything but a substantial and permanent amusement, wherein a recognition must be given to the screen by the legitimate stage and stars performing thereon.

Mr. Sothern brought out forcefully the fact that it was a source of mystery to him how a costume picture would be received by the public and as a satisfaction to that curiosity, made a particular point in his address that costume plays would undoubtedly prove successful, if properly presented and performed by actors and actresses of consequence who appreciate the necessity of artistic work, and who had studied throughout their stage career, historical costumes and mannerisms.

He exemplified his remarks by stating that, in a conversation with Mr. S. L. Rothapfel, of the Rialto Theater, New York, it was brought out that the first week's engagement of "An Enemy to the King" was a tremendous success and that the receipts for that first week were $13,700, and further expressed gratification at the engagement of the Ziegfeld, which has, in its three weeks existence thus far proven itself an excellent success.

METRO SERIAL FOR JANUARY

Bushman and Bayne Featured in Fifteen Chapter Serial—Ethel Barrymore in "The White Raven," January 15.

On New Year's day will be released the Metro-Quality serial in fifteen chapters "The Great Secret," with Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne as stars. Six hundred people take part in this production which cost more than half a million dollars to produce. The basic action of the story centers in and around the operations of a band of unscrupulous men, known as the Secret Seven, who operate in all avenues of human endeavor to further their ends. Through each chapter runs a stirring love story, between a wealthy New York clubman and a poor girl.

Mr. Bushman assumes a variety of roles. He is seen as the wealthy man-about-town, the trained athlete, disguised as a gangster, an East Side Italian, a longshoreman and a real Chinaman. He is supported by a specially chosen cast containing such names as Edward Connelly, Fred Stanton, Helen Dunbar, Bell Bruce, Dorothy Hydell, Sue Balfour, Tammany Young, Ed. Lawrence, Chas. Ripley, Art Ortego, John Leach, Baron Wenther, Wm. J. Calhoun, Fred Roberts, Robert Carson, Tom Blake, W. J. Butler, Charles Fang, Lillian Sullivan, Marie de Chett and others.

Ethel Barrymore's next vehicle will be "The White Raven," a five-part feature adapted from the original story by Charles A. Logue. This will be released on the Metro program January 15.

In "The White Raven" Miss Barrymore is supported by a notable cast including William B. Davidson, who plays "The Stranger," Walter Hitchcock, (John Blaisdel), Ethel Dayton, Viola Fortescue, George A. Wright, H. H. Pattee, Mario Majeroni, Phil Sandford and Ned Finlay.

The New Jersey Metro Film Service, 71 West Twenty-third Street, through its president, Herman F. Jans, announces the purchase of the New Jersey rights to "The Witching Hour," a Frohman picture production. Accompanying this is a statement from Mr. Jans, in which he announces an arrangement with the Frohman Amusement Company whereby the New Jersey Metro will handle all the Frohman picture productions for New Jersey.

Already, Mr. Jans has booked "The Witching Hour" at the Goodwin Theater, Newark, for seven days beginning Sunday, December 24, at a rental of $1,000.

Florence Ashbrooke, now in Stuart Holmes' supporting cast, was once a dancer.

Special Music for Pickford Play

Particular care is being devoted to the musical settings of the new Mary Pickford production, "The Pride of the Clan," to be released by Artcraft on January 8. For this work Artcraft has secured the services of William C. Stickles, the well known composer. Mr. Stickles and his associates have made eighty-five orchestra scores.

This canny Scotch lassie is a screen actress named Mary Pickford.

One of the features of the musical accompaniment for "The Pride of the Clan" will be displayed in the fact that the entire score can be presented as a piano solo. The piano sheets in such musical scores in the past have never in themselves presented a comprehensive accompaniment for the picture. "The Pride of the Clan" piano score will offer a distinct departure from the usual picture music in that it fits a perfect accompaniment in itself and can be handled entirely separate from the complete score. In addition to this the new Pickford music is being arranged so that any orchestra ranging in size from two to forty pieces will be able to present a complete accompaniment from the sheets. Each scene in the photoplay, even to the flash, is cued in the score sheets, thus making perfect synchronization an easy matter even for the most ordinary musician. This also prevents trouble in the event of the loss of several feet of film from the picture through wear, etc.

"The Pride of the Clan" offers particular opportunities in the way of unusually attractive musical settings. Most of the score now being prepared by Mr. Stickles will present original themes interpolated by old Scottish folk songs. The score will be published by Schirmer, Inc., the well known music house.

Four of the eight theaters in principal centers in Los Angeles were recently given over to Mutual Star productions with Mary Miles Minter at Tally's Broadway, "The Pearl of Paradise" at The Superba, Charlie Chaplin in "The Rink" at the Garrick, and "A Lass of the Lumberlands," at Pantages.

A dramatization of "Gallagher," the famous newspaper story that first brought the late Richard Harding Davis to the attention of the literary world, has just been completed at the Bronx studio of Thomas A. Edison, Inc., and it will be released at an early date under the brand of Conquest Pictures.

The Man Inside the Booth

PROJECTION DEPARTMENT, CONDUCTED BY E. C. SCOBEY

THIS department is now a permanent feature of MOTOGRAPHY. Its editor, Mr. Scobey, is a former secretary and treasurer of the Motion Picture Machine Operators' Local No. 194, I. A. T. S. E., and was formerly associated with the Central Film Service Company of Indianapolis. He was recently elected vice-president of the Central Labor Union of Indianapolis, the first operator to be so honored. The idea is to make this department just as helpful as possible to operators and exhibitors. Send your questions and problems to Mr. Scobey. He is sure to give you some valuable information. Address, MOTOGRAPHY, Chicago.

I am in trouble and need your help. I am in the motion picture business on a small scale. But I know that the people appreciate good pictures, and I have an Edison machine. I gave it a good cleaning the other day, and have not been able to get a good picture with it since. The picture flickers so bad that you can see every revolution of the shutter shaft. Would you please be so kind as to advise me what to do? Your courtesy would be highly appreciated.—John Musick, Iberia, Missouri.

Your question is not clear enough for me to tell just what might be the matter, but I should say that the trouble lies in the way you have your shutter set. You do not say whether you have an outside shutter or one of the old style inside ones. If you have an inside one set the shutter as follows: Loosen set screws on shutter so that it revolves freely on the shutter shaft. Then turn the intermittent sprocket very slowly by turning the fly wheel in the direct-current direction. As the intermittent sprocket starts to move, set the top edge of the solid wing so that it is covering one-half of the aperture plate; then tighten screws. Now turn the fly wheel until the intermittent sprocket stops, then see that the lower edge of the shutter is about the center of the aperture.

Next project a few feet of film on the screen and if streaks should show at the top edge of letters in the title set the shutter up a little on the shaft; if they appear at the lower edge of the letters set the shutter back a little. In setting the shutter be sure the framing lever of the machine is set at center and be sure to use the solid blade of the shutter to set by. Pay no attention to the filtered blade.

To set the outside shutter proceed as follows: Loosen the three-clamp screws on shutter so that it revolves free on hub, then proceed the same as above. If you are using a two-wing shutter use either blade to set by but if you are using a three-wing be sure to use the wide blade to set by.

If the above suggestions do not help you out in your trouble, I would be pleased to hear further from you but wish that you would be a little more definite in your questions.

I would like to learn to be able to use a motion picture camera, and would like a bit of advice on the subject. What is the best way to go about it? Get in connection with some film company and learn from practical experience, or just what would be the best way? My idea was to get in connection with some film company and in some way assist their camera man and thoroughly learn the use of the camera. Could you suggest the name of some company where I might find employment in that line?— Frank McBee, 404 East 10th Street, Kansas City, Missouri.

My advice to you would be for you to try to get located with some commercial photographer located in your own city, so that you can get some of the fundamental principles of the craft and after you have served your time as an apprentice with them, then make application to one of the big producing companies and if you are real lucky you may get a position with them.

In almost every city of any size you will find one or more commercial companies doing business on a small scale and as a rule they employ from one to two experienced camera men, and if you can get located with this kind of a firm you would learn the A B C's of the game and that would place you in a position so that you would be of some value to the larger firms.

I cannot give you the names of any firms who are in need of camera men or assistants but write to any of the film companies and make your application and possibly they may use you. But I believe the best way would be to get in with a smaller firm first.

We are using two Power's machines 6A, and for the last week or so we have had trouble with our intermittent sprocket. When the film comes down from the upper magazine the intermittent sprocket will rip the sprocket holes out of the film and then wind them around the intermittent sprocket teeth causing considerable jumping in the picture. I notice that the intermittent sprocket teeth are a little cut—do you think this might be the cause of the ripping? We put on a new sprocket about four months ago.—J. C. Fisher, 1424 N. 8th street, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

I think that your trouble is caused from the intermittent sprocket being under-cut on the teeth and it may be that the tension springs are set too tight, or the intermittent roller may be set too close to the intermittent sprocket and be worn flat on one side causing it to catch on the edge of patches in the film and thereby tearing the film.

Look at the tension springs, aperture plate, intermittent sprocket and intermittent roller and see that each part is in good condition and properly adjusted and when you have done this I am sure your trouble will be at an end.

What would you do in a case like this: My manager has just installed two Power's 6B machines with a new screen and all new equipment throughout the house. I am using D. C. current, 110 volts and 45 amperes with an 86 ft. throw. Now the manager is criticizing my projection and the only fault he has is the light. I have requested a certain brand of carbons but he insists that I use another brand as they are a trifle cheaper than the ones I have been asking for. I don't believe in being a crank about anything but I have given both brands of these carbons a fair test and I know that I can't get the results from one brand that I can get from the other one. What would you do—quit the job or try and convince the manager?

The question you ask is a funny one to answer and to be real frank with you I don't know just what I would do, quit or try to convince the manager that he is wrong.

I believe though that I would stick it out and convince him that your judgment as an operator working in the booth is better when it comes to booth equipment than his judgment of booth equipment when the chances are he is not in the booth once a week.

I contend that any operator must have the best of everything to give the best results but I will admit that I have seen and worked with operators who are set in their ideas and once they get an idea in their head it settles there and no amount of argument will change their minds.

There are several brands of carbons "Made in America" and they are giving excellent results. I do not know which one you or the manager favor but it seems to me that if you would have him spend an hour or so in the booth with you, you could convince him that you were right in the argument or he would convince you that you do not know what you are talking about.

Trim one of the lamps with your brand of carbon and trim the other one with the carbon he wants you to use and have him watch both of them under actual working conditions. Let him watch the projection on the screen and at the same time he can see the way they act in the lamp. If your contention is right and the brand you favor shows up to the best advantage then I don't believe that the manager will hesitate to supply you with them without any argument.

No doubt he is as honest in his argument as you are in yours and the only way to settle that kind of differences is for one side to convince the other one that he is wrong and I know that no manager of this day and age is going to let a few cents stand in the way of good projection in his house. But on the other hand he does not feel like spending any more money on supplies than he has to.

I am using a mercury arc rectifier with two machines and have 110 A. C. with a 30 amp. tube. I tried to steal the arc from one lamp to the other and the tube broke. Please tell me what caused this.

The tube was made to carry 30 amps. with a slight overload and when you cut in the other lamp you overloaded it beyond capacity and broke it. If you want to use the tube on both machines you had better get a 40 amp. tube, but I wouldn't advise you to do it even then.

If you do try it again, be sure that the rectifier is not fused above its capacity and then as you get ready to make the switch in the light have the carbons on the one that is already in operation open as far as possible you can then start the other lamp and steal the current from the first one.

I know several operators that are working that way but I believe that if you would use a rheostat in connection with the rectifier as per diagram and instructions on Page 1247 of Motography issued December 2 you will get better results and run no chance with the tube. Connect up the same as shown in the diagram except connect the rectifier leads instead of the generator leads at the four pole switch.

This is not a regular "trailer." It's the new camera truck invented by Al. G. Heimerl, manager of the photographic department of the American studios. Above is the new drama-chasing machine in use while the camera was absorbing the last Mutual Kolb and Dill play, "Lonesome Town."

Mignon Anderson With Universal

After having played leading parts in Thanhouser films, Mignon Anderson has joined the acting forces of Lois Weber at Universal City and is playing opposite Ben Wilson in a five-reel current production.

Mignon Anderson, New Universalight.

Miss Anderson is a native of Baltimore and when six months old began her stage career by being carried before the footlights by Margaret Mather. Her parents were well known professionally and with them the little girl played in "Rip Van Winkle" with Joseph Jefferson and later in repertoire with Richard Mansfield.

Miss Anderson was educated at the Brooklyn Model School and in a seminary on Long Island. Later she returned to the stage and was finally drawn to the pictures. Among her screen plays are "Mill on the Floss," "The Price of Her Silence," "The Substitute," "Her Menacing Past," "The Tin Soldier and the Doll" and "The City of Illusion."

Change in Release

Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay made the announcement that "The Master Passion," an Edison production, featuring Mabel Trunnelle and Robert Conness, in five acts, will be released January 8, instead of "Little Shoes," an Essanay play, as was first planned.

Parke an Astra Director

William C. Parke, who as a Thanhouser director, directed "The Shine Girl," one of the best photoplays of the year, has been engaged by the Astra Film Corporation to direct "The Double Cross," a serial which is now being made for Pathe.

Rupert Julian is directing and enacting the principal role in "Marcel's Birthday Present," a five-act Universal drama.

NEW PARAMOUNTS

Another Dickens Adaptation to Be the Feature on Paramount Program for Week of January 8. Louise Huff and Jack Pickford Will Co-Star

Charles Dickens, the immortal English writer whose beloved characters have been handed down in literature, has proved to be the source for the most splendid material for the photoplay that can be found among the writers of old. The success of "Oliver Twist," the Lasky production on the Paramount Program a few weeks ago, proves that Dickens offers splendid material and for the week of January 8, Paramount will release the Famous Players production of "Great Expectations" another of this writer's works.

Louise Huff and Jack Pickford, who secured such a success when they appeared in Booth Tarkington's "Seventeen," will co-star.

The story of "Great Expectations" details the thrilling adventures of Pip, a young orphan who is brought up in the family of his brother-in-law, a blacksmith. Pip's adventures and love affairs, together with the well known story of the mysterious legacy which makes him independent, and the final shocking discovery of the source of all his wealth, are all factors in this absorbing story of this photoplay produced in a way that the pen pictures of these wonderful characters are re-immortalized on the screen.

The other feature of the week will be the Lasky production of "A Mormon Maid" in which Mae Murray leads. This is a thrilling story of Mormon life in Utah, and the picture contains more action than any other in which Miss Murray has appeared since her adoption of the screen in preference to the stage. Special accessories, advertising and publicity have been prepared by Paramount for this production.

Surrounding the program for the week of January 8, will be three single reel "little features," including the 48th edition of the Paramount Pictographs, the magazine-on-the-screen; the 49th of the series of "Weekly Trips Around the World," in which Burton Holmes will take his fellow travelers to "Quaint Quebec"; and a Black Diamond comedy entitled "Braving Blazes."

The 48th edition of Paramount Pictographs contains four exceedingly interesting subjects of which the first is "Fine Arts with Hammer and Anvil," which deals with the artistic work that has been accomplished in shaping metals at Columbia University. The pictures were posed especially for Paramount by Professor Edward Thatcher, who holds a chair at this University.

The second subject deals with the interesting subject, "Experiments in Physics," telling of the great problem of vibration. Another subject is "The Remaking of Useful Citizens," photographing the "Children's Village" at Dobbs Ferry, New York, where a great deal of usefulness has been given the young children by combining both out-door advantages of the country, vocational training recently taken up by the board of education, and the idea of self government, which is an important factor in training children and giving them self reliance.

The closing subject deals with "How Niagara is Harnessed," and shows how the twenty million tons of water flowing over these falls each hour, are harnessed and made to do the work which lights the many towns throughout the State of New York.

Burton Holmes, in his 49th "Weekly Trips Around the World," takes his fellow-travelers this week to "Quaint Quebec," in which little travelette he introduces his fellow-journeyers to the most picturesque of all Canadian cities, and which is the most foreign looking city in all North America, having taken its name from the Indian word which means "The Strait," as the city itself dominates a narrow straight of the St. Lawrence River, the city being dominated by a citadel mounted behind the city on a lofty bluff.

A comedy full of rollicking fun, which will be released this week, is "Braving Blazes."

Paramount having started its co-operative service of "exhibitor first," for the year 1917, has planned many additional services for the presentation of the features on the Paramount Program and the single reel features surrounding it for this week. One, three and six sheets of every description, together with cuts, mats and other necessary advertising accessories, are being issued through the exhibitors in accordance with the co-operative plan, which will enable a Paramount exhibitor to better present these "better pictures in better theaters to a better public."

Ivan's "Enlighten Thy Daughter"

Ivan Abramson, whose picture, "Enlighten Thy Daughter," created a sensation at the Broadway Theater recently at a trade showing, is a graduate of the lower East Side theaters.

His education, to quote him. "was earned in those theaters, which depended entirely on the spoken word and dramatic effect, minus glaring scenery, for success."

Often has Ivan Abramson staged a four-act play without other scenery than a black panorama drop curtain.

Hence his delving into the deeper senses of the silent stage.

"Enlighten Thy Daughter," as shown at the Broadway Theater, attracted every important film magnate in the east, and upon the completion of the performance arrangements were made to produce the picture on Broadway shortly after the new year.

Story first—then cast, is Ivan's belief, and the excellent ensemble characterizing "Enlighten Thy Daughter," carries the belief out.

Frank Sheridan, Katherine Kaelred, Zena Keefe, Marie Shotwell, James Morrison, Arthur Donaldson, Ruby De Reimer and Violet Horner play the eight leading roles.

"Enlighten Thy Daughter" was originally written by Mr. Abramson as a five-act film play, but the subject grew on him to such an extent that before he had gotten through the first fifty scenes he decided to lengthen it, with the result that it is now in eight acts, three hundred scenes and required over three months to complete.

Ruth Ann Baldwin is producing at Universal City a two-act drama, "When Jimmie Straightened Out," featuring Irene Hunt and Clyde Benson.

Every factory worker of the Vitgraph Company enjoyed "The" bird at their dinner on Christmas Day. The Vitagraph Company ordered hundreds of turkeys, ranging from twelve to fifteen pounds, to be presented to all the workers from stars to stage-hands the Saturday before Christmas.

WORLD FORECAST FOR 1917

The World Film Corporation Promises Only Big, Clean, Virile Pictures to Increase and Continue Patronage

The World Film Corporation has issued to its exchanges and exhibitors a Christmas "broadside" in colors, which in addition to its pictorial attractions contains a number of interesting declarations of policy and fact.

The forecast for 1917 promises that:

"World Pictures will be produced by and bear the official O. K. of William A. Brady.

"All World Pictures Brady-made will be released on the World program—(no specials).

"The policy of the World permits only the filming of big, clean, virile pictures that make for increasing and continuing patronage.

"World Pictures Brady-made will be made months in advance—a guaranteed product not marred by the necessity for hasty release.

"Dependability will be the keynote in production; seat selling the accomplishment of a highly developed, keen distributing organization."

Elsewhere in the "broadside" the portraits of the stars and principals appearing in current and coming World pictures are printed. The list includes Alice Brady, Kitty Gordon, Ethel Clayton, Gail Kane, Marie Dressler, Clara Kimball Young, June Elvidge, Gerda Holmes, Muriel Ostriche, Evelyn Greeley, Doris Kenyon, Olive Tell, Maude Evans, Robert Warwick, Lew Fields, Carlyle Blackwell, Alexis Kosloff, E. K. Lincoln, Arthur Ashley, Montagu Love, Johnny Hines, Edward Langford, George McQuarrie, Rockliffe Fellowes, John Bowers, Henry Hull, etc.

Mr. Brady's personal "Merry Christmas" to the employees of the World Company took on a note of sincere friendly enthusiasm, as follows:

"This has been a great year for World Pictures, for various reasons.

"They have kept up to the promise I made you concerning them months ago. In some instances they have far excelled that promise.

"There has been no time when any of your patrons could accuse you of over-embellishment of World products, or you could feel otherwise than proud of your association with them.

"On the other hand, I feel in similar measure proud of the allegiance of men like you, individually and collectively. You have been on deck at all times, every man at his post, knowing what to do—and doing it.

"I am profoundly grateful to you for your very important part in producing this result—but more than this, for the spirit, the loyalty, the enthusiasm, the man-to-man determination with which you have carried forward the conquest."

Historical Research Department

A special department for historical research has been established by Thomas A. Edison, Inc., for the purpose of insuring the absolute accuracy of the settings and costumes that will be used in making the pictures that will appear on the Conquest Pictures program. Among these new Edison productions will be a large number of stories of adventure in various parts of the world and in different eras of history and an unprecedented degree of attention will be paid to the task of making them as perfect as possible in every detail. As previously announced, the stories for the greater part will be those relating to the exploits and adventures of young people. It is the intention of the Edison Company to make these productions as diversified as possible and in order to do this it will be necessary to film stories of all ages and all races.

Shirley Mason—McClure Pictures

Shirley Mason, one of the seven stars of "Seven Deadly Sins," the McClure series of five-reel features, is only about 16 years old and she is the tiniest star in picturedom—with one exception. Marguerite Clark is the exception and Shirley, standing fifty-nine inches in her bathing suit, tops Miss Clark by one inch.

She toddled onto the stage when she was four summers old—and that wasn't so very long ago.

Viola Dana is Shirley Mason's older sister — older by about a year—and the competition between the two young actresses has been keen. Miss Mason, until she joined McClure Pictures, was with Edison, playing leading parts under her own name —Leonie Flugrath.

Shirley was born in Brooklyn and has been on the stage since she was four years old when she appeared on Broadway in a part that she created all by herself. She was "Little Hal" in "The Squaw Man," in which William Faversham starred. She played "Little Meenie" in "Rip Van Winkle" and was "Peter" in "Passers-By."

Viola Dana made a great hit in "The Poor Little Rich Girl" and Shirley was her understudy, playing the part several times in New York and inheriting the leading role in the company that went on tour.

With the Edison Company Miss Mason was exceptionally successful in ingenue roles. She was in "Mary Had a Little Lamb," "Vanity Fair," "The Littlest Magdalene," "Lucia," and other successful Edison Photoplays.

In the "Seven Deadly Sins" Miss Mason is the girl around whom the stories revolve. She is tempted by the seven sins, one after the other, and with George Le Guere, who is the youth who loves her and wants to protect her from temptation, she appears in every one of the seven features.

Miss Mason is a great favorite with all the other McClure stars—Nance O'Neil, Ann Murdock, Charlotte Walker, Holbrook Blinn, H. B. Warner and George Le Guere all watched over her during the making of the series, helping her in her eager desire to learn every angle of her chosen profession.

"Seething Humanity" is the title of a five-act photoplay under production at Universal City.

VITAGRAPH SERIAL STRENUOUS

Actors Undergo Many Hardships in Filming—All Fifteen Episodes Ready for Release—First Episode December 25

Real honest-to-goodness hardships and misery have been the lot of the actors and actresses in "The Secret Kingdom," the new fifteen-episode adventure serial which is released through the Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. exchanges December 25. Life has been anything but simple for the stars, Charles Richman and Dorothy Kelly, and the next to kin, Arline Pretty and Joseph Kilgour.

Arline Pretty in the torn and burned dress which went (partly) with her through a stunt scene in Vitagraph's "The Secret Kingdom."

Arnica and lint were the constant companions of Mr. Richman and Miss Pretty. From riding half-broken Texas horses to being blown up in a boiler explosion at sea; from terrific fights in a rocky cave to clambering 300 feet above the sidewalks, over roofs and steeples; from climbing dead trees that threatened every moment to break, to diving off a burning pier—these are a few of the things that kept life from getting monotonous for the players in "The Secret Kingdom."

But the hardest luck of all came in the very last scene of the serial. The final scene—that is the final one to be filmed—was a retake in the twelfth episode. It fell to Arline Pretty's lot to have to go through it alone.

Under the direction of Charles Brabin a counterpart of the pier hut had been constructed. Flares, smoke-pots, hay, and the other ingredients of a motion picture fire had been carefully prepared. No rehearsals were called for; all felt that Miss Pretty had done her share of real stunt work without rehearsing her in a little fire scene.

Little fire scene? This one did not work out according to Hoyle.

The minute the assistants started the blaze going and Miss Pretty began acting, to the soft purr of the camera, one after another of the fire-making devices went wrong, and soon the whole scene was an ardent little blaze. Miss Pretty was caught between the outside wall of flames and the back-wall of the set. She finally fought her way through the smoke and flames and got herself pretty well singed.

But now the whole fifteen episodes of "The Secret Kingdom" are safely filmed; positive copies have been shipped to all the Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. exchanges; bookings are pouring nicely in; and "The Secret Kingdom" has been launched for what seems certain is a new high record for serial photoplays.

Kitty Gordon begins work at once upon the first of the three plays positively contracted for by World-Brady pictures. The tentative name of the drama is "The Haunting Shadow," but this is almost certain to be changed before release. Montagu Love and Alex Francis are to have the two principal male roles. "The Haunting Shadow" is a play of the type most often described as "emotional," meaning that it carries a heart story of moving and sometimes lachrymal quality.

BILLY WEST COMEDIES POPULAR

Unicorn Film Service Reports Rush of Business on these Short Comedies as Reported From Its Twenty-Eight Exchanges

Manager H. M. Davis of the New York Branch of the Unicorn Film Service Corporation reports rush of business with the "Billy West Comedies" which are being produced by the Unicorn concern.

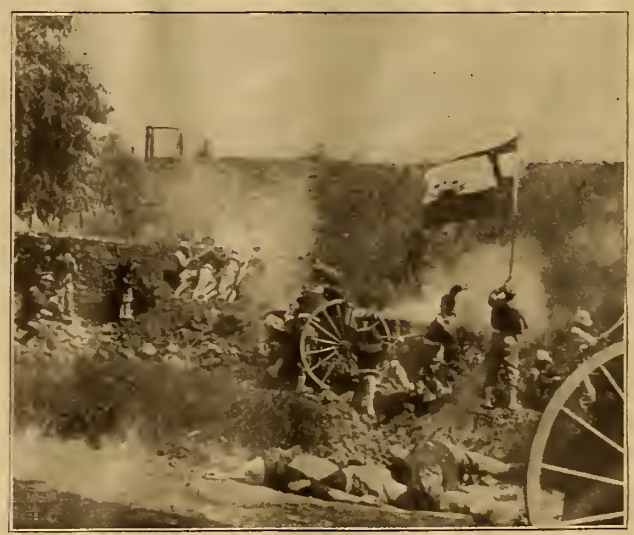
"These two reelers," states Mr. Davis, "have been booked by every exhibitor in the New York territory, and the same holds true of the volume of business done by the Unicorn exchanges of which there are twenty-eight throughout the country. This proves that there is a distinct demand for brisk and smart modern comedies, which, while they are clever and brilliant in theme, are still not of the slap-stick variety.

The Billy West Comedies already released are "His Married Life," "Boarders and Bombs," and "His Waiting Career." Director Fritz Wintermeier is busily engaged on the production of a series of succeeding "Billy West Series," the titles of which will be announced shortly.

Among the theaters which Mr. Davis reports to have booked the Billy West Comedies are:

In Manhattan and the Bronx: The B. F. Keiths houses; the Riverview; Burlands; Bronx Strand; The Regun, One Hundred and Sixteenth street and Lenox avenue; The Webster Theater, One Hundred and Sixty-seventh street and Webster avenue; The Myron Schneider Houses; Lee Och's Concourse Theater, the Bryant Theater on West Forty-second street, and several other equally prominent houses.

In New Jersey among the larger theaters booking the Billy West Comedies, are the Strand, Paterson; the Colonial, in Paterson; the Washington, in Paterson; the Eureka, in Hoboken; the Star, in Newark; the Franklin, in Union Hill; the Bijou Royal, in New Brunswick, and Elizabeth; and the Pleasant Hour, in Passaic.



The one remaining piece of territory which has not been invaded by the Thomas H. Ince spectacle, "Civilization," is the South. The film is making its way all over the rest of the world. E. R. Champion has gone to Florida where the picture soon will have its first showings at St. Augustine, Miami, Jacksonville, Ormand and Daytona.

"THE ETERNAL SIN"

Herbert Brenon's Production for Selznick-Pictures, Featuring Florence Reed, Almost Completed

Herbert Brenon has returned from St. Augustine, Florida, where he passed nearly two weeks in making more than a hundred scenes for his next Selznick-Pictures production, "The Eternal Sin," in which Florence Reed will be seen as Lucretia Borgia. "The Eternal Sin" is now almost completed, the few remaining episodes being interior scenes, elaborate settings for which were built in the big studio on Hudson Heights while the company was in the sunny south.

Absolute fidelity to all detail is one of Mr. Brenon's fixed principles, and a great deal of research was necessary in building the magnificent palace scenes. The throne room, the banquet hall, the library of the Duke d'Este, Lucretia's husband, and all the other spacious rooms, were copied from rare prints and authentic copies of famous paintings.

There are few historical characters concerning whom the records are so contradictory as they are about Lucretia Borgia. It is certain that she sprang from a family which was intensely hated for its cruelties and oppression. The Borgias in general were characterized by unscrupulousness in their public acts and vices in private life. Some historians declare that Lucretia was as bad as any of the others, and was placed outside the pale of humanity by her wantonness. But more recent researches bring this view into question. They state that there is no evidence that she was the poisoner tradition accuses her of being, but on the contrary the one redeeming element in the Borgian regime. Her influence, they insist, was always toward refinement of conduct and mercy toward offenders. She was a liberal patroness of all arts, and did as much as, if not more than, any other person to make the period stand for what it does in the history of painting and sculpture.

It is this view of Lucretia Borgia which is taken by Victor Hugo in his drama from which "The Eternal Sin" has been evolved by Herbert Brenon, and the dramatic story of the great tragedy of her life promises to be a distinct sensation, not merely as a masterpiece of beauty but as an absorbing story.

Mutual-Fischer Series Great Success

"The Pearl of Paradise," Margarita Fischer's play which marks her return to the Mutual cohorts and to the screen after an absence of a year, is proving a remarkable drawing card for exhibitors everywhere.

In Syracuse, N. Y., "The Pearl of Paradise" had its first run at the Strand Theater and drew a line of waiters that extended many blocks from the box office window.

At Youngstown, Ohio, it was shown at the Park Theater, and the dramatic editor of the Youngstown Vindicator said of it, "Lovers of the spectacular romance with a touch of the sensational will have their innings at the Park Theater Friday afternoon and evening, when as chief attraction on a photoplay program that will embrace many startling features Manager L. B. Cool shows for the first time in any theater the thrilling drama of love and adventure, 'The Pearl of Paradise.' The settings for this picture are tropical masterpieces and the play bristles with action."

J. D. Wineland, manager of the Hippodrome Theater of Joplin, Mo., wrote after seeing "The Pearl of Paradise," at a pre-view showing, "After seeing 'The Pearl of Paradise,' which features Margarita Fischer, I hasten to request as early booking on this subject as possible. This picture is one of the best I have ever seen, and I know that the public will appreciate it."

In Baltimore, Md., Miss Fischer's picture was shown at the Wizard and at the Lyric. In Minneapolis the picture ran for the first half of the week of November 12 at the Lyric Theater. It was shown at the Strand Theater in St. Paul, at the Crystal Theater in Dallas, Tex., the Hipp in Omaha, Neb., the Alhambra in Ogden, Utah, at the Happy Hour Theater in Rochester, N. Y., the Boston in Boston, Mass., the Princess in Hartford, Conn., and scores of other theaters the country over.

Ben Judell, manager of the Chicago branch of the Mutual, says that "The Pearl of Paradise" is one of the most successful pictures ever handled through that branch. It was shown at the Orpheum, Star and Theatorium Theaters down town in Chicago the first week, and has been booked up almost solid in his territory, including Chicago theaters and such places as the La Salle in South Bend, Ind., the Lyric in Springfield, Ill., the Star in Evanston, Ill., the Lyceum at Peoria, the Princess at Joliet, and the Star at De Kalb, Ill., until February 22.

Mr. Judell says that Miss Fischer's second picture, "Miss Jackie of the Navy," released the week of December 11, is having a tremendous booking, being engaged as far ahead as March 5. The picture is being shown at the Orpheum and Pastime theaters down town the first week and at the Hamlin, Logan Square advance neighborhood theaters, the Princess in Joliet and the Colonial in South Bend, Ind.

New Robert Harron Play

Robert Harron will be headlined in a Triangle-Fine Arts play early in the new year, entitled "The Bad Boy." Mildred Harris, who has been selected to act as Douglas Fairbanks' leading lady during his winter sojourn in New York, will appear with Harron in his first starring venture before she goes to the New York studio of the Triangle during January.

"The Bad Boy" is said to contain many human interest situations in which Harron should appear to excellent advantage. His rise to stellar honors has been the least sensational of any of the recent film favorites. It has been the result of continual work and faithful service. Harron is perhaps the only actor in motion pictures today with more than three years' experience who has been under the same direction during the entire period.

Leaving school at about fourteen years of age, he was glad to get a job as messenger boy at one of the New York studios. Attracting the attention of one of the directors, he was given a chance to appear before the camera, and promptly made good. When the general reorganization of film interests took place some time ago, which resulted in the formation of the Triangle Film Corporation, Harron found himself a member of the Fine Arts stock company, under the same direction that he had made his entry into filmdom.

With Ella Hall as his featured player, Director Conway is filming at Universal City a five-act drama, "Polly-Ooley."

A Dixie Star

Evelyn Greeley, principal player with the newly formed Dixie Film Corporation, made her first bow to the screen patron in "Tempest and Sunshine."

And the rise of Miss Greeley to featuredom is by no means the story usually tacked onto a personage who rises to a measure of success.

Evelyn Greeley of Dixie.

Miss Greeley is one of the heirs of the great Greeley estate. Her home is at Chicago. A year ago she came to New York and secured work in various studios as an extra girl. She would note the efforts of a director, then go see the finished work on the screen—and thus taught herself what she knew she lacked.

Her first work in a studio was as an extra girl in the Equitable production of "A Daughter of the Seas." Miss Greeley was an extra and earned two dollars for nine hours work. Then the Dixie studio saw her, tested her and sent her east for the principal female role in "Tempest and Sunshine" and when, upon the completion of this feature, she fulfilled every expectation, she was given the star part in "Just a Song at Twilight," in which she co-stars with Mr. Cordoba, who recently played opposite Geraldine Farrar in "Carmen."

"Just a Song at Twilight" was released shortly after "Tempest and Sunshine." Both reached the trade just before the New Year.

Hart as Newspaper Man in Ince Film

William S. Hart will make his appearance in a distinctly new characterization, when he is presented by Thomas H. Ince in the Triangle Kay-Bee play from the pen of J. G. Hawks, entitled "Truthful Tulliver." This is the drama that has been heralded as Hart's "western editor" story and it is expected to win new laurels for the popular Ince star.

"Truthful Tulliver" is the tale of a fighting newspaper man, who drove iniquity out of "Glory Hole" and, in acomplishing it, became instrumental in the culmination of a pretty romance. Its action is laid in a small Arizona mining hamlet in the early sixties, and revolves about the timely advent of a journeyman editor, with a big heart, a clean soul and two guns to carry out its dictates.

Hart is seen in the title role and his portrayal is declared to be equal if not superior to anything he has yet attempted. From the moment of his introduction, he is the same rugged, fearless he-man that he has been in all his successes, and more than his share of big situations, it is said, has enabled him to surpass them.

A new leading woman—new, at least, as an Ince player—is introduced opposite Hart in this subject, in the person of Alma Rubens. Miss Reubens has the role of an orphaned girl of the village, who becomes involved in the proceedings started by "Truthful Tulliver."

The remainder of the cast consists of Walter Perry, Norbert A. Myles, Nina Byron and Milton Ross. The production was photographed by Joe August, with art direction by Robert Brunton.

Terry Ramsaye Serial Author

The novelized version of "The Sequel to the Diamond from the Sky," which is being published by the Chicago Tribune and about a hundred syndicate newspapers, was written by Terry Ramsaye, formerly a magazine and newspaper special writer, now publicity director of the Mutual Film Corporation.

Mr. Ramsaye's story, in a series of four chapters, closes the long, long story written in thirty chapters by Roy L. McCardell, the winner of the $10,000 contest in which the scenario for the original "Diamond from the Sky" production was chosen.

It is an interesting bit of coincidence that Mr. Ramsaye was at the time of the "Diamond contest" a member of the Chicago Tribune's staff of special writers and that he read the contest manuscripts as they arrived, selecting Mr. McCardell's manuscript as the first to be submitted to the board of judges. By curious turn of fate Mr. Ramsaye has just concluded the literary project which he saw launched two years ago.

Grace Darmond in Technicolor Play

Grace Darmond, who has been most deservedly termed the "Lillian Russell of the screen," has been selected to play the leading role in the forthcoming natural color eight-reel production, "The Little Skipper," which is at present in the making by the Technicolor Motion Picture Corporation at Jacksonville, Florida. Miss Darmond's selection comes after a rigid search by Technicolor for the most beautiful girl obtainable, a condition made doubly important by the fact that in their process of taking pictures in natural colors no makeup can be used and the beauty must therefore be there without the aid of grease paint, powder and rouge.

Miss Darmond was formerly with Selig and also played the lead in Pathe's recent serial, "The Shielding Shadow."

Farrar Film Opens in New York

The Forty-fourth Street Theater, New York City, was the scene of a brilliant opening on Christmas night. The photoplay was "Joan the Woman," in which Geraldine Farrar plays the name role. The elaborate production was made last summer by Cecil B. De Mille. A criticism of the play will appear in next week's issue of MOTOGRAPHY.

Kessel Sails

Adam Kessel, Jr., president of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, has sailed for Havana. Mr. Kessel has been confined by illness to his home and the trip to Cuba has been forced on him by his physician in order that he may get in proper shape to put through successfully the many big things which are already planned for the Kay-Bee and Keystone productions in 1917. Mr. Kessel will return about the middle of January.

STATE RIGHTS BUYER SHERMAN

President Harry A. Sherman of the Sherman-Elliott Company Controls Rights to "Birth of a Nation," "Ramona," and "The Crisis"

This is the story of Harry A. Sherman, one of the foremost buyers of photoplay productions and state rights in this country—the "miracle man" of the motion picture industry—the maker of state-rights-selling history—president of Sherman-Elliott Company—and the newest "movie millionaire."

A typical westerner, yet a product of New England is Harry. He was born in Boston in 1884. About two years ago, Sherman and his partner, Jack Elliott, were "broke." Shortly afterwards with $500 raised by Elliott and backed by Sherman's nerve, Sherman & Elliott were again doing business in Minneapolis.

From this humble beginning Harry Sherman secured the rights for "The Birth of a Nation" for seventeen western states, and for the first time in this country started to show a big motion picture production like a legitimate, theatrical road attraction, exploiting it in the larger theaters at a two-dollar top. His road companies carried an orchestra of twenty-five pieces, advance men, managers, stage managers, electricians, property men, two operators and their own projection machine. He wanted to make absolutely sure that his productions would be put on properly.

Sherman in the last year has operated eight companies showing "The Birth of a Nation" in the western states at one time, and the receipts of the "Birth of a Nation" companies to date total very close to a million and a half dollars. He is now operating four "Ramona" companies on the same plan in the west and by the first of the year intends having not less than six companies in this same territory showing the Selig production, "The Crisis."

Sherman has a reputation as a quick trader and in "The Crisis" deal with Selig there was no quibbling. Mr. Selig projected "The Crisis" for Mr. Sherman and afterwards said he wanted a quarter of a million dollars for the rights for United States and Canada. Sherman said, "You're on," thus completing in record time the biggest individual picture purchase in the history of the industry. In the short time that he has been exploiting the sale of territorial rights for "The Crisis" in the United States all territory has been disposed of to film men of keen judgment.

Clara Williams as a Pianist

The Ince players heard Clara Williams play "Believe Me if All Those Endearing Young Charms" so constantly on the piano recently, that for awhile the beloved piece promised to become the official studio anthem. It happened during the production of "Three Of Many," the Triangle Kay-Bee play by C. Gardiner Sullivan, in which Thomas H. Ince presents Miss Williams as star, and it was all because of the fact that Miss Williams didn't—or couldn't—play anything else.

Miss Williams has been on the stage since she was a small child; hence, she never has had a chance to study music. And thereby hangs the reason of her inability to play anything else but "Believe Me if All These Endearing Young Charms," which "she picked up" without coaching, once, while on tour.

During the earlier scenes of "Three Of Many," Miss Williams is shown, as a young Italian-American trained nurse, in the act of entertaining the other guests of a Harlem boarding-house, by strumming the baby grand. And in enacting the part, she played, in every scene, the only piece she knew.

"Can't you play something different?" inquired Director Reginald Barker, when the strains of the historic ballad had driven him almost to nervous prostration.

Embarrassed, Miss Williams confessed her musical deficiency. And the entire company continued to listen to what was her complete repertoire. For several days thereafter, everyone on the Ince "lot" was humming or whistling the old air. None could help himself.

Fannie Ward in New Story

Though California gives to the motion picture screen more settings than any other state in the Union, it seldom is made the acknowledged background for a photoplay. In the Lasky production "Betty to the Rescue" in which Fannie Ward stars on the Paramount Program January 15, California gold mines and orange groves give a genuine Golden Gate flavor to the story. The scenes were all taken within a comparatively short distance of the Lasky studio in Hollywood. In the cast are included Jack Dean, Lillian Leighton, Charles H. West, James Neill and Ted Duncan.

The ranks of the heavyweights at Universal City have been augmented by the arrival of Ralph McCommas, the well known comedian.

It's always May when Miss Allison is present. Note the springtime smile. At the foot of this shrine of Monterey, California, are Harold Lockwood and Producer Fred J. Balshofer. The occasion was the filming of Harold MacGrath's "Pidgin Island," a recent Yorke-Metro drama.

Essanay Buys Cohan and Harris Plays

Three of Cohan & Harris' "best sellers" of the stage have been purchased by President George K. Spoor of the Essanay and the work of picturizing them will commence soon after January 1. The plays are "Hawthorne of the U. S. A.," "Young America," and "On Trial."

James K. Young, one of the best known directors of the motion picture industry, has been obtained to produce these features, each of which will be designed for a screen time of approximately one hour and twenty minutes. Mr. Young's career on the stage and in pictures has given him an excellent record, with many strong Vitagraph, World and Lasky features to his credit.

No cast for any of the three productions has yet been announced by Essanay.

Competition to get the rights to the Max Linder comedies is strong and arrangements are already under way whereby the films produced by the new Essanay comedian will be shipped to Europe, Asia, Australia, Africa and South America.

Linder has been given carte blanc in the management of his fun factory by President Spoor, and is following the lines by which he achieved his fame in Europe. In the introduction of European producing methods in his work, Linder has practically had to reconstruct that portion of the Essanay studio to which he has been assigned. For instance, one side of the big studio has been ordered torn out for the projection of scenic effects. Meantime, Linder has completed his company, which will consist of nearly 200 persons, and has filmed many of the lesser scenes of his first production. The title of the first Linder comedy will be announced soon.

Show How Newspapers are Made

The high cost of living may have reduced the purchasing power of a dollar bill, but the Paramount Pictographs, the magazine-on-the-screen, in one of its recent editions, shows conclusively that when you buy a newspaper, you get the biggest value in the world for a cent.

These pictures show how the facts from every section of the world are gathered with exceptional speed, and put into cold type, about as soon as the incident written about has actually happened. To do this, there are nearly as many operations required as to manufacture the average automobile.

Starting with the "Sherlock Holmes" reporter, who gets a clue that a news story is "breaking," you travel along with him, in the pictures, and watch him secure a "beat" on the other news "hounds," and then race against time to get into print. Everything is orderly confusion; every nerve on edge as the story is lashed into shape; rewritten, edited, set up on the linotype machines, proofs read, revisions made, a matrix stamped from the "set up" form, molten lead joured over the mat, which is held in moulds; all this to secure the curved plates that slip into the wonderful presses that turn out 100,000 newspapers in a single hour.

Another funny Black Diamond Comedy has been made for Paramount by the United States Motion Picture Corporation, which, under the title of "He Did It Himself," will be released by Paramount on January 22.

THE WHARTON STUDIO

Many Famous Screen Stars Have Worked Under Direction of Brothers Wharton at Their Plant at Ithaca, New York

At the town of Ithaca, New York, is perhaps the most unique motion picture studio in the world. It is a studio with associations—a studio where film history has been made. Here is where the Brothers Wharton work at their craft. Here are conjured the picture plays which go out to all corners of the country, labeled "Produced by The Whartons."

"The Wharton Boys," as they are known professionally, have had a hand in the development of many screen stars whose light has shown most brilliantly under their direction.

Francis X. Bushman was under the direction of "Pop" Wharton previous to the time when he was voted the most popular screen actor. Beverly Bayne and Ruth Stonehouse also worked for Wharton before attaining the height of their popularity.

Gertrude McCoy, Sallie Crute and Gladys Hulette were at one time under Wharton direction, also such well known screen celebrities as Lenore Ulrich, Billy Quirk, Paul Penzer, Arthur Donaldson, Thurlow Bergen, Rose Tapley, Bruce McRae and Ah Ling Foo.

"Get-Rich-Quick-Wallingford" was made by the Whartons, and in the former legitimate stage stars, Burr McIntosh and Max Figman scored most successfully. Mr. McIntosh's "Wallingford" and the Blackie Daw of Max Figman are not soon forgotten.

A distinct triumph and one of the most popular and successful feature series of recent years was the "Elaine" series, featuring Pearl White, Arnold Daly and Edwin Arden. In this series also appeared such stars as Sheldon Lewis and Creighton Hale, both known all over the world for their excellent work in this and other pictures. The Whartons also made the feature entitled "The Black Stork," a very unusual production.

"Garden" Full of Love

Love interest frequently makes or mars a motion picture production. If the drama is devoid of love interest it often fails to please. On the other hand if a production for the screen abounds in strong, passionate love scenes and love episodes it is almost certain to strike the popular chord and to enjoy a long life. However, the love interest portrayed in motion pictures must be artistically presented and sincerely enacted.

Thomas Santschi and Helen Ware in a poignant love scene in Selig's coming special, "The Garden of Allah."

Authorities who have been permitted to see private showings of the forthcoming Selig production, "The Garden of Allah," have remarked on the intensely interesting and absorbing love theme carried all through the ten spectacular reels. In brief, the plot of "The Garden of Allah" has to do with the acquaintanceship, the love and the final outcome of two lives, that of a strange and unusual man and a passionate, impulsive woman. Helen Ware enacts the role of the woman, and Tom Santschi that of the Stranger who, sacrificing all for love, finds that love is all. These artists are supported by a talented company of players personally selected by William N. Selig for the types they portray. There are Oriental cities, glimpses of the Sahara desert, caravans of camels, nomad tribes and all that goes for colorful atmosphere. The Selig Company will soon make definite announcement of plans for exploitation of this film.

"Intolerance" for Australia

Albert Grey, who first had charge of "The Birth of a Nation" engagements in England, has sailed for Australia to arrange, in connection with the J. E. Williamson management, for the presentation of "Intolerance" throughout the antipodes. As now scheduled, Mr. Griffith's latest spectacle will open in Sidney about the first week of the new year.

Universal Director Worthington has just completed a five-act photoplay called "Face Value."

Monkey Star in "Masque of Life"

"The Masque of Life," a film sensation in seven reels that has startled New York during a successful four weeks' run at the Park Theater, has a chimpanzee for its star.

This is one of the sensational films of the year and it has created much comment because of its novelty and the tremendous number of its thrills. The thing that most people talk about in the picture is the work of "Pete" Montebello, the monkey star who provides so much of the excitement. One of his stunts is to climb to the top of a chimney 360 feet high with a real live baby under his arm. At the top of this chimney there is a thrilling fight between the monkey and the heroine of the story, who goes up the chimney on the lightning rod wire to rescue the whild. With the roofs of a city plainly visible far below and the always imminent danger of baby, girl or monkey going down into the slanting chimney, this is a scene that makes every audience hold its breath and has resulted in not a few cases of women fainting while this event is shown on the screen.

President John R. Freuler has issued an order for the re-tiring of all motor cars of the Mutual Film Corporation with a specialty constructed non-skid tire which will write the name of Charlie Chaplin, the world's highest priced comedian, in the dust of the road three times for each wheel revolution. Between imprints of the name will be footprints, unmistakably those of the world's champion foot-worker, these being also on the tread of the new tire, which is to hit the market as the "Charlie Chaplin Non-Skid Tire."

George M. Cohan Now a Fan

No one in New York has been a more constant motion picture fan during the past month than George M. Cohan, who is going into motion picture producing on his own account, starting this week a film version of his own play, "Broadway Jones," under the direction of the well known Cecil B. De Mille. Mr. Cohan has been attending picture theaters afternoons and evenings for several weeks in order to get thoroughly saturated with the new field. He will himself write the titles and the scenarios for the pictures in which he will appear and which will be distributed by the Artcraft Pictures Corporation.

George M. Cohan getting some fine points from Jesse L. Lasky of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in connection with his first photoplay, "Broadway Jones," to be released by Artcraft in February. It was through Mr. Lasky that arrangements were made for Cecil B. De Mille to direct "U. S." Cohan.

"A Tale from the Decameron"

Two-Reel Essanay Release of December 28. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS is one of the "Black Cat" series of short dramas. It is a briskly told story, whioh will entertain the average audience without doubt. Nell Craig, Ernest Maupain, John Cossar and Victor Benoit have the leading roles. There is nothing especially remarkable about the production and it can be rated as a satisfactory release. The acting, directing, and photography rank high, and the plot is interesting and not hackneyed.

The Story: Mildred Tomes' father is a scholarly gentleman with a passion for rare editions of books. The son of one of his friends, Richard Ryder, an unscrupulous man, falls in love with Mildred but Mildred loves Ryder's secretary. Ryder has inherited from his father a wonderful collection of books. While visiting at Ryder's home, Tomes yields to the temptation to steal a valuable copy of The Decameron. Mildred learns of this and goes to Ryder's library intending to replace the volume. She is attacked by Ryder, and in the struggle he falls upon a steel spindle and is killed. The secretary is accused of the murder and will not defend himself by telling of the presence of Mildred. Mildred's father confesses to the murder to save the secretary. Then Mildred convinces the authorities of the truth of her version and all ends happily.

"Vanity"

By Popular Plays and Players, Featuring Emmy Wehlen. Reviewed by Geo. Graves.

THE title of this particular drama is a misnomer, in so far as its application to the theme of the story is concerned, it really having nothing to do with the plot, as it is worked out in the final analysis. The idea no doubt intended to be conveyed in the earlier part of the story that love of finery and a longing for things beyond the reach of one's pocket book, prompted by the sin of vanity, can have but one ultimate ending, has been lost track of in the trend of later events. The picture, therefore, rambles somewhat in the beginning before settling down to a definite unfolding of the plot. Once in its proper stride, it moves along at a fairly good gait, although the material in hand would hardly seem weighty enough to use five reels in the telling.

Robert Armstrong, retired banker, played by Edward Martindell, has been falsely accused of murder in a mining town years before the story opens. Tom Mason, the real culprit, turns up after twenty years to blackmail Armstrong, who confides in his son, Dick. In a struggle between Mason and the banker, the former is killed and Dick, dragging the body outside, fires a shot into it, places the weapon in the dead man's hand and returns to the house. Burke, crooked chief of police, a role assumed by Tom O'Keefe, at once discovers the difference in the bullet found in the dead man and those contained in the gun, and suspects the Armstrongs. Phyllis Lord, played by Emily Wehlen, a clothes model, craving the finery she cannot buy, risks her salary at the gaming table in a house run by Burke. Seized with an idea, the detective chief accuses her of stealing. Caught in the net, she becomes a stool pigeon and is instructed to secure a confession from young Armstrong.

The banker's son quickly falls in love with the pretty model and reciprocating his affection, Phyllis is torn between her fear of the law through the charge Burke has framed on her, and her desire to save young Armstrong. In her apartments Dick tells her of the tragedy in which he is implicated, and Burke, having placed a dictaphone in the next room, arrests him on a charge of murder. The young fellow, put through the third degree, finally has a confession sweated from him by Burke, at which moment the father enters with a written statement that he alone is guilty of Mason's murder. Father and son are jointly charged with the crime. Phyllis, in answer to a summons from a dying woman whom she has befriended, arrives at the hospital to find the woman dead, and a letter asking her to find the man who has caused her disgrace. From a photograph enclosed Phyllis identifies the man as Burke. Rushing to police headquarters, she accuses him of her betrayal, and armed with the photo and letter, forces the police chief to release Armstrong and his son, giving him the incriminating evidence in return for the confessions of the two men. Needless to say, Dick and Phyllis are reunited, and all ends happily, as per the custom in all well regulated films.

In a role which calls for pronounced emotional abilities, Miss Wehlen meets the requirements nicely, but the balance of the cast, with the exception of Paul Gordon, as Dick, was wooden in the extreme, detracting by their listless work from the melodramatic possibilities of the story. A beautiful array of the latest modes in women's gowns is shown in the first reel, which will no doubt appeal strongly to the feminine contingent of any movie audience.

The action throughout the entire picture is not what one might call fast and due to the rather slender thread upon which the plot is suspended, the story slumps a trifle midway in its recital. However, it is the type of film well fitted to entertain the average audience, and as usual in Metro productions, is photographically beautiful, finely staged and has a wealth of atmosphere. Jack B. O'Brien directed, Aaron Hoffman wrote the story, and Wallace C. Clifton is responsible for the scenario.

"The Ninety and Nine"

Five-Part Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature. Released December 25. Reviewed by George Graves.

"THE NINETY AND NINE," featuring Lucille Lee Stewart and William Courtenay, supported by a cast of unusual excellency, is an intensely human play not lacking in interest and attraction. It is a wholesome offering, morally,

Lucille Lee Stewart in "The Ninety and Nine."

it has thrills, particularly in the last reel, and altogether it makes an attractive feature picture, with little to find fault with. "The Ninety and Nine" is a screen version of Ramsay Morris' stage production of several years back. The story centers about a sincere, broad-minded girl and a drunkard whom she pulls back into shape through her tender womanly ways and common sense. Circumstantial evidence makes things appear wrong to the girl's bigoted father, who, thinking she has been partaking of a secret love with the man, turns her out.

In a nearby town Ruth again meets Blake and this time succeeds in reforming him completely. The latter part of the picture has to do with the rescue of the girl's parents, and, in fact, her whole home town, from a forest fire. No one else volunteering to perform the heroic act, Ruth and Blake run a train of box cars through to the fire-encompassed town and save its inhabitants, who are hovering about the station. This act makes the narrow-minded father see the light and he opens his arms once more to Ruth.

Lucille Lee Stewart is ideal in her part. She is all that the author could have intended and nobody will doubt for a moment the effect she had on her lover. William Courtenay, too, acquits himself very creditably. Josephine Lovett, Frank Currier, William Lytell and William Dangman are in the support.

It is to be regretted that the forest fire scenes could not all have been convincing. Some of them were very much so, while others failed to register the right effect. It will be hard for some to believe that a forest fire of very great danger to the community can exist where there is no thick timber land. Many of the scenes showed just ordinary open country with a tree here and there, but mostly low bushes. This part of the picture would have been much better if taken in a mountainous forest region, for you certainly can't have a forest fire without a forest.

There are some good points scored in this drama in the way of common sense religion versus hypocrisy. The types in the small country town are very accurately drawn, and the atmosphere also is very correct, as any one who has intruded into some of our country districts can testify. Ralph W. Ince directed.

"Truthful Tulliver"

Five-Part Triangle-Kay Bee. Released December 30. Reviewed by George Graves.

THERE will be no dozing among the spectators sitting in front of this picture, for each one is kept so busy and thrilled watching the redoubtable William S. Hart clean up the town of Glory Hole that there is not even time for the usual chatting or love-making in the ranks of the spectators. All these things must wait until Mr. Hart has righted all wrongs, brought back the runaway lover who had wronged his (Hart's) sweetheart's sister and taken the girl of his inspiration into his arms for the final fade-out.

For real red-blooded action and a story of unwavering interest, "Truthful Tulliver" ranks among the best of the Hart pictures and quite eclipses most of them. No stunt that he ever did could have been more sensational than his riding on horseback into a saloon, lassoing two men, and riding out a window at the other end of the room, dragging the men after him and out into the street. This is the biggest of the picture's thrills. The Western atmosphere of these Ince productions seldom varies in excellence, and it certainly has not dropped any in this picture. Alma Reubens has the part opposite Mr. Hart, carrying it effectively. Norbert A. Myles, Nina Byron, Walter Perry and Milton Ross are in the cast. J. G. Hawks, the author, is to be highly complimented for the skill shown in the story's structure, as well as the originality of the whole.

Up to the beginning of the fourth reel the story occupies itself with the cleaning up of this crude, unlivable mining town by "Truthful," an honest and iron-hearted individual who settles there to run a newspaper. At this point begins a sub-plot, which, due to the author's skill, does not cause the slightest slump in the interest. This second plot has to do with one of the villains who has been banished from the town. This man has wronged the sister of a girl "Truthful" loves, and at the girl's bidding, "Truthful" does not hesitate to start out after his man. He gets him after a sensational chase of the "Limited" and brings him back to the town. "Truthful" has been laboring under the belief that it was the girl of his heart who has been mixed up in the secret love affair, but he is finally disillusioned, and as the sister and the captain are married, "Truthful" and his sweetheart exchange understanding glances.

We unhesitatingly recommend "Truthful Tulliver" as a "winner."

"Indiscretion"

Lillian Walker in Five-Part Vitagraph. Reviewed by George W. Graves

POINTING a really excellent moral to young girls who have arrived at the "dangerous age," and furnishing a vehicle peculiarly adapted to the star's talents, "Indiscretion" stands out as a superior Vitagraph feature offering. The picture has a certain wholesomeness to it which will appeal to all screen patrons who like clean film entertainment. Photographically it is a gem, and the locations have been chosen with a splendid eye for the beautiful, forming a most artistic and pleasing background for the filming of the story.

In the role of a self willed, spirited and unconventional young girl who has been reared under the fond but none too wise influence of a doting father, Miss Walker's acting is indeed a delight. The freshness of her beauty and the spontaneity of her characterization, entirely devoid of all artifice, makes her portrayal one of the most convincing seen in some time. Bereft of a mother's guiding hand at an early age, she grows up entirely unschooled in the ways of the world, with no knowledge of its wiles and pitfalls. Responsive to every whim and caprice of her pure young mind, she outrages the sensibilities of her staid neighbors until they prevail upon her father to send her to boarding school, where her unconventional pranks scandalize the teachers, and furnish much diversion for her companions. The sudden death of her father causes the girl to abruptly end the so-called "civilizing process" at school, and momentarily sobered by the loss of her only adviser and guide, she becomes a recluse in the lonely mansion. The son of her father's oldest friend finally prevails upon her to visit them. The intimacy of the pair which naturally ensues brings the young man to a realization of his great love for the impulsive, innocent orphan. Shortly afterward, Evelyn is introduced formally into society by the friends with whom she now makes her home and immediately is marked as a victim by a married man, loose of morals, and of course, charming of manner. To the guileless, whimsical girl, who brooks little of what lies beyond the walls of convention for those bold enough to defy its standards, his engaging personality and wide knowledge appeal strongly, and the two become constant companions. Seeing the danger from afar, Paul begs her to become his wife. She is shaken with merriment at the idea of marriage, and when he warns her of the dangers of indiscretion, is requested to mind his own business. Urged on now by a desire to pique Paul and utterly disregarding the conventionalities, she slips away for an auto ride with her married companion while a dance is in progress at the country club. Stopping at a road house on a pretext of seeing a friend, he discloses his true colors, and Evelyn is placed in a compromising position.

Suspecting the turn of affairs, Paul arrives in time to save Evelyn from the result of her wilful escapade. She is named as co-respondent in the suit for divorce instituted by the outraged wife. Brought to a full realization now of the folly of indiscretion, and at last understanding the strict limit of conduct placed upon her sex, Evelyn explains her innocence of any real wrong doing to the wife and her name is withdrawn from the case.

Wilfred North has given the picture competent and intelligent discretion, and the supporting cast is excellent, Walter McGrail and Thomas Mills contributing much to the support of Miss Walker in the stellar role. The story swings along at an even tempo throughout, and the interest of the audience will be held by the naturalness of the situations and the charming winsomeness of the star in a part which fits her like a glove.

"On Italy's Firing Line"

Three Reels of European War Pictures Released January 1. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THE value of this offering depends upon the interest your patrons have in war pictures generally. If they are not interested in the subject, these pictures will not make them so. If they are, especially in the Italian army, they will be interested in all that pertains to it, including these scenes.

Many of the scenes are gruesomely vivid. They are varied and give a clear idea of the general hardships encountered by the troops. They show the soldiers in their efforts to scale the mountain heights, their charges through barbed wire entanglements, etc. The photography is good and many of the scenes among the mountains are picturesque, while the night scenes of the firing between the armies are thrilling.

The pictures give the impression of having been obtained with much effort and danger. They are brief glimpses of situations in the great conflict, and are of interest because of the events of which they form a minute part.

"The Heiress at Coffee Dan's"

Five-Part Triangle-Fine Arts Drama. Released December 23. Reviewed by George Graves.

THIS is a light drama that doesn't pretend to be serious. Its purpose seems to be to keep Bessie Love in the foreground, and this it does, giving Miss Love ample opportunity to get in some comical touches, but not offering her anything very substantial for dramatic interpretation. Miss Love, however, is always pleasing, and her work cannot fail to satisfy her admirers. She is cast as Waffles, a waitress at "Coffee Dan's" quick lunch, who, it appears, is an heiress. Two crooks take advantage of this, and Mrs. Johnstone, the "lady" crook, convinces the lawyer of Waffles' identity and manages to be appointed guardian of the girl. But this is not enough,—she wants to get Waffles married to her pal, but the heiress is already in love with an eccentric musician, a friend of bygone days. This eccentric stuff, by the way, is overdone.

Waffles has Shorty Olson, the cook at "Coffee Dan's," established as the chef in her mansion, and this move later proves to be her salvation, for Shorty discovers the thieves' plot and is instrumental in having them turned over to the cops. The dreaming musician also has a part in this round-up, although it may seem very funny to the spectator. At the close of the story is a surprise. Unfortunately, however, it is a surprise which many of those in the audience will already have guessed was coming. It is this—that Waffles is not the real heiress at all. But this misfortune does not spoil everything, for the three pals receive $1,500 for the capture of the crooks. Max Davidson gets in some enjoyable comedy, as Shorty. He is a picturesque type, and is just the person for this part. Frank Bennett is the musician. Lucille Younge and Alfred Paget are the crooks.

If this picture had been made into a straight comedy it might have been better. As it is, one hardly knows what sense to take in it. Some of the things that happen are so impossible that they cannot be dramatic. But Bessie Love and her splendid support do wonders to keep interest alive, and a large number of people will consider the picture entertainment because of the acting. The direction by Edward Dillon is adequate.

"The Weaker Sex"

Five-Part Triangle-Kay Bee Drama Released December 30. Reviewed by George Graves

WITH the exception of an impossibly stupid chief witness in the court scene, a witness who, himself really the guilty party, gives himself away without any reasoning whatever, and the improbability of a lawyer's prosecuting his own son in a murder case, this picture has little to find fault with. It certainly has practically nothing to complain about in the way it has been produced and acted. In spite of some unconvincing things the story holds in an excellent manner and some of the developments prove to be quite novel. The situation in the court room where we find a young man being opposed by his father and defended by his step-mother, a former brilliant lawyer, is at least novel.

Dorothy Dalton, as the woman lawyer, who becomes a "flower in a hot-house" immediately after her marriage with John Harding, an eminent lawyer, never fails to convince that she is a woman who can do things. This is the finest dramatic interpretation that Dorothy Dalton has accomplished in some time. The cast, too, is unusually strong. We have Louise Glaum as the loosely gowned vampire who entices Jack Harding (Charles Ray) and pretty nearly gets hold of his fortune. Mr. Ray gives his usual sterling performance. Robert McKim, Charles K. French, and Margaret Thompson are also in the cast.

Alice Brown's story is a remarkably effective one, taken as a whole. Aided by Raymond B. West's direction it is engrossing right through from the initial subtitle to the final familiar exit sign—"The End." While talking about the story, there is a little piece of psychology having to do with the lawyer-husband and the lawyer-wife which may not convince some. Before marriage Harding has admired the woman for her brilliance in the practice of law—in fact, she has convinced him that the feminine mind's interpretation of certain things is conducive to a higher form of justice. This was brought out in a very convincing way in the first part of the picture. But after he has married Ruth he will not even allow her to assist him, a fact which represents him as growing suddenly and unreasonably narrow-minded.

The picture has been produced with great artistic taste manifested in settings constructed to an exactness in detail. None of the effect of this is lost through poor photography. "The Weaker Sex" is bound to satisfy public demand.

"The Traveling Salesmen"

Five-Part Famous Players-Paramount. Reviewed by George W. Graves.

PERHAPS "nobody loves a fat man," but everyone is bound to love this particular fat man—Bob Blake, played by Frank McIntyre in the adaptation of the stage play by James Forbes. The traveling salesman has a smile "that won't come off," and his optimistic disposition which this indicates is just as ineradicable. Frank McIntyre certainly gives the picture its "pep," ably aided by the spirited, charming Doris Kenyon, who plays the part of a country girl whom the salesman saves from the hands of those who are scheming to get hold of her property. Many of the scenes in which the star and Doris Kenyon appear all by themselves for comedy purposes are extremely risible, and this in a large part is because they are so true to human nature.

The first reels of the picture are in humorous vein, while the end becomes decidedly dramatic. Bob Blake, a jovial salesman, learns that Drury, a capitalist in the small town where the story takes place, is planning to buy the property of Beth Elliott, which is to be sold for taxes, intending later to sell it to the railroad and make a big profit. Blake's growing love for Beth and his dislike for Royce, his rival and Drury's henchman, leads him to go the limit to get the best of the plotters and to save the girl's homestead for her.

Blake's intentions are misrepresented to the girl by Royce, and it seems for a while as though Royce was going to be too sly for his opponent, but, after some good dramatic developments Blake's victory is complete.

Harry Northrup is capital as Royce, the "heavy." Russell

If all country girls were like Doris Kenyon agriculture would be easy.

Bassett is Martin Drury, and the others in the cast are Julia Stuart, Harry Blakemore and James O'Neill, Jr. For an interesting, zestful combination of comedy and drama, with a great deal of clever characterization, this picture falls not short of fulfilling its mission. "The Traveling Salesman," is a clean, distinctive offering which no one will regret laying down his money to see. Quite a little of the Christmas spirit has been drawn into the picture, which makes it doubly attractive for the holidays.

"The Innocence of Lizette"

Mary Miles Minter in American Drama Released December 25. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THE intention of the producers of this five-reel picture is evidently to provide a light, frivolous entertainment, with many features of sure-fire appeal to all audiences and with a slightly different flavor. In this they have, to some extent, succeeded. There are a number of humorous scenes which will cause gales of laughter, while the introduction of the many child players will please the average patron.

It is probable that this humor and the human touches, together with the appeal of the star, Mary Miles Minter, will carry the picture into favor in spite of the obvious defect of the plot. It is impossible to take the story seriously for the reason that no sane adults would act as the people do in this play. The children might, but not the grown-ups.

The exhibitor whose patrons like Mary Miles Minter, like light and humorous plays and are not bothered by anything like probability, will like this. It will be entertaining to audiences who accept situations in plays without questioning their relation to real life. In short, it will be enjoyed by patrons who accept it as a farcical comedy. Miss Minter is as usual very good. The supporting cast which includes Eugene Ford, Harvey Clark, Eugenie Forde, Ashton Dearholdt, Blanche Hanson and Mr. Newton, have roles fitting into the story well and act them in spirit. The direction is good. James Kirkwood directed the play from a story by Bessie Boniel.

Mary Miles Minter in her latest play.

The Story: Lizette is left alone when her grandfather dies and is adopted by Granny Page, his landlady. The girl assists Mrs. Page's grandson, Paul, at his newsstand. There she attracts the attention of an elderly gentleman of wealth, who adopts her. During his absence from home, she returns for a two months' visit to her old friends, Paul and his grandmother. When she comes back to her rich home, she finds a baby left in a basket on the doorstep. Lizette has always been fond of children and babies and had spent much of her time entertaining the children of the neighborhood. Now, believing that "findings are keepings," she claims the baby as her own.

She tells the butler and the two women who have been her tutors that she is the mother of the child. They believe the absurd statement and inform her guardian on his return. Questioned as to the baby's father, Lizette names a man with whom she has a speaking acquaintance, and he is visited by the angry guardian. Because he wishes to blackmail the guardian, he acknowledges the charge. But the baby's mother returns to claim it, and things are straightened out, with only a few feelings damaged.

GERTRUDE McCOY has a truly emotional role in this picture, one of the most advantageous roles ever coming her way, and she uses it to good advantage, convincing those in the audience that she really has an appreciable feeling of what the author intended her to feel and intended her to transmit to the spectator. The story, which is from the stage production, contains plenty of suspense. It has strong situations finely worked up and detail is exceptionally fine. The producers have evidently tried to make things appear reasonable as possible. Only in a few places was logic awry, and one of these was the detectives' failure to find a bullet in the wall behind the man who was killed. Bullets from two revolvers were shot at him. One caused his death, and the other must have gotten peculiarly capricious, since it was not found in the plaster anywhere.

After the picture gets really under way, it is alive with action. Myra Fielding, in order to get money to help her sick mother, accepts $500 as a loan from Wayne, who she does not know is married. This money he has stolen from his wife. There is a quarrel about it and Wayne deserts Edith. The accidental death of a pickpocket who has stolen Wayne's wallet enables the latter to assume a new identity, since it is reported to his wife and the world in general that he is dead. Years later he returns to harass Edith who has married again and has a child.

Myra, in the meantime, has made what restitution she

We Bow to Mr. Thanhouser

That the motion picture industry is deeply indebted to the trade journals covering its province is the opinion of Edwin Thanhouser, president of the Thanhouser Film Corporation.

"I am positive that without the intelligent guidance obtained from our trade papers, the industry would be years behind its present development," Mr. Thanhouser said.

"We have a business in selling films that is much more sensitive than any manufacturing of everyday commodities. If we didn't have efficient publications keeping us advised of public sentiment, giving us expert disinterested advice, acting as a bridge between exhibitor and manufacturer, we would have a chaotic condition that would have made the cinematograph industry a gamble that few would want to invest in.

"My compliments to the trade journals!"

could for her act, since the other woman could not help but believe she was in the wrong with Wayne. When Wayne returns, however, Myra offers to handle him, and thus perhaps atone for her unintentional wrong. But Wayne is aggressive, and forces Edith to come to his apartment. Myra arrives just in time to shoot the man as he is attacking Edith. Later, however, it is discovered that the bullet which killed Wayne was not from Myra's revolver. This leads to the conviction of the right party, an enemy of Wayne's who had shot from the window.

Arthur Housman, in the "heavy" part, is particularly deserving of favorable mention, for he is not a villain of the standard theatrical type at all. He does not rely on facial contortions to make us understand that he is a thoroughly despicable character. He makes his Wayne thoroughly bad in a true-to-life way. Duncan McRae, Helen Green and Mabel Scott constitute the rest of the strong support.

If your audience is looking for a stirring drama, well produced and well acted, this is the picture for them. It is engrossing from start to finish.

Editor Praises "Giggle Foundry"

Ralph H. Spence, of the El Paso, Texas, Times, recently wrote and published an article headed "The Keystone Giggle Foundry."

Editor Spence seems to possess a keen appreciation of Mack Sennett's efforts. He has evinced a remarkable knowledge of film technique and at the same time his article displays a sense of humor that would do credit to some of our greatest writers of wit and slang.

The Texas editor's article in part follows:

The Keystone Giggle Foundry comprises the largest organization of mirth manufacturers in the world. Here everything from a giggle to a guffaw is made, and, when running at full capacity, which is usually the case, the factory turns out more than a million assorted laughs per day, all neatly packed in round tin boxes ready to be served through projecting machines to fifty million fans in the United States.

Mack Sennett is the sturdy foreman of this hilarity factory. Mr. Sennett, whose only rival as a laugh inventor is Mr. Laughing Gas, has conceived some of the best comedy scenes since Henry Ford thought of the peace ship.

Mr. Sennett sits at his broad desk in Los Angeles and personally inspects every package of "squirrel food" turned out by the Keystone factory. Nary a foot of celluloid goes into the market until he has reviewed it personally in the Keystone projecting room. If Roscoe Arbuckle pulls a scene with a giggle in it that might have been made into something stronger, Mr. Sennett is quick to recognize the opportunity and sends that part of the film back to the director with a note something like this: "Scene 43 gets by as a giggle-coaxer, but it seems to me that Fatty ought to get a 'guffaw' out of this. Have him try something like this." Then Mack goes on and explains a human whirlwind or two.

The lead in "The Reward of His Government," a five-act Universal drama, is played by Allen J. Holubar who also directs the production.

Mack Sennett Talks on Comedies

Mack Sennett left Los Angeles, where he is at the head of the Keystone Film Company studios, some weeks ago for an extended business trip to New York City. The Saturday Evening Post furnished a strong example of Sennett's editorial recognition when a recent issue of this most conservative of all popular publications devoted two pages to an intimate talk by the great comedy director.

In one of his interviews Sennett said: "Whatever success I may have won in my work or whatever fame I may have achieved as a producer has been the result of untiring work and incessant activity." No statement could better exemplify the true Mack Sennett characteristics than this. He has been termed by those who know him intimately a "human dynamo." It is not uncommon for Sennett to spend from sixteen to eighteen hours a day at the Keystone studios planning, directing and supervising the making of film plays.

In reply to a recent inquiry relative to his estimation of the future for the screen comedy Mr. Sennett expressed himself as follows: "My opinion, based upon a careful analysis of the psychology of the public, is that the demand for high-class film comedy will be greater year by year. Life witnesses enough of tragedy and tears that it cannot avoid. Comedy is the sedative and tonic; that is why its popularity will ever be on the increase. Today more people are patronizing theaters where film plays depicting high-class comedy are featured than ever before. Tomorrow the makers of strong, wholesome, humorous film pictures will have more than they can do to supply the wants of the seekers after laughs."

PACIFIC COAST NOTES

Herbert Standing of the Morosco and Pallas companies recently gave a party to celebrate his seventieth birthday.

A member of the faculty of the University of Southern California has requested Crane Wilbur, the popular Horsley star, to address the student body on motion pictures in the near future.

Claire Alexander, leading woman for George Ovey in Cub comedies, is ill in a Los Angeles hospital. During her absence, her place is being taken by Goldie Colwell, who was Ovey's leading woman when the Cub brand was originated over a year ago.

Tony Gaudio has recovered from his recent attack of pneumonia and has returned to the Yorke studio, where he is chief cameraman with the Harold Lockwood-May Allison company.

Constance Crawley and Arthur Maude, the well known motion picture authors, have entered into an agreement with Jack Warren Kerrigan, former Universal star, to supply him with scenarios for his new company, now in process of organization.

A life-size portrait of Crane Wilbur is to be hung in the Louvre at Paris. Mr. Wilbur has consented to pose for a painting, "The American Gentleman," to be done by Lucini Lombardi, the famous Italian painter.

Marie Robertson has "broken" more than fifty horses for circus work. Miss Robertson featured with Ringling Bros.' circus as a bareback rider.

Beatrice Burnham of the Morosco players is learning telegraphy, so as to be proficient in a part she is to play in the near future.

Among the holiday features to be offered this year will be a picturization of Charles Dickens' famous story, "A Christmas Carol," in which Agnes Vernon will appear with Rupert Julian.

Charles Gunn has begun work as leading man in the Ince-Triangle five-reel picture, "The Snarl," with Bessie Barriscale and Howard Hickman. This is his first appearance as leading man under his new two years' contract with Thos. H. Ince.

Frank Borzage is playing opposite Mae Murray in her newest screen play, "The Mormon Girl," a "forty-niners" production.

Vivian Rich has been "borrowed" from the Fox Company, where she is leading woman for William Farnum, to playing the leading role in an eight-reel Selig drama, "Beware of Strangers."

A street one hundred by sixty feet representing Mecca, the holy city of the Moslems, is being built at the Western Vitagraph studio for "Aladdin of Broadway." Many thrills are expected to happen there to Antonio Moreno and Edith Storey.

The Christie Film Company this week shipped the first Christie comedy to the Philippines.

Hobart Bosworth, the Lasky star, has entirely recovered from his recent accident and has begun work in the new Mae Murray production.

Rhea Mitchell, formerly with the American company at Santa Barbara and whose last appearance was in the Richard Bennett pictures, has gone to New York, where she will probably return to the speaking stage in Bennett's company.

Twelve-year-old Eleanor Crowe has appeared in William Farnum's last four pictures, in each playing the role of a girl at least eighteen years of age.

Anna Luther will soon be seen in her second five-reel Fox drama. George Walsh plays opposite, with Otis Turner as the director.

Nicholas Duneau, for eighteen months with the Eastern Vitagraph forces, is now working at Universal City under Rex Ingram's direction.

Vola Vale, until recently Vola Smith, has been cast in her second Lasky feature, which will be directed by George Melford. She has just completed the lead opposite Sessue Hayakawa in Director Edward J. LeSaint's company.

Bennie Suslow, Universal's boy-actor, has completed the principal role in Director Henry McRae's three-reel dramatic picture, "The Pirates of Phantom Island," and has been cast for a comedy role with Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran.

Margaret Shelby, who appeared with her sister, Mary Miles Minter, in the American picture, "Faith," has returned to the speaking stage and is leading lady with the Baker Stock Company in Portland, Ore.

With the reopening of the David Horsley studios, it is announced that Crane Wilbur will be featured in a series of strong five-reel features, under the direction of Thomas Ricketts.

The cast of the Lasky production of "Oliver Twist" includes Marie Doro in the title role, Tully Marshall, as Fagin; James Neil, as Mr. Brownlow; Hobart Bosworth, as Bill Sykes; Ray Hatton, as The Dodger; Elsie Jane Wilson, as Nancy, and Jack Sacker, as Charlie Bates.

Anna Little has gone to New York for a vacation, deserting, temporarily, her new husband, Alan Forrest, who continues his work at the American studios at Santa Barbara.

Tony Gaudio, the Yorke-Metro cameraman, is ill with pneumonia.

Edna Payne will be seen soon in a Mutual picture, "The Eternal Challenge," a two-reel drama from the pen of the Rev. Clarence J. Harris, who left the ministry to become a scenario writer.

Thanksgiving night witnessed the Annual Ball of the Motion Picture Directors' Association, at the Hotel Alexandria, Los Angeles, California. Chief Director Otis Turner of the Association worked night and day to further the success of the affair. The headquarters of the Association are in the Hotel Alexandria, consisting of lodge and meeting rooms.

Director William Robert Daly and Fritzi Brunette (Mrs. Daly) have returned to Los Angeles, after a few weeks of touring in Southern California by way of a vacation after their several years of constant film work.

Several days were spent recently by William V. Mong, actor-author-producer of Universal films, on the Mojave desert, where he made scenes, in a "gold rush"

Lone Star Corporation: Considerable common stock has been offered between 40 and 42. This security seems to have struck a rut. The Chaplin magic has not reflected itself in the securities of the company founded on his genius.

Famous Players Lasky Corporation: There has been a considerable "backing and filling" amongst a number of stockholders who apparently wish to sell good size blocks of stock, but who are averse to establishing a market price for the same. Stock may be had around par with bids 15 to 20 points under.

Mutual Film Corporation has organized a new company which is to feature Marie Dressler. The New York brokerage firm of Livingston & Co. will handle the details in connection with the financing of this project. A two-reel feature will be released each month based on "Tillie's Nightmare." Mr. Freuler, president of the Mutual, is also identified with the enterprise and, as distribution will be made through the Mutual company, an additional source of revenue is thereby promised the latter company. However, the good news does not seem to improve the market condition and stock is offered without buying power in evidence.

Lloyd B. Carleton, Bluebird director, is using a lot of new effects in his latest picture, "Of Such Is the Kingdom of Heaven." It is said that Mr. Carleton is doing things never before attempted in motion pictures.

Fred Church, the Universal actor, will leave in a short time for Alaska, to make scenes in a five-reel feature. On his return to California, Mr. Church will then embark with Lynn Reynolds on a trip to China, where a number of Oriental pictures will be made.

Ralph Lewis, formerly of the Fine Arts studio, the actor who played Stoneman in "The Birth of a Nation," has signed a contract with the Fox Film Corporation to appear in a series of pictures under the direction of the Franklin brothers.

E. A. Kaufman, free lance scenario writer, acepted an order for a feature script, wrote and delivered it within a week.

Director Oscar Apfel has gone to the Little Bear region for scenes in the underworld feature written by Reid Heustis, publicity man at the Fox studios.

Frank Borzage, having completed his contract with the American Film Company, has gone to Salt Lake City for a two-weeks visit with his mother.

Within three days after her return from a week of camping in the Sierra Mountains, Nell Shipman finished a five-reel feature, complete with continuity.

Bess Meredyth, who has charge of Don Meaney's scenario department, has had an average of five and one-half reels of stories produced each week for over three years.

Alan Forrest has renewed his contract with the American Company.

William V. Mong, the Universal director and actor, is at work on a pretty Christmas story.

Will E. Ritchey of the Balboa company is writing another serial, "The Neglected Wife."

Edward Sloman is directing William Russell in a five-reel drama, "Lone Star," in which Russell plays the role of an Indian.

George Melford is soon to start the filming of a five-reel picture featuring Fannie Ward. The scenario is written from "The Winning of Sally Temple," by Rupert S. Holland, and the action is the picturesque late eighteenth century.

Myrtle Stedman and Kathlyn Williams are again acting in the same studio, the Morosco. They were formerly together with the Selig Company.

Marie Doro is planning to spend her Christmas holidays in New York.

Leona Hutton, film actress recently with the American Company, is the author of the photoplay which Bessie Barriscale is now working in for Triangle. Miss Barriscale plays a dual role. She is supported by Howard Hickman and Charles Gunn, under the direction of Raymond B. West.

Hobart Henley is directing and playing the leading role in "Enmeshed," a five-reel play written by Elliott J. Clawson, at Universal City. Gertrude Selby is leading lady.

Margarita Fischer, who has just finished work in "The Butterfly Girl," is soon to appear in a play which will recall her former success, "The Miracle of Life." Harry Pollard will direct. Jack Mower, Monroe Salisbury and Kathrine Kirkham are in the cast.

Charles Ray and Dorothy Dalton are acting in a Triangle comedy-drama in which they will be co-starred.

Fritzi Brunette, who plays a "vampire" role in the Selig feature which Colin Campbell is directing, has new ideas on the costuming of such a character and announces that she will wear dainty and demure gowns instead of the snaky kind.

When the manager of the Woodley Theater, Hollywood, decided to give away souvenirs on Christmas Day, he appealed to Mae Murray to aid in selecting the gifts. Miss Murray worried that no one will like her selections.

Douglas Fairbanks and Charlie Chaplin did a comedy turn before the camera recently. However, the picture is not for release. Chaplin visited Fairbanks at the studio while the latter was making "The Matromaniac," and romped around together, but the hard-hearted director ordered the scene cut out.

George Fisher filled a special engagement with the Yorke-Metro Company in the new Yorke-Metro Harold Lockwood-May Allison story, "The Promise," which was directed by Jay Hunt.

Bess Meredyth, the well-known scenario writer, has returned to her Los Angeles home from San Francisco, where she was guest of honor at a dinner given by the San Francisco Press Club. Miss Meredyth will start work immediately on a five-real feature to be produced by a well-known company.

Fritzi Ridgeway has signed a long-term contract with the Universal and will be featured in some of the more important plays of that company within a short time.

Beatrice Burnham, the well-known motion picture actress, is writing a book in which she will give some sound advice to young women who are seeking careers as motion picture actresses.

Frank Fisher, Fine Arts leading man, is playing opposite Dorothy Gish, in "Nancy, the Yank," now being filmed.

Eileen Sedgwick, the clever comedienne of the Universal forces, is planning a visit to her home in Galveston, Texas, during the Christmas holidays.

Mack Sennett has succeeded in engaging the youngest moving picture star in the world. Her name is Shuahua Boulden—and she is twelve days old! In the picture Shuahua is to be captured and kidnaped by "Teddy," a Great Dane dog who weighs 130 pounds.

A car load of new arrivals for the Selig Zoo has arrived at Los Angeles, Cal. They were purchased by William N. Selig and were five months enroute to the Selig Zoo from their native land. The incoming members include whole families of kangaroos, odd little wallabies an animal of the kangaroo species, oppossums, and crates of beautiful and odd parrots, cranes and other birds of beautiful tropical plumage.

Thomas Santchi plays the role of an iron-willed head of a crime syndicate in a forthcoming Selig feature play.

J. G. Hawks, of the Ince-Triangle staff of authors, has written a secret-service drama in which the mystery about which the story revolves will not be solved until the scene before the last.

William Russell has begun work on the new series of William Russell Productions, the first of these to be a story written by Nell Shipman and entitled "My Fighting Gentleman." It is a strong dramatic story with a Southern locale and was the unanimous choice of President S. S. Hutchinson, J. R. Crone, studio manager of the American Company, Director Ted Sloman, Mr. Russell, and scenario editor Clifford Howard. It also marks the first appearance of Francelia Billington opposite Mr. Russell.

Harvey Gates is at the Morosco Studio, serving as a special writer for George Beban. Mr. Gates is one of the most progressive of the industry's scenario staff writers and for two years was a most valued member of the Universal staff.

"LITTLE" MISS CLOY

Here's "little" Miss May Cloy, charming ingenue of Mutual Star Productions who plays in support of the stars, Kolb and Dill, in the costume of a belle of the Miss May Cloy is the sweetness in Mutual's "A Peck o' Pickles," featuring Kolb and Dill.

Civil War days when every girl wore fetching curls and carried a fan. But without the bonnet and the mitts she does not look so unlike the modern maidens of today. While actual hoop skirts have not been the fashion and lace-edged pantalets have not been seen on Fifth Avenue, there has been just enough of the dainty frills of the wearing apparel of the belles of '76 in this season's smartest garments to bring up reminiscences of those picturesque days.

In this costume Miss Cloy appears in a very charming role in the five-part comedy-drama, "A Peck O'Pickles," a Mutual Star Production, in which Kolb and Dill are featured.

Jack Cunningham, after writing six acceptable scripts in one week for the Universal Company, where he enjoys the distinction of being a scenario staff writer, quietly, but decidedly, succumbed to la grippe and for several days was confined to his Hollywood home.

Chester B. Clapp has accepted the position of staff writer at Universal City, where he formerly had the position of scenario editor. Mr. Clapp was one of the original Griffith constitutents at the Biograph Studio, then came with him to the Coast, where for two years he worked with Frank Woods at the Griffith Studios. Recently he came from the Famous Players' scenario department in New York to the Keystone Company, which he has just left for his present affiliation at Universal City.

Paul Willis, the clever sixteen-year-old boy who played "Billy Holland" in "The Fall of a Nation," has a splendid role with the Yorke-Metro Company in its picture entitled "The Promise."

Doris Baker is playing Edith Storey as a child in a Vitagraph picture featuring Miss Storey. Nine-year old Doris recently finished a successful engagment at the Los Angeles Burbank Theater.

Frank Borzage recently finished the lead opposite Mae Murray in Robert Leonard's picture. Being directed by somebody other than himself is a new experience for Mr. Borzage, as for the past year with the American he served as his own director, also his own leading man.

Vola Vale is cast in a new Lasky picture under George Melford's direction. It calls for Miss Vale's change to eleven costumes of the 1917 variety.

Jassalyn Van Trump, who formerly appeared with J. Warren Kerrigan in American and Universal plays, has decded to re-enter pictures, after an absence of several months.

William Russell will have Francelia Billington as his leading lady in the new series of pictures which he will make for the American Company. Charlotte Burton, his leading woman for the past eighteen months, has gone to the Essanay studio in Chicago to play opposite Henry B. Walthall.

Nicholas Dunaew, Russian author and actor, is said to have given a very unusual impersonation of an Italian in the leading role of the Universal production, "Humanity."

Vivian Rich, now a member of the Selig forces, is very ill at her home in Los Angeles.

Eugenie Besserer is an ardent supporter of the French Red Cross work and had contributed much of her time to its activities.

In the current photoplay, in which he plays opposite Bessie Barriscale, under the direction of Thomas Ince, Charles Gunn is to dive from some unbelievable height to the water and climb up the sides of a burning yacht, a cannon is to be fired in his face, and then to ride a runaway horse. At this rate Mr. Gunn should soon qualify for Keystone tactics.

Margaret Shelby, having been well started on her road to fame via leading woman honors with the Baker Stock Company in Portland, Oregon, was left there, mistress of her apartment and her maid, last week by her mother, Mrs. Charlotte Shelby, who then returned to Santa Barbara and the chaperonage of her younger daughter, Mary Miles Minter.

Fritzi Brunette is playing a distinctive lead with the Selig Company in a five-reel feature under the direction of Colin Campbell.

A charming new view of a charming little actress. It's Ella Hall of Universal.

Ruth Stonehouse has again been given a company of her own to direct, and is playing the lead in the story, "Red Dick."

The collapse of the floor of the second story of a saloon and gambling house, during the production of a scene in the eleventh episode of "A Lass of the Lumberlands," resulted in the injuring of three of the extra men working in the scene. The building was supposed to be one of the flimsy, rough board structures that usually spring up in mining camps. A free for all fight starts upstairs and in the middle of the melee, the floor collapses, the fighting men falling with it to the floor below.

William Desmond, who is a total abstainer, is having a difficult time this week in his efforts to render a faithful interpretation of the part he is playing in John Lynch's new Ince-Triangle drama, under the direction of Walter Edwards. In portraying the role of a ne'er-do-wellson, his "business" is that of appearing in a state of intoxication throughout 125 scenes.

Chas. Bartlett, for two years a member of the American producing staff at Santa Barbara, has returned to Los Angeles from New York and made final arrangements with director general J. P. McGowan, of the Signal Film corporation, for the use of the Signal studios in South Pasadena for a period of several weeks, during the production of a multiple reel feature which he is to produce on the west coast.

In the production of the eleventh episode of "A Lass of the Lumberlands," the Signal Film corporation had built a placer mining camp in the bed of Arroyo Seco that would have done credit to the Sutter Creek country back in the days of '49.

Carmen Phillipps, Foxfilm comedy player, has two ambitions in life. One is to become a grand opera singer and the other is to own an aeroplane. She practices voice culture twenty hours a week and already has learned to operate a plane under the instructions of Walter Brookins.

Louise Glaum was the honored guest, this week, at an elaborate Thanksgiving Eve celebration in Fresno. The "vampire de luxe" of the Ince-Triangle forces went to the Northern city at the invitation of the Fresno exhibitors and, on the arm of Mayor Snow, led the grand march at their annual reception and ball.

J. Warren Kerrigan has secured for his new company Constance Crawley and Arthur Maude, formerly of the American Film Company. They are at present collaborating upon the scenario for the first production of Mr. Kerrigan's company. They will also be in the cast. The releasing agency of the new organization has not been announced.

Margarita Fischer has commenced work on the fourth of the Mutual Star Productions, "The Devil's Assistant." The plot of this drama is founded on the subject of birth control.

William Randolph Hearst has arrived in Los Angeles. He spent the first few days of his stay watching the filming of Mrs. Vernon Castle's picture for the International "Patria."

Violet McMillan, after a vaudeville tour, is at Universal City for a short stay. She has been featured in the varieties as "The Cinderella of the Screen," and part of her act is to answer all questions regarding the films put by the audience, that is all she can answer in fifteen minutes. She will resume her tour in about a month.

Preparations are under way for the annual ball and dinner of the employees of the Universal Film Company. The place and date have been set for Reisenweber's on Saturday, January 13. Ever since the formation of the concern it has been the custom to set aside one night a year for merriment. Last year Carl Laemmle went disguised as an old woman and almost won one of the costume prizes.

Fritzi Brunette entered motion pictures at the age of sixteen as one of the orginal members of the famous Biograph company. She left that company when they departed from New York to California, her mother objecting to her leaving home.

Clarissa Selwynne, English actress, who recently joined the Selig Company, has received the saddening news of her mother's death in England.

Scenes in the Sahara desert in which fierce nomads charge down upon a defenseless caravan are features of "The Garden of Allah," soon to be released as a feature production by the Selig Company.

ATLANTIC COAST NOTES

Harry Hilliard of the William Fox forces has been around the world twice.

The new illustrated titles for the World Film's special Clara Kimball Young service have been so exceptionally well received that the corporation has permanently engaged the corps of artists chosen for this work and they will decorate all future World-Brady picture plays.

Ethel Barrymore's forthcoming Metro-Rolfe production, as yet unnamed, brings to the screen Viola Fortescue, the daughter of the famous comedian, the late George K. Fortescue. Miss Fortescue has had wide experience on the legitimate stage. She toured through England in the title role of "The Belle of New York" and in this country was with Maxine Elliott in "Myself, Bettina"; Mrs. Simpson in "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," and "Snake-in-the-Grass" in "The Poor Little Rich Girl" with Viola Dana. Her first professional appearance was in the city of Hobart, Tasmania, her first theatrical season being spent in Australasia. Her versatility was taxed to the utmost, for she acted, sang and danced in both dramatic and musical productions. She toured the West Indies and South America with Mr. and Mrs. Russ Whytal's company, of which her present director under the Metro banner, George D. Baker, was a member. Miss Fortescue's most recent New York appearance was as Mlle. Chanteuil in Brieux's "La Femme Seule," which was given a private production in the ballroom of the Plaza Hotel last spring under the translated title, "Woman on Her Own."

A young telegrapher, who becomes station agent where there is no town, marries an Eastern girl who loves him, and takes her out to live in the ghastly railroad shack, furnishing groundwork and atmosphere for the story of Alice Brady's next motion picture, "A Woman Alone."

Director Eugene Nowland of the Metro-Rolfe forces is busy assembling his recently completed five-reel photo play, "Threads of Fate," in which Viola Dana is starred.

Robert Henry Fitzsimmons, with the William Fox forces, has a right to be called a cosmopolite. He was born in Roumania; worked as an engineer in Germany; then entered the silent drama in Italy, but soon joined a company in Spain; acted in the London Hippodrome; jumped to South America as a "strong man," and wrestled and defeated 426 men in ninety days; married in Russia. His father was born in Turkey; his mother, in Austria.

Robert Walker, who recently finished in Mabel Taliaferro's Metro play, "Jerry of the Emerald Isle," directed by John H. Collins, has been cast by Director Collins to play opposite Viola Dana as the husband, in the new Metro-Rolfe feature play, "Mortal Sin."

For the first time in her career on either the speaking stage or in motion picture work, Ethel Barrymore did a song and dance in a recent scene made at the Metro-Columbia studios. The scene was laid in an Alaskan "honkatonk" or miners' dance and gambling hall and more than two hundred extra people in rough attire and spectacular make-up were used as a setting for Miss Barrymore's acting.

A film version of "Pendennis," based on the Thackeray story, as is the John Drew play, "Major Pendennis," will be made in New York early in the Spring. The central figures will be the Fotheringays, father and daughter, and Jane Houston, now playing Emily in the Drew play, will be cast for the same part in the picture.

Edward Jose directed some scenes the other day which to him were the most interesting he has ever done. The subject was a motion picture study of his baby daughter, of whom he plans to take yearly films in order that when she grows up she will have a whole record of her life before her.

Creighton Hale, hero of several blood-and-thunder film serials, has temporarily forsaken his pursuit of the "villyun" to play the role of the prince in the Famous Players adaptation of "Snow White," in which Marguerite Clark is soon to star.

Morgan Jones, formerly with the Thanhouser Company, has joined the Regal Company in Jacksonville and will take the "heavy" parts in the production of "What Becomes of the Children," adapted from the pen of Cora Beach, sister of Rex

Thomas Meighan, the Lasky player, has arrived in New York from Hollywood, Cal., and is now at work at the Famous Players studio. His transfer is made possible by the merger of the producing companies on the Paramount program.

Mabel Taliaferro, Metro star, has been selected as the ideal type of American beauty by Cartaino S. Paolo, a noted sculptor, who is making a marble bust of her which will be exhibited at the National Academy.

H. E. Herbert, one of the best known English leading men in this country, plays opposite Florence La Badie in Philip Lonergan's newest feature, "Enemies of Society." Mr. Herbert came to the United States four years ago to support Billie Burke in "Mind the Paint."

The Thanhouser production of "King Lear," with Frederick Warde, was released a short time ago through Pathe. Colleges, schools, women's clubs and lyceum courses are especially interested in this production.

"Enemies of Society," Florence La Badie's picture, a story of modern prison conditions, was recently made at the Thanhouser studios for release on the Pathe program. Frederic Sullivan is the director and Charles W. Hoffman the camera man. Miss La Badie will be supported by H. E. Herbert, Ethyle Cook, Harris Gordon, Sam Niblack, Arthur Bauer and Gene La Motte.

Robert Warwick has resigned from the World Film Corporation's roster of stars.

Pauline Frederick killed Willard Mack the other morning so artistically that he showed his appreciation by inviting her to luncheon. The murder was committed in a scene for "Nanette of the Wilds," Miss Frederick's next play, which Mack wrote and in which he plays a part.

Nell Shipman, now in New York, has received an order from Grosset & Dunlap, publishers, to write four books, one of them to be the story of "The Son," which will be the next feature to be put into production by William Russell's company at the American Studio. The remaining three will have no connection with screen subjects.

Marguerite Clark will wear a dress four years old in the Famous Players adaptation of "Snow White." It is the beautiful costume which she used in the speaking stage production of "Snow White" in 1912.

Harris Gordon has returned to the Thanhouser Company and is supporting Florence La Badie in "Enemies of Society." He will also have an important part with Charlotte Walker in "Mary Lawson's Secret." Previous Thanhouser pictures in which Gordon has appeared are "The Picture of Dorian Gray," "The Mill on the Floss," and "The Price of Her Silence." He will be seen soon in "The Image Maker," starring Valkyrien.

Second Week of January Universals

The releases of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company for the week of January 8, 1917, are headed by the five act Red Feather feature production, "Fighting for Love," January 8.

Under the Nestor brand, the one act comedy, "One Thousand Miles an Hour," will appear on the same day.

During the week the third episode of "The Purple Mask," entitled "The Capture," will be released.

On January 9, the Gold Seal three-act drama, "The Mystery of My Lady's Boudoir," will be released.

On January 10 the two-part L-KO comedy, "A Limburger Cyclone"; "The Face Downstairs," a one-act drama under the Laemmle brand, and the regular issue of the Universal Animated Weekly will appear.

"When Damon Fell for Pythias" is announced for January 11. The Big U Western drama, "Shattered Ideals," is scheduled for release on the same day.

Three photodramas are offered January 12. The Imp one-act drama, "Honorably Discharged"; a two-act Rex, "The Whispered Name," and the Victor release, "The Wrong Mary Wright."

The feature release for January 13 is the two-act Bison drama, "The Bad Man of Cheyenne." The Joker comedy, "Mines and Matrimony," and the Imp drama, "John Bates' Secret," appear on the same day.

"Midnight," an Imp drama, will be released January 14. The Big U two-act drama, "The Call for Help," and the Powers split reel, "Mr. Fuller Pep" and "Wonders of the Orient as Seen by Dr. Dorney," round out the program.

Complete Record of Current Films

This record is intended to give, for the convenient use of the exhibitor in booking films, all the information about each film that it is possible to present in a space limited to one line. The classification is indicated by the letter at the left (D for drama, C for comedy, T for topical, S for scenic, E for educational, etc.). Next comes the date and the title, followed by the names of the stars in parentheses. At the extreme right hand end of the line is the distributor's booking number, preceded by the name of the producing company. The figure appearing just before this name indicates the number of reels—the italic letter S meaning a split reel.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

General Program

When the Man Speaks—(29 Minutes)—Essanay.—No. 4 of series, "Is Marriage Sacred?" With Edwin Arnold, Marguerite Clayton, Sydney Ainsworth, Thomas Commerford, John Cossar. The failure of a man to resent insults often is mistaken as cowardice. It was the case with James Gordon. He killed a man in a fit of anger and afterward resolved never again to lose his temper. Gordon weds Irma Alvord, a social butterfly, who worships courageous men. However, she detects him passing off an insult from his secretary and immediately is disgusted with him. She makes no secret of her disgust and it influences her friends to begin to loath Gordon. Finally, driven to a frenzy by the taunts of his wife and friends, Gordon breaks his resolution. He invades a party in his home and virtually "cleans house," hurling guests right and left. By such cave man tactics he wins back Irma's love and the respect of those who once had sneered at him.

On Italy's Firing Line—(Three Reels)—Selig—January 1.—War pictures described elsewhere in this issue.

The Girl God Made for Jones—(33 Minutes)—Essanay—January 2.—Comedy drama, with Bryant Washburn and Alice McChesney. Jones was searching everywhere for the girl he wanted for his wife, and all the time she was literally sitting beside him. It happened this way: Jones was in a railroad wreck. Pinned beneath the cars with him was a girl. Death hovered over them. It was dark and Jones could not see the girl's face, but from her voice and her bravery he knew he could love her if he lived. They are rescued and separated, but immediately Jones gets out of a hospital he begins his search for the girl. In this Jones obtained the aid of a magazine editor friend who suggested he write the story of the wreck. The editor sent Faith Garland, his secretary, to Jones to take dictation of the story. Lo, and behold, Faith was the girl God had thus made for Jones.

A Dollar Down—Essanay—January 3.—Split reel comedy, with Yosemite Valley scenic. A vaudeville actor lands at Banana Harbor and soon wins the queen of the settlement away from the boss of the gang of stevedores because of his smart appearance in his "dollar down" suit. He becomes a subject for violence on the part of the harbor front workers and it is only when he resorts to a grotesque makeup that he frightens his foes and has the field to himself. The reel is shared by five hundred feet of beautiful scenic taken in Yosemite Valley.

In Payment of the Past—(One Reel)—Selig—January 6.—With D. J. Brady, Robyn Adair, Virginia Kirtley and Eugenie Forde. Written by Marc Jones, produced by Burton L. King. First part of story set in ancient Roman days, when the emperor's favorite loved a slave girl and sacrificed his life for her. In the modern story, the characters have been reincarnated and the girl repays with her love the sacrifice the man made in their first existence.

Selig-Tribune No. 102—December 21.—Seattle, Wash.—In hopes of making a record flight, Herbert L. Munter leaves for Portland in an aeroplane. Denver, Colo.—Miss Clara Ruth Mozzer, first woman in the United States to be appointed assistant states attorney general. Denver, Colo.—Manual high school pupils make countless wooden toys for the Christmas joy of Denver's poor children. New Orleans, La.—Fifty families are rendered homeless when fire destroys a residential block, causing $100,000 loss. Barnegat, N. J.—The United States transport Sumner goes ashore in a heavy fog. San Mateo, Cal.—The 1916 polo season of the San Mateo Polo Club is opened with a fast, snappy game. Mare Island, Cal.—Two thousand persons witness the baptism of the new torpedo boat destroyer Shaw. Paris, France—Church ceremonies mark the obsequies of Prince Orloff, a wealthy Russian nobleman. Richmond, England—At the water carnival held here. British marines play an exciting game of water polo. New York, N. Y.—Fifth avenue, the most expensive shopping district in the world, is thronged all day with Christmas crowds. Brooklyn, N. Y.—With the consent of President Wilson, the U. S. Navy collier Caesar is loaded with a $500,000 cargo of foodstuffs for starving Syrians and Armenians.

Selig-Tribune No. 103—December 25.—Turkey Creek Canyon, Colo.—The start of supplies for many thousands of Christmas trees. Marfa, Texas—Army officers inspect new type of caterpillar tractors about to start for Mexico with supplies. San Francisco, Cal.—Federal naval commissioners named to recommend a site for a $25,000,000 naval base. Cornwall, Pa.—Increased demand for pig iron causes old furnaces, cold for 15 years, to be reopened and fired. Kufro, German East Africa—General Smuts' advance in German East Africa is hampered by the use of native wagons and oxen for the transportation of his supplies. Aldershot, England—Princess Henry of Battenberg, mother of the queen of Spain, presents the colors to the New Foundland regiment starting for the trenches. Chicago, Ill.—With mercury hovering near zero, Miss Anna Morcroft takes a cold plunge in the Chicago river. Brooklyn, N. Y.—Dignitaries of financial, diplomatic and social world are present when the Christmas ship Caesar sails. Boston, Mass.—Society cuts capers on "Crystal Ice," a brand new substitute. Oregon, Ill.—Frank O. Lowden, governor-elect of Illinois at his residence with the family.

Mutual Pictures

A Lass of the Lumberlands—(Two Reels)—Signal—January 1.—Chapter 11.—Featuring Helen Holmes. To prevent the building of the railroad connecting the mill with the camps, Holmes draws away the laborers by the report of a gold strike near by. Also he plans to have part of the completed track blown up. Helen again saves the life of her half-brother, Stephen, when bandits rob him of gold nuggets found on his claim. Stephen defies his father when the latter continues his plots against those building the railroad, and offers to aid the latter. This leads to a quarrel and Holmes now turns his evil plots against his son.

The Land of Nowhere—(Two Reels)—Vogue—January 1.—Featuring Rube Miller. Rube has a Bowery belle for a sweetheart. He meets another girl and falls in love with her. As a result of the double love affair Rube gets mixed up in a series of combatative complications. After cleaning up the dance hall Rube is hit upon the head with a bottle and knocked out. His spirit is seen to leave his body and ascend to one of the oddest heavens ever seen. The locale is a fanciful spot somewhat Confucian, yet one of the most delightful places that one would wish to be in. There are a royal queen, dancing girls, woodnymphs, coryphees and female disciples of Venus. Rube is welcomed at the gates and after entering proceeds to enjoy himself. After some time Rube awakens and finds himself on an operating table in the hospital. He reduces the hospital to wreckage and finally is subdued by a policeman's club.

Three Cooks—(Two Reels)—Star—January 6.—Cast of the comedy includes Lois Meredith, Theodore Babcock, Paul Edwards and Ann Warrington. At the house party the wealthy bachelor Robert Blake, with his uncle, are guests. Julia Wilks, a beautifully dressed young woman desires Blake for a husband because he can pay her bills for her. She is admired by both Blake and his uncle, and in fact the uncle tells Robert to marry the girl. About the time that Blake is ready to propose to Julia, the cook leaves and some one must take up the task for one night. Mary Sheldon, a prim and shy girl, a veritable Cinderella, who has not even been noticed by Blake, is present at the party also. The task of cooking a meal falls to Julia and the results are terrible. Mary volunteers to get up a real meal. Blake's uncle is rather skeptical but after eating it he pays much more attention to Mary and finally she catches the eye of Robert, who also loves a good meal, and before the house party is over Mary has won the rich bachelor.

Universal Program

The Purple Mask—(Two Reels)—Episode 2—January 1.—With Grace Cunard and Francis Ford. Patricia, as this episode opens, is sheltered from the keen eyes of Detective Kelly by a woman living near the Apache cafe. Afterwards Kelly descends upon the cafe with some police and there is a terrific fight. "Pat," as this episode closes, is about to have handcuffs snapped on her wrists by Kelly for robbing a pearl dealer.

Practice What You Preach—Nestor—January 1.—With Eddie Lyons, Edith Roberts and Harry Nolan. Paul Clemmons, a matinee idol, cultivates the friendship of his admirers. His wife determined to punish him by practicing his theory of the freedom of married people, makes an attempt to go to Honolulu with Ned, a friend of Paul's. As the steamer is about to depart, Paul comes dashing up and claims his wife, resolving that she is the only admirer he can afford to cultivate.

An Old Soldier's Romance—Gold Seal—(Three Reels)—January 2.—William V. Mong, Nellie Allen, Charles Dorien and Harry Holden make up the cast. Ezra, veteran, and inmate of the Soldiers' Home, is wonderfully fond of children and cannot go on any errand without stopping to play with all the babies in sight. One day he lingers in the park with the children and forgets to deliver a note. The next day he is called on the carpet but to his surprise learns that he has inherited a lot of money. He takes Joe, one of the soldiers in whom he is interested, to live with him, but he is unhappy with only the servants. He brings a number of babies from the orphan asylum and all the servants leave. He and Joe attempt to care for the babies. Ezra goes to a grocery to buy supplies and rescues a fainting woman and her baby. She is taken to his house and revived. Ezra gives her complete charge of all the babies and she tells him her story. Her husband was a bank teller and in order to get money to care for the family and pay large doctor bills he raises a check. He is now in hiding in a cave. They go to the cave and a detective who has been following arrests her husband. From an inscription in an old bible the husband is identified as Ezra's son. Ezra makes up the deficiency in his accounts and the bishop uses his influence so that Charles, the son, is allowed to go free.

The Red Stain—(Two Reels)—Rex—January 4.—With Molly Malone and Jack Nelson. Santley thinks he is in love with Cecile Forrest, a hard-hearted and wordly girl, but it needs only a little show of bravery on the part of Dorothy, her sister, who really loves him, to convince Santley that it is really Dorothy who is deserving of his love. Dorothy keeps her father from stealing some of Santley's belongings and so proves her love for the young man.

The Moral Right—(Two Reels)—Imp—January 5.—With Douglas Gerrard and Francelia Billington. Gerrardi, an Italian, is expecting his sweetheart, Francelia, on a boat from Europe. The boat comes in, but Francelia, unfortunately, has fallen into the hands of an unscrupulous artist. The latter evades the waiting lover and takes the girl to his home, where she can do no other than accept her fate. But the inevitable meeting between the lovers at last occurs and there is a severe reckoning, the artist paying the penalty.

How to Be Happy Though Married—Victor—January 5.—With Agnes Vernon and M. K. Wilson. In this comedy Steve effectually cures his wife of the careless dressing habit, and things end happily for all, since both husband and wife realize that "clothes make the woman."

Blood Money—(Two Reels)—Bison—January 6.—With Louise Lovely and Harry Carey. Cheyenne Harry, a desperate robber, nonchalantly defies the authorities. He sustains an injury by falling from his horse, and seeks refuge at a cabin where live Belle and her drunken husband, Sam. The latter, eager for the money, attempts to turn the disabled robber over to the sheriff. He receives the money, which in his reckless hands, easily leads him to doom. Belle, realizing Cheyenne Harry is much more of a man than her husband, helps the thief to escape.

Love in Suspense—Joker—January 6.—With Gale Henry and William Franey. This comedy introduces three characters—a village constable, his daughter, in love with Heinie, and Bill, a traveling salesman for a fake jewelry company. In spite of the allurement of jewelry, it finally turns out, after some desperate encounters for the lady's hand, that Heinie gets the girl's hand.

The Whelp—Imp—January 7.—With Edith Roberts and Malcolm Blevins. Andy McCall, a detective, runs down a girl pickpocket in this story and tries to force himself upon her. The girl's younger sister, however, runs for the sergeant and the detective is discharged with ignominy. The sergeant takes the girl and her young sister to his home to be cared for by his mother.

The Trials of Willie Winks—(Split Reel)—Powers—January 7.—Willie Winks is a friend of our old acquaintance, Sammie Johnsin. He has had an unfortunate experience with a goat, and goes to get his dog to chase the offending animal. The goat, however, chases the goat instead. Willie finds pressing business elsewhere, and warns his friend Sammie to look out for trouble. They are not quick enough in getting away, however, and the picture ends in a series of bumps. On the same reel is an educational, title not yet announced.

The Tale of Turk—(ONE REEL)—JOKER—DECEMBER 20.—With Wm. Franey, Gale Henry, Lillian Peacocke, Milburn Moranti and Jack Conally. The story of a henpecked husband who goes to buy a turkey for the Christmas dinner, how he attends a raffle in a saloon, spends all his money for chances only to have it won by his neighbor. He is afraid to return home without the turkey and there follows racing, scuffling and slugging. The turkey in the fight is shoved through a window into the room occupied by the Smith family. The Christmas bells stop all the parley, and fill the men with the spirit of good will. Callahan extends an invitation to Millie and Milt to dine with him and Gale and they soon are lined up to a lunch counter.

The Gilded Life—REX—(ONE REEL)—DECEMBER 20.—Two sisters take different paths in a great city. One marries a poor, honest workman; the other takes the "gilded path." The poor husband on duty as night watchman is killed by the falling of the safe door, which he finds is being robbed. Alice, his faithful wife, secures work to care for her children, and Helen, her sister, sends an offer of help. This is refused. The mission workers send some one each day to care for Alice's children and Helen goes to her home to be taken for Alice. Phil, the man with whom she has been living, is deaf to her appeals to give her the name of wife but upon learning that she is joining the mission, repents and is deeply moved. Phil goes to Alice's home and is ordered to leave by Alice. Helen then arrives with the old minister and the marriage ceremony is performed. Alice forgives and every one is happy.

The Purple Mask—EPISODE ONE—THE VANISHED JEWELS—UNIVERSAL—(TWO REELS)—DECEMBER 25.—Patricia Montez, beautiful society girl, and her mother are Lady Bountifuls to the poor of Paris, where they have joined the American colony. Patricia is a most popular girl and spoiled by the attentions of every one. Phil Kelley, a famous detective, known as "The Sphinx," snubs her on the occasion of their introduction and Patricia is piqued. Patricia, in order to retaliate, steals her mother's jewels and hides them in the drawer of her dressing table. They are stolen by Jacques, the butler, who takes them to the rendezvous of the Apache gang. Pat has noticed his suspicious conduct and follows him to the cafe. She manages to knock the jewels from the butler's hand and when they spin across the floor she grabs them and runs. As she dashes through the door she meets Phil Kelly and in her surprise drops the jewels. She makes her way home and Kelly picks up the jewels.

The Flash of Death—BIG-U—(ONE REEL)—DECEMBER 28.—Mary, a country school teacher, is insulted by Jack, who is a drunkard. The superintendent of the school sees this and gives Jack the beating of his life. Mary thanks the superintendent for his kindness to her. They see that they love each other. They are married. Jack hears of this and plans revenge on Harry for what he has done to him. Jack fires a shot at him and he drops to the ground in front of the door. Mary hears the shot and opens the door to find her husband mortally wounded. She drags him inside, and fearing that Jack may kill her, too, bolts the door. But Jack makes his way in as Mary sends their pet dog to the village with a note in his mouth. Jack is about to grab Mary in his arms when a bolt from heaven strikes him. By the time the people from the village arrive Jack is dead. Harry regains consciousness and the both are very happy to have escaped their peril.

Feature Programs

Christie Comedies

His Model Wife—(ONE REEL)—JANUARY 1.—Directed by A. E. Christie, featuring Harry Ham and Billie Rhodes, supported by Neal Burns, Eddie Barry and Lillian Marshall. Mr. and Mrs. Newlywed quarrel when the former forbids the latter to visit the studio of Henri de Brush. Mrs. Newlywed disobeys. Snoop, a family friend, learns of the visit and believes the woman is posing for de Brush. He tells the husband, who arrives with a gun. There follows a thrilling chase, but everything ends all right when the mistake is explained.

The Last Sentence—(FIVE REELS)—EDISON—JANUARY 1.—Features Marc MacDermott and Miriam Nesbitt. Reviewed in this issue.

Red Feather

Polly Put the Kettle On—(FIVE REELS)—JANUARY 1.—Directed by Douglas C. Gerrard, who plays the role of Chester Creigg. Others are Ruth Clifford as Polly Vance, Thomas Jefferson as Mr. Vance, Miss Maddox as Miss Johanna Webb and Marvel Spencer, Lena Baskette and Zoe Rae as the three Vance children. Polly Vance finds that the tea cannister contains only a few tea leaves and that there is not much else in the house to eat, although the children cry for her to "put the kettle on." She urges her father to see their poverty and to do something besides work on his invention, which he is confident will bring them riches. She secures work reading to a quarrelsome old spinster, Miss Johanna Webb. Chester Creigg, Miss Webb's nephew, is returning to college for his last year and enters the sitting room, where he finds Polly and his aunt. He is much impressed with Polly's looks. Mr. Vance takes his invention to a manufacturer who tells him such an invention is already on the market. Chester wants to be a playwright because he has won a prize for his play at college, but his aunt wishes him to enter a bank. He leaves her house and about the same time Polly is dismissed. Mr. Vance falls and is injured and Chester arrives in time to care for him. Polly enters a hospital to take training for the nurses' profession and while she is there Chester cares for the children. He is injured by the explosion of chemicals in Mr. Vance's house and made blind. Polly goes to the old aunt and tells her of Chester's plight. He has sworn not to touch a cent of his aunt's money, so they hit upon a plan to tell him she is dead and that he has inherited the money. His play is sent to a broker, his old friend Pendleton, a famous oculist comes to see him, performs an operation which saves his sight and there is a happy reunion between Chester, Polly, his aunt and the children.

SOME NEW THEATERS

Indiana

T. N. Sinderson has purchased the Mystic Theater in Albion, and also the moving picture business in Cromwell, of Mr. and Mrs. F. D. Walters and has taken possession.

The new Court Theater in Auburn has opened.

The Old Traills Theater in Centerville has been opened under the management of A. J. Miller.

Iowa

Cal Branson has sold the Electric Theater at Mason City to Charles Carragher, owner of the Palm Theater. Possession will be taken immediately and, no doubt, one of the places will be closed during the winter months.

F. L. Dyer is making arrangements to open a picture theater at Rippey. The building of J. M. Paris will be remodeled and the work rushed.

The Ozone, a picture theater at Highland Park, Des Moines, has been purchased by three Ames citizens, Mrs. Nana Pickett, Walter Pickett and John Arnold. The new management is now in charge of the theater.

J. E. Hostettler of Wayne, Neb., has purchased the Crystal Theater, located at 212 East Fourth street, Waterloo, and has taken possession. The Crystal was built six years ago and was operated for a time as a vaudeville house.

December 5 the new Willard Theater at Creston opened. The theater contains seats for 700 people and is managed by Louie Rosenfield.

The city council at Cedar Rapids declined to grant Dr. B. H. McKeeby a license to operate a moving picture theater at First avenue and Fifteenth street.

Bids on the $100,000 theater building, which the T. S. Martin estate will erect on Nebraska street, Sioux City, for the Orpheum circuit, will be received shortly after January 15. This announcement was made by J. Earle Martin, who, with Jules Martin, has returned from Chicago, where a conference was held with representatives of the theater circuit.

Kentucky

The business section of Stamping Ground, Scott county, was almost entirely wiped out by flames that started in the motion picture theater of Adams & Jameson. Loss $2,000.

Louisiana

The Bijou Theater in New Orleans has changed its policy from a first-run-feature house to a mixed program.

Lols Brothers, large general grocers in Algiers, have purchased the Elysium Theater at New Orleans and are making extensive improvements. The theater will be made into a modern picture theater. The name will be changed to the Theoda.

The Princess Theater, the only one in operation in Opelousas, has been taken over by F. J. Deetlein.

Gov. T. C. Barret has plans drawn for a strictly modern moving picture playhouse which he will erect at once on the vacant lot on Texas street in Shreeveport. The lot is 50x150 and the new theater will cost $50,000, exclusive of the furnishings. The building will be absolutely fireproof and there will be installed a cooling plant that will regulate the temperature of the hottest summer day. The projecting apparatus will be the best that money can buy, a magnificent pipe organ will be installed and the house will seat 1,250 people in perfect comfort.

Herman Fichtenberg, head of the Fichtenberg enterprises, will shortly have his new theater, the Globe, in New Orleans, ready for the grand opening, which will probably be held late in December. The Globe replaces the old Frey grocery, which burned several months ago. It now is in the final stages of construction. The front of the structure is finished in white terra cotta of semi-gloss effect, bedecked with an ornamental iron railing and balconies. A huge electric sign of the changeable letter type is set into the face of the building for advertising the program, while another electric sign, spelling the name of the house, sets upon the upper extremity of the front.

Maryland

The new Dunbar Theater, 619 North Central avenue, Baltimore, owned by J. Diggs and H. S. Trimble, opened November 22. This theater has a seating capacity of 400 and is for the pleasure of the colored folk.

Michigan

The Temple Theater in Charlotte, which has been under the capable management of Will Wright for several years, has been sold to H. M. Dupraw of Flint, who will remodel it and put on some new features, such as news films and children's matinee.

Work on the New Oakland Theater, Detroit, which has been delayed because of trouble in getting structural steel, is now being rushed but it will require several weeks to complete it.

H. L. Armstrong of Oxford has purchased the Jerry Bartholomew moving picture business at Orion.

Minnesota

The management of the Majestic Theater at Moose Lake will discontinue all feature plays the first of the month and will run nothing larger than three reels.

Ed. Englestad, H. C. Megrund, Theo. Hanson and G. F. Mauritsen have taken over the moving picture business of Fred Pearson in Shelly and the company will be known as the Shelly Movie Company. The theater will be improved.

Missouri

The Trio Theater at Chillicothe opened Thanksgiving Day. Joe Leininger, manager.

Montana

T. A. Marlow and associates of Helena have announced a $100,000 theater for Helena, on which ground is to be broken as soon as weather will permit. The money has been subscribed by prominent citizens and J. E. Oppenheimer of Butte has been given a lease on the theater.

New York

The W. J. Durham Lumber Company, Wautoma, now has in the course of construction an opera house which will have a capacity of more than 400. It will be 32x115 feet in dimension.

ATLANTIC COAST NOTES

Gladys Hulette, star of the Thanhouser productions, "The Shine Girl" and "Prudence, the Pirate," is at work on "Kate o' the Kitchen," written by Agnes C. Johnston, directed by Eugene Moore. Doris Grey and Wayne Arey are in the cast.

G. Vere Tyler, author of a number of photoplays, including "The Wax Model," in which Vivian Martin will be starred on the Paramount program, has written a novel entitled "The Superlative Masculine," published complete in the December number of The Smart Set and said to contain unusual screen possibilities.

In the cast of the new fourteen episode Metro-Quality serial starring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, will be found Belle Bruce, who played the part of the authoress in search of thrills in the five-part Bushman and Bayne photoplay, "In the Diplomatic Service."

A famous old Alaskan dance hall is reproduced in the new Metro-Rolfe play in which Ethel Barrymore is starring. Both Director Baker and his assistant, Charles Hunt, have lived in the far north and are making good use of their knowledge in arranging the sets for the scenes that are laid in Nome.

The property men at the Rolfe studios recently arranged an old-fashioned minstrel show and reception which they gave at Palm Garden, December 18. Jack Sweeney was in charge of the arrangements.

Pauline Frederick with her Famous Players company, has departed for Cuba for scenes in her next Paramount production, the story of which transpires in the south.

Adella Barker, who played the nurse in the Metro screen version of "Romeo and Juliet," with Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, plays the role of a woman of the underworld in the Metro-Quality serial with these two stars.

"The Rise of Susan," with Clara Kimball Young as its star, was released upon the regular World Film program December 11. This is not a part of the World's special Clara Kimball Young service and has never been shown outside the corporation's own projection room.

Carlyle Blackwell rescues Ethel Clayton from the back of a runaway horse in "Broken Chains," in new World-Brady picture in which Miss Clayton plays the daughter of a southern planter.

The title of the World-Brady picture, "On Secret Service," has been changed to "On Dangerous Ground," to prevent confusion with the stage play on the first name, which the picture does not resemble. Gail Kane and Carlyle Blackwell are the stars of the play, to be released in January.

Paul Everton, who has been seen in many Metro wonderplays, has an important part in the forthcoming Metro-Rolfe production starring Emmy Wehlen, a picturization of Ella Wheeler Wilcox's poem, "The Belle of the Season." S. Rankin Drew is directing "The Belle of the Season" and will have the leading male part.

There will be no co-star with Ethel Clayton in the new World-Brady picture, "A Law Unto Herself," a January release. For this production Miss Clayton will be supported by Rockliffe Fellows, Arthur Ashley and Henry Hull.

CHICAGO GOSSIP

Keith Armour, the new Fine Arts leading man who made his first appearance with Dorothy Gish in "Atta Boy's Last Race," is Raymond Jerome Binder, formerly a Chicago business man whose entrance into pictures was brought about by Don Meaney, formerly a newspaper man of Chicago. Keith Armour is now working in a new picture under the direction of Lloyd Ingraham.

Kathleen Kirkham, who played the heavy lead in "The Eyes of the World," will lecture on the picture when it opens in Chicago.

Mary Charleson, who plays opposite Henry B. Walthall in "The Truant Soul," being filmed by Essanay, was born in Ireland and comes from a family of actors.

Colin Campbell, director of Selig productions, has arrived in Chicago from Los Angeles with the first prints of "The Garden of Allah," said to be the most expensive picture that William N. Selig ever filmed. Mr. Campbell is in Chicago to supervise the cutting of the film, which will be presented in twelve or more reels.

ACTOR BEGS

"The work in motion pictures," declared Thomas Jefferson, one of the best known actors at Universal City, "is a clean, wholesome, healthy life, with 'early to bed and early to rise.'"

However, there are some things the actor does not like and one is working on the streets of the city before the camera.

"I never felt so unhappy in my life," said the actor, "as I did when I was required to stand on a prominent corner, playing the part of a begging violinist and with a tin cup for pennies of the passersby."

Alice Hegan Rice, the well known story writer, whose "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" has brought her undying fame, was a recent visitor at Universal City. Mrs. Rice spent several hours at the big white motion picture city, where she saw nearly all the thirty-eight companies in operation.

"A very wonderful place, and I have enjoyed every moment of my visit here," said Mrs. Rice enthusiastically to Vice President and General Manager Davis before leaving.

THE INCE VAMPIRE

Louise Glaum, the girl, is a totally different person from Louise Glaum, the actress. Such a statement may appear as an absurdity to many who have been gripped by Miss Glaum's sinister characterizations in Triangle plays, but it is a fact that none who knows this "vampire of the screen" will deny.

For nearly two years, Miss Glaum has been appearing under the Thomas H. Ince banner, and each of her performances has been that of the adventuress—the type commonly known as a "vampire," but more clearly defined as as a sensual daughter of idolatry. And yet, strange as it may seem, she is, in private life, the meekest, humblest, and most docile being of the feminine contingent at the studios. She radiates childlike innocence and without indicating affectation gives the impression that she has not yet graduated from the shy and unobtrusive class.

A recent Glaum characterization is in "The Wolf Woman," the Triangle play by C. Gardner Sullivan, in which she is presented as co-star with Charles Ray. Her performance is said to be the crowning achievement of her career to date and it is therefore interesting to note her observations anent the part.

"I found the part of 'Lelia Aradelle' in 'The Wolf Woman' to be the hardest I have ever undertaken," says Miss Glaum, "and yet I never can thank Mr. Ince enough for giving me the opportunity. It was the fulfillment of a long-fostered ambition—an ambition to create a character of some power—and that is why I am grateful for it. The welcome part of it is that the woman painted by Mr. Sullivan in his play is far removed from the common, garden-variety 'vampire.' She is young in years, but with the wisdom of an older woman—and this combination, I think, makes the type unusual."

A reel "leopard lady" and her "real leopards."—In other words, Louise Glaum and a pair of little kittens.

NORMA TALMADGE, SELZNICK-PICTURES

ALL PERMANENT successes in motion picture production have been founded on the greatness, the vitality and power of the plays offered to the public. After centuries, no one has improved upon Shakespere's "The plays's the thing."

GOLDWYN PICTURES will link the greatest plays with stars of only the first magnitude from the ranks of the theatre and the screen.

THIS ORGANIZATION will rank the play, its production and its star as of first concern. To guarantee picture perfection this company has allied with it the playwrights responsible for the greatest box office stage successes of the present theatrical decade. These authors are:

IRVIN S. COBB	PORTER EMERSON BROWN
ROI COOPER MEGRUE	MARGARET MAYO
EDGAR SELWYN	AVERY HOPWOOD

and as many more, soon to be announced. Their plays will receive the most elaborate production that can be devised by the masters of stage, screen and scenic investiture.

BEFORE ONE PICTURE is released the exhibitors of America will have the opportunity to see not less than SIX finished Goldwyn Pictures, complete in every detail.

ONE OF THE NOVEL developments in this organization will be its reliance upon and confidence in the judgments of the nation's exhibitors—instead of treating their views with the contempt and disregard that have so undermined the solidarity of the picture industry.

Uncle Sam Will Deliver Films

FILMS MAY NOW BE SENT BY PARCEL POST

MOTION picture films may now be sent out to exhibitors through parcel post, according to an announcement which has reached the headquarters of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

This new postal policy took effect on New Year's day. This very welcome decision does not come exactly as a surprise, for the members of the motion picture chamber of commerce have been working on the problem for the last few weeks and had an inkling from time to time that their efforts were bearing fruit in the national capital.

The ruling was not, however, expected so soon, and it is a further indication that the National Association is reaching a place of influence in the affairs of the world and that the motion picture industry must be recognized as one of the most important of the great businesses in this country.

Great Aid to Industry

The value of the means of transporting films is at once apparent. Not only will it obviate the delays of express transportation but it will also increase the scope of distribution, since the films can now be quickly sent to any village or out of the way place which the United States mail reaches, but the express companies do not find. This dependence on the express shipments alone has been a handicap in many parts of the country, motion picture men declare. A large number of communities have been deprived of pictures and the film companies have been put to heavy expense to provide extra prints because of this handicapped distribution by express.

When the National Association took up the transportation problem, shortly after its organization, it found that virtually no effort had been made toward the obvious solution of part of the trouble through recourse to parcel post.

The express companies were first approached on the subject of handling the film shipments. These companies were glad to deal with a committee from the film organization, representing the whole industry, rather than representatives from the various individual film manufacturing concerns. In recent conferences the traffic managers of all the great express companies personally met the representatives of the national association and progress is being made toward a solution of many difficulties.

Elliott Makes Statement

In discussing the bearing which the new ruling will have on the motion picture business, Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, said:

"This news is as fine a New Year's present as could have come to the industry and the patrons of the motion picture theaters of the country from any source. The time of every meeting of distributors or exhibitors has been largely occupied in the past with discussions of the transportation problem. The inability of the express companies to adjust their organizations to the vital work of transporting films on schedule has caused serious losses, and the National Association a month ago took up the matter for the first time with the Post-office Department.

"The use of the parcel post will be merely a larger development of the transportation opportunities of the industry, and we hope it will result not only in a larger distribution of motion picture films to small towns, but will supplement the express service, on which we must of course still depend for the greater part of our delivery system. I imagine the public hardly realizes the tremendous machinery of film distribution which has made the low priced motion picture theater possible, a system which with the aid of the parcel post will be able to cut down the distribution cost with inevitable results in yet finer pictures and better theaters."

Public Would Decide Sunday Question

In connection with the closing of motion picture theaters on Sundays, Walter E. Greene, president of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation, handling Mary Pickford and George M. Cohan productions, said:

"The photoplay is one of the few forms of Sunday entertainment left to the public. Aside from the fact that it is in many cases the very backbone of the exhibitor's success and looking at it purely from the standpoint of the public, it is a difficult matter to believe that the vast army of this state's population, as represented by the devotees of the Sunday motion picture entertainment, would be in accord with the Sunday closing law.

In New York City, for instance, many thousands of persons are disappointed each Sunday evening because of their inability to gain admittance to the crowded photoplay theaters. That many more theaters could play to crowded houses on this day needs little observation. One has but to view the long lines of patient waiters in front of the film theaters to get an idea of the popularity of this form of Sunday entertainment. Not only do these Sunday shows entertain, but as a rule they also educate.

It is hardly necessary for me to go into the matter of the educational value of the screen as evidenced in the average photoplay, to say nothing of the scenic films and news events which are placed before the eyes of the patron of the motion picture theater.

As far as New York is concerned, if it were left entirely and exclusively to the public to decide for all time whether or not there were to be Sunday motion pictures, the exhibitor would have no cause for worry on this score."

FIGHTS DEPOSIT SYSTEM

Samuel H. Trigger Sends out Letter to All Exchanges Demanding Deposits Pointing Out the Hardships It Works on the Exhibitors

One of the first acts of Samuel G. Trigger, as president of the New York branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, was to send out a letter to all exchanges demanding deposits from exhibitors. This is to be the entering wedge in an effort to abolish deposits. The letter reads:

"The sentiments of the exhibitors against the Deposit System now in vogue between them and the exchanges is so universal that I feel it is up to me as president of the New York City Exhibitors League to register my protest with theirs for its withdrawal. As you are aware, it involves quite a hardship on the majority of exhibitors.

"Now, with the Hoy System, which the exchanges have adopted, it does seem like adding insult to injury. I know you do not want to antagonize the exhibitor; nor do I, as their representative, wish to antagonize the exchanges, but I am simply trying to arbitrate and adjust matters amicably and with a fairness to all concerned.

"Isn't it reasonable to assume that the Hoy System covers the question and there is no need of deposits? This system makes it impossible for the exhibitor to get more than one week's credit; if he does not fullfill his obligations he cannot procure service in Greater New York.

"I am heartily in favor of this protection which the Hoy System gives, and sincerely believe it covers the exchange fully against loss. If so, why continue the Deposit System?

"As stated above, the exhibitors are perfectly willing to arbitrate in any way that we can agree upon. We have not as yet been accorded a hearing on this subject, and in belief of the exhibitors, I respectfully request an interview so we may arrange for an appointment when we can get together and discuss the question from our different viewpoints.

"Hoping to receive an early response, and wishing you a very happy and prosperous New Year, I am, very sincerely yours," Samuel Trigger.

A meeting of the newly elected officers of the League was held on December 26. At this meeting the proposition was made that no initiation fee would be paid from this date. This proposition was received with gratification by the standing committees. It was also agreed that the chairman should call the respective committees to meeting once a week and that a general meeting of the whole body should be held once a month.

A series of interesting experiments in physics are being made for screen production by the editors of the Paramount Pictographs, the "magazine-on-the-screen." The series of experiments are being made by Prof. R. P. Nichols of Cornell University. In this series the fact has been brought out that the atmosphere is capable of the most extraordinary phenomena when the normal conditions are upset.

AMERICAN HISTORY IN FILMS

Realkraft Picture Corporation Is Now Organized—Will Show Complete Story of United States from Beginning

The Realkraft Film Corporation has been organized for the purpose of visualizing in motion pictures the history of America, from the time of the discovery of the continent by Christopher Columbus throughout the various stirring epochs of its development inclusively to the present day.

The plans of the new film concern are ambitious in purpose and comprehensively broad in scope, embracing the production of a five-reel installment monthly of a subject that contains more genuine human interest, intense action, startling dramatic values and pure romance than all the fiction ever written, acted or screened.

Special attention will be given, of course, to the history of the United States. Every event of the slightest importance identified with the settlement of the colonies, Declaration of Independence, Revolutionary War, the great Civil Conflict, and the Spanish-American War will be chronologically depicted, with due regard for historical accuracy.

In relation to the above it is interesting to note that the project has the indorsement of the greatest educational factors in America. Prominent among those who have promised to co-operate in every way possible in the production of this truly remarkable series devoted to the setting forth of the wonderful story of the United States is George H. Brecht, Commissioner of Education for the State of Pennsylvania.

A. Reeder Ferriday is the president of the Realkraft Film Corporation. Mr. Ferriday is a manufacturer of Harrisburg, Pa., and while a newcomer to the film business, brings to the enterprise a reputation for mercantile executive ability that is vouched for by such representative citizens of his native city as Vance McCormick, editor of the Harrisburg Patriot and recently prominently before the country as chairman of the National Democratic Committee.

Studios will be erected in Philadelphia, unless a plan to lease one of the largest plants in the state of Pennsylvania, inactive for the past six months, is consummated. Production under the direction of George Brengle Ten Eyck, who is known to fame as the man who gave Mary Miles Minter her initial opportunity, will be started immediately in a studio near New York, pending the result of current negotiations for the Pennsylvania plant.

Temporary offices have been established in Philadelphia, Harrisburg, Pa., and Springfield, Massachusets. Distributing plans now formulating will be announced later. The Realkraft Film Corporation holds a Delaware charter and is capitalized at $300,000.

Velma Whitman, in George Walsh's new supporting cast, began her stage career at the age of seven, with Corse Payton's company.

Director Joseph Henbery has started rehearsals for the Triangle Fine Arts production, "That Colby Girl," featuring Dorothy Gish.

THE TRAVELING SALESMAN, with Frank McIntyre, (Famous Players)—"A very good production. Proved to be a great box office success. It should be pleasing to every picture fan."—M. J. Weil, Castle Theater.—Downtown Theater.

THE VICTORIA CROSS, with Lou-Tellegen. (Lasky). —"I billed the star as 'Geraldine Farrar's Husband,' and the daily papers scoffed at me, but I did an increased business because of it. Lou-Tellegen is a good star alone, that is true, but he proved an even better box office attraction with the added interest of being Geraldine Farrar's husband. (I also always bill Owen Moore as 'Mary Pickford's husband.') I did better business with 'The Victoria Cross' than with the last Mary Pickford. This is a good picture—pleased an audience until four o'clock New Year's morning."—M. J. Weil, Castle Theater.—Downtown house.

OLIVER TWIST, with Marie Doro, (Lasky)—"A very good production. Marie Doro does the best work of her career as 'Oliver.' Tully Marshall and Hobart Bosworth also do excellent work. We did very good business with this offering."—M. J. Weil, Castle Theater.—Downtown house.

ALL MAN, with Robert Warwick. (World)—"Went over fair. Warwick is not very well liked in this neighborhood. The picture is pretty good."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater.—Very high class patronage.

THE BLACK BUTTERFLY, with Mme. Petrova, (Metro)—"A very good picture which went over big. It is Petrova's best performance. It proved a wonderful box office success."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater. —Very high class patronage.

THE BLACK BUTTERFLY (Metro)—Olga Petrova. "We ran this picture on Christmas day and did a rushing business all the time we were open. It's an excellent feature."—Charles Hagen, Kenmore Theater.—Catering to the better classes.

THE BATTLE OF LIFE, with Gladys Coburn, (Fox)— "We did a poor business on this because it is a rotten picture. It seems to be a foul ball."—Charles E. Hagen, Kenmore Theater.—Catering to the better classes.

THE RISE OF SUSAN (World)—Clara Kimball Young. "We did a poor business on this because the weather was bad. We are going to repeat it again next week as it is a fine picture."—Charles Hagen, Kenmore Theater.—Catering to the better classes.

THE BATTLE OF SEXES.—"This is an old picture featuring Lillian Gish, Robert Harron, Owen Moore and Fay Tincher when they were just beginning to get into the game. It is a pretty good picture, for an old one. People came in out of curiosity to see the present stars when they were 'young'."—Charles Hagen, Kenmore Theater.—Catering to the better classes.

SALVATION JOAN (Vitagraph), with Edna May. "An A number one feature. It holds the interest of your audience from start to finish. An out of the ordinary story, with a pleasant surprise at the end. The photography, as usual with Vitagraphs, is fine."—W. A. Peterson, Scenic Theater, Mt. Vernon, South Dakota.

THREE OF MANY (Triangle)—Clara Williams. "I held them out for several hours with this picture on New Year's day. It is a fine feature. I talked with several patrons and they were all well pleased with it. The story is interesting because it has no ending. It can't end because the war isn't over yet."—Manager Lamoreaux, Lakeside Theater.—Residence house catering to the better classes.

THE STOLEN TRIUMPH (Metro)—Julius Stegar. "This is a very strong play and our patrons were very well pleased. We played to big houses with it all New Year's day.—Charles E. Hagen, Kenmore Theater.— Catering to a critical clientele.

THE WHARF RAT (Triangle)—Mae Marsh. "This picture doesn't come up to the usual standard of Mae Marsh plays. Business was fair."—Charles Hagen, Kenmore Theater.—Catering to the better classes.

THE WHARF RAT, (Triangle)—"Mae Marsh alone would draw a good house. The story was simple but appealing. Robert Harron is a young lad who is 'coming'."—A. K. Pay, Colonial Theater, Sioux Falls, South Dakota.

"Motography Is With the Exhibitors"

MOTOGRAPHY, Chicago:

First permit me to congratulate you upon your splendid department captioned "What the Picture Did for Me." We exhibitors appreciate the courage it requires to conduct a column which may contain adverse criticisms of big advertisers, and you in doing this show that you are primarily with us.

I herewith submit a few of my opinions on films I have run. Our house is the largest in South Dakota.— A. K. Pay, Colonial Theater Co., Sioux Falls, South Dakota.

The Devil's Double (Triangle), with William S. Hart. "O. K. Business was big. Bill Hart is a big favorite in this section."—Charles Hagen, Kenmore Theater.—Catering to the better classes.

The Honorable Algy, (Triangle)—"Story slight and of hackneyed theme. Charles Ray excellent. He is our biggest drawing card, and if he were given national publicity would be recognized as the greatest male star in pictures. Support cast fine."—A. K. Pay, Colonial Theater, Sioux Falls, South Dakota.

The Wolf Woman, (Triangle)—"One of the greatest money-makers we have ever had. Louise Glaum is the most natural of vampires and understands the psychology of dress. Charles Ray gave a cameo bit of acting. Story somewhat trite. Art Director Brunton devised some marvelous settings. He is one of Ince's most reliable stars. We advanced prices and packed houses."—A. K. Pay, Colonial Theater, Sioux Falls, South Dakota.

All Man, (World)—"The old, old wild west stuff. Robert Warwick has not proved popular with our patrons."—A. K. Pay, Colonial Theater, Sioux Falls, South Dakota.

Miss George Washington (Paramount)—Marguerite Clark. "We played this fine feature to 400 people one night and we consider it one of the grandest pictures that was ever played on the screen. If we had known it was such a good production we could have as easily charged twenty-five cents admission as we did fifteen. We are repeating this picture today and will re-book it in February or March."—Henry F. Titus, Crystal Amusement Company, Daytona, Florida.

The Love Hermit, (Mutual)—"The production is fair and the star, William Russell, very good. Just a fair box office attraction. Lobby display of mounted paper no good; colored photos are neat, nifty and very attractive."—F. W. Burke, Strand Theater, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

The Chaperon, (Essanay)—"Starring dainty little Edna Mayo, their picture proved to be very pleasing. It is a comedy drama with good photography and a well balanced cast. Picture will please your audience, but they will not rave about it. Business was fair."—F. W. Burke, Strand Theater, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

The Microscope Mystery, (Triangle)—"Constance Talmadge, sister of Norma, makes her initial appearance as a star in this feature. With Wilfred Lucas supporting her it gets over nicely. Did not prove to be a very strong drawing card. (There is an uncalled for use of a punch on Triangle films of late. Found ten punch marks in one reel. Exchange manager does not tell me why they are there but just tells me to leave them alone. I've been cutting them out as it is absolutely unnecessary so far as I can see.)"—F. W. Burke, Strand Theater, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

Musty Suffer, (Kleine)—"The one I received was all slap stick and would get over big in a nickel shooting house. Will not begin to compare with Keystone and proves to be a very poor substitute if your patrons are used to seeing the Mack Sennett kind."—F. W. Burke, Strand Theater, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

Liberty, (Universal serial)—"This draws a big crowd here and every one is very much pleased with it. Scenery seems to be talked about most."—O. M. P. Littlejohn, Hardacre Opera House, Lipton, Iowa.

Liberty, (Universal serial)—"This is an exciting serial and has proved a wonderful drawing card for me."—C. O. Davies, Wigwam Theater Co., Inc., Reno, Nevada.

Liberty, (Universal serial)—"This is the best drawing feature I have had up to date. The business increased on every installment. I have heard more compliments on this picture than on any other feature I ever ran."—Louis Kerasotes, Manager Savoy Theater, Springfield, Ill.

The Spendthrift, with Irene Fenwick, (Kleine)—"This is an old picture, of which I ran a new print in place of another offering. It is a very good picture and was well liked."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater.—Very high class patronage.

The Right to Be Happy, with Rupert Julian, (Bluebird)—"A very good picture which was well liked. Good box office attraction."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater.—Very high class patronage.

Three of Many, with Clara Williams, (Triangle) and Black Eyes and Blue, (Keystone)—"These are two very good offerings of the Triangle program, and their box office value is high. The comedy is one of the very best of Keystones."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater.—Very high class patronage.

The Matrimaniac, with Douglas Fairbanks, (Triangle)—"Fairbank's greatest production. The star always 'packs them in.' With this picture we did wonderful business until one A. M. in a neighborhood house."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater.—Very high class patronage.

The Challenge, with Helene Chadwick, (Pathe)—"Just a passable offering."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater.—Very high class patronage.

A Modern Enoch Arden, (Keystone)—"Wonderful. One scream of laughter from start to finish."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater.—High class patronage.

The Right to Be Happy, with Rupert Julian, (Bluebird)—"A Christmas story, very good for a subject of that kind."—George L. Madison, Logan Square Theater.—Catering to a high class patronage.

The Last Sentence, with Marc McDermott, (Edison)—"This picture is great. The star and story all go to make a fine attraction."—George L. Madison, Logan Square Theater.—Catering to a high class patronage.

A ROMANTIC JOURNEY, with William Courtney, (Pathe)—"A feature that will please any audience. Liked by my patrons."—George L. Madison, Logan Square Theater.—Catering to a high class patronage.

AN ENEMY TO THE KING (Vitagraph), E. H. Sothern—"This is a mighty fine picture and we did a very good business with it all day on New Year's. The story is a particularly strong one."—Lester Cuneo, De Luxe Theater.—Catering to a critical class of people.

THE CHALLENGE (Pathe), featuring Helene Chadwick—"This is a fair picture and we did a fair business with it. One trouble was that the star is not, as yet, very well known."—Lester Cuneo, De Luxe Theater.—Catering to a critical class of people.

THE SIN YE DO (Triangle), Frank Keenan—"This is a great picture and we did big business with it. Frank Keenan is very well known to our people and is a big favorite."—W. C. Lamoreaux, Lakeside Theater.—Catering to the better classes.

THE HEIRESS AT COFFEY DAN'S (Triangle), Bessie Love—"This is a very clever picture—clean and wholesome. The patrons I talked with were very well pleased and said that they were glad to see a pleasant picture once in a while instead of so many sordid ones. This picture should be a good box office attraction anywhere."—W. C. Lamoreaux, Lakeside Theater.—Catering to the better classes.

WAR BRIDES (Selznick), featuring Nazimova—"We ran this splendid feature two days to good business. It is a wonderful production and Nazimova does superb work. This is one of the best pictures of the year."—W. C. Lamoreaux, Lakeside Theater.—Catering to the better classes.

THE TRUANT SOUL (Essanay), featuring Henry Walthall and Mary Charleson—"For a picture with a sordid subject this one was very well done. Walthall does splendid work and his name always pulls well in my community. We did a good business with it even though in general my patrons prefer more pleasant stories."—W. C. Lamoreaux, Lakeside Theater.—Catering to a critical class of people.

THE HOUSE BUILT UPON THE SAND (Triangle), Lillian Gish—"This picture is different from most others and pleased my audiences. It seems to show Lillian Gish at her best. In general I think this would pay out well at any theater."—W. C. Lamoreaux, Lakeside Theater.—Catering to a critical class of people.

MY OFFICIAL WIFE (Vitagraph, re-issue), Clara Kimball Young—"The greatest of all Clara Kimball Young's pictures. Liked by all my patrons. Clara Kimball Young's acting is very good and she has a very good supporting cast."—E. Dlouhy, Vitagraph Theater.—Catering to a middle class of people.

BROKEN CHAINS (World), Ethel Clayton and Carlyle Blackwell—"A very good picture, well produced, with beautiful scenery. Liked by all my patrons."—E. Dlouhy, Vitagraph Theater.—Catering to a middle class of people.

A WOMAN ALONE (World), Alice Brady—"A fair picture not liked by patrons. A weak story and the star's acting rather poor."—E. Dlouhy, Vitagraph Theater.—Catering to a middle class of people.

THE FEMALE OF THE SPECIES (Triangle), Dorothy Dalton, Howard Hickman and Enid Markey—"A very good vampire picture, liked by all my patrons. The acting of the stars is very good. Wonderfully produced, a strong story."—E. Dlouhy, Vitagraph Theater.—Catering to a middle class of people.

Screenshine

BY MEL ODY

AN exhibitor was recently discussing picture titles with Paramount's publicity manager at the Pittsburgh office. An announcement of a picture title "Race Suicide" was lying on the publicity manager's desk, and Mr. King asked the exhibitor what he thought of the title, "Race Suicide." The exhibitor replied; "There, that's what I call a dandy title!" A few seconds elapsed and the exhibitor twisted in his chair and inquired, "What's it mean anyhow?"

OUT-COONING THE COON

A number of southern born cotton pickers of dark complexion were basking in the sun behind a set at the Pallas studio.

Over the top drifted the sound of some one talking the ante bellum negro dialect, in fact it was so extravagant that one of the dusky loafers slanted his hat over his eyes and lazily remarked, "That fool Joe am acting 'nigger' before Director Taylor."

"No! that ain't Joe's voice," drawled the other.

A long silence while all the drifting thoughts could be brought to bear on this problem. Then the yellow boy next to the front edge of the set rolled his eyes around the corner and then sat up and gasped: "What you all think? Director Taylor am now showing Joe how to talk 'nigger'!"

A STAR VISITS CHICAGO

Louise Huff, Paramount shiner, was due to honor Chicago by her presence last week.

Her visit was highly theoretical.

Manager Rutledge and Miss Hegley, of the Paramount exchange, Ohmy Lawrence of the Post, Mae Tinee of the Tribune and us were considerably confused by the visit. We "met all trains."

Miss Tinee's confusion reached the highest state of perfection, for she published the story of Miss Huff's visit and how she was looking—and Miss Huff hadn't been here.

The following are the main reasons for all this confusion:

1. Miss Huff did not arrive when the New York wires said she would.
2. She did not leave for Los Angeles according to schedule.
3. She wasn't here at all.

Some time ago we saw Sam Spedon and he was dressed in a brown hat, a brown suit, brown shoes, and other things. We asked him how he was feeling and he said, "All to the mustard."

"How's that?"

"Full o' pep," said Sam.

And now Sam is going to open his pepper jar in the office of the Moving Picture World.

More pep to you, Sam.

Would Make Audience "Co-Authors"

"My aim," says Frank Powell, who with John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, heads the New Frank Powell Producing Corporation which has just placed Marjorie Rambeau and Nance O'Neil under contract, "is, and always has been, to produce pictures which appeal, not only to the eye and heart, but to the intellect as well.

Frank Powell.

"I have found that in leaving to the imagination of your audience something on which the imagination may work is far better than to endeavor to show much that is needless in action, especially when that action is almost involuntarily followed in the mind and imagination of the audience. By so doing, I do not intend the elimination of any action necessary to the development of the plot, but rather to make the audience, so to speak, co-authors and thus arouse individual and personal interest in the development of the story. It is a well-known fact that the most successful plays are those in which the audience becomes in a way part and parcel of the drama enacted on the stage. So, I believe, it is in pictures."

It is this quality which has lifted Frank Powell out of the class of mediocrity and made him one of the master directors of the pictures. His ability and brains have been a real factor in the art of the picture drama, since Mr. Powell has been associated with the cinema since the old Biograph days.

It is this habit of keeping the intelligence of an audienced in mind—of never playing beneath it—which has made such productions of his as "The Children of the Ghetto," "A Fool There Was," "The Witch," "The Valley of the Missing," "The Chain Invisible," "The Ghost," some of the most noteworthy of motion picture history.

"In Miss Rambeau and Miss O'Neil, each of whom will be featured in a series of photodramas, we have two of the most gifted women now before the public. Miss O'Neil's artistic abilities have long made her a great favorite with the public. Miss Rambeau, unknown until a few seasons ago, has achieved a position earned and held by few stars.

"It will be our earnest endeavor to present Miss O'Neil and Miss Rambeau in vehicles commensurate with their abilities. The first two productions on which I am now working—'Mrs. Balfame' with Miss O'Neil and 'The Greater Woman' with Miss Rambeau—are an index to the character of those to follow. Everything that brains, time and money can contribute to the making of quality pictures of wide appeal will be found in the productions of this company.

"I find that the public is anxious to have its intelligence regarded. One of the greatest faults of the motion picture industry is that the producer has underestimated the intelligence of his audience. A vast army of thinking men and women are staying away from the picture theater for that very reason. They turn out eagerly when pictures with the intellect, as well as the heart and pictorial appeal, are shown."

Clara Kimball Young, the famous Selznick-Pictures star, has just returned to New York from a trip to New Orleans, accompanied by Director Giblyn and her company, where a picturized version of David Graham Phillips' novel, "The Price She Paid," was made.

Living Pictures in New Bessie Love Play

An artist's studio set, in which gay devotees of the Bohemian life revel at a champagne party and pretty girls pose as living models to furnish entertainment for their friends, is a colorful feature of the new Triangle-Fine Arts production, "Nina the Flower Girl," in which Bessie Love is starred.

The set has been declared by all who have seen it one of the most picturesque ever constructed at the Triangle-Fine Arts studio. A six-piece orchestra furnished music for the players during the filming of the scenes and numerous bottles of genuine champagne were used by the performers. Director Lloyd Ingraham insisted upon the genuine sparkling juice, deeming that no satisfactory substitute could be served before the camera.

The scene portrays the atmosphere in which Nina, the blind flower girl, and Jimmie, a crippled newsboy, played by Elmer Clifton, found the good angel, who brought them the best things of life.

Fifi, the moving spirit of the Bohemian crowd, befriends the waifs and shows them the road to the land where fairies dwell and miracles happen. The part of Fifi is played by Adele Clifton.

The story was written by Mary H. O'Connor, chief of the Triangle-Fine Arts scenario department. Miss O'Connor said the plot was suggested to her by an instance she witnessed in the tenement district of New York City while she was a reporter on one of the metropolitan newspapers. She had friends in a colony of artists who adopted a blind girl and succeeded in having her sight restored after financing an operation by a world famous specialist.

International Combines With Pathe

HEARST RELEASES ALL PRODUCTIONS THROUGH PATHE CHANNELS

THE Pathe Exchange, Inc., and the International Film Service, Inc., have reached an agreement that all of the pictures of the International including serials, features, cartoons and the Hearst International News Pictorial will be released through the Pathe Exchange, Inc. The new arrangement became effective January 1.

The agreement was concluded by Edward A. MacManus, general manager of the International, and J. A. Berst, vice-president and general-manager of Pathe.

One of the most important features in connection with the new arrangement, will be the consolidation of the two news reels—the Pathe News and the Hearst International News Pictorial. In future the combined news reel will be known as the Hearst-Pathe News. It will be issued twice weekly beginning January 10. These two news reels are the only news reels issued more than once a week. With the unsurpassed equipment of these two great organizations for gathering pictures in the entire world Hearst-Pathe News will be the most gigantic news picture service ever conceived.

Castle Feature Out January 14

The consolidation will also have an important bearing upon "Patria," the International's photoplay serial supreme, in which is featured Mrs. Vernon Castle, the best known woman in America. It was the original intention of the International to issue this great patriotic serial on January 1, as a New Year's present to the nation. With the deal pending with Pathe, William Randolph Hearst recommended the postponement of the release date of "Patria" until the consummation of the consolidation. Accordingly, it has been decided that the serial, all episodes of which are practically completed, will be released on January 14 through the Pathe Exchanges.

The Pathe Exchanges will also start to release on January 10 the International's unsurpassed cartoon series. This includes the original Katzenjammer Kids, Jerry on the Job, Bringing Up Father, Krazy Kat and the cartoons in addition to those of Walt Hoban, George Herriman, and George McManus, of Fred Opper, Tad, Jimmy Swinnerton, Tom Powers and others. Their works have become classics through their daily publication not only in the great string of Hearst newspapers but in more than 300 other newspapers, which have either been working in alliance with Pathe or Hearst interests for years throughout the United States with a combined circulation of over 28,000,000.

Berst's Statement

Great satisfaction was expressed by the principals in the consolidation over its successful consummation. Immediately upon its completion, J. A. Berst sent a telegram to William Randolph Hearst, who is spending the holidays in California, in which he said:

"I foresee an era of unusual prosperity in this move, which will work for the best interests of all concerned and by eliminating a certain amount of the waste through co-operation will advance by that much the interests of all exhibitors."

E. A. MacManus, general manager of the International, has been devoting most of his attention during the past month to the completion of the transaction. He has visited either in person or by representative, all of the fifteen branches of the International throughout the country, arranging for the transfer of the offices as well as for the contracts of Patria, Beatrice Fairfax, and The Mysteries of Myra and of Jaffery, The Ocean Waif, The Flower of Faith and The Jockey of Death, recent International features.

"The arrangement just entered into," said Mr. MacManus, "will mark an epoch in the motion picture business. Pathe picture, plus Hearst publicity and promotion will form the strongest combination ever effected in motion pictures, and will make their product the most sought for in the industry.

"All of the serials released on Pathe's $5,000,000 programme, together with those of the International, will be fully exploited in the Hearst publications, which include the following: New York American, New York Evening Journal, New York Sunday American, Boston American, Boston Sunday American, Atlanta Georgian, Atlanta Sunday American, Chicago Examiner, Chicago American, Chicago Sunday Examiner, San Francisco Examiner, San Francisco Sunday Examiner, San Francisco Call, Los Angeles Examiner, Los Angeles Sunday Examiner, Los Angeles Herald, and Good Housekeeping Magazine, Hearst's Magazine, Harper's Bazar, Cosmopolitan, Motor, and Motor Boating. In addition, there will be enormous advertising campaigns in newspapers that have been exploiting Pathe and International pictures for the past three years. The enormous quantity of publicity that has been given to "Patria" and Mrs. Vernon Castle, the star, is a good example of the manner in which we propose to exploit all Pathe pictures in the future. We propose to make the name Pathe the best known in the motion picture industry, as it will also be synonymous with the very best that there is in pictures. Under the new alliance, the publicity resources of both organizations will be greatly strengthened, assuring to all Pathe exhibitors the prestige of showing nationally advertised pictures, a demand for which has been established through advertising prior to the release.

The novelized versions of Pathe's serials, as well as of "Patria," will be published either in the morning or evening editions of Hearst publications in New York, Boston, Chicago, San Francisco, Los Angeles and Atlanta, as well as in practically every other large city in the country. Exhibitors can well foresee how important this consolidation is to their own interests. I am delighted at its successful termination. "The advantages of this alliance between the Hearst and Pathe interests are manifold," said Mr. Berst. "Pathe pictures plus Hearst publicity will be an unbeatable combination. The advertising derived from the Hearst interest will, of course, be of direct benefit to exhibitors, large and small, in every city and town in the country. This advertising will be prepared with a view of carrying out to the fullest possible extent. Pathe's policy of co-operation.

"The new Hearst-Pathe News will be the greatest news pictorial ever assembled. Already the Pathe News is an American institution. Added to Pathe's world-wide camera facilities, supplemented by the greatest publicity organization in America. The best of the Hearst and Pathe correspondents and camera men in all parts of the world will be retained. The new Hearst-Pathe News will have the benefit of the combined efforts of executives of the two organizations.

"It has long been conceded that Pathe and International were supreme in the serial field. No better illustration of this can be found than in the two most recent serials of the two separate organizations—the International's serial supreme "Patria" in which Mrs. Vernon Castle is starred, and Pathe's remarkable picture, "Pearl of the Army," with Pearl White in the principal role. The new super-serials to be issued in future by the combined organizations will be made from stories selected in co-operation with the editors of the great Hearst newspapers and magazines. All of the world famous authors who contribute to Cosmopolitan, Hearst's Magazine, Good Housekeeping and other Hearst publications, will contribute to Pathe's new and greater program and these authors together with the famous Pathe scenario staff will give us a literary organization of unmatchable and unprecedented strength. For these pictures, Mr. Hearst will create a heretofore unheard-of public demand that will be a gold bond guarantee from box office receipts to exhibitors.

"The cartoon service of Pathe will be greatly strengthened by the edition of Hearst cartoonists. Alternating weekly, the work of these famous Hearst artists will appear in addition to Pathe cartoons made by the world famous Bray process.

"For months, Pathe has been building the finest exchange organization in the industry. Now this organization will be further strengthened by the addition of the best men of the International exchanges. The best office in each city will be retained and the other exchanges closed.

"Beginning January 1, International customers receive service from the Pathe office in the city from which they formerly received International service. Later service will be furnished from the nearest Pathe office."

C. R. Seelye, business manager of Pathe, sent the news to his managers as a New Year's message. He pointed out that the strength of Pathe's program and the addition of the International releases and the Hearst publicity means that all Pathe managers and salesmen will earn more under the profit-sharing arrangement now in effect.

Triangle January 21 Releases

Bessie Love and William Desmond are the stars of the Triangle feature releases for January 21.

Miss Love appears in an appealing human interest story of life in the big city, entitled "Nina, the Flower Girl," produced by the Fine Arts company. William Desmond has a distinct novelty in the Kay-Bee mystery play, "The Iced Bullet," from the pen of C. Gardner Sullivan and directed by Reginald Barker.

As "Nina the Flower Girl," written by Mary H. O'Connor and directed by Lloyd Ingraham, Bessie Love has a part in which she appears to unusual advantage. An appealing little love story is worked out between Nina and Jimmie, a crippled newsboy, who creates an atmosphere of ideal unreality for Nina by his stories, in which he appears to her imagination as a Prince Charming. When kind friends take an interest in Nina and prepare her for an operation which will restore her eyesight, Jimmie, who cannot bear the thought that his own deformity will be disclosed to her, tries to commit suicide. He is rescued, however, and in the end he himself is cured of his physical infirmity, so that both of the waifs are able to look forward to a lifetime of love and happiness.

"The Iced Bullet," in which William Desmond is starred, is a serio-comic unweaving of an unique dramatic fabric, in which an actor's ambitions mingle with a murder mystery. The play narrates the adventures of one T. Chittingham Gall-Worth, a young man who describes himself as an "actor-author-artist," in the mazes of "movieland." Gall-Worth forces his way into the Kay Bee studios at Culver City, bent on selling "the screen masterpiece of the century," and enacting the leading role thereof. How he fares in his strenuous quest for fame proves to be both surprising and thrilling in the extreme. Desmond's acting is in thorough keeping with the lively and whimsical character of the play.

Mary Miles at Work on New Play

Newest of the Mutual Mary Miles Minter features being produced at the American studio is "The Gentle Intruder," under the direction of James Kirkwood. The photoplay is a fit companion-piece to the preceding pictures of the Mary Miles Minter series that have been so popular, and gives the charming young star wide opportunity in a difficult role.

The story is an interesting one—of a young girl who has been defrauded of an inheritance by her uncle's lawyer. Into the home of the man who has taken what is hers she comes as a companion for an elderly woman and through this association finally brings the lawyer's self-seeking, society-crazed family into a realization of their shortcomings.

Miss Minter is at her best in a part of this type, and through all the scenes she manages to convey the spirit of clean, wholesome comedy that has made her work distinctive.

National Association Lunches

Prominent motion picture men, to the number of one hundred or more, met at luncheon last week at Delmonico's in New York to discuss the Sunday closing. Invitations were sent out from the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry in the name of William A. Brady, Walter W. Irwin, Adolp Zukor, Leo. A. Ochs, and Samuel H. Trigger. John R. Stanchfield and Judge Samuel Seabury were present to discuss the legal aspects and the legislative status of the Sunday closing situation. The only other speakers were William A. Brady, president of the National Association, who presided at the luncheon, and Walter W. Irwin, chairman of the executive committee.

Fox Gets New Child Player

Francis Wilburn Carpenter, the famous child actor who has been with Fine Arts for some time, has joined the William Fox forces in the West.

Francis is five years old, correspondingly small, but uncorrespondingly talented. He was born in Glenwood Springs, Colorado, and has been in films almost since his birth in 1911.

Dayton Theater on Church Site

A DEAL has been closed in Dayton, Ohio, for a ninety-nine year lease on the old First Baptist church property, and this building will be immediately converted into a motion picture house by the Dayton Theater Building company, which will be incorporated with a capital stock of $250,000 in the near future.

This company has acquired from the Associates Improvement company a ninety-nine year lease on the property, and an attractive three-story building is to be erected, with four storerooms and theater lobby on Main street, while the ground in the rear is to be occupied by the theater proper. The building on the lot at present will be wrecked completely and a new building take its place.

According to the announcement the capital for the new enterprise will be invested by prominent business and professional men of Dayton and Indianapolis. The organization is not yet complete, but among those identified with the proposition are Fred Rike, president of the Rike-Kumler company; Judge Charles W. Dale, Harry Schenck of Schenck & Williams, architects, and Sidney G. Kusworm, attorney, all of Dayton. The Indianapolis men associated with the venture are Meyer Efroymson, of H. P. Wassen & Company, and treasurer of the Circle Theater Company, Indianapolis, Isidore Feibleman, of Bamberger & Feibleman, attorneys, and Mark Gates, director of the Circle Theater Company.

The Dayton theater will have a seating capacity of 2,500. It will be devoted to motion pictures of the highest grade, presented at popular prices. When completed is will be the largest and finest in the state.

The entire stock issue of 7 per cent non-taxable preferred stock has been purchased by the firm of Breed, Elliott & Harrison, one of the leading bond firms of Cincinnati.

Schenck & Williams, Dayton architects, are busy on the plans for the new structure. They expect to visit several cities and inspect large theaters.

About Desirable Seats

From the well edited program and house organ of the Stillman Theater of Cleveland we quote the following regarding patrons' whims as to seats:

WHERE YOU SIT.

Nearly everybody who attends a certain theater with any degree of regularity becomes used to sitting in a certain part of the house. He gets to feeling that that location represents "the best seats," and he's disappointed if he has to sit elsewhere.

We aren't inveighing against this habit at all—indeed, we're sure to encourage anything that makes you feel more at home and comfortable in this theater. But we do want to remind you again that every seat is a good seat in the Stillman, and that, even if you can't be seated in the part of the house you're used to, you can be just as comfortable elsewhere.

The next time that happens try an experiment. Since you can't go exactly where you want to, decide that you'll go to a seat that's the opposite of your usual one. If you've been sitting near the front try the rear of the mezzanine. If you've favored the rear try the front. The chances are you'll decide that it doesn't make a lot of difference where you sit—so far as a comfortable chair and a good view of the screen are concerned.

Showed to 10,000 in Four Days

There is an old saying: "There is no fool like an old fool."

However, that doesn't mean that the "old boys" are all weak minded or that experience doesn't count. At any rate here is a young exhibitor who has made a very successful mark on the ledger of success. He has done this because he has learned his lessons of experience very quickly and has not been handicapped by the lack of progressive spirit which sometimes is a fault in older men.

This young picture man's name is Frank W. Burke and he is manager of the splendid Strand Theater of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, a 1,500-seat house.

Recently he showed "Where Are My Children" for four days and pulled in some 10,000 people. That is exceptionally good for a city of only 40,000. But as Mr. Burke says to MOTOGRAPHY "I do not think I would have done it if I had not worked mighty hard."

And, by the way, he also says in his letter, "Remember I am strong for MOTOGRAPHY and am always glad to assist you in any way that I can."

Night scene at the lobby of the Strand Theater of Cedar Rapids, Iowa. Note the beautiful design of the marquis and the window above. The little picture shows Manager F. W. Burke, one of the youngest exhibitors of the middle west.

The Americus Theater of Cincinnati pulls 'em in every evening. Here is the gathering waiting to get into the house for the second show on a recent night. Pathe's serial, "The Shielding Shadow," was being featured at the time.

Is Yours a "Pleasant" House

If a theater is "pleasant" it has a mighty powerful factor of success. The following editorial from the organ of the Stillman Theater of Cleveland is a good way to present the matter to patrons.

PLEASANTNESS

Watching the house at recent matinees we are almost tempted to start a society column. For the party habit is growing, and we see plenty of evidence that the Stillman is an institution in the minds of many Cleveland women.

Why not, pray? We are trying our hardest to earn for the Stillman the reputation of being "the pleasantest place downtown," and to encourage the habit of using it as a meeting place and the just-right background for a delightful two hours of any afternoon.

If you've been neglecting to go see Dorothy, say, or even to call her up, and you're beginning to think she'll think—oh, you know that sort of guilty feeling—then why not get her on the phone tomorrow and suggest that she join you here Monday afternoon. And whether it's just you two, or you decide that it would be nice to bring in somebody else on the party, you've arranged for a pleasure that will do more than a little toward making next week happier and easier. Try it.

And whether there are two or twenty of you by the time your party's made up, we'll do our best for you, and we'll try to give you the feeling that our sole reason for existence is to provide means for happifying people. Which isn't so far from the actual truth as it may sound when you first read it.

Every afternoon, you know, from one o'clock on. The newspaper ads will tell you just what time you ought to come to see the first of things.

Equipment of New Regent of Philadelphia

Two Simplex machines with a 95 foot projection is used. Three operators are always on hand. The booth and the rewinding room are the very latest, containing everything which will aid an operator in giving only first class projection. Special titles for pictures are gotten out by the management and used constantly.

A Kimball organ, the first to be installed in the city of Philadelphia, adds to the enjoyment of patrons, assisted by an orchestra under the able direction of Louis Van Es, a Holland violinist. At the console are Mr. Anton van den Broek and H. B. Rouillot, two well known organists. The organ chambers are located one on either side of the screen with an echo organ in the rear of the theater, next to the operating room. The motors controlling these different organs are operated by the organist from the electric console. The musical program is given especial attention by the management, featuring same in every program issued. Musical selections are rendered before the feature four times a day during which no one is ushered to a seat, and the novel dimmer system of colored lighting is used.

There are numerous exits which make it possible for the theater to be emptied within one minute. The carpets and all draperies in the interior of the theater are blue in color.

Florida House Opens

The Imperial Theater has opened its doors as a high-class amusement house in Jacksonville, Florida.

This theater, on East Forsyth street, just off Main, would never be recognized by those who saw it some months ago, and have not seen it since, for it has been completely built over, inside and outside, and is today an entirely new and different place, with a seating capacity of about 1,200, and with all the most modern conveniences and attachments.

The S. A. Lynch enterprises, which owns the Imperial, has been everything but stingy in making this theater the peer of any in the South, and its efforts to please the people cannot but be most satisfactory.

No attempt at description of the Imperial can be attempted at this time, for it is simply perfect, and those who attended the opening performance had a treat that was worth receiving.

Theaters Help Lower Eggs

The recent war on the egg speculators in New York was carried on through the local film houses. Notices encouraging the boycott movement on the hen production were flashed on the screens of the theaters in New York.

"Economy" was the slogan of the film literature and the notices, which were shown at every performance, read:

"Smash the egg gamblers. It's the man higher up, not the retailer. Practice economy in eggs. But only for the old and the children.

"Decrease the demand and watch the price come down."

This notice was shown continuously and simultaneously in several hundred theaters of New York, and those most interested in forcing down the price of eggs declare it was a powerful factor in their fight.

Booklets on Children's Films

A number of inquiries have been received in the office of Motography from readers asking the addresses to which to write to obtain copies of the three booklets on children's programs which were reviewed in the December 30 issue of Motography.

"Anita's Boy and Girl Child's Primer" may be obtained from the Fox Film Company, 130 West Forty-sixth street, New York City. Copies of "Motion Pictures for Children" may be obtained from the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, Times Building, New York, N. Y.; and "How to Gather and Hold Audiences" is issued by the National Committee on Films for Young People of the National Board of Review, 70 Fifth avenue, New York.

HOW OTHERS ARE STEERING THE SHIP

AN "atmospheric" screen sounds interesting, doesn't it? It is the name of a new picture catcher put out by a New York firm. A number of exhibitors who have tried it have found it unusually satisfactory. We hope there is not too much hot air about the stories of the new sheet.

There are two film versions of Robinson Crusoe on the market at present. Savage has one and the Universal has just announced the second.

The managers of the theaters, music halls and motion picture theaters of Newcastle-on-Tyne, England, have decided to close their houses by 10 o'clock every night.

The city council of Rockford, Ill., has closed all the moving picture shows on Sunday evenings but allows them to run Sunday afternoons from 1 to 6 o'clock.

The Idle Hour Theater of Cambridge Springs, Pennsylvania, advertises a film of pictures of the mineral water town. The slogan of the house is, "Nothing but the best, for the best, by the best, always."

Fire of unknown origin recently destroyed the People's Theater of Redfield, Iowa. The building had three stories and a basement, in which were motor cars. All were saved. The property loss is $7,000.

Huge bunches of mistletoe hung just above the two stair landings leading to the mezzanine floor at The Rialto of New York Christmas week. Special ushers were detailed to handle the congested traffic at these points.

James W. Himebaugh, proprietor of the Royal in Holland, Michigan, will soon build a beautiful new theater. And unless all signs fail, by April 1, one of the most beautiful picture theaters in Western Michigan will adorn the city.

Henry Miller, theatrical producer, is to have a New York theater of his own. He has leased the property at Nos. 124, 126, 128 and 130 West Forty-third street, just off Broadway, and will put up a building to be known as Henry Miller's Theater, with a capacity of 1,200.

Inspired, no doubt, by the Sunday closing agitation in the East, Indianapolis has taken to enforcing its ancient blue laws. Fifteen picture theater proprietors were arrested one Sunday as the result of a movement started by T. Ernest Malcolm, a local justice of the peace.

Alpha, Michigan, is to have a second moving picture house if the plans which Mr. White, proprietor of the Cosy theater of Iron River, materialize. The building next to the Alpha Candy Kitchen is to be fitted up for a play house by being lengthened and the ceiling raised.

Alfred Hamburger's Gaiety Theater in Chicago issues a program in postal card size with the features for the week listed on one side and on the other side a picture of one of the screen actors or actresses with a brief description of their personal appearance and their characteristics.

The Massachusetts branch of the M. P. E. L. of A. held a convention at the Quincy House, Boston, Thursday, December 21. New officers were elected and the percentage system, open booking, advance deposits and express charges thoroughly descussed from every standpoint.

Warren C. Seaver and Louis Zohler are building what is said will be the largest moving picture theater in Chicago at Howard street and North Ashland avenue. It is expected to be ready for occupancy by June 1. The building will be a part of a block of ten offices and thirty flats.

Leadville, Pennsylvania, has just adjusted the license tax on theaters according to their seating capacities. Formerly the Academy of Music and the three picture houses paid $75 a year each. By the re-adjustment the Academy pays $100, the Lyceum $75, and the Photoplay and Manhattan $50 each.

In appreciation of the good service rendered by its employes, the Rialto Theater Corporation of New York added fifty per cent to its total pay roll for Christmas week and distributed the extra money pro rata. The staff was paid on Friday before Christmas to allow time for Saturday shopping.

The Strand Theater of New York announces that admission prices for the rear of the orchestra have been raised from 25 to 35 cents for the evening performances on Saturdays, Sundays and holidays. The increased cost of film service and musicians' pay caused the raises, Dr. Wilson, director of publicity, says.

The Maryland Censor Board recently passed "Purity," a Mutual feature, but after hearing that Washington had banned the film because of its undraped characters, underwent a change of mind. A reexamination was ordered, which resulted in several eliminations and a condemnation of the posters.

A one-story brick picture theater to cost $30,000 will be built in New York City by the M. Z. Realty Company on the south side of DeKalb avenue, sixty feet west of Sumner avenue. The northeast corner of Varet and White streets will be the site of a four-story brick office and factory, to be built by C. Katz at a cost of $25,000.

The Hippodrome Theater, on the corner of Broadway and Yamhill street, Portland, Oregon, has been bought by Portland capital for $350,000 cash. Max Houser, grain dealer and exporter of Portland, is mentioned as the buyer or the financial representative of the Portland money which has bought the playhouse.

Detroit society people have just spent $1,600 on the making of a "400" film play. "Easy Come, Easy Go" was the title of the production, which was made in some of the aristocratic residences of Detroit and Grosse Point. The play was presented to society at the Majestic Theater a couple of weeks ago.

Parents saw the first actual working of the Minneapolis schools through films recently at East high school. Beginning with the kindergarten the views go on through high school. Needs of the schools were also shown and fire hazards in certain buildings emphasized. The films were also shown at other schoolhouses.

Several first-run picture showmen of Greater New York and vicinity held a meeting recently and formed a new booking organization, which will be known as the Exhibitors' Protective Association. The officers are Sydney Cohen, president; A. Meyer, vice-president; John Manheimer, secretary, and Abraham Wolf, treasurer.

Vernon C. Seaver and Louis Zohler have leased the Howard Theater at Howard street and North Ashland avenue, Chicago, from Charles W. Ferguson for ten years at an annual rental of $12,800. The theater is being constructed in connection with a building containing ten offices and thirty flats, to be completed June 1. The house will have a seating capacity of 2,000.

A new theater was added to Rochester's list of downtown amusement places, when the Piccadilly Theater at Clinton avenue North and Mortimer street, had a formal opening and house warming. The first opening was a private showing for newspaper men and invited guests. Mayor Hiram H. Edgerton and his cabinet, other city and county officials, and prominent business and professional men, attended the opening.

Mary Pickford's erratic dancing about and sudden jumps from rose gardens to snow storms in the film, "Tess of the Storm Country," caused a $75 loss of patronage at the Monroe Theater of Omaha, according to the verdict of a jury against the Kansas City Feature Film Company. George A. Monroe, proprietor of the theater, sued for $100, alleging that the Pickford film was defective.

The National Theater of Dayton, Ohio, formerly a vaudeville house, has been reopened. The United Booking office has taken over the houses which will show photoplays of a superior character. Feature films seen at the high-price theaters in the east will be shown at the National with other programs such as are shown at the houses at Cincinnati, Pittsburgh, St. Louis and other theaters on this circuit.

Theodore C. Chifos, manager of the Apollo Theater, South Main street, Dayton, Ohio, donated the entire gross receipts of his theater one Thursday recently to the building fund being raised for Miami Valley hospital. Appropriate decorations for the theater on that day were made, further bringing to the attention of the public the nature of the day's campaign put on by the management.

One of the first two men to establish a moving picture theaters in Cleveland has closed his house. He is Louis H. Becht, proprietor of the Mall Theater, Superior avenue, opposite the postoffice. But the following day Becht opened a new theater two doors east of the location of the present one. This one is the New Mall, a double theater, one auditorium on top of the other, with an entrance on Superior avenue for the lower house and an entrance of Euclid avenue for the upper auditorium.

"The small theater must go. Within a few years all the houses will be large ones. They will give but two shows a night and the prices will be around twenty-five cents." This is the opinion of a live Chicago exhibitor, Charles G. Stuart, manager of the Palais Royal at 1710 West Madison street. And a good many other picture men agree with Mr. Stuart in regard to the general tendency of the times.

Plans are being made for a new theater to be built in Houston, Texas, in time for the opening of the next season. According to announcements made by Clarence Weis, representative of the American Theatrical Association, the new building will be small, having a seating capacity of 1,200, and will be located on upper Main street. It will be used exclusively for the dramatic performances, for which the Prince Theater was used until this year, when all road shows are being shown at the City Auditorium.

The closing of the deal whereby the T. S. Martin estate of Sioux City, Iowa, agrees to erect a new Orpheum Theater building at 412-416 Nebraska street, was announced by J. Earle Martin. According to the agreement, the Martin estate agrees to erect a structure costing $100,000, which shall cover a ground space of 75 feet by 150 feet. The building will be two stories and is to have a seating capacity of 1,500 to 1,800. Tentative plans provide for an ornate terra cotta front.

What bids fair to be the official indorsement of Colorado as a producing center for motion pictures set upon it by men actively interested in the industry will probably be given during the month of January in Denver, when Clara Kimball Young, her entire company and her director, Albert Capellani, will arrive there to film a number of scenes for "The Easiest Way." Mr. Capellani, anxious to film the pictures in the territory mentioned in the play, is enthusiastic concerning his visit to this state.

Over a hundred and fifty employes of the Rialto of New York, with their wives, sweethearts and friends, sat down to a holiday dinner given by the Rialto Theater Corporation. When the house had emptied at the conclusion of the final performance all the guests were relegated to the loges and balcony while long tables were set up in the foyer between the main entrance and the glass-enclosed orchestra seats. A half hour's extra entertainment was given for the guests and at midnight they filed down the two big staircases to a six-course gorge, with liquid incidentals. When the banquet was fairly under way eight huge arc lights, which had been concealed in the decorations, were turned on suddenly and two camera men surprised the diners by recording the event on a few hundred feet of film. There was a little extemporaneous oratory, not exactly serious in nature, and when everyone had told everyone else what a grand time he'd had the occasion was officially pronounced a glittering success.

New Conditions for the Film Papers

LAST week MOTOGRAPHY started upon its ninth year of service to the motion picture trade. Nine years is not a lifetime in most industries; in the film industry it is almost an age. It carries back to the period when the best theater lists totaled about six thousand names; when a thousand feet a week was the film output of the best studios; when the names of the best players were unknown to the public and unavailable to the exhibitors and the trade papers.

The trade papers themselves, which all started about that time, were pretty thin and lifeless compared with present standards; they carried few illustrations and less advertising. There was little or no discrimination in the advertisers' minds between paid subscribers and free distribution.

Organized advertising departments as a part of the producers' equipment existed at that time only in embryo. Oftentimes the responsible head of the producing company himself insisted upon placing all the advertising and even directing all the publicity—a work for which he had inadequate time and to which he gave little thought or study.

As a natural result, the publications that made the most noise and boasted the most valiantly came soonest to the attention of the producer-advertiser. Publishers' circulation claims were accepted at their face value—or, if questioned, were seldom or never investigated. Business, for the trade papers, begot business. The paper that, by reason of its shouting, secured some advertising, gained thereby the occasion for a still louder noise and so got more advertising. Advertisers who could not find time to investigate publishers' circulation claims found a different reason to buy advertising pages—their competitors were buying them. Whether the medium was really valuable or not, they could not afford to stay out while their rivals were in. And they could afford to stay in, whether it was a good buy or not, because business was good and they were making lots of money.

Because of this peculiar though perhaps not unique condition, some of the trade papers waxed fat and profitable almost in spite of themselves—and doubtless to their own amazement. Called upon for a frank and truthful statement, their publishers probably would have admitted that not merit, but circumstance, brought their success. But through its aid they were able, after success instead of before, to make themselves worthy of it.

Today there are just three trade papers in the motion picture field. We repeat the number—three—after due consideration of the claims of those who have tried, or are now trying, to enter. It is not necessary that we name the other two; but for MOTOGRAPHY we go on record here and now with the positive statement that it offers to the motion picture trade everything that a motion picture trade paper can possibly offer. And, to paraphrase the favorite catchline of a large automobile manufacturer, when a better motion picture trade paper is printed MOTOGRAPHY will print it.

MOTOGRAPHY has never carried as many pages of advertising as its eastern contemporaries. We can be frank in saying that, because the fact is obvious. Furthermore, it has been mostly MOTOGRAPHY'S own fault. While we have advertised producers to exhibitors, while we have advertised MOTOGRAPHY to exhibitors, we have never advertised MOTOGRAPHY to advertisers. We have worked hard and kept quiet—too quiet. Our press-agenting has all been for other people.

We confess, too, that we have been rather independent. Our policy has always been "Readers First." That means that while we have made friends of our readers, and have accumulated a lot of them (figures omitted because this is not a circulation statement), in doing so we may not always have done just what the manufacturing trade would like to see us do. That, of course, is part of the "Readers First" policy, and most emphatically does not bear upon our sincere respect and admiration for those bold and far-seeing producers who are responsible for the growth of this industry.

We have been told, too—repeatedly, and by influential persons—that if we would come to New York and publish there, we would get all the advertising there is. Possibly that is true. But we prefer Chicago. We believe Chicago is destined to be the business center of this industry some day. It may come sooner than even we expect; it may take several years. But when the motion picture headquarters moves to Chicago, as it will, MOTOGRAPHY will be here to welcome it and to serve it with increased facilities.

In the foregoing paragraphs are some of the reasons why MOTOGRAPHY carries less advertising than the New York papers; reasons which do not reflect in any way upon the value of its pages. And MOTOGRAPHY is now entering upon its ninth year of the same unchanged policy.

But the ninth year begins under different auspices. The motion picture art is enjoying a business administration. The ballyhoo no longer prevails. Advertising is bought and sold as it is in other old established industries, where merit, and not noise, dominates. The publisher must deliver the goods—not an exchange of reading-page publicity for advertising, not the appeal of good fellowship, not the perversion of friendships to the beggary of selling, but the fair sale of good value for good money.

The motion picture trade paper must place the manufacturer's announcement before as many interested exhibitors as possible. To make sure that they are interested exhibitors, they must be paid subscribers to the trade paper. No one paper can reach them all—that is humanly impossible, and no advertiser expects it. But, by diligent work, the constant effort of a corps of employes properly directed, it is possible to secure a great many. It is hard work. Possibly it is because they know how hard it is that some advertisers take circulation statements with a grain of salt. But much may be done by unremitting effort; if the first appeal or the fourth does not get them, the twelfth or the twentieth probably will. That, at least, is the only way we have found successful.

And these new, difficult conditions are the very ones that we greet with joy. For we know that we can meet them with honor. That is our specialty as publishers—the very thing we have had to do right along in other fields.

MOTOGRAPHY'S actual circulation is less than the "claims" of its eastern contemporaries. We do not wish either to disparage their claims or to question their integrity. Therefore we will drop the comparative mode in asserting that our figures are not claims—they are facts. Moreover they are facts that there is not the slightest difficulty in proving—and the proof we are willing and eager to present.

There are several ways of gaining a large distribution quickly, so that unimpeachable figures may be presented to the advertiser with a flourish. For instance, there is the ever-present newsstand. We tried that out. We gave the News Company about five thousand copies every week. It sold about four thousand and returned the balance. We never knew who bought the four thousand—but we had a pretty good guess that few of them went to exhibitors. So we made a non-returnable arrangement with the News Company. Now it orders less than a thousand copies, and we are putting the rest to better use. Newsstand sales boost "distribution"—but they don't help the advertiser.

MOTOGRAPHY will play the trade paper game with all its cards on the table, face up. Playing that way, we can challenge the whole field, with the comfortable knowledge that no one can show a better hand.

Exhibitor Gives Christmas Party

ILLINOIS THEATER MAN IS HOST TO FIVE HUNDRED ORPHANS

By B. F. Barrett

THE Christmas season with its spirit of good will toward all people brought out many "good-fellows" among the exhibitors who planned special programs for their patrons and unusual entertainments to make the children happy.

In Oak Park, Cicero and Maywood, Illinois, the name of John H. Hodgson, manager of the Oak Park Theater, will be revered next to that of Santa Claus in the hearts of five hundred children, inmates of orphan asylums and crippled children's homes who were invited by this kind hearted manager to a Christmas party at his theater on Saturday, December 23, to meet Mr. Santa Claus.

The "party" began before the youngsters arrived at the theater, for there was snow on the ground and Mr. Hodgson sent for his guests in big sleighs filled with warm fur robes. As they went into the theater every neck was craned, each eager to be the first one to discover Santa, but except for the Christmas decorations the house appeared just as on any other occasion.

As soon as the little folks were seated the questions began: "What time is Santa Claus coming?" "Is he coming down where we are, or is he just going to make a speech on the stage?" One skeptical boy remarked, "Gee, I bet they're just going to have him in a picture."

The entire program was planned with a view to pleasing the little people. The musical numbers, furnished by a four-piece orchestra composed of a piano, organ, violin and drum, seemed to be as much of a treat to the kiddies as the pictures. The selections were chosen from popular airs with which it was thought they would be familiar, and they were encouraged to all join in singing those they knew. A two-reel comedy caused much merriment, and a news-of-the-day film also interested the small audience.

As the last of the current topics faded from the screen the curtain was slowly raised revealing a gorgeous stage setting of a room in Santa's palace. Christmas greens and wreaths were lavishly used in the decoration of the room and in the center was a big Christmas tree in all its splendor of ornaments, red and green balls, tinsel and a myriad of tiny colored lights. It did not take the children long to discover on one side of the tree a box filled with oranges and on the other a big table on which were piled little pails filled with candy. As the "ohs" and "ahs" and little squeals of excitement and happiness died out Santa Claus walked out onto the stage. This was the only second in the whole afternoon that there was absolutely no sound in the theater and it seemed as if the little folks scarcely breathed as they gazed enraptured at their beloved Saint Nick.

The leader of the orchestra broke the tense silence by getting up on the rail of the orchestra pit and requesting the children to form in line in the aisles ready to march up on the stage and shake hands with Santa. They needed no second bidding. One of the ushers led the way to the stage where the children were welcomed by Manager Hodgson and his daughter Miss Frances Hodgson. The line passed on by the big box of fruit behind which stood Jack Funk, the operator, who gave an orange to each child as they filed by. Then the line of march wound slowly around the tree—slowly so that the children could enjoy the many decorations—and across the stage to where Santa sat, dressed in his red suit trimmed with white fur which just matched his long beard. Roy Dale, stage manager, posed as Santa and shook hands with the children, talked with those who were not too awe inspired to be able to talk, and presented each with a pail of candy The little tin pails held one-half pound of candy and were decorated with colored scenes from the familiar nursery rhymes. They made attractive little souvenirs of the occasion to be treasured by the children. Mr. Dale happened to know a number of the little folks, and they were startled but at the same time felt decidedly honored to have Santa call them by name and mention some little incident which they are still wondering how he knew about. Many of the youngsters lingered to whisper what they wanted him to leave in their stockings when he came down their chimney Christmas eve.

Santa remained on the stage until all were reseated so the children could have one last look at him before he left them for another whole year, and before the remainder of the program was given. As the curtain was lowered the feature of the afternoon, Douglas Fairbanks in "The Matrimaniac," was thrown on the screen and in their hearty laughter at "Doug's" athletic antics the kiddies forgot their regret at saying good-bye to Saint Nicholas. The sleighs were on hand to take the children back to the homes—each with an orange and a pail of candy tightly grasped in his hand.

The Oak Park Theater has a seating capacity of 1,300, and besides the five hundred guests it was filled with other children and adults as well. Every child in the house was invited to join the procession which received the fruit and candy.

The same program was carried out at the first evening performance and some of the older inmates of the orphanages who were unable to attend the afternoon entertainment, as well as any other children in the house, were given the same opportunity to meet Santa and were presented with fruit and candy. During the rest of the evening shows just before the feature was shown the curtain was raised so all could see the Christmas tree and Santa stepped out upon the stage and bowed to the audience, to add to the Christmas atmosphere.

In looking back over the reception given Thanhouser-Pathe Gold Rooster plays during 1916, Edwin Thanhouser, president of the Thanhouser Film Corporation, announces that his policy of five-reel features with top-notch stars in expertly developed stories adequately directed and staged, has been fully justified by results.

The film rights for "Mary Jane's Pa," the Henry W. Savage stage success, have been acquired by Vitagraph, which will begin at once to produce it with Peggy Hyland and Marc MacDermott in the leading roles.

BRADY-MADES IN EUROPE

World Film Corporation Closes Negotiations with Gaumont Company of London for Distribution of Brady-Made Pictures

For the first time the World Film Corporation has seriously considered the invasion of the foreign market and negotiations have just been completed with the Gaumont Company of London for the distribution of Brady-made picture plays throughout Great Britain.

The deal is considered of such importance at the European end of the line that twenty advertising pages of the cinema magazines are required for the initial announcement. The Gaumont concern is one of the largest distributors in Europe.

The World company has never before considered the foreign market mainly on account of the greatly disturbed situation produced by the war holding out little encouragement for the importation of film plays from any quarters.

But recent representations made to the World-Brady interests were to the effect that this very condition of disturbance had so influenced the European-made pictures themselves as to develop a market for superior material from this country.

Negotiations carried along for several months upon these lines finally caused the manufacturers to send a representative to London instructed to make a most searching investigation and report circumstantially, and as a result of this further representatives were dispatched to arrange terms and close the contract covering an extended period.

The Gaumont Company is said to be elated over its new association, feeling that the World-Brady pictures have been improving so remarkably in quality that their first showing in London is certain to create a large demand throughout Great Britain.

In the World-Brady offices also the greatest of satisfaction is expressed at having made an entry upon foreign territory under such peculiarly advantageous circumstances as those described.

"The Man Who Forgot"

"The Man Who Forgot," the newest of World pictures Brady-made, carries an unusual story with a psychological background and a large number of novel and striking complications. The play, directed by Emil Chautard, had its origin in a novel by James Hay, Jr., occupying a position well up among the "best sellers" of its time.

This is a strong preachment for prohibition and for the final scenes many Washington clergymen on a recent Sunday urged their congregations to participate before the camera, with the result that some 5,000 church members assembled for the parade, the meeting on the steps of the Capitol and the subsequent rush upon the Senate Chamber—said to be an altogether remarkable episode.

Mary Nash Now With World

Mary Nash is the very latest addition to the rapidly increasing group of feminine stars engaged by the World Film Corporation in line with the recent announcement of director general William A. Brady. The future releases of this concern now include plays the central figures in which are in the hands of Alice Brady, Ethel Clayton, Kitty Gordon, Gail Kane, Marie Dressler and Miss Nash.

The actress last mentioned will be the star of several World-Brady pictures under her present contract. This document contains a renewal clause of which the corporation fully expects to take advantage.

Miss Nash is at present playing the featured role in "The Man Who Came Back," the current all-season attraction at the Playhouse, New York. In this drama she has a personation which covers an exceptionally wide range of emotions and characteristics set in surroundings embracing a cabaret in San Francisco, an opium joint in Yokohama and a pineapple plantation in Hawaii.

The better to insure a similarly effective and fitting part for Miss Nash's debut as a World Film star, Mr. Brady has engaged Jules Eckert Goodman to write the play. Mr. Goodman is the author of "The Man Who Came Back."

Salesmen to Work with Exhibitors

An interesting and hopeful new phase of co-operation between the theater man and exchanges and salesmen was brought out at the sales meeting held at the Chicago Paramount exchange on the evening of December 27.

The new idea which is to be developed and put into practice is that the salesman is to represent his exhibitors in the Paramount office in the same way that he represents his concern to the exhibitors when he is out on his territory. Each salesman is to be responsible, in part, for the money his customers, the exhibitors, make. This will mean that the sale of undesirable pictures will be discouraged and the salesmen will place in houses only the films which will be best suited to the locality. He will also co-operate in the exploiting of Paramount pictures.

Besides Manager Frank Rutledge and Sales Manager C. E. Elliot, there were present at the meeting the following salesmen: Joseph Desberger, who takes care of the exhibitors in Southern Illinois; Henry Zapp, Central Illinois; W. E. Calloway, Northern Illinois; George Ranshaw, Northern Indiana; C. C. Wallace, Southern Indiana; H. J. Corbett, and C. E. Almy, Chicago territory.

A telegram from headquarters in New York assured the men that Paramount would be decidedly stronger during the coming year than ever before. Three new and prominent stars are soon to be signed.

Stage Warming

Director Paul Powell initiated the new electrically lighted stage at the Fine Arts studio by filming the concluding scenes of "The Girl of the Timberclaims" featuring Constance Talmadge. The new stage measures 60x140 feet and is thoroughly equipped. At least five directors can work on the new stage at one time. The scenario for "The Girl of the Timberclaims" was written by Mary H. O'Connor.

New Unity Publicity Man

Beginning the first of the year, Harry Haven, the well-known film man and newspaper man, joins the Unity Sales Corporation as manager of the publicity and advertising. A. J. Cobe, president of Unity, has several important announcements to make to the trade for the coming year which will be made in detail very soon.

The Empire Feature Film Company has purchased forty acres of ground in San Diego, California, on which it will erect a studio.

Playing in the Picture House

HELPFUL IDEAS FOR MUSICIANS AND EXHIBITORS

By MILDRED MAGINN FITZ PATRICK

(Editorial Note:—Because of the importance of the subject MOTOGRAPHY will run a series of articles on music for the picture house. This article, by Mildred Maginn Fitz Patrick, who has played eight years before the screen in Chicago, is of interest particularly to your musicians and will aid them to render you better service.)

NEXT to good films, the most important feature of the picture theater is good music. Of course, it is very important to have good pictures, but very often an inferior picture will be shown. It is then more necessary to make your music more interesting than the picture, so that your audience will be pleased by the music into overlooking some of the faults of the film.

We can't put on the tremulo stop and "pity the poor piano player" as we used to. Mildred Maginn Fitz Patrick draws enough pay from Harry Miller, a prominent Chicago exhibitor, to own a Cadillac car.

Some of the smaller houses employ only pianists, but the pipe-organ seems to be the favorite instrument at the present time. We can readily see the reason for this. It not only does away with paying salaries to several musicians, which would be the case if an orchestra were employed, but it also gives much better satisfaction for the pictures.

First of all, I am going to talk to the picture organist. This discussion will also apply to pianists.

Importance of Following Pictures Closely

If it is possible to view a certain picture before you play for it, do so by all means. You have no idea how it helps you, unless you have done so before. Very often this is impossible. After you have had enough experience, you will find you can play a picture, following it properly, just as easily as you would read a sheet of music.

The first time you play a new picture, pay strict attention to the story. If it is a dramatic picture with little or no comedy running through it, introduce some light number whenever you have the opportunity so that the monotony will be broken.

I have gone to see very grewsome pictures and thought if the organist would only stop that draggy-drawn-out music and play something with a little life and color in it, what a relief it would be.

Now, by this I do not mean to play "Yankee Doodle," for a funeral procession.

While you are playing the picture the first time, think of what music you will play for each particular scene the next time. You are then able to arrange your music so that when a hurry scene appears you won't have to stop in the middle of some pretty number and stumble into your hurry music.

Some one in the audience is sure to be disappointed at this sort of thing. Instead of breaking off so suddenly, omit part of the piece you are playing and go to the finale so that it will sound finished. You will find this an easy plan when you have practiced it.

Whenever you can connect a sub-title with the name of some particular song or piece, play that song or piece. But do not carry this idea so far as to burlesque a dramatic picture.

"Faking" Time Has Passed

Whenever I go into a picture house, I can tell in a minute whether the musician is really a musician or just one of those fakers, who used to "get by," but who now is nothing more than some one sitting at the organ or piano, just making a noise to get a salary at the end of the week.

Do not forget that your employer hears other players and some day may hire one whose playing he likes better than yours, and if you are not able to produce, you will find it hard to find another employer as easy to please as the one who once thought you wonderful.

Now a few words about the kind of music to be played. Audiences expect to hear really good music now-a-days.

I remember when I began to play for pictures—eight years ago, the days of the one and occasional two reel pictures—I thought if I played a couple of good waltzes, that was all that was necessary.

Very soon this became monotonous to my own ears, and something had to be done to make my work more interesting, so I went exploring the music stores in search of better music for the pictures. I have been exploring every since and have not found the end of the trail—because there is no end.

During the course of a picture, you would please your audience very much if you would play one or two or more, if possible, good standard numbers. I have never seen a picture in which there was not an opportunity to play at least one real good number. Try to play things that have not been played to death. If you will spend a little of your leisure time hunting for good music you will find it.

I expect if some of you would look amongst your old music, you would find things which have been almost forgotten by everyone.

Most of the music used by the film organist is written for piano, which can be easily adapted to the organ. It may help you to know that there are a great many beautiful things written only for orchestra.

If you will buy the piano part of the orchestrations you will enjoy it very much. They are a trifle more difficult to read, but practice them and your reading will be developed wonderfully in little time. What you want to do is to improve yourself. Do not stand still.

Hear Others Play

Make yourself acquainted with other players' work, and see where you can better yourself the very next picture you play. If you hear some one make what you consider a mistake, see that you do not do the same thing. There are a great many of us who will think we can do better than some others and very often we do not do as well as we think.

In any case the thing you should do is the best you can at all times, because you do not know who is listening to you. Do not "stall on the job," and the minute the "boss" comes around "fire up" as though some one had thrown a five dollar gold piece at you.

Try not to have people say, "Oh, he is a pretty good player when he feels like playing, but he does not feel like playing very often." You know, if you never do any more than you are paid for, you will never be paid for any more than you do.

Church Organists

There are some, comparatively few, church organists anxious to enter into the business of playing for pictures. They find it very hard at first but if they would stick to it and not give up, their success would be assured.

My very first organ experience was church work. It is the best foundation a film organist can have, because those who have done church work have been started on the instrument properly. But one who has had no experience except in church work, has to drop that "churchy way of playing." (as the manager would say), if he wants to make good. His repertoire must be entirely different.

Orchestras and Pictures

I have noticed that in most theaters where the orchestra alternates with the organ, there is very little judgment used in playing for the pictures. They just take turns in rendering a few selections and each one seems to be playing at the wrong time.

Once I saw a picture in which was portrayed an Easter morning scene in a church. The organist had been playing about ten minutes up this time, possible a little longer. Instead of continuing to play during the church scene, he stopped at the beginning of the scene and the orchestra relieved him, playing something inappropriate.

This sort of thing is very noticeable and with a little careful attention could be easily overcome. What if the organist did play a little over the time he was required, would it not be worth while?

No matter how large or small your audience is, there is always some one who appreciates your efforts. The more effort you make to please your audience, the more praise you will receive from them.

Have a Large Repertoire

To be a good picture player, you must have a large repertoire. There are so many pictures that call for character music of all descriptions. This part of your music library should consist of Mexican, Oriental, Chinese, Japanese, Spanish, Indian, etc.

Each week buy a little music and in a short time you will be able to go to your music cabinet and pick out music to fit almost any picture you may happen to have. You will find it more interesting to play the pictures when you keep your repertoire up to date. Do not neglect your popular music, because you know there are a great many people who prefer it.

If you use good judgment in selecting your standard music, I am sure it will please every one in your audience. The first thing they listen for is pretty melody. It is not always the difficult things that please.

Now a word about "hurry music." This is where so much faking is heard when there is a battle scene, or fire scene, or some other hurry scene. There is really no more reason to fake this part of the picture than to fake a love scene, which, of course, you would not think of doing.

There is not an operatic selection printed but that contains a little bit of music which can be used very nicely for hurry scenes. There are all sorts of ballets which also may be used. Take a day and devote it to looking up ammunition for your work.

Playing for News Pictures

I would like to say a few words in regard to playing the weekly news pictures. There seems to be more uneasiness felt in playing these films than any other. The secret of playing news films is to have plenty of music stored up in your brain so that it is ready at a moment's notice. The moment the sub-title changes, change your music to fit the picture.

Now is the chance to use your popular music and a chance to put some life into the evening's entertainment, if you had not had the opportunity before the weekly was flashed on the screen. I have never found a topic in the weekly, to which I could not fit an appropriate number.

Some times the instrument upon which you are playing is located in such a position that it is almost impossible to view the picture. In this case, arrange a mirror so that you may follow the picture by its reflection.

Kolb and Dill in New One

C. William Kolb and Max Dill have completed the last of their series of Mutual Star Productions at the studios of the American Film Corporation at Santa Barbara.

The title of this piece of screen drama is "Beloved Rogues," an adaptation from a story by Aaron Hoffman, made by Al Santell, the American scenario writer who also directed the pair in this production. It will be released January 15.

"Beloved Rogues" is full of the typical sort of Kolb and Dill humor, coupled with an ample supply of vicarious romance—since the two old schemers are inveterate match makers. Advance reports from the studio predict even greater success for this last Kolb and Dill production than for "A Million for Mary," "The Three Pals," "Peck O'Pickles," "Bluff" and "Lonesome Town."

Several members of the same strong cast who have been seen in the earlier productions are seen again in "Beloved Rogues."

May Cloy will appear as the ingenue and Tom Chatterton as the hero. In other roles Harry von Meter and Clarence Burton will be seen.

Over one hundred extras take part in this pretentious production, not the least interesting of whom were George Periolat, Franklin Ritchie and Ashton Dearholt, who took part in the last "mob" scenes of the picture just for fun.

William Mandeville has been engaged for the important part of Lindsley, in Ethel Barrymore's forthcoming Metro release, "Egypt the Gypsy," which already has been placed in production. John W. Noble is directing this seven-reel photodrama, a picturization by June Mathis of Edward Sheldon's great play, "Egypt," in which Margaret Anglin starred on the speaking stage.

Loew Books "Secret Kingdom" Solid

VITAGRAPH'S SERIAL WILL APPEAR IN ALL TWENTY-FOUR LOEW HOUSES

WHAT is reported as the best and largest serial contract ever signed by any theater owner in the country was closed when Marcus Loew booked Greater Vitagraph's new fifteen-episode adventure serial, "The Secret Kingdom," in all his twenty-four houses with solid bookings of sixty-four days for every episode.

This is said to be the largest and heaviest booking order ever entered for a serial, even by Mr. Loew, who is recognized throughout the industry as a past grand master in the art of judging the box office value of a picture before it is shown on his screens.

In addition to booking "The Secret Kingdom" solid in all his Greater New York theaters, Mr. Loew also has leased it for his Newark, Hoboken, and New Rochelle houses.

As an advance advertising campaign on "The Secret Kingdom"—which begins its Loew theater run on January 5 in the magnificent New York—Mr. Loew will distribute more than half a million postcards, two pages of which will be devoted solely to "The Secret Kingdom." In addition, Mr. Loew will use his large electric theater signs to let the people know he is running this Greater Vitagraph production, and in Brooklyn alone 200 billposting stands will be used on "The Secret Kingdom."

It is interesting to note that eleven of the Loew houses will run every one of the 15 episodes of "The Secret Kingdom" for three days each and that six Loew theaters will run each episode four days. For only seven of his 24 houses has Mr. Loew booked this Vitagraph serial supreme for less than three days to an episode.

The Loew management was very enthusiastic in its praise of the work of Dorothy Kelly, Charles Richman, Arline Pretty, Joseph Kilgour, William Dunn and the other principals in "The Secret Kingdom." Albert E. Smith, president of Greater Vitagraph, under whose supervision "The Secret Kingdom" was produced, has received a warmly congratulatory letter from Mr. Loew's office regarding this super-serial.

Walter W. Irwin, general manager of Vitagraph-V. L. S. E., is in receipt of equally commendatory notices and messages from exhibitors all over the country. Many theaters which have not heretofore exhibited serials have signed up for "The Secret Kingdom," and Mr. Irwin says that the advance bookings on this feature serial indicate that the million-dollar collection mark will be passed before June 1.

The old hut below with the hair on its back appears with Anita Stewart in her new Vitagraph feature, "The Glory of Yolande," released January 15. Miss Stewart is the quaint little peasant seen at the door of the cottage.

E. H. Sothern and Charlotte Ives in "The Man of Mystery," to make its first public appearance January 8.

The heroine a-fishing goes, in "Indiscretion," and catches a bullhead and two suckers. This new Lillian Walker play was released New Year's Day.

A strong factor in favor of the theater that uses "The Secret Kingdom" is that the manager can see any of the episodes before booking the first instalment. All fifteen episodes were completed a whole month before the release date of the first chapter.

"The Girl Philippa" at the Rialto

"The Girl Philippa," which opened at the Rialto Theater, New York, on December 31, is a film production of the story by Robert W. Chambers which appeared in the Cosmopolitan. As "The Girl Philippa" was in every way an unusual fiction story, "The Girl Philippa" is in every way an extraordinary photoplay production.

Anita Stewart was cast for the title role and she has played it in a manner that will delight her friends and make countless thousands new admirers not only of herself but of the screen.

S. Rankin Drew, who directed the production and plays the role of Warner opposite Miss Stewart's Philippa, has set a new height of picture production and acting. Billie Billings, playing the role of Warner's sister, is an excellent foil to Miss Stewart. The two girls are of the utmost variance of type and manner.

Anders Randolph, as Wildresse, is as complete a villain as ever trod a stage or walked through the pages of a literary masterpiece. Wildresse is such a role as Mansfield would have revelled in. To say that Mr. Randolph plays it convincingly, so that one utterly hates him one moment and sympathizes with him the next, is the highest praise that can be accorded him.

In the staging of the production, to which, as has been said, President Smith gave his personal attention, no item of time or money, effort or ability was spared to realize for the public the subtle shadings of character and locale that Mr. Chambers put into his glorious story.

To recite the many details of costuming, of whole French villages built at the Vitagraph studios at tremedous cost, only to be demolished a day afterward under furious bombardment; of a city market place with its many and ever changing streets leading to and from it constructed in exact replica of the French town of Gennevilliers; to the curious foreign commercial and military telephones imported especially for "The Girl Philippa;" to the French market carts, and to street barricades such as now are used daily in the great war would be impossible.

Suffice it to say that every one of them is but an item in realism. Yet one there is that deserves special notice.

On the broken brick wall of the French village we see a proclamation. As we read it, in the original French, it dissolves into the English translation. It is an order of mobilization for the whole French nation.

The French order shown in "The Girl Philippa" has a history. It really was posted, the very one that Mr. Smith used on the mayor's residence in Gennevilliers, near Paris, where one of the European factories of Greater Vitagraph is located. From the mayor Mr. Smith secured, under a heavy bond, the use of the real French ordre de mobilization for "The Girl Philippa." As soon as scene-taking with this order was finished, the original was returned to the Gennevillier's mayor via the French embassy and the Vitagraph's bond was then cancelled.

"The Glory of Yolanda," from the story by Maibelle Heikes Justice, which was directed for the Vitagraph Company by Marguerite Bertsch with Anita Stewart as Yolanda, is the Blue Ribbon offering through Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. on January 15. In this story Miss Stewart plays the role of a little Russian peasant girl.

Perhaps there is no star on the screen today who could have given the sweet, whimsical Yolanda a more appealing characterization than does Miss Stewart. She seems to live her part, and the whims of the little Russian peasant become, for the time being, her whims. Evart Overton, too, in the role of the young American artist is seen at his best and Miss Bertsch has not lost any of the charm of the original story in her direction.

Vitagraph Has Not Bought the Rialto

In spite of report to the contrary, neither Greater Vitagraph nor Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. has bought the Rialto Theater, the magnificent New York picture house presided over by Samuel L. Rothapfel.

Rumor on Broadway during the current week coupled the name of Vitagraph with the Rialto in various ways to suggest that the Blue Ribbon company had acquired Mr. Rothapfel's house and would take it over as the Vitagraph theater, retaining Mr. Rothapfel.

Walter W. Irwin, general manager of Vitagraph-V. L. S. E., when asked to make a statement to still these conflicting reports, said:

"It is in no way true that either Greater Vitagraph or Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. has acquired any interest of whatsoever sort in the Rialto Theater, always excepting that interest which these two companies have and maintain in every theater which runs Blue Ribbon productions.

"Mr. Rothapfel has contracted for Blue Ribbon features as the basis of his 1917 program. For these features Mr. Rothapfel pays a flat regular price per week the same as does every Vitagraph exhibitor.

"Outside of these conditions Vitagraph has no connection whatever with the Rialto Theater."

Mary Pickford in Carnegie Institute

Mary Pickford's picture is to adorn the exclusive walls of the Carnegie Institute at Pittsburgh. The largest collection of autographed pictures of stage celebrities in the world has just been presented to the institution and Mary Pickford's picture will be in the center of this extraordinary exhibit. The donor is Tunis F. Dean, long prominently identified with theatrical activities and who is now associated with the amusement enterprises of Harry Davis in Pittsburgh.

For a quarter of a century Mr. Dean has been making this collection which is of great value and of sentimental interest because of the personal allusion in all of the autographed inscriptions. Nearly every prominent player who has illumined stage history in this period is included. One of the rare photographs is one of Mary Pickford taken when as a child she was a member of the cast of "The Warrens of Virginia."

The motion picture is not what it was eight or ten years ago. It was then proved piffling, shocking, or inane. Out of this tertiary period it has emerged through the stone age of brutishness into the age of intelligence, aesthetics, morals, humor and social values. Some credit should be given to an art, answering many human needs, which has sprung, like Jason's warriors, into full and self-conscious manhood within some fifteen years!—The Churchman.

First Aid to Theater Men

PRACTICAL HELP ON THE PROBLEMS OF RUNNING A PICTURE HOUSE

THERE is nothing quite so contagious as enthusiasm. If you are enthusiastic about your house and the programs you are giving to your patrons they are liable to catch that same spirit of enthusiasm regarding what you are giving them. By enthusiasm is not meant self-assurance and an arrogant opinion that your theater is absolutely perfect and your program cannot be bettered which renders you impervious to suggestions so that you stand still and do not progress; it means being filled with the pleasure of your efforts to serve the public and with the spirit of nothing being too difficult to attempt if it is going to raise the standard of your house. Beware of becoming so confident that you stumble over your own self-conceit but at the same time do not be afraid to radiate your joy in the work and your pride in your theater.

Nothing is more desirable than that your patrons be exposed to this contagion and become infected with this same enthusiasm.

Films on Advertising

119—Will you kindly let me have a list of the names and addresses of manufacturers who have advertising films to show. How are these films sent out? What is a fair rate to charge these people for advertising their films at our theater?

In the answer to Question 106 in the December 16 issue of MOTOGRAPHY was given a list of advertising films. Any local advertising of this kind would come from the merchants themselves or any advertising film mnaufacturing company in your community. These multiple reel advertising films are usually handled by the local offices of the manufacturers and you would better take this up with any of the companies named who are in your city.

The price charged for running these is usually five to ten dollars. The long industrial films are often run free of charge at benefit performances. This saves the exhibitor the cost of film rental for the show and allows him to split with the beneficiary and still make a small profit himself.

"Variety Is the Spice of Life"

120—I am the owner of a 250 seat house in a small town, and have the only picture theater here. I have been running one feature each evening and on Saturdays and Sundays adding a one-reel comedy. I have been thinking lately that more people could just as well come to my theater and have been wondering if it would be better to run more films and shorter ones.

It seems to me that simply one feature a night must become rather monotonous—you are giving too much of the same thing. Your audience would undoubtedly be better pleased with a variety. Why don't you try running two two-reelers and a one-reeler, or perhaps vary this with a three-reeler and two single reels. I do not think you are giving your patrons sufficient short comedy, for a majority of people enjoy comedy more than anything else.

I would suggest the plan of running only a feature on two nights of the week and a program of the same length but composed of a variety of shorter reels the rest of the week. You can soon tell by your patronage which kind of program is liked the better and whether the people approve of this arrangement of varying the program on different nights.

Amateur Nights Are Popular

121—What are these amateur nights which some of the exhibitors are running in their theaters? Are they successful and do you believe they are a good stunt for a small town? How do they run them and what do they do? Do they have pictures too that night or just the amateur night—whatever that is? That is certainly a regular volley of questions isn't it? And I hope you will not get out of patience before you have answered them all.

I am always glad to answer all the questions you want to "fire" at me, so keep on coming and I will not lose patience, I assure you. I am only too happy to pass along any information I possess which may be of benefit to someone else.

Amateur nights are generally very popular in small towns, and a number of city houses which make a regular practice of using them report they are good box office attractions. As the name implies, amateur night means turning your theater over to unprofessional local talent. Sometimes their performances take the form of songs and recitations, or it may be a dancing contest or impersonations of screen favorites. A very popular "stunt" is to have a Charlie Chaplin night, when all come dressed like Charlie and try to imitate his famous walk.

The usual custom is to offer a prize for the best song, dance or characterization. This may be a cash prize or anything the exhibitor cares to make it. The actors are allowed so many minutes apiece in which to appear before the audience. After all have finished they come out upon the stage one at a time and the person whom the audience claps the most is declared the winner of the prize.

In a small town, especially, these performances always bring out a good crowd and the audience has lots of fun out of the entertainment. Sometimes there is no other program except popular songs, a slide with the words being thrown on the screen so that all can join in the singing; others have these amateur entertainments in addition to the regular program. The managers often also have contests in singing and dancing for children under twelve years. This usually brings out a large crowd, because all the parents and relatives always want to see the children. Boxes of candy are often offered instead of cash prizes at these contests.

The former stage celebrities who are now at work in the Lasky studio at Hollywood have formed a new organization—the first of its kind—called the Lasky Players. The object of the organization is the occasional presentation of one-act plays and scenes from established dramas for charitable purposes.

Louis B. Mayer and Harry J. Cohen have just left the home offices of the Metro Pictures Corporation, No. 1476 Broadway, and have started on a western tour to handle the demands from exhibitors for the new Metro-Quality serial, "The Great Secret," in which Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne are co-stars.

PRIVATE SHOWINGS OF "PATRIA"

Marie Walcamp Assists Mrs. Vernon Castle in International Serial. Anna Held Poses for Hearst International News Pictorial

Two private showings of "Patria," the International serial featuring Mrs. Vernon Castle, were given in Atlanta, Georgia. One was at the Georgian Terrace, before a large and distinguished audience, whose universal expression was that "Patria" is the greatest serial ever screened. The second was given at the Piedmont Driving Club, and the showing was one of the notable society events of the holidays.

Marie Walcamp, star in the serial "Liberty," and who has played important parts in other big serials and leads in many features, has been engaged to support Mrs. Vernon Castle in several of the later episodes of "Patria." Though born in Troy, Miss Walcamp is recognized as the best all-round woman rider and "daredevil" screen actress in the west and has scored many successes in roles requiring equestrian ability. In the cast of "Patria," she appears prominently in three episodes as Bess Morgan, the sister of the Channing ranch manager, and is afforded ample opportunity to display her skill in the sport at which she excels.

Several other stars have been engaged for the concluding episodes of "Patria." Among them is Arthur Tavarez, who recently appeared in "The Eyes of the World;" Wallace Beery, who portrays Villa; and William Nye, who played in "Liberty."

Jane Grey and Nigel Barrie who play the principal parts in "When My Ship Comes In," an International Golden Eagle Feature soon to be released, have just returned with the company from Douglas, Arizona, and Sunland, California, where they did the mining scenes called for in Gouverneur Morris' story. A large number of "greasers" and real miners were employed and plenty of local color to make the pictures of this new International feature all that it should be.

A brilliant addition to the list of stars in the "Footlights and Fashions" series of the Hearst International News Pictorial is Anna Held, the famous French actress. Mme. Held will appear on the screen in her wonderful peacock gown of white chenille which was designed by her and which is by far the most gorgeous costume that has been shown in any production so far this season.

Besides the gown, Mme. Held appears in close-ups showing nearly $250,000 worth of jewels, consisting of pearls, diamonds, rubies and sapphires. It is estimated that the gowns and jewels shown by Mme. Held on the screen represent an outlay of $475,000.

In making the pictures for the International's great patriotic photoplay "Patria," Mrs. Vernon Castle who plays the title role is called upon to do things which a less intrepid or capable woman would have refused or been unable to do.

Here are some of the things this daring woman does, and most of them several times over, in order that a perfect picture be obtained:

She is thrown from the back of a galloping horse; she dives headlong from the deck of an ocean going steamship and swims to a motor boat into which she climbs unassisted; she is thrown from the upper deck of a Sound steamer and in the water divests herself of her superfluous clothing; she climbs the mast of a burning ship with the flames licking the shrouds and falls with the mast into the water far below; she plunges over a waterfall into the whirlpool; she races her motor against a railroad car loaded with dynamite; she flies an aeroplane; she operates a machine gun in the trenches; she wrestles with Mexicans and fights Japs single handed; and does many other strenuous things that make you gasp. But never for a moment does she lose her dainty, graceful, feminine charm that have made her famous on two continents. Above all she can act, as her work in "Patria" abundantly proves.

"Photoplay Should Follow Book"

"There is a tendency, at the present time, to produce film versions of famous novels, which is a good idea. But the public is often misled by the impression that it is just like the book. Time and time again we see moving pictures advertised as founded on some famous literary work of art, which advertising by no stretch of the imagination could ever be justified. Outside of the title and the author's name there is absolutely no similarity, you might say, between the original and the film version. Scenes are changed, characters added; scenes left out and characters done away with, until the author can hardly recognize his own work, after the scenario writer is through with it," remarks H. A. Sherman, president of Sherman-Elliott Company.

"To console the public, the producer claims this must be done to adapt it for the screen—'scenario writers license' and that it is almost impossible to make a photodrama of the book in any other way. This is not so. There has perhaps been no novel that was more difficult to adapt to photoplay that Robert Hichens' 'The Garden of Allah,' produced by Selig. Yet Gilson Willets, after much study, was able to make a motion picture version of the book that follows the story closely. Not a scene or character omitted, and the sub-titles taken from the book.

"When I buy the rights for a feature, founded on a book written by a famous novelist, I read the book first. The fact that the visualization in moving pictures follows the book closely aids materially in my judgment as to the value of the screen version. The immense popularity of the book means crowded houses to satisfy the interest created by the horde of readers."

"Review" Held At Theater

Mary Pickford has been invited by the Women's Press Club, of Pittsburgh, Pa., to participate in the "Review of National Celebrities" to take place in that city on January 11. Women prominent in every art and activity will take part. They will be introduced in a prologue, written for the occasion, which will be recited by Lillian Russell. Harry Davis has given the use of his Alvin Theater for the review, the benefits of which will be devoted to members of the newspaper profession who have met with reverses or misfortunes in the past year.

Will Make Educationals

Another film concern has been added to the rapidly growing list now specializing in the manufacture of educationals. The latest contender for honors in the instruction field carries the title of the Collegiate Film Producing and Distributing Company.

William Fox plans to release a Valeska Suratt feature for the last week in January.

Ralph Ince First Goldwyn Director

MAE MARSH WON PLACE THROUGH MERIT—NOT PRESS AGENTRY

Ralph Ince, new Goldwyn director.

THE Goldwyn Picture Corporation is fast building up a strong organization on their already notable foundation. The first director to be engaged by this company is Ralph W. Ince, who will begin work for the new company on its first production within a fortnight.

Mr. Ince comes to Goldwyn Pictures from the Selznick organization, where he has just finished making the Warwick picture, "The Argyle Case." Prior to the Selznick connection Mr. Ince was for ten years one of the most important directors in the Vitagraph company.

Born in 1887 in Boston, young Ince followed in his parents' footsteps and went on the stage, entering Richard Mansfield's company. He has been a prominent factor in the development of motion pictures. Under his direction the first two, three and five-reel picture plays were produced. In many of these he played the leading roles besides writing or assisting in the writing of the scenarios and supervising the entire effort.

Varied Career of Arthur Hopkins

The entry of Arthur Hopkins into the motion picture industry as a partner in the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation is causing nation-wide comment and interest. Like the producing firm of Selwyn & Company, Arthur Hopkins has a distinctive record in theatrical and vaudeville management. He is also looked to for novel screen developments for Goldwyn Pictures.

For fifteen years Mr. Hopkins has been in the rough and tumble of the "amusement" business. He has produced vaudeville acts and "booked" them; has purveyed acrobats to summer amusement parks; opened the first motion picture house in an old store room in New York; has staged plays (his own and others') as a free lance manager—all in such fashion as varying resources would permit. He has had an adventurous, even an adventurer's life; has worked up and down the "show business" always experimenting, observing and striking at the root of things.

In 1905 Mr. Hopkins rented a store room at the corner of Eighth avenue and Thirty-second street, New York, put up a partition, rented some kitchen chairs, installed a cheap projection machine and inaugurated a five-cent motion picture theater. The venture immediately made money but the police closed the place. There was nothing in the city ordinance about licensing a motion picture theater, because there had never been a picture theater in the city. The place wasn't illegal, but at the same time it was not legal. It fitted into no category.

At last some resourceful person thought of putting a single slot machine into the store room and licensing it as a "slot machine parlor." Wise heads approved; legality was appeased and everyone was happy.

After venturing into the Luna Park booking business, into vaudeville theater management in Cleveland, and into vaudeville "routing" in the great middle west, he drifted behind the scenes as author, manager or producer of sketches.

Arthur Hopkins helped to bring the legitimate stars into vaudeville—which is common enough now. Blanche Walsh he starred in "The Thunder God," which he wrote for her. Under his management Arnold Daly toured in Bernard Shaw's "How He Lied to Her Husband." Everett Shinn's burlesques, "Wrong from the Start" and "More Sinned Against Than Usual," he put on the stage. Two sketches of his own writing—"Holding a Husband" and "Brotherly Love"—proved extremely popular in vaudeville.

In the field of the legitimate theater Mr. Hopkins is the producer of "The Fatted Calf" (1910); "Poor Little Rich Girl" (1913); "We Are Seven" (1914); "On Trial" (1914); "The Man Who Married a Dumb Wife," "The Devil's Garden," "The Happy Ending" and "Good Gracious, Annabelle" (1916).

Mae Marsh Wins by Pure Merit

Mae Marsh, the first big star of the Goldwyn Pictures, has reached the top of the ladder by working out her own destiny through rigorous effort and labor before the flaring Cooper Hewitts. She has not been made known to the millions who see her on the screen through eccentric advertising and press agent untruths. She is one of a large family watched over and guarded by a most careful and discerning mother. Mrs. Marsh has never felt it wise for her daughters to possess the eccentric things that other screen stars have. She has not wished her daughters to lose their perspective on life by coming in contact with the abnormalities of screenland. Therefore Mae Marsh owns no "villa" with a Roman bath, has no peacock farm where she raises vain birds, has invented no beauty patches and silhouette "love spots," owns no racing car with liveried flunkies on the running boards while she "burns" up the boulevards in "high," and has never capitalized the American flag for self-advertising.

Mae Marsh, "the girl with a thousand faces," also called "the Bernhardt of the screen," now one of Goldwyn's big stars.

Mother Marsh believes that milk baths and other trick stunts will add nothing whatever to Mae Marsh's ability and capacity as an actress. She believes that the training Mae Marsh received from David Wark Griffith is the greatest thing that could have happened for her daughter and that a still greater thing for her is the opportunity she is to receive in Goldwyn Pictures.

What Mae Marsh Has Done

The millions of devotees at the shrine of Mae Marsh will be vastly interested in the first photoplay in which Mae Marsh is to appear for her new managers, the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. A picture chronology of her past releases, not including many of her smaller and earlier "bits" in the various Griffith masterpieces, reveals "Man's Genesis;" "A Temporary Ruse;" "The Sands of Dee;" "Judith of Bethulia;" "A Child of the Paris Streets;" "The Escape;" "The Wild Girl of the Sierras;" "Hoodoo Ann;" "The Marriage of Molly-O;" "The Little Liar;" "The Wharf Rat;" "The Birth of a Nation;" "Intolerance."

In "The Birth of a Nation" she played the role of Flora Cameron, the little sister who jumped over the cliff to escape the negro. In "Intolerance" she is the girl of the modern episode. In "The Wharf Rat" she is a boy; in "The Marriage of Molly-O" an Irish colleen. She is a primitive girl in "The Wild Girl of the Sierras;" a tenement child in "The Escape," founded on Paul Armstrong's notable story; and in "A Child of the Paris Streets" she is a fascinating Apache, who by chance looks more like Billie Burke than Billie Burke looks like her own self.

Exhibitors Strong for "Secret Kingdom"

F. F. Hartich, manager of the Syracuse branch of Vitagraph-V. L. S. E., has received a number of unsolicited endorsements of "The Secret Kingdom" from Rochester, New York, exhibitors. Among them are the following:

B. Munk, proprietor of the Park Theater, writes Mr. Hartich as follows:

I had the pleasure of viewing "The Secret Kingdom" when screened in Rochester, and I feel in duty bound to state that I consider the episodes which I saw the cleanest, strongest and most thrilling serial that I have ever seen. The acting, photography, story and settings leave nothing to be desired.

Another letter was one received from Harry E. Rose, manager of the Flash Theater, Tonawanda, New York, who says:

I wish to offer my comments on "The Secret Kingdom," which I saw screened in Buffalo recently. The cast was well chosen; the photography very good; the story is thrilling—has punch; Charles Richman's acting superb, and Dorothy Kelly played her role in great shape, as did the supporting cast.

FILMS IN MAILS

National Association of Motion Picture Industry Investigates Savings to Be Made from Uncle Sam Shipments

The National Association is gathering together material for a folder which will tell the industry how to get full efficiency out of parcel post transportation for films, and will also tell just where the mail ceases to be cheaper than express—these figures cannot yet be given out, but these facts will be of interest.

A shipping case loaded with five reels (the standard unit of shipments) weighs between 45 and 50 pounds.

The parcel post regulations admit fifty pound shipments within the first and second zones, that is, within 150 miles.

Beyond this area, packages are limited to 20 pounds, which will include two reels in the regulation packing case.

The National Association is working out a chart of comparison between parcel post rates and express rates, and this chart will show just where the mails should be used.

At this time, however, the conditions seem to indicate that, as was anticipated, the chief monetary advantages of the parcel post to the distributor will be in shipments to theaters within a short radius of the exchange.

The other advantages of the postmaster general's ruling, however, go far beyond the question of money saved on shipments. As pointed out by the National Association the advantages are the following:

The competition which it offers to the express companies may be expected to result in lower rates, as it has with other commodities carried by the parcel post.

The use of the mails will open new territories and will carry motion pictures into rural communities not now enjoying them.

Thousands of small communities can now be served through the rural parcel delivery post and at small rentals not only can the public of these back-country villages be served but old films now left idle on exchange shelves can be rented at a comfortable profit.

The protection afforded the industry in case of any sort of transportation strike can hardly be overestimated. The mails have the right of way, and with the parcel post now open to films, the crisis which faced the industry a few months ago when a national railway strike was imminent can never occur.

Besides this, the decision of the United States Bureau of Explosives, that films were safe, under present packing methods, for transportation in the mails, will have a decided effect on the public mind and on the insurance companies. The old tradition that films are likely to explode under any and all circumstances—will receive a decided blow by the action of the postoffice department, whose decision to admit films in the present type of container was reached only after a thorough investigation.

Selznick-Pictures Offerings

THREE IMPORTANT DRAMAS WITH FAMED STARS BEGIN THE NEW YEAR

NORMA TALMADGE in her first Selznick-Picture, "Panthea," the first of the new Robert Warwick pictures, "The Argyle Case," and the second Herbert Brenon-directed Selznick feature, "The Eternal Sin," with Florence Reed as Lucretia Borgia, these are the three excellent film dramas which Selznick-Pictures offers exhibitors for the first month of the new year. Each feature is sure to attract unusual interest in every theater shown.

"Panthea" Ready for Release

The first mentioned, featuring Norma Talmadge, is an adaptation of the drama "Panthea," by Monckton Hoffe, which was originally played on the stage in this country by Mme. Olga Petrova. This picture was produced under the direction of Allan Dwan, and has been given its private showing before Mr. Selznick and his personal advisors who were more than enthusiastic in their praise of the picture. "Panthea" will be given its pre-release showings in New York next week and be released immediately after for the entire country. The popularity of Miss Talmadge was attested by the great number of applications for contracts from exhibitors all over the United States and Canada, whose judgment was determined solely by the advertising of the production and their knowledge that Mr. Selznick would not release the picture unless it came up to the high standard set by the first three Selznick-Pictures on the market, the two Clara Kimball Young features, "The Common Law" and "The Foolish Virgin," and the Herbert Brenon production starring Nazimova in "War Brides."

The central figure of the story is Panthea, a Russian musician, who, suspected of revolutionary activities, escapes the surveillance of the secret service police and goes to England. There she meets, loves and marries a young English composer whose life ambition is to have one of his operas produced. Panthea's husband becomes desperately ill through the failure to secure a hearing for his opera and the physicians express their belief that unless the boy's ambition is speedily realized there can be no cure. Panthea's sacrifice for her husband, the loss of his love and the final dramatic reconciliation forms a beautiful love story.

Following "Panthea" will come the first of the new Robert Warwick features presenting this immensely popular star in a film version of one of the most famous detective dramas ever staged, "The Argyle Case." This play was the joint work of the two dramatists, Harvey J. O'Higgins and Harriet Ford, who, for the sake of fidelity to details called in as a third collaborator the famous detective, William J. Burns, to supervise the use of modern scientific instruments of detection such as the dictograph and the finger-print process.

"The Argyle Case" Completed

"The Argyle Case" was finished this week under the direction of Ralph W. Ince, who has made use of every opportunity for mysterious effects and startling lighting and scenic devices that such a story offers. The picture is said to be one continuous thrill from the introductory scenes which indicate the accomplishment of the crime to its surprising solution. Woven into the thread of the story is a delightful love interest in which Mr. Warwick is fortunate in having so charming and accomplished an actress as Miss Elaine Hammerstein for a leading woman.

The third Selznick-Picture that is expected to be released by the end of the month is Herbert Brenon's second production under the Selznick banner, a luxurious spectacle starring the accomplished American actress Florence Reed. "The Eternal Sin" is an adaptation of one of the greatest works of the immortal French author, Victor Hugo, and in addition to its unusually splendid

At the left is Norma Talmadge in "Panthea," an early Selznick-Pictures. The dark and Styxlike scene is Robert Warwick in "The Argyle Case." The lady with the poison canteens is Florence Reed in the Brenon-Selznick, "The Eternal Sin," also to appear in January.

"The Eternal Sin" is a costume play which has a big plot, lots of punch and an appealing star.

scenic settings it is said to hold as great, if not greater, a dramatic punch as Brenon's production of "War Brides."

New Clara Kimball Young Films

In February and March the exhibitors will be able to play two new Clara Kimball Young pictures, each of which should have a tremendous box office value. The first of these will be "The Price She Paid," an adaptation of David Graham Phillips' novel of the same name produced under the direction of Charles Giblyn, late of the Triangle forces. This story lends itself particularly well to Miss Young's unquestioned beauty and charm in that its atmosphere is that of the smart, wealthy set of New York and the star is enabled to wear many stunning modern costumes.

Following "The Price She Paid" Miss Young will appear in "The Easiest Way," Eugene Walter's famous Belasco drama which was generally conceded by the dramatic critics of the world to be the strongest American drama of the twentieth century. Albert Capellani, who so masterly directed "The Common Law" and "The Foolish Virgin," will produce "The Easiest Way." In this production he will have even a greater opportunity to display his craftsmanship than in any of Miss Young's other pictures as the story is unquestionably one of the biggest ever conceived. That Mr. Selznick believes "The Easiest Way" to be the greatest subject for a motion picture on the market is proved by the fact that he alone of all producers who have sought the rights to the play was willing to pay the price demanded by the author and David Belasco.

As a play, "The Easiest Way," with Frances Starr as the star, swept the theater goers of America off their feet. It was undoubtedly the most astounding success of any drama of modern American life and the advertising alone of its title and the names of Eugene Walter and David Belasco should reap a golden harvest for the exhibitor as well as the producer.

Norma Talmadge, who has been spending a month's vacation in Los Angeles on a wedding tour with her husband, Joseph M. Schenck, general manager of the Marcus Loew offices, has returned to New York to begin work on her second Selznick-Picture. Harry Rapf, president of the Robert Warwick Film Corporation, is also contemplating a number of the best known novels of recent years by way of choosing a subject for his star's second production.

Vitagraph Supplies Free Slides

Walter W. Irwin, general manager of Vitagraph-V. L. S. E., has augmented the service which the various exchanges of that company supply to exhibitors throughout the United States by adding a series of special slides which are furnished free to all Vitagraph contract exhibitors.

Included in these new free slides are those of Anita Stewart; Earle Williams; Edith Storey and Antonio Moreno; Lillian Walker and Walter McGrail; Rose Tapley; Peggy Hyland and Marc MacDermott; and Alice Joyce and Harry Morey.

It will be noted that these slides follow closely the plan which Mr. Irwin secured for the release of Vitagraph's Blue Ribbon features in a rotary system that provides for the return of each star or group of stars every six weeks.

There has also been made available for Vitagraph exhibitors special Blue Ribbon trade mark cuts in five different sizes, these cuts being intended for exhibitors' programs and exhibitors' newspaper advertising. Like the slides, these cuts are free to Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. exhibitors.

NEW PICKFORD SUBJECT

Maurice Tourneur Begins Work on the Production of "A Poor Little Rich Girl" Commenced at Fort Lee Studios

For the past few weeks the Mary Pickford studio in Fort Lee has been in charge of the carpenters and mechanics in connection with the construction of big sets for the new Mary Pickford subject, "A Poor Little Rich Girl," the famous Eleanor Gates novel, which also enjoyed a big run as a play. Immediately upon completing the final preparation of the script early last week the actual staging of the new subject was commenced under the direction of Maurice Tourneur, who recently produced the second Pickford-Artcraft picture, "The Pride of the Clan," to be released January 8.

Mr. Tourneur's work in connection with "The Pride of the Clan" was completed several weeks ago, when he was engaged to produce the next Pickford film. He immediately began his plans for "A Poor Little Rich Girl," although the actual staging of the film has only just started, this being in accordance with the Artcraft policy of allowing its directors ample time to thoroughly study and plan their forthcoming subjects before commencing the actual production. It is felt by many who have already seen "The Pride of the Clan," that this picture offers Tourneur's greatest work ever displayed on the screen. Those who are familiar with his productions will readily recognize in the new Pickford offering, the inimitable Tourneur touch which has placed him in the front rank of master-producers.

As Gwendolyn, the title character in "A Poor Little Rich Girl," Mary Pickford appears in a role that is particularly adapted to her talents. That Miss Pickford will score another triumph in this subject is readily apparent to all those who are familiar with the story.

Sherman Blazes Trails

If you are interested in the activities of a real life film man the following facts regarding H. A. Sherman will interest you.

H. A. Sherman was the first man in the country to receive $3,500 a week for a moving picture. ("The Christian," New Garrick Theater, Minneapolis, March 1, 1914).

He was the first man in the country to pay $100,000 or over for certain state rights for a picture. ("The Birth of a Nation," September, 1915. Thus showing producers the possibilities in spectacular films.)

He was the first man in the country to run a moving picture as a legitimate road attraction. ("The Birth of a Nation.")

Sherman was the first man in the country to pay $250,000 for the rights of a picture for the United States and Canada. ("The Crisis," October 7, 1916.)

He was the first man in the country to successfully exploit all state rights of a picture in the remarkable time of five weeks. ("The Crisis.")

Fox Gets New Director, Star and Player

OTHER THINGS NEW AND FOXY

Virginia Pearson wearing a coat of arms in "Bitter Truth."

WILLIAM FOX acquired one new director, another film star, and several more photoplayers in the course of the last week.

The director is William Nigh, lately with the Metro forces; the star is Miriam Cooper, who has the leading feminine part in "The Honor System," the big ten-part Fox photodrama; and the new players include Ned Finley, Pearl Palmer, Ruth Thorp and Edward Roseman, who will be in the first Nigh production, and Florence Crawford and Francis Carpenter.

Miss Cooper will appear under the direction of R. A. Walsh, who staged "The Honor System," and who is, incidentally, Miss Cooper's husband. The new Fox luminary enjoys the distinction of never having had any stage experience, despite her notable performances in "The Honor System," "The Birth of a Nation" and "Intolerance."

Miss Cooper is a native of Baltimore, but was educated in New York City.

When she was twelve years old her family moved to New York and Miss Cooper was educated at the Sacred Heart Convent and the Convent of the Holy Child.

In 1912, at the time so many of the big stars of today were undergoing their preliminary training, Miss Cooper made her affiliation with the screen. Her first production was "A Blot on the 'Scutcheon," for the old Reliance-Majestic company—and she was only an extra.

In addition to the three big specials in which she has played, Miss Cooper has appeared in several subjects for Fine Arts.

Miss Cooper is considered one of the most attractive of all screen stars.

William Nigh, the newcomer to the Fox directorial staff, makes the twentieth filmmaker now with the Fox organization. Seven are screening dramatic subjects in the West, six in the East, and seven are at work on comedy productions in California.

It was Mr. Nigh who had charge of directing "The Yellow Streak," for Metro, in which Lionel Barrymore is starred. In his premiere Fox photoplay, Mr. Nigh will play the lead himself. He often directed and acted in the same feature for Metro. Two of the subjects of which this is true are "Her Debt of Honor" and "Notorious Gallagher."

Mr. Finley, who will have the part of a western sheriff in the new Nigh photodrama, was formerly with Vitagraph. His most recent work was done in Lillian Walker's starring vehicle, "The Kid."

Like his chief, Mr. Finley is a director, too. He filmed "The Royal Mounted Police," soon to be released.

Florence Crawford comes to Fox Films to play in the Caprice subject, now being made in Georgia. Miss Crawford was formerly with Universal.

Francis Wilburn Carpenter is the famous child actor who has been with Fine Arts for some time. Master Carpenter will appear in productions of the West Coast studios. Francis is five years old and hails from Glenwood Springs, Colorado.

The William Fox studios at Hollywood, which were destroyed recently by fire, are fast being rebuilt. The new plant will be one of the most fully equipped and thoroughly appointed in the motion picture industry. It will take the form of a hollow quadrangle, with offices along the sides, and the center filled with enormous stages.

In connection with the rebuilding of the plant, the Fox company have relinquished their Edendale studio and are now concentrating their entire California force in the Hollywood studio and the large lot which they have leased across the street.

Last work was carried on at the Edendale studio on December 15. Director Richard Stanton finished the latest Gladys Brockwell photoplay there, before the place was given up.

Virginia Pearson in "Bitter Truth"

A film drama of unusual intensity, with a great sacrifice for a strong climax, is "Bitter Truth," the statuesque Virginia Pearson's recently completed photoplay for William Fox.

Gretchen Hartman and Alan Hale in Fox's new drama, "The Love Thief."

The scenario for Miss Pearson's new screen play was written by Mary Murillo, and the direction was in charge of Kenean Buel.

Prominent in the supporting cast are Jack Hopkins and William H. Tooker. Mr. Hopkins is new to Fox Films, but Mr. Tooker is remembered for his excellent work in previous motion pictures under the Fox banner. Alice May and Sidney D'Albrook are also in the company.

"Bitter Truth," which is released on January 15, opens on the big, helpless humanity which is huddled together in Blossom Street, in the East Side's slums. The sweetest spirit of the thousands dwelling there is Anne, in love with Jimmy Graves, who she knows is a crook.

In warning Jimmy one night that the police are on his trail, she is caught in the maelstrom, brought into court with him and sentenced to jail. After she comes out of her cell's darkness, she plots revenge on the man who put her behind bars, Judge Marcus, about to be nominated for a higher position in public service.

Through a ruse, she obtains employment in the Marcus household. The judge does not recognize in his wife's secretary, the same woman who was once just a "poor Blossom Street thing." He finds that he is rapidly falling in love with her.

Anne is approached by a stool-pigeon working for Marcus's political opponents, who are trying to fasten a scandal upon the judge. Anne promises to aid them.

She agrees to put him in a compromising position that evening when witnesses will be on hand. Meantime, Jimmy Graves is released. He has been living through the years of his prison term with the face of Anne always before him. He learns that the girl is at the Marcus home, and starts for the house.

As the hour for the denouement draws near, Anne, analyzing her feelings truly for the first time, realizes she actually does love Marcus. He kisses her again and again. She notices the clock and pushes him from her just before curtains are thrust back by the politicians and Mrs. Marcus.

Jimmy arrives, and in the face of her love for Marcus, she sacrifices herself that the judge may win. The exact manner of the ending is itself a deft piece of dramatic work and camera achievement.

Authorities Praise "The Honor System"

The Co-operative Welfare Association of Western Pennsylvania pronounces "The Honor System," William Fox's de luxe film production, a masterpiece. The thanks of that body were formerly voted to the producer after seeing the picture recently at the Pitt theater, Pittsburgh. The organization comprises the executive officers of all state institutions.

As "The Honor System" does not mince words or scenes in setting forth the prison brutalities that prevailed under the old-fashioned harsh discipline, it is a very frank portrayal and might easily stir opposition among those who have the difficult task of keeping order in prisons and places of correction. But the Welfare Association is animated by a twentieth century spirit. W. F. Penn, the president, writing to Mr. Fox, says:

It was the unanimous opinion of all the members who attended that this production was a masterpiece. Your efforts for prison reform should receive the highest commendation from press and public alike. We believe that much good will result from films of this character and we sincerely hope that the good work started will continue.

Bigger Chaplins Coming

"Easy Street" is the next of the Charlie Chaplin comedies, produced under Chaplin's $670,000 contract with the Mutual Film Corporation.

"Easy Street" will be released on January 22, six weeks from the date of previous release, and this signalizes a new departure with regard to Chaplin features, decided on after a conference between the famous comedian and President John R. Freuler, as a result of which future Chaplins, including "Easy Street" are to be even more pretentious productions than those already issued.

During rehearsals of "Easy Street" Mr. Chaplin notified Mr. Freuler that owing to the large amount of extra work and the great volume of material involved in the making of this picture, he favored extension of production time to six weeks, adding that as all future productions were to be on a similarly enlarged scale, he felt it advisable to make the intervening time between releases six weeks instead of four weeks as hitherto.

While the cost of the productions is largely increased by this change, their tremendous popularity impressed Mr. Freuler as warranting the additional expenditure of time and the schedule was ordered arranged in accordance with Mr. Chaplin's suggestion.

"Easy Street" will be rushed to completion as soon as Mr. Chaplin recovers from a slight accident that took place during the filming of the piece last week. A property lamppost fell on the comedian, inflicting slight contusions from which he has now practically recovered.

This play promises to be as funny as "The Rink," which is popularly declared to be one of the most hilarious comedies Chaplin ever put out. Mr. Chaplin thinks the play will be funnier than "The Rink," since his friends "out front" will have a laugh on him as well as at him. Chaplin's encounter with the lamppost is said to be so funny it "rocks the walls" of the studio, though the encounter probably hurt considerably. Charlie upset the lamppost, which fell in his direction. He tried to elude it but failed. While making a regular "Hal Chase slide" to get out of the way Chaplin got nipped in transit and pinned to the studio floor.

JANUARY PLAYS

Metro Pictures Corporation Sets a Brisk Pace In Its First 1917 Releases—Ethel Barrymore and Emmy Whelan Appear.

Five important releases will be presented during January by Metro Pictures Corporation on its regular program. Besides this, five chapters of "The Great Secret," the serial starring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, will be offered to the public, and five one-act comedies will be released—three Drew comedies and two starring Ralph Herz.

The year 1917 opens with the release of "Vanity," a Popular Plays and Players production starring Emmy Wehlen. "Vanity" has the advantage of combining the youth and beauty of Miss Wehlen with a story of unusual power. As Phyllis Lord, the modiste's model who leads to peril the man she loves through her desire for pretty clothes, Miss Wehlen has one of the most interesting roles of her career.

"A Wife by Proxy," with Mabel Taliaferro as star, is scheduled for the second week in January. "A Wife by Proxy" has an Irish setting, and Miss Taliaferro is seen as a sweet Irish lassie. Columbia Pictures Corporation produced it for the Metro program. In this delightful five-part photoplay Miss Taliaferro as "Jerry" McNairn, left alone in "old Ireland" by the death of her father, goes to America in search of her father's young American friend, Norton Burbeck. Burbeck is a bachelor and a millionaire, and the little Irish girl soon discovers the plot of an unscrupulous adventuress and her accomplices to get his money.

Ethel Barrymore will be seen January 15 in "The White Raven," her first production completed since her announcement that she had abandoned the speaking stage to appear in Metro plays. "The White Raven's" contrasting scenes are laid in Alaska and in New York City, metropolitan life being varied by that of the frontier. Miss Barrymore plays the part of "Nightingale Nan," a girl delicately reared who, finding herself stranded in Alaska, becomes a dance-hall singer. Determined to leave her sordid surroundings and sing before the greatest audiences in the world, she makes a startling bargain and wins her freedom. But "Nightingale Nan" Baldwin, who now becomes a prima donna known as Mlle. Nanon Boldini, has been virtually mortgaged to win her success, and at the height of her triumph the mortgage is foreclosed. This situation brings about one of the most interesting climaxes ever seen in a photoplay.

Viola Dana in "Threads of Fate" is the January 22 release. This feature photodrama is built around the struggle between labor and capital, and many of its important scenes are laid among the coal mines of Pennsylvania. Anti-vivisection furnishes a counterplot to "Threads of Fate," which was written by Richard Barry, adapted by June Mathis, and directed by Eugene Nowland, the producing company being Columbia Pictures Corporation.

Metro's final regular release for January will be "Bridges Burned," with Mme. Petrova as star. Mme. Petrova herself is the author of "Bridges Burned." The star will be seen in an Irish part in this fascinating photoplay, and further interest is furnished by its war setting. Mary Randal (Mme. Petrova), is one of those progressive, great-minded women of the type so prominent in the Ireland of the present day, the type that has helped to bring about the Celtic Renaissance in literature and other arts. Mary organizes an Uplift club in the mill in which she works, and it is cited all through Ireland as a model. The romantic incidents of Mary's life form the material for the five absorbing acts of "Bridges Burned."

The Metro comedy releases of the month are "The Matinee Idol," with Ralph Herz; "Cave Man's Buff" (Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew); "His Perfect Day" (Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew); "Married, But Single" (Ralph Herz); and "The Pest" (Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew).

Metro thus sets a brisk pace which will be kept up during the entire year.

Exhibitors Like Unicorns

Vice-President and General Manager Fred B. Murphy of the Unicorn Film Service is in receipt of reports from A. G. Steen, manager of the Philadelphia Unicorn Exchange, in which Mr. Steen states that the volume of business with the "Billy West" two reel comedies has exceeded all expectations. In fact, states Mr. Steen, his office is rushed with business, not only with the "Billy West Comedies," but also with the contracts for the general Unicorn Service, which consists of one, two and three reel dramas, up-to-date western pictures, and one and two reel comedies.

"Mr. Steen's report," states Mr. Murphy, "bears out my contention that there is a great dearth of short subjects of merit both in comedies and in dramatic offerings. The tendency of producers today appears to be specialized on feature and super-feature pictures. The result has been, until the Unicorn entered the field, that short pictures of exceedingly poor quality have resulted with consequent dissatisfaction among exhibitors.

"It makes no difference how good an exhibitor's feature picture may be, if the remainder of his bill is not up to the standard, and the result is certain to be detrimental to his box-office. During a recent tour of the country, I discovered that nearly every exhibitor had a 'kick' to register against the average short subject, and they all stated that the Unicorn Film Service was filling a distinct demand for excellent brief dramas, comedies and western pictures. I also found that exhibitors running excellent features, found that their evening's entertainment had been killed because of poor quality of some of the short subjects they had been handling. The psychology of the situation appears to be that the feature which remains deeply embedded in the minds of the audience referred to, is not the excellence of the lengthy feature, but the inferior quality of the remainder of the bill.

"A 'hot and cold' bill can no longer make money for the exhibitor. In other words, it cannot be a mixture of good and bad. It must achieve a high standard, and above all, be consistent. The exhibitors have told me that when they play short subjects which fall short of the mark, that there was a noticeable falling off of the receipts of their theaters for at least two days following."

Selznick Has House Organ

The field of contemporary film literature has been enriched recently by the Selznick Pictures Magazine, a well-edited little house organ, devoted to the exploitation of Clara, Norma, Robert and the dynamic Herbert. E. Richard Schayer constitutes the editorial staff of the publication.

In this group are some of the intensely human scenes from Sherrill-Art Dramas feature, "The Rainbow." This feature is a special production in six reels. Sherrill and Art Dramas swear that the play was so concentrated and so full of punch that in spite of all attempts it could not be cut to five reels. And who cares, if it's good? Dot Bernard is the attractive centerpiece of the play and she is supported by Jack Sherrill and Robert Conness.

"RAINBOW" IN SIX PARTS

Picturized from Stage Success, Special Release Calibre, but Distributed on Art Dramas Program—Unusually Strong Cast

Announcement has been made that "The Rainbow," William L. Sherrill's first contribution to the Art Dramas program, will be released in six parts instead of five, the customary length of the Art Dramas. According to this announcement, the strength of the story, and the exceptionally fine work of the cast, has made it impossible to cut the picture to less than six reels without impairing the artistic and dramatic value of the production.

This Sherrill Art Drama is an adaptation of the stage success of the same name. Henry Miller and Ruth Chatterton were the featured players of the legitimate production, which ran through two years at the Liberty Theater, New York City. While at this theater, "The Rainbow" made a box office record that held until it was surpassed by the wonderful business of "The Birth of a Nation," which played at the same house later.

Dorothy Bernard is the star of the screen production, with Robert Conness and Jack Sherrill in the featured supporting parts. It is noteworthy that Miss Bernard also played the leading role in "The Rainbow" while she was the leading lady of Belasco's stock company in Washington. Robert Conness plays the part that Henry Miller created in the original stage production, and the quality of his performance may best be judged from his fine work in the past. Jack Sherrill has a heavy part in "The Rainbow," along the lines that have made him such a favorite with motion picture audiences in the past.

The story of "The Rainbow" is particularly well adapted to picturization. It is one of the few plays that did not depend on lines alone for its success, but on the strong dramatic conflict which marked the action of the production. It tells of how a husband and wife are separated through a misunderstanding, that finally leads to the divorce courts. The wife takes their infant daughter to live in England, not knowing that her ne'er do well brother had squandered her estate, and that her income is being secretly supplied to her by her former husband through the family lawyer. Fifteen years after the divorce she returns to America, the daughter now a young lady. She meets the husband's sister, who persuades her to permit the daughter to pay a visit to her father. Father and daughter are overjoyed at the reunion, but the mother cuts the visit short abruptly because of some scandal she had heard regarding her former husband. In order not to hurt his child, the father tells her that the separation is only temporary. The scene of the leave taking is said to be one of the most dramatic ever screened. The mother leaves the country again, never to return, but through a curious chain of circumstances, the family is reunited, and the romance of the girl, which is unfolded throughout the picture ends happily also.

Speaking of the quality of his picturization of "The Rainbow," Mr. Sherrill said: "It is indeed a rarity to find a picture that cannot be cut down to five reels. The general rule is that it is difficult to bolster up a story so that it will sustain interest through that length. This picture, along with several others that have appeared recently, notably, 'The Witching Hour' and 'The Conquest of Canaan,' I regard as verification of my theory that the primary requisite for a good photoplay is the story. Without that element a picture cannot be a success, regardless of the popularity of the players who are in it."

Moss Sells Exchange

The B. S. Moss Motion Picture Corporation has sold its New York Exchange to the Modern Feature Photoplay Company, of which Walter Greene is treasurer. Greene is also president of the Artcraft, which distributes Mary Pickford's productions.

The only explanation made by Moss is that he was prompted by an old adage to the effect that "a man cannot dance at two weddings at the same time" and that with his producing, state righting and theatrical interests he must sacrifice something besides his health. Moss now feels that he will have time to give his personal attention to the direction of his future releases and can also expand his vaudeville interests. He will add several new houses to his collection, one being now under construction in the Washington Heights section of town.

PROJECTION DEPARTMENT, CONDUCTED BY E. C. SCOBEY

THIS department is now a permanent feature of MOTOGRAPHY. Its editor, Mr. Scobey, is a former secretary and treasurer of the Motion Picture Machine Operators' Local No. 194, I. A. T. S. E., and was formerly associated with the Central Film Service Company of Indianapolis. He was recently elected vice-president of the Central Labor Union of Indianapolis, the first operator to be so honored. The idea is to make this department just as helpful as possible to operators and exhibitors. Send your questions and problems to Mr. Scobey. He is sure to give you some valuable information. Address, MOTOGRAPHY, Chicago.

I am having trouble getting a clear picture. I am using 60 amp., 60 cycles A. C. current, 4½ lens tube, 60 ft. throw and at the present time am using a 6½ and a 9½ condensers. If I move my lamp forward my picture gets dark around the sides and if I move it back it gets dark in the center; will you please tell me what the trouble is?

I think that your whole trouble is in the combination of condensors that you are using.

At the throw you have with a 4½ lens tube you should use a 6½ and a 7½ condensors. Try this combination and I think you will have no more trouble.

Watch the setting of your carbons also, be sure they line up and that the top carbon is set ⅛ of an inch to the rear of the bottom one.

I am using a 6-inch lens tube on a 90-foot throw and we have just installed a new screen with a shadow box, and now the picture is about six inches too big all the way around. Can I change the size of the picture with the tube I have or will we have to buy a new one? We have been to quite an expense in remodeling the house and don't want to buy a new lens if we can use the old one. Hoping to see an answer in the next issue of MOTOGRAPHY and wishing you and the paper success with the new department, I am, yours truly, Fred Blake, Dana, Indiana.

Yes, it would be possible for you to cut down the size of your picture by lengthening the distance between the lens combinations, but I would not try to make the change if I were you. I would order a new lens tube of the proper size. A good lens is one of the essentials of good projection, and projection is the main asset of any picture theater.

What you will have to pay for a new lens will more than offset the results you will get from trying to save a few dollars with the old lens.

I have a Power's 6 A machine and have just had a new intermittent sprocket, apron and aperture plate put on, also new tention springs and I notice there is a side motion on the picture. There is no steady side motion but every little bit the picture seems to jump to one side. Can you tell me what to do with it?

Your trouble is caused through end motion in the intermittent sprocket and can be remedied by loosening the screw in intermittent set collar (No. 662 Power's catalogue) against end of bushing (No. 670), holding screw driver in slot of screw, with another screw driver pry gently against rim of sprocket and collar, forcing the sprocket to the right and the collar to the left against the bushing. While holding the collar over thus, tighten the screw in the collar. Turn machine very slowly, and if the intermittent binds, you have the collar set too tight. Insert end of the screw driver through one of the holes in the fly wheel and against end of intermittent shaft. With hammer tap very lightly. Try machine and do it again if necessary, try sprocket each time to be sure you have not loosened it too much. End motion in an intermittent sprocket will cause the trouble you mention and it would be a good idea to try the tension springs and be sure that there is not too much tension on them. Too much tension will cause the film to buckle and jump.

The editor has just received a very interesting letter from two brothers who are with a traveling attraction, making the smaller cities. They evidently are having some of the experiences that every operator has when they commence "Hitting the Trail."

They have promised to write an article every week, giving a few of their most interesting experiences.

The following is the letter just received by me and I would like to have the operators who are using generator sets to give the trouble mentioned here, their careful study for I think it will give them something to think about and if they have not had any trouble of this sort to contend with so far, they will be prepared for it if they study this and figure for themselves.

I would like to have the different views of the operators of this department on the subject and in the next issue of MOTOGRAPHY I will give my answer to the trouble with any answers that I receive from the readers of the department.

EXPERIENCES OF TWO ROAD MEN.

We were booked to play a small town named ———. Our outfit consists of two fine machines of standard make, one booth, panel box, cable, motors, special speed controls, in fact everything that it takes to make a complete outfit that will pass in any city in this good old U. S. A.

As our plot calls for a platform on the bottom floor, of course this causes the house manager to lose a few seats and this being a turn-away show the manager objects to taking out seats.

This manager in particular, insisted on us using his outfit, which was located in the balcony of the house.

He had the following equipment in the booth: Two machines of standard make, and a generator set 3 phase, 220 volt A. C. on the motor and 60 volts, 80 amp. on the generator. The matinee show went over without a hitch but at night the generator died like a punctured balloon, though the motor kept running just as good as when she started, the D. C. side would not deliver even a spark. There was no time left to test anything so we hooked up two compensarce and finished the show.

The next morning we tested all connections on board, field rheostat, fields and armature and found them in perfect order. In testing we used two batteries and a buzzer and then not satisfied, we used a magneto.

The house manager called in all of the experts of the town,

Gets Most Out of Motography

"I take all the trade journals, but I get more benefit from yours than any others—especially from 'The Man in the Booth' department and from 'What the Pictures Did for Me,' the exhibitors' criticisms."—H. B. McFarling, Manager Tokio Theater, Morehouse, Missouri.

including the superintendent of the light plant. They tested the same as we did and then asked us what was the matter.

Believe me, Mr. Editor, this called for a laugh, for this manager thought that we had either jimmed his pet machine or burnt it out.

We finally told him and the experts on the job just what we thought was causing the trouble and after they had held a council of war, they agreed with us as to the cause of the trouble.

I know that you know what the trouble was (I had the same experience not so very long ago—Ed.) and we are going to let you tell the boys what you know about it.

From week to week we will try to send in something of interest. It will not be practical stuff all the time, for we think that the boys will enjoy some of the comedy situations we encounter while trooping with a movie show. Wishing you a Happy New Year, Mr. Editor, we remain, Fred (A. P. S.) Charles, on the Hick Circuit.

The editor has just received another interesting letter from a brother who is a constant reader of Motography and the projection department of the paper.

I want to shake hands with the brother and assure him that there is no one infallible, and that we all make mistakes.

The only man who don't make a mistake is the man who never tries any thing. He is a mistake in the start.

If it wasn't for a difference of opinion, there would be no need of a projection department, and I am glad that the brother takes enough interest in the department to air his views on any subject that is of interest to him.

On the carbon question we both made a mistake and both acknowledge it, so I am like him, "Let's shake and call it square."

Again I thank the brother and will expect to hear from him real often on any matter that is of interest to him. Below is his letter:

Dec. 26th, 1916.

Dear Editor:

Let's shake hands and start the New Year as friends. You know that human beings are subject to make mistakes. The man who claims not to make any mistakes I will surely tip my hat to. You made a mistake in the issue of December 9 when you stated that the upper carbon should be extended ⅛ of an inch in front of the lower one. I made a mistake when I described A. C. current with A. N. C. How I made this mistake I can't tell, and how you made your mistake in several words perhaps you can't tell.

I wrote Brother Harminson that your answer made my hair rise on my head. I suggested to him to set the carbons the way I did and get good results, and I do not feel entitled to the name "Worthy knight of the booth" but "Worthy man in the Overalls."

I read your article very carefully and knew from it that Brother Harminson was using D. C. I did not tell him how little other people knew about setting carbons, etc., nor did I claim that my suggestion would be the right thing where D. C. was used. I made several sketches, one showing carbons in a straight line, but showing upper carbon ⅛ of an inch in rear of the lower carbon, which I find gives good results, providing the light plant supplies a steady power, if not the arc would work, or travel around the carbon and the arc would be any old place. This setting you acknowledge to be good for both A. C. and D. C. Cut the blame N out and we have it right and print my name.—L. K. Sivertson, Velva, N. D. Iris Theater.

Dustin Farnum, the new William Fox star, recently had a three weeks' vacation between two pictures.

He spent thirteen days thereof in traveling from Los Angeles to New Brunswick and back. He spent two more days in talking with friends in old New York.

The other six days were passed in shooting one bull moose. And the trip was worth it, Mr. Farnum said.

Stage Employes Dance

An interesting announcement has just been made that the Stage Employees of Local No. 30 of Indianapolis will give their second annual ball during January. The Stage Employees' Local Union has achieved some enviable reputation for their ability to arrange entertaining balls and festivities in years gone by, and stars, prominent actors and the Dear Chorus Girls long for the opportunity to attend the coming ball January 25 at Germania Hall.

"Miss George Washington" Makes Hit

What has proved to be one of the biggest hits in the photoplay world during the latter part of 1916 has been the Famous Players production of "Miss George Washington," a Paramount Picture. The reports that have been received during the first five weeks of the showing of this picture give it a higher exhibitors' rating than any picture that Miss Clark has ever appeared in.

The fact that the picture was based on so clever a story and that it was given a wonderful amount of comedy action and suspense, with a wallop of a climatic punch and the ever pretty ultimate justification, was the background of the picture, which when privately shown to newspapermen and Paramount and its producing companies' officials, was heralded as being the cleverest piece of comedy work Miss Clark had ever done. Many additional advertising and publicity aids were issued through the Paramount exchanges to put this picture over and it has done capacity business in practically every Paramount theater that has returned their reports.

The first Cub Comedy subject to be offered in which George Ovey, the featured comedian, is assisted in his fun-making antics by wild animals, is "Jerry and his Pal," scheduled for release through the Mutual on February 1.

Margaret Illington Becomes Lasky Star

The most important stellar acquisition to the screen which has been made since Jesse L. Lasky induced Geraldine Farrar to become a photoplayer was made known last week when it was announced that Mr. Lasky has signed a long-term contract with Margaret Illington by the terms of which the distinguished stage celebrity abandons the stage to become a permanent Lasky star on the Paramount program. The announcement is of especial interest because of the fact that it follows so closely upon the news that Mme. Olga Petrova had joined the Lasky forces.

Margaret Illington is one of those very few stars who have resisted the steady pressure of the motion picture and its many inducements. By her superb display of histrionic genius in some of the greatest of recent successes, Miss Illington has risen to a position among the foremost stage stars of the day. Among her greatest successes have been "A Japanese Nightingale," in which she scored a tremendous hit; Henriette, in the all star cast of "The Two Orphans"; Mrs. Leffingwell, in "Mrs. Leffingwell's Boots"; "The Lion and the Mouse," in which she made her first London appearance at the Duke of York's; "Kindling"; Juliet, in "Romeo and Juliet," and "The Lie."

An adaptation of Basil King's celebrated novel, "The Inner Shrine," has been chosen by Mr. Lasky as the vehicle of Miss Illington's photoplay debut.

New Keenan Feature

Frank Keenan, the eminent American character actor, soon will be seen in another of his gripping screen portrayals, when he is presented by Thomas H. Ince in a powerful Triangle Kay-Bee play from the pen of John Lynch, entitled "The Bride of Hate." He is ably supported by Margery Wilson, the rapidly rising young emotional actress, and the combination is said to have resulted in a forceful presentation of a powerful subject.

"The Bride of Hate" is the narrative of an embittered Southerner, who resorted to racial conflict as a tool in hands that reached for vengeance. It recites the unhappy tragedy that results from a youthful romance, and the uncanny methods of the victim's uncle to avenge the transgression. The climax of the drama is declared to be one of the strongest situations ever recorded for the screen.

Keenan is seen in the role of Dr. Dupley Duprez, owner of the Bayou Petite plantation near New Orleans, and his portrayal is said to lack none of the forcefulness that always has marked his work in pictures.

Sharing honors with Keenan is Miss Wilson in the title role—that of an alluring slave-girl, upon whose antecedents the climax of the story hinges. Miss Wilson is said to be the very essence of emotion in every scene.

Metro Gives Liberal Bonus

Salary day before Christmas was one of rejoicing around the offices of the Metro Pictures Corporation. In line with other big business organizations that are distributing millions of dollars in bonuses, wage increases and extra dividends, Metro, having experienced the most prosperous year of its existence, did not forget those who have had their part in helping build the organization up to its present state of excellence.

So, on the pre-Christmas pay day, Santa Claus had a proxy in the shape of Cashier C. K. Stern. All of the employes received Christmas bonuses which, in many cases amounted to 100 per cent. Bonuses and presents also were distributed around the studios allied with Metro and all hands working under the Metro emblem, from clerks and stenographers to "supers" and stars, had cause to remember the Christmas of 1916.

Valkyrien in "The Image Maker"

Valkyrien, the celebrated Danish beauty, stars in the forthcoming Pathe Gold Rooster play, "The Image Maker." This picture has a very unusual plot, as it deals with pre-existence and tells of a love that lasted through the centuries. Valkyrien in it plays two parts —the one that of a beautiful Egyptian girl of low degree who wins the love of a great noble, and secondly, the incarnation of the girl in modern life in America. Such a story furnishes many opportunities for striking contrasts.

Valkyrien's charming personality never appeared to better advantage than in this picture. The atmosphere of ancient Egypt in the first part of the picture is true to history, and furnishes a great contrast to the modern life which is well presented in the latter half.

The picture was produced by Thanhouser.

NEW PARAMOUNTS

Fannie Ward, Jack Dean, Irene Fenwick and Owen Moore Stars on Program for Week of January 15.

Two powerful dramas of highest consistent quality: "Betty to the Rescue" and "A Girl Like That," produced by the Lasky Feature Play Company and Famous Players Film Company respectively, will be the features on the Paramount Program for the week of January 15. In the former, Fannie Ward, supported by Jack Dean and James Neill, will play the leading role, while in the latter, Irene Fenwick and Owen Moore will co-star.

This is Miss Ward's first appearance on the Paramount Program, since her wonderful success in "The Years of the Locust," prior to which this versatile Lasky star created a sensation in "Witchcraft" and "The Cheat." The story was written especially for Miss Ward by Beatrice C. DeMille and Leighton Osmun, and is a story especially adapted for Miss Ward. However, it is unlike anything in which she has ever appeared before. Instead of the beautiful society matron, as she was seen in "The Years of the Locust," the captivating star is now a romping hoydenish tomboy with tousled hair, bare feet, and is clad frequently in a dilapidated pair of overalls.

Irene Fenwick and Owen Moore have a most attractive drama in "A Girl Like That," which was produced under the direction of Del Henderson. The story tells of a female crook whose father is the leader of a gang of safe blowers, which gang, in order to get a line on a wealthy country bank, run across the young men who is the cashier and whom they cannot persuade to enter into any sort of an indiscriminate deal. To obtain their end they send the crook's beautiful daughter to the town, and she, after becoming his bookkeeper, falls dead in love with him, thereby refusing to allow them to rob the bank. During the brawl that follows between the leader and his gangsters, the girl's father is shot. The girl is placed in a tremendous predicament, and the dramatic climax is reached when she succeeds, by the aid of the young cashier, in rounding up the thieves in their attempt to play a double cross game.

Surrounding the program for this week for the exhibitor, Paramount will release three exceptional short reel features; the 49th edition of the magazine-on-the-screen; the 50th of the series of "Weekly Trips Around the World" personally conducted by Burton Holmes, in which he shows "Montreal, Old and New," and a one reel Klever Komedy, in which Victor Moore is starred, entitled "Did It Ever Happen to You?"

The 49th edition of the Pictrographs, the magazine on the screen, contains four very interesting subjects: "Peculiar Properties of Air," "Mining for Beauty," "Japanese Ice Box," and "On the Trail of Health and Appetite."

In a series of laboratory experiments, the fact is vividly shown in the Pictographs, that the atmosphere is capable of the most extraordinary phenomena when the normal conditions are upset and in this particular section, showing the peculiar properties of air, there is shown how nature abhors a vacuum, and what peculiar things happen to nature when liquefied air is applied.

JANE COWL WITH GOLDWYN

Successful Dramatic Actress Joins Goldwyn Pictures—To Be Starred in Productions Written Around Her Distinctive Personality

Jane Cowl, one of the greatest stars of the spoken drama and known to millions as the heroine of "Within the Law" and "Common Clay," tremendously profitable plays of recent years, is to star in Goldwyn Pictures.

After holding out against pictures for several years and holding pointed negative opinions about the cinema, Miss Cowl has been converted to a belief in the screen art and will appear for this newest of great film producing organizations in a series of pictures.

Immediately following the run of her newest stage play, "Lilac Time," soon to be produced by Selwyn & Company, Miss Cowl in the late spring will begin work in the Goldwyn eastern studios on two pictures of immense dramatic scope to be written around her distinctive personality by two of America's most important dramatists.

Each year thereafter, between her theatrical engagements, Miss Cowl will appear in other Goldwyn productions.

"I have never had a prejudice against motion pictures," says Miss Cowl in making her film debut, "but against the stupid type of pictures that many of the producers seemed to feel it was necessary to make. I have always felt that the film producers underrated the intelligence of their public. I have worked tremendously hard to gain a definite position in the American theater and because of the seriousness with which I view my professional work, I have vowed that I would not enter motion pictures—regardless of the monetary inducements—until such a time as I felt that my picture future would be placed in the hands of discerning and brainy managers with an entirely new type of motion picture ideals.

"The formation of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation was the development necessary to interest me in appearing on the screen. My greatest dramatic success as a star was made under the management of Selwyn & Company in 'Within the Law.' I have the greatest admiration for the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. In joining their organization I feel that I am taking no chances, as I know their tastes, purposes and high standards. Also, I am not having to become acquainted with strangers.

"From my knowledge of their plans, I feel that the Goldwyn Corporation will do more to uplift screen production and will give it more refined qualities than any similar organization that has entered this important art."

Asked about salary and other inducements, Miss Cowl said:

"Why talk of that. I am going into these pictures because I believe everything will be done to make them big and beautiful and fine. I want to try and discover if I can bring to the screen something that no one else has brought. At least I shall have the joy of trying."

New Triangle Man

Charles Gunn, the new Triangle-Kay Bee leading man, who made such an excellent impression as the young Austrian captain in C. Gardner Sullivan's latest play, "Three of Many," is considered by competent critics one of the most promising of the recent acquisitions of the screen.

He is said to be a natural born aviator. He's not the only star who is "up in the air" a good deal of the time.

To begin with, Gunn is his own hardest task-master, and believes that no pains are too great to take in "putting over" the right effect. With a creditable background of achievement in the spoken drama, he has definitely allied himself with motion picture acting, and thinks that talent and hard work will produce just as desirable results in the one field as in the other.

A native of Wisconsin, Gunn studied mechanical engineering at school and as he found tinkering with greasy carburetors much more to his liking than Latin or Greek, he went into the manufacturing department of an automobile factory upon graduation. But soon the call of the stage lured him away from the footsteps of Henry Ford, and he became known for his portrayal of the stranger in "The Passing of the Third Floor Back," Manson in "The Servant in the House," and Disraeli in the second company of George Arliss' classic.

When Thomas H. Ince began looking around for a new leading man to share honors with Clara Williams, he suddenly remembered Gunn. After a trial before the camera, Ince had no hesitation in engaging him at one of the highest salaries ever given a new screen actor.

When he can find time away from the Kay Bee studios, Gunn gives vent to his inborn love of mechanics and takes a spin in his high-powered motorboat, or journeys down to the aviation field at Venice, and treats himself to a practice flight in one of Glen Martin's aeroplanes.

Nell Shipman Writes Plays

A check received by Nell Shipman from the American Film Company in payment of the motion picture rights for "My Fighting Gentleman" makes the seventh photodrama disposed of by this popular writer since coming to New York in November, and the third purchased by the American Film Company.

"My Fighting Gentleman" will also be issued in book form by one of the leading publishers.

A three-act comedy nearly completed, and two more photo-dramas ready for release, one of which it is believed will create a sensation, is the sum total of Nell Shipman's literary activities during the past six months, during which time she also managed to play the leading role opposite Lou Tellegen for the Lasky Company in "The Black Wolf," which will be released on February 12. She also played a number of weeks in connection with the Vitagraph Exchanges on the bookings of "God's Country and the Woman."

Despite war conditions, Nell Shipman says she will take a short trip to "London-town" and back, before discussing plans for the New Year.

Christmas Tree for Horses

Human beings did not monopolize Christmas festivities, as will be seen by those who view Mutual Weekly No. 105. The Gaumont cameraman, ever on the track of the unusual, were fortunate both in Boston and Washington in securing pictures of Christmas trees for horses! Humane friends of animals decided in both these cities that some recognition should be made of the services of the animals that had been man's most faithful aid in the march of civilization from the stone age. Christmas trees were decorated with apples, carrots and other fruits that our equine friends love, and then there was a gathering of work animals to enjoy the feed prepared. The pictures will appeal to everyone who has any love for dumb animals.

Dispatch Growing Fast

Only a few months ago the Dispatch Film Exchange was an unknown quantity in the film business. With offices at 145 West Forty-fifth street, New York, Walter Scheuer, general manager, and Michael Resnick, sales manager, had some individual ideas as to how to reach the topmost rung of the exchange business.

Their first stroke was the purchase of "Purity" for New York state, which brought them forcibly to the attention of the exhibitors. The second page was the entire Ella Wheeler Wilcox series and they followed this by securing "Are Passions Inherited?" for New York state.

With these features on their selling list they rapidly built up a patronage that made the big houses pay attention; but their latest move came as a thunderbolt to the film financiers who were dickering for the big Sherman-Elliott picture, "The Crisis." While all the negotiations were pending, the gentlemen from the Dispatch quietly stepped in and met the enormous price without a murmur. This gives them a commanding position in the field. Mr. Scheuer now announces that while he was out consummating a deal which will bring "The Crisis" to the Strand in the middle of January, his hustling lieutenant secured a contract from Jos. Dailey of the United Booking Offices by which "Are Passions Inherited?" goes into the Proctor Houses.

The Dispatch Exchange further announces that the campaign on "The Crisis" will include fence and railroad advertising throughout the territory so that the best returns may be gotten from a strong publicity campaign.

Tribute to "Daughter of the Gods"

What have you done, William Fox?

You have rifled the storehouse of Fairyland and the Realm of Myths.

You have photographed on man-made strips of films the ephemeral fancies of the dreamers of Greece, and the children's posts, and Elysian romancers drowsy with the poppies of opalescent Orient as twilight.

You have taken a woman of bone and blood and brought her back a demi-goddess. You have unveiled the fearsome harem where no man may intrude and live. You have done more than that—you have revealed the escaping of the enslaved soul, which never the sight of man had hoped to behold. You have made of a child of earth a divinity. You have visualized forbidden mysteries, you have actualized the fantastic creatures of exotic mirages, you have blown substance into spirits of vapor.

Indeed it is a wonder-thing, this shower of magic you call "A Daughter of the Gods."

And, had you combed the seven seas and all the worlds, you could not have aimed your too-seeing camera on one more nearly heavenly, one more beautifully ideal than the exquisite super-woman, Annette Kellermann. —Jack Lait, Chicago Herald.

"The Libertine" in New England

F. E. Backer, president of the Mammoth Film Corporation of 729 Seventh avenue, New York City, has acquired the rights to the most highly artistic photoplay of recent production, "The Libertine."

This stirring photodrama features one of the best known leading men and character actors of the American stage today, John Mason, and the young and talented actress, Alma Hanlon. Mr. Backer is ready to release same throughout the New England cities, beginning with such central points as Boston and Providence, where it will be shown for a run.

To augment his forces, L. Lawrence Baren, formerly with several film corporations, has been especially engaged to tour the New England cities in the interests of the Mammoth Film Corporation. Exhibitors throughout this territory can arrange to meet Mr. Baran at any of the cities if they will write direct to the office in New York city.

Foster Moore, formerly connected with George Kleine, has been engaged by Mr. Backer to handle this film throughout the state of New York and northern New Jersey, and arrangements have already been made by him, whereby "The Libertine" was exhibited at the Goodwin Theater, Newark, New Jersey, commencing Sunday, December 31, for a period of a week, and will be at the Family Theater, Buffalo, New York, commencing January 7, for a period of two weeks.

Famous Players Star to Lasky

Louise Huff, the good-looking Famous Players star, who has added to her laurels recently by her charming work as the co-star of Jack Pickford in the screen adaptation of Booth Tarkington's "Seventeen," has left New York for Hollywood, where she will remain at the Lasky studios for several months.

The transfer of Miss Huff to the Lasky studios is in accordance with the announced plan to send Paramount stars to any studio of the producing companies that artistic purpose or producing exigiencies may require, and follows shortly the arrival of Thomas Meighan, Lasky player at the Famous Players studio.

The immediate object of Miss Huff's departure is the fact that she is soon to co-star with Jack Pickford in an adaptation of Gene Stratton Porter's celebrated novel and play, "Freckles," the western atmosphere of which demands a typical California setting. Jack Pickford will follow Miss Huff west in a very short time.

Capt. Jinks' Series Extended

The Capt. Jinks' series of Vitagraph comedies, in which Frank Daniels, the noted stage comedian, is starred, has been extended. The exact total of comedies in this series has not yet been determined, but there probably will be fifteen in all.

In the meantime, the following releases have been added to the series: February 5, "Capt. Jinks' Wife's Husband"; February 12, "Capt. Jinks' Love Letters"; and February 19, "Capt. Jinks' Cure."

William Fox's Academy of Music will play William Farnum in "The Price of Silence," for the first half of the week of January 8, and June Caprice in "A Modern Cinderella," for the latter half. "The Price of Silence" is the initial Fox super de luxe photoplay.

Miniature views of Richard Bennett's latest American-Mutual, "The Gilded Youth."

"The Gilded Youth" Released

Richard Bennett's handling of character, which has made him one of the leading figures on the speaking stage today, is brought into play in an entirely new and interesting way in his newest Mutual photoplay, the fifth in his series of film drama produced by the American Film Company, "The Gilded Youth," which was released the week of January 1.

In this screen drama Bennett plays the role of a fallen son of the idle rich, shiftless and almost good for nothing at all, who takes life as one sweet song, not caring what he eats or what he wears just so he does not go cold or hungry.

In the role of the girl who becomes the redeeming factor in the life of the gilded youth, Rhea Mitchell does able work. She is the maid—a very trim little maid with curly locks—in the second rate boarding-house where the youth holds forth, and it is the very good level head that goes with the pretty curls that brings the youth finally, after much wandering, back into the fold.

"The Gilded Youth" is perhaps one of the most human of all of Richard Bennett's screen productions. It is fired with the same subtle humor as "Philip Holden, Waster."

The cast includes Rhea Mitchell, Adrienne Morrison (Mrs. Bennett), George Periolat. Some of the most amusing episodes are furnished by a mule which proves quite as stubborn as "the gilded youth."

New Producer in Chicago

Another producing concern to enter the state rights field is the Dixie Film Company of Chicago, which has two productions to its credit and contemplates at least twelve a year.

The two completed productions, "Tempest and Sunshine," and "Just a Song at Twilight," have been sold in the Southern States to Tandy and Lynch. The territory secured by this concern includes Virginia, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas and Oklahoma.

Evelyn Greeley and Pedro de Cordoba are co-starred in the latest feature, with Miss Greeley going it alone in "Tempest and Sunshine."

A most attractive and unusual line of novelty advertising accessories have been gotten up, and it is thought that before the present year ends most of the American territory will have been disposed of and options granted on forthcoming features.

Miss Greeley is vacationing from Dixie pictures and is appearing in "Glass Houses" for the World Film Corporation. She will, in all likelihood, rejoin the Dixie concern at the expiration of her present activities under the direction of Mr. Brady.

The British and Australian rights to "Tempest and Sunshine" and "Just a Song at Twilight" have already been optioned.

John W. Heney, of Heney and Hawkins, is the central distributing headquarters for the Dixie products.

Picture Players Dance

Over 800 were present at the ball of the Motion Picture Players Club at Alhambra Hall in New York, last week. Lillian Walker, Gordon Gray and Patty Lee represented the Vitagraph Company. Others present were Miss Pauline Curley and Al. Hall of the Trinchera Film Company.

The beauty contest, for which a silver loving cup was offered, was won by Miss Ethel Hallor of the Grand Hall Playhouse. Another silver loving cup for the best attendance of motion picture clubs went to the Motion Picture Extra Players Association.

Tests Legality of Sunday Shows

Schenectady, New York, one of the cities fighting to make legal Sunday motion picture shows, opened its theaters last Sunday under the protection of an injunction order issued last week by Supreme Court Justice Henry V. Borst restraining Mayor Lunn, Public Safety Commissioner John E. Cole and Police Chief James W. Reynex from interfering with the motion picture exhibitors giving performances on Sunday. The larger portion of the theaters presented similar programs to week-day exhibits.

As far as the public sentiment is concerned in that city there is an overwhelming feeling in favor of the film houses and the Sunday shows are immensely popular; in fact, the people say that it does not interfere in any way with their church going on the Sabbath day.

Mitchell Kohn, representing the local exhibitors, stated that one of the Schenectady cases now on calendar for trial in police court may be stipulated for argument in the Court of Appeals, as a test case to supersede the case of Leroy H. Bender, who was arrested on a charge of violating the Sunday observance law in Albany some months ago, and adjudged guilty by the Appellate Division, Third Department.

SUNDAY SHOWS

Nation-Wide Fight to Be Made for Seventh Day Films—Plans Discussed at Meeting Regarding Legislative Measures

Plans for a nation-wide campaign to make Sunday picture shows legal were launched at a luncheon held in Delmonico's in New York, January 2, under the auspices of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. The meeting, at which William A. Brady presided, was attended by representatives of the industry from various parts of the country. Its object was to take active measures for legislature that will provide more liberally for the films in the various states that do not now permit exhibitions on the Sabbath.

At the meeting John B. Stanchfield and Samuel Seabury, attorneys for the National Association of Motion Picture Industry and the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, in their appeal from the decision against Sunday pictures up-state, were the chief speakers. They explained the legal phases of the case and pointed out the obstacles to be overcome in bringing about new legislation. John R. Freuler, of the Mutual Corporation, was another speaker.

As to whether the matter of Sunday shows will be taken up separately in the various states or be brought forward as a Federal measure, was discussed.

The count to date stands greatly in favor of the film men in their tilts with the law, and indications are the Sunday shows will be upheld when the case comes up before the Court of Appeals in Albany early next month.

While the third department of the Appellate division of the supreme court ruled against Sunday shows in the up-state district, the first and second departments of the same court subsequently upheld the legality of such shows in New York City and the outlying districts.

Other court decisions in favor of the motion picture folk have been rendered, and even up-state, where it was ruled illegal to exhibit pictures on Sunday, the proprietors of the various film theaters that were opened in defiance of the decision, were discharged in every instance following their arrests.

Discussion on Sunday Law

John B. Stanchfield and former Supreme Court Justice Samuel Seabury discussed the various legal aspects of the Sunday closing law, as far as it applies to the hundreds of moving picture theaters throughout the city.

Former Justice Seabury and Mr. Stanchfield answered questions from a legal viewpoint. William A. Brady, president of the association, addressed the gathering. Among the other speakers were Walter W. Irwin, chairman of the executive committee of the association.

MAXINE ELLIOTT TO GOLDWYN

Favorite on Two Continents and the Toast of Allied Armies, to Make Screen Debut in Goldwyn Pictures

Now the real reason for Maxine Elliott's hurried return to America from the battlefields of Europe, has become known. Miss Elliott is going to make her debut on the motion picture screen as a star for the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation.

In order to make her immediate screen appearance for her new managers, Miss Elliott is taking a several months' furlough from war relief work on a hospital barge in the canals of Flanders.

Despite the vogue of the screen and the fact that many other celebrities have entered pictures Miss Elliott has never had a desire to invade the cinema world. To all of the companies who have sought to entice her she has resolutely said "No."

The Goldwyn officers had several surprises during the last moment of their negotiations with this famous beauty. They asked what furnishings she wished for her dressing rooms, what type of motor she preferred to convey her to the studio and other questions of the same sort. Even the upstarts of the film business are very particular about these details. But Miss Elliott was not interested at all. She said:

All of us in Europe have seen so much that is distressing, so much that is chastening, so much that adjusts any sane man or woman's perspective—especially in Belgium and Flanders—that never as long as I live will I lay any emphasis upon receiving special favors and considerations above other men and women.

It would be a blessing if all men and women could come into contact with some of the phases of this great disaster that has befallen Europe. It would temper and subdue those thoughtless persons who think chiefly of themselves. Contact with this war brings the real man or real woman struggling outwardly for expression.

But, after all, do not let us use the personal pronoun just because I am entering motion pictures. It may sound amusing coming from a professional woman, but the egotistical promotion of players has constituted one of my chief objections to appearing on the screen. Everything is "I," "I," "I." My screen work will consist of appearing before the camera and very little talking.

On the canals of the Marne Miss Elliott has personally superintended relief work aboard a hospital houseboat, fitted out at her own expense and through contributions received from many distinguished sources. For more than a year she has been visited at this relief hospital and shelter by the most distinguished figures in the political and military life of Great Britain and France.

Among the many who made an inspection of her work on this craft were King George, the Duke and Duchess of Sutherland, Prince Alexander of Teck, King Albert of Belgium, the commanders of the British, French and Belgian armies and the chiefs of the aviation squadrons, whose special charge it has been to keep the barge and its occupants protected against attack from the air.

Announcement will be made in a few days of the distinguished director who is to introduce Miss Elliott to the public in her first Goldwyn Picture.

The Ivan picture, "Enlighten Thy Daughter," will, in all likelihood, be the next feature to play Broadway. It will open about January 15.

American Signs Gail Kane

Gail Kane, celebrated star of the screen and the speaking stage, has signed a long term contract to appear in American Film Company productions for Mutual distribution.

The contract and all formal legal agreements were closed December 23, by the signature of S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company, in Chicago—thus ending long negotiations which were opened through the Mutual's New York office.

Gail Kane, star of many stage successes, now signed with American.

Miss Kane is now preparing for her departure for Santa Barbara where she will begin work at the American's western studios about January 22. She is now appearing with important success in "The Harp of Life" at the Globe Theater in New York.

"Special preparations for the coming of Miss Kane have been begun on telegraphic instruction to Santa Barbara," said Mr. Hutchinson. "We are selecting for Miss Kane dramatic vehicles of the type which have constituted her greatest successes. Also our whole staff is devoting its efforts toward the selection of the proper supporting casts for each of the Kane productions. The selection of the supporting cast is being given unusual attention, with an eye on both the New York and the west coast fields.

Gail Kane is the third important star announced for Mutual productions for 1917. Marjorie Rambeau and Nance O'Neil, both now at work before the camera at the Powell Producing Corporation's studios in New York, were the first announced following President John R. Freuler's declaration of policy "Only big stars for the Mutual."

Gail Kane is one of the most beautiful women known to the screen. She is the statuesque type, classically perfect, yet with the endearing charm of intense humanness. Miss Kane's large hazel eyes and her masses of red-brown hair, are sufficient in themselves to afford an artist inspiration, to which her perfect features would at once convert into an obsession.

Miss Kane's career was begun under Charles Frohman six years ago. Among her stage successes were "Decorating Clementine," "The Model," and "Anatol," "Macushla" with Chauncey Olcott, "Myre The Adventuress" with George Cohan in his Broadway hit, "Seven Keys to Baldpate" and "The Miracle Man." In her present engagement at the Globe Theater, New York, in "The Harp of Life," Miss Kane is enjoying a great success. She was booked for this engagement last year, after she had made a great triumph for herself in Augustus Thomas' famous play "Arizona," in which Mr. Thomas himself induced her to make her first appearance before the motion picture camera.

During her screen career Miss Kane has appeared in "Her Great Match," "Via Wireless," "The Labyrinth," "Her God," "Paying the Price," aside from "Arizona."

Holbrook Blinn in "Pride"

McClure Pictures has announced the complete details regarding Holbrook Blinn in "Pride," which will be the second release of the Seven Deadly Sins, the series of five-reel features which is to be distributed by Triangle.

Mr. Blinn, the star, is supported by Shirley Mason, George Le Guere, Helen Strickland and Guido Colucci. This drama is an exciting story, welding a sharp sword upon persons who take themselves too seriously.

"Pride" tells of Eve Leslie, who is sent to boarding school and there poses as a daughter of a titled family. An Italian count seeks her hand, as does Eugene D'Arcy, a powerful banker, as proud as Eve herself.

D'Arcy, aided by the principal of the boarding school, takes Eve to a house party in the mountains in order to get her away from the Count and from Adam Moore, who really loves Eve but who is not worthy of her, the proud Eve believes. Eve escapes from the mountain cabin and motors toward the city, pursued by D'Arcy and Adam. Eve is to meet the Count and elope with him on board an ocean liner.

Escaping many perils, Eve reaches the Count and boards the steamer. D'Arcy is close behind. Adam stows away and is found and made a stoker.

On board the liner D'Arcy denounces the Count, who is an imposter and in turn is overthrown by Adam.

Eve is rescued from her difficult ties, into which Pride had thrown her, and thoroughly chastened, sees her errors and turns to Adam again.

The steamship scenes are especially exciting and accurate. They were made aboard the famous Carpathia, which was chartered for making the picture.

Mr. Blinn is one of the most notable stars on the stage, famous for his work on the speaking stage and in the film.

It was Mr. Blinn who directed the famous Princess Theater players in New York, and produced the exceptional one-act plays that were shown there.

Miss Mason and Mr. Le Guere, the McClure stars, are in each of the Seven Deadly Sins. They play the sweethearts whose story connects the series one after the other and who conquer each temptation in turn.

Holbrook Blinn, star of "Pride," first appeared upon the stage in 1878, as a child in "The Streets of London."

Mr. Blinn was born in San Francisco, and was educated at Stanford University. His London debut was as Wing Shee in "The Cat and the Cherub" in 1897. He is known throughout the United States for his excellent work in leading roles in New York and on tour in "Salvation Nell," "Becky Sharpe," "Lights of London" and other well known plays. Motion pictures claimed Mr. Blinn a little more than a year ago. He was starred by the World Film Corporation in such productions as "The Boss," "The Ivory Snuff Box," "The Family Cupboard," "The Butterfly on the Wheel" and "Life's Whirlpool."

Scribes See "Joan the Woman"

The first public presentation in Washington, D. C., of the magnificent Cecil B. DeMille production, "Joan the Woman," was given recently before more than two hundred press correspondents and writers of national affairs at the National Press Club, the prominent organization of writers in that city. Also present were representatives of every branch of official Washington, the diplomatic corps and the two arms of the national service. President Wilson, absent because of a previous engagement, was represented by members of the White House staff.

Mr. Lasky and Cecil DeMille, the director of the production, went to Washington for the occasion, accompanied by the authoress of the cinema script, Miss Jeanie Macpherson. As she was the lone woman in this gathering of men, the club graciously made her a ten days' member, the only instance when one of the gentler sex of authorship has been thus honored by the club. Mr. Lasky and his party were met by Theodore Tiller, the retiring president of the club. Mr. Tiller in his introductory remarks said the club members were especially desirous of meeting Mr. Lasky, having long wanted to know the man who had done so much for the art of the screen. Mr. Lasky was most cordially received and the modesty of his response won renewed enthusiasm.

"Joan the Woman," with Geraldine Farrar as the heroine, made a deep impression on the distinguished audience, who greeted its spectacular battle scenes with applause and to its artistic heights paid the tribute of thoughtful study and appreciative comment. A consensus of their reviews carried the conviction that in dramatic treatment, in realistic presentation and in the simplicity and straightforwardness of its story and sentiment it excelled anything they had ever seen on the screen.

A pleasant incident of the evening was the receipt of a telegram of felicitations and greetings sent to the club from Chicago by Miss Geraldine Farrar.

The arrangements at the club were in charge of George Mann, Paramount representative at Washington; Carl Pierce and Allan Rock of the Lasky staff, New York.

One of the strongest as well as the longest casts of well-known players ever seen in one photodrama was selected by Director Allan Dwan for Norma Talmadge's first production as a Selznick-Pictures star, in an adaptation of "Panthea." The cast includes Roger Lytton, George Fawcett, Earle Fox, Murdock McQuarrie, Count E. Von Stroheim, Norbert Wicki, Herbert Barry, Jack Meredith, Henry Thorpe, William Abbington, Winifred Harris, Ieleen Peisey, Stafford Windsor, William Lloyd, Dick Rosson, Frank Currier and J. S. Furey.

Mary Miles Minter Is "The Money's Worth"—Wins Box Office Favor in Many Theaters Throughout the Country

Here's a very new and very charming view of a very charming little star—Mary Miles Mutual Minter.

the release of her first picture, "Youth's Endearing Charm," on September 4, gives evidence of the inroads she is making on the affections of the motion picture public and exhibitors of the land. Chicago has 125 standing bookings with new accounts every day on the Mary Miles Minter Mutual offerings.

The Orpheum, one of Chicago's largest downtown theaters, has done record breaking business with these features so far, and expects to do still greater with "The Innocence of Lizette," the young star's fifth picture, scheduled for first run release.

The Pastime, another theater of the Chicago "loop" district, shows the Minter series. The Star Theater of Evanston has been very successful, booking these pictures for two and three days.

Among the other Chicago theaters are the Hamlin, Independence, Advance, Germania, La Salle, Lexington, Langdon, Orpheus, Paulina, Bryn Mawr, Vista, De Luxe, Albany Park, Kenmore, Criterion, Division, Logan Square, Century, College, Ardmore and Acme.

According to H. C. Hancock, manager of the New York Exchange, New York, Brooklyn, Long Island and other exhibitors of the territory are doing unusual business with the Minter productions.

Marcus Loew has them booked for his New York theater, Broadway and Forty-fifth street, his Avenue B and Broadway houses, and the Royal Theater in Brooklyn. The William Fox Amusement Company has them booked for the Riverside and Washington theaters. Among the other New York City theaters booked up on "Youth's Endearing Charm" and its successors are the Majestic, University, Bunny, Apollo, Manhattan and Seventy-second Street Playhouse.

The Carlton, Peerless, Regent, Classic, Sunset,

Parkside, Linden, Penn and Central are among the Brooklyn houses; the Crescent of Jersey City, the Bijou of Orange, the Garden of Richmond Hill, and the Strand at Hempstead, Long Island, are among the other theaters.

F. A. Schippacassi, manager of the National Theater of Akron, Ohio, after showing "Youth's Endearing Charm" at his house for two days, the second day of which, it may be added, the line which extended from his box office was even longer than the first, put in long distance calls to Canton, Sandusky and Youngstown and advised the leading exhibitors to take advantage of "the best thing on the market." These men, taking advantage of his suggestion, showed the picture with equal success.

During the showing of "Faith" at the Strand Theater in Seattle, Wash., the Seattle Times said: "Manager Smyth of the Strand is being repeatedly congratulated for the selection of the wonderful photoplay in which lovely Mary Miles Minter is playing the lead. Its title is 'Faith.'"

In Ottawa, Canada, Miss Minter's pictures are having a great vogue. The little star is herself extremely popular in that city, having visited there and made many friends among the public, the exhibitors and among the press.

Exhibitors Like Wholesome Plays

In view of the coming release by Pathe on January 7, of "Her New York," a Gold Rooster feature starring Gladys Hulette, the advertisement of H. H. Thomas, manager of the Strand Theater of Omaha, is of interest.

Mr. Thomas, like many of the exhibitors, believes in pictures of a sunshiny character. He announced "Prudence, the Pirate," in which Gladys Hulette starred, as follows:

I am changing another picture for you. The one I had booked was too full of much gloom. You can get gloomy enough at home figuring why eggs cost so much per dozen, or any of the other eatables or wearables that seem to be affected by the H. C. L., so when you go to a show you want to be amused. I have just screened Gladys Hulette in "Prudence, the Pirate," and let me tell you something—it is one of the most delightful comedies I have ever seen.

I know you will say the same after you see it, and when I tell you that the story is about one of the cutest little girls you ever saw, who decided to become a pirate after leaving school, you will surely want to see the many adventures that befall this little miss.

We have had some delightful pictures recently, such as "The Shine Girl." Well, here is another one I am hoping will be just as pleasing, and I am sure that when you leave the theater, you will come up and thank me for presenting you with this picture, instead of the one advertised which was just one "Gloomy Gus" after another for over an hour and a half.

Probably this feeling of distaste for morbid and heavy drama which Mr. Thomas indicates, is responsible for the heavy bookings by the Pathe Exchanges on "The Shine Girl," "Prudence, the Pirate," "Little Mary Sunshine," "Shadows and Sunshine," and "Joy and the Dragon," in the latter three of which Baby Marie Osborne stars.

The clean, wholesome, joyous and uplifting play of which these Gold Rooster Plays are such an excellent type, has come into its own.

Alan Hale, who recently left the Fox film forces to become leading man for Clara Kimball Young in her next Selznick production, "The Price She Paid," came into screenland by devious and varied paths of endeavor. He was in turn an osteopathist, soldier, railroad man, sailor, vaudeville actor, opera singer and last but far from least, a favorite figure of the screen.

Promote South African Films

A motion-picture company has been formed lately in South Africa for the promotion of the business throughout the Union, says Commerce Reports. It is stated that arrangements are under way for theaters in Cape Town, Johannesburg, Pretoria, Durban, Bloemfontein, Kimberley, Port Elizabeth, East London, Pietermaritzburg, Beaconsfield, Grahams Town, Woodstock, Claremont, and Wynberg.

As the business progresses, theaters may also be erected in many of the smaller towns. It is possible that the company will absorb some theaters now in operation. Films are to be obtained from the company's bureau in New York, and it is said that a continuous supply, twice a week, for the theaters owned by the company is to be provided.

Motion pictures have made great progress in that country. A Cape Town man who is already in the business will probably control the affairs of the new company.

Film Building for Detroit

It is very possible that Detroit will have an exclusive film building in the not very distant future.

The proposed structure is 10 stories high and will be located on Elizabeth street, near John R. The contracts call for the completion of the building by June first.

G. S. Trask, who was formerly manager of the Detroit Mutual exchange, is promoting the construction of the building and it is said that most of the local exchanges have already signed up for space.

Back from Australia

Fred Shipman is due to arrive in New York soon. He sailed from Sydney, Australia, several weeks ago.

"Neptune's Daughter" and other feature films which he had purchased for Australia, netted a handsome return. Mr. Shipman will investigate some of the largest feature pictures for the Australian and New Zealand markets. He represents the strongest purchasing power in the antipodes.

Doug. Fairbanks got a good start when he left Los Angeles for New York a week or two ago. The Keystone band tooted him out of town and the fifteen-year-old stars, Mildred Harris and Pauline Stark, were at his sides.

"Joan the Woman"

Cecil B. De Mille's Production at the Forty-fourth Street Theater, New York. Reviewed by George W. Graves

E RE the year 1916 has sunk into the past, one more epochal achievement, marking the onward rush of the screen toward loftier planes of attainment, is to be recorded as falling within the space of this remarkable picture twelvemonth.

It is with delight that those connected with the motion picture business and who naturally have its furtherment vitally at heart, as well as the motion picture's host of friends, welcome a production which has not only taken months of preparation, fortunes of money and the exhaustive efforts of experienced film workers to bring to completion, but which—more than this—vindicates its vast undertaking through unsurpassed dramatic and spectacular effect.

Miniature of one of the intense and powerful scenes in "Joan the Woman," the history-making De Mille production, with Geraldine Farrar in the stirring leading role

"Joan the Woman" is not so much a spectacle that this element overshadows the character work. The spectacular is introduced only as a natural requirement in the authentic interpretation of Jeanie Macpherson's powerful story woven about this great character in the world's history. Whenever it is required that there be a battle scene, hordes of men are aggregated fully equipped and scrupulously costumed according to the time. The enormity of scene depicting Charles VII's coronation, and many others of like magnitude is staggering. They all are impressively eloquent of Cecil B. De Mille's unconfined conception.

But when one gets to talking about the battle scenes, particularly those depicting the saving of Orleans by Joan and the patriots whom her magnificent enthusiasm has rallied to the occasion, one begins to realize the inefficacy of words to describe anything so overwhelming the emotions. This gigantic spectacle occurs as a throbbing climax to the first epoch—the picture is arranged in two epochs of about five reels each. In a hand-to-hand battle with swords and other devices of the time it is easy to see what a great factor the impetus of the warriors' bodies, moving in great frenzied masses, was in bringing about a successful charge.

One of the most impressive scenes of this mediaeval battle, which we believe to be the most remarkable thing of its kind ever produced for the screen, shows a muddy moat packed with a seething mass of hundreds of struggling bodies in such violent conflict that one is strung to the highest pitch of excitement at the marvelous realism. Lightning-like action is characteristic of all the battle scenes; every individual in the quantities of men employed is fighting a mortal struggle with all the strength in his being. All through the strife, and in fact all through the whole picture, the spirit of national feeling and the righteousness of the cause stands out as a peak of impelling motive, radiating the serene power and determination of Joan of Arc. The great power which the Maid of Orleans exerted over her followers is brought out in a splendid way, making the spectator feel sure of the fact that only her leadership is responsible for the saving of her country.

Geraldine Farrar's portrayal of Joan of Arc is one of the finest performances yet to appear on the screen or elsewhere. The highest praise is to be unstintingly awarded her. She is the very being of Joan, expressing the unflinching determination, the spiritual power and the sublime confidence attributed to this beloved heroine of France. Her spirit is the very heart and soul of the picture, for this great portrayal of character constitutes in a certain sense the immortality or soul of the picture in the same way the actual Joan provided an immortal epoch in history.

The first part of the picture devotes itself to the telling of the incidents which lead up to the appointing of Joan leader of the weakling King Charles' armies and the defeat of the English at Orleans. Joan has fallen in love with the daring English captain, Eric Trent. In the second epoch is the spectacle of Charles' coronoration. In return for her services Joan asks the King that he release Trent and that her townspeople may be untaxed forever. Cauchon, a traitorous and corrupt bishop who desires the downfall of his own king, as well as that of Joan, starts activities in league with La Tremouille, known as "The Spider," a man who keeps close to the weak-minded Charles and helps him to spend his life in careless indolence and absolute neglect of his country.

Cauchon's evil machinations result in Joan's arrest on the grounds of witchery and intent to secure the throne for herself. Trent, her lover, is forced to make the arrest and an extremely touching scene is that in which the maid accuses him of being her betrayer. Another pathetic incident in Joan's career is recorded when she is to be sold to the highest bidder. She is nearly stunned by the news that the King, whom she practically placed on the throne, has refused to redeem her—this, of course, being the result of The Spider's suggestions. England seeking her destruction, and Cauchon, the power of the church against her, Joan is speedily condemned in trial as being a witch and a relapsed heretic. The gross indignities which she suffers up to the time of her death at the stake and the terrible suspense of the preparations for her death are enough to bring tears to the eyes of those in the audience who have much sensitiveness. The malicious attitude of the heartless populace indicates the same carnal passions that crucified Jesus of Nazareth. So the death of this noble patriot of France brings an end to the second epoch which is as stirringly pathetic as the whirlwind close of the first epoch is exciting.

There is one thing which might stand criticism in the picture, and this not because it seriously effects the quality of the offering, but because it is so commonplace in modern "movie" construction. This is the fact that the whole story is a visualization of a modern French soldier's reflections. At the beginning of the film a volunteer is asked for to do a duty from which he will never return. So after he has realized the nobleness of Joan of Arc's sacrifice he, too, decides to give his life for his country, and sallies forth from the trench to his death. We would have enjoyed the film more without this modern insertion.

The acting of every member of the principals, and, in fact, of the whole cast is in keeping with the excellence of the whole picture. Raymond Hatton, as King Charles, Hobart Bosworth as his devoted general, Theodore Roborts as the corrupt Cauchon, Wallace Reid, the young English captain, and Charles Clary as "The Spider," all vie with each other in sterling performances. In the complete support are James Neill, Tully Marshall, Larry Peyton, H. B. Carpenter, Lillian Leighton, Marjorie Daw, Stephen Gray, Ernest Joy, John Oaker, Hugo B. Koch, William Conklin, Walter Long, William Elmer and Emilius Jorgensen.

The majority of subtitles are written in a sort of bas-relief moulded lettering which is highly artistic. The novelty of colored fire is introduced in the execution scenes, adding more to the grim horror of the occasion. The elaborate sets and costuming are as belittled by any description of words as are the impressiveness of those scenes requiring the massing of uncountable numbers of people. Not the least among the sensations of the piece is the death of Joan, the flames towering heavenward high above her, while she is still shown in the midst of the conflagration, wearing the same saintly expression.

Edison K-E-S-E Release of January 1. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

MARC MAC DERMOTT and Miriam Nesbitt are featured in this five-reel drama which is adapted from a book by the same name written by Maxwell Gray. Ben Turbett directed the picture. The chief appeal of the story lies in its pathos and emotional appeal and in its out of the ordinary settings. It is admirably adapted to a certain class of audience, an uncritical class which likes sentiment and pathos.

The outdoor settings representing scenes in Brittany, in the early part of the picture are pretty and interesting, though the photography might be improved. From the simple love story of the peasant girl, played by Grace Williams, and the American tourist, the play progresses to the unusual and dramatic final situations when the father condemns his own daughter to death, then tries to save her.

There is a lot of good material in the play, and while it is not handled in a way to make it a great drama, melodramatic and improbable events being brought in, still it has power to stir the emotions of melodrama-loving patrons.

The Story: George Crosby, artist and lawyer, traveling in Brittany, falls in love with a peasant girl, Renee, and secretly marries her. He returns to America, leaving the girl behind. Later a child is born to them, but George regrets his hasty marriage, especially when he falls in love with Cynthia Ford, a girl of his own class.

The peasant girl and her child are falsely reported killed in a fire and George marries Cynthia. Later Renee comes with her baby to America and discovers that George has remarried. She dies without revealing to Cynthia George's secret. George has the child cared for, but later loses track of it.

Years later, when George has become a judge and has forgotten his early affair, he is called on to sentence a girl for murdering her baby. Too late he learns that the girl is his lost daughter. The shock brings on a paralytic stroke. However, Cynthia, his wife, sets out to aid the girl and finally she is proved innocent, who is reunited to her young husband.

"The Man of Mystery"

Five-Part Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature Released January 8. Reviewed by George W. Graves

THE MAN OF MYSTERY is an absorbing tale, exquisitely produced, and smacking of originality in its plot. It features E. H. Sothern in the role of a brilliant Italian banker who, while on business in Naples, meets with an accident on the Mount Vesuvius, being pinned under a heap of hot ashes. Hardly recognizable in appearance he is taken to a specialist, while his wife back in Rome believes him dead. When the specialist is through with his treatment, David Angelo emerges from the bandages an entirely new man. So changed is his appearance that the doctor suggests that he can stay "dead" if he wishes to. Realizing that his wife really does not love him, Angelo determines to start things all over afresh.

Arrived back in Rome, David goes through a number of interesting experiences. He spies on a band of conspirators who are compromising his innocent wife and prevents his unscrupulous partner from robbing his wife of the fortune he has left in the partner's keeping. All this time the wife, Clara, has been falling deeper and deeper in love with her remarkable deliverer who never is in such a tight position that he cannot extricate himself. Finally David is accepted by Clara as her second husband. One of David Angelo's banking associates finally identifies him and the wife is presented with the startling news that she does not need to marry again, but needs only to welcome back her husband, come, as it were, back to life.

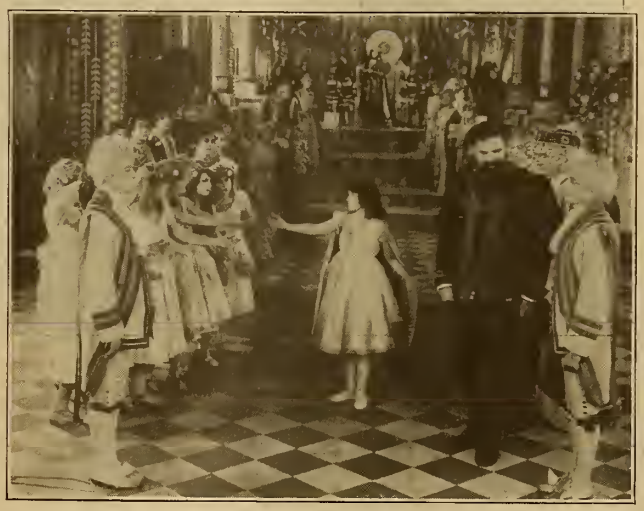
E. H. Sothern, polished actor that he is, does excellently with certain aspects of his role, but it is quite evident that he has not yet fully mastered the technique of the screen, some of his acting being a little mechanical. This, however, does not greatly depreciate the value of his characterization, nor alter the fact that the whole picture revolves around his magnetic personality. In Mr. Sothern's support is a carefully selected cast of unusual ability. The principals are Charlotte Ives, Vilda Varesi, Mr. Roberto, Brinsley Shaw and Mr. Siegel, Miss Ives carrying convincingly the part of the wife, and Brinsley Shaw making an excellent heavy.

The story, while not over-convincing, has much good material, and its production serves to keep one sunk deeply in its contemplation. The situations forming themselves from the position in which David finds himself near his wife, and yet has to resist the awful temptation to take her in his arms, are cleverly handled. A. C. Hunter wrote the story, while Fred Thomson shows himself to be a talented director. "The Man of Mystery" is a high grade offering which can easily be played by the best houses. The fact that E. H. Sothern has the leading role is an invaluable advertising asset.

"Snow White"

Famous Players Feature in Five Parts. Released December 25. Reviewed by George W. Graves

AT last the supreme picture for the "kiddies" has arrived. This screen interpretation of Grimm's classic fairy-tale provided by the Famous Players' artists is from every angle highly satisfying. Fascinating to children and their parents alike—for few of the older folks can resist the charm of a finely screened fairy-tale—"Snow White" ranks without question among the premier releases of the year. And even though it be a fairy story no one can complain of any lack of good drama. A dominant note of the picture is its human, emotional qualities. Places where one could complain of slow action are at a minimum. Even if the picture were stretched out for a greater length, it is doubtful if people would complain—being under the spell of the witching production.



Marguerite Clark in "Snow White"; one of her stage successes.

This was one of Marguerite Clark's stage successes. In the realm of fairyland, however, where strange phenomena are wont to appear, the tricks of the movie photographer outclass any effects of mystification which can be secured on the stage, thus making up sufficiently for whatever may be lost through the absence of the voice. J. Searle Dawley's previous artistic handling of Miss Clark's pictures is a base for the expectations of those people who anticipate something above the ordinary in the screen interpretation of the Grimm brothers' fairy story. The director's part in the picture's success is a large one. The title of the film carries in itself the air of wholesome purity to be found in the picture. To say that Marguerite Clark is merely appealing in this production doesn't do her justice at all, because she is even more than this—use whatever word you like.

In developing advance advertising on "Snow White" the exhibitor can hardly over-emphasize the exquisiteness of its staging, and the exceptional way in which trick photography was made to subserve the desired results.

The part of Queen Brangomar, who with the help of the wicked Witch Hex, has usurped the place of "Snow White," forcing the latter to slave in the kitchen, is very ably handled by Dorothy G. Cumming, while in the role of Prince Florimond, who finally delivers the much-plotted-against little princess from her persecutors, is Creighton Hale. The latter does not figure very prominently, nor does he have much opportunity to register dramatic expression, but he makes an admirable prince. Lionel Braham is the chief hunter, Berthold, who proves such a staunch friend of the little princess. A very compelling scene is that which he, by orders of the wicked Brangomar, attempts to kill "Snow White," but utterly fails in the attempt. This scene is one of many which contain at once a pleasant mixture of humor and pathos. Alice Washburn is a real "honest-to-goodness" witch.

"Snow White" will afford an hour's thorough enjoyment to practically every one, but especially the "kids," who, if they are normal, will become delirious with delight.

"The Victim"

Latest William Fox Five-Reeler Features Valeska Suratt. Reviewed by George W. Graves

"THE VICTIM," written and directed by Will S. Davis, is a melodrama with plenty of action and all the excitement needed for a picture of its style. But a number of the picture's thrills are conventional, and certainly the developments in the story do not stray far from the general formula of regulation melodrama. Coincidence is an ever-present element in the story. On its merits as a production of real power and consistency, logical and otherwise, this picture does not attain to much, but the kind of audience for whom it was obviously intended will be well satisfied.

Valeska Suratt, in this "fight against fate" brings all her usual resources into play, but her work is not always convincing. The principals in her support are Herbert Heyes, Claire Whitney, John Charles and Joseph Edwards.

Miss Suratt is Ruth, a woman for whom fate has in store many trying experiences. Both Ruth and her father serve prison terms, but the woman's luckily, is a relatively short one. After her release Ruth becomes the wife of the wealthy Dr. Richard Boulden, who knows nothing of her past. Merrill, Ruth's father, escapes from prison and an unscrupulous detective, the same one that "sent up" both father and daughter years before, is put on his trail. The detective, in attempting to blackmail Ruth, is shot by Merrill, who enters at this moment. Merrill runs away, his daughter is accused of the crime, and later put through an inhuman third degree. This scene, by the way, is strung out pretty long. At the time Ruth is undergoing the third degree, her father is injured in a fire. Dr. Boulden is summoned to his assistance, the confession made—and so all ends happily.

This is not a remarkable picture, one way or the other, but it is not the first of its kind, and those that have gone before have brough in the business in some localities.

"Starring in Western Stuff"

Two-Reel Selig Comedy Drama. Released January 8. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

TOM MIX, having produced innumerable "western" photoplays, in this one has some good fun at his own expense. He treats in comedy fashion the fortunes of a picture company making "westerns," and the result is one of the best short-length plays Selig has offered for a long time. It is full of the sort of situations which win laughter in all audiences; it has an unusual flavor, and it has rapid action with comedy spirit throughout. In short, it has that playful humor which comes when people are in a mood to jest about a business they know well and usually regard with great seriousness. The subtitles are written in the same jesting spirit and everyone from director to cameraman is ridiculed. While all audiences will be entertained by the play, it will be especially appreciated by those who have seen the western plays put out by the Tom Mix Company.

The Story: Tom Sage, cowpuncher, falls in love with Vivian Larkin, a picture star. Her company comes to a location near the ranch to film a western drama. Tom watches from afar until he becomes disgusted with the leading man, when he interferes. However, his methods do not meet with much success and he asks the aid of his cowboy pals. So they stage a little drama of their own, in which the cowpunchers break up the scene and kidnap the leading lady. Then Tom plays the hero and rescues the girl, who out of gratitude accepts his proposal of marriage. The rest of the company disband, the leading man returning to his original occupation of working with a section crew.

Chapter 12 of Helen Holmes-Signal Serial. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS serial holds up remarkably well throughout its entire course. It is an especially good continued screen-story, having all the thrills we have come to expect in serials and also a plot interesting in itself, which is more unusual. All the commendable remarks made about the opening chapters can be repeated regarding the the following installments. There has been no drop in interest. In many respects it has increased in story value.

The cleverly presented thrills and spectacular stunts, the excellent photography, the charm of the locations and the interest in the industry dealt with, as well as the popularity of Helen Holmes and her supporting cast, unite to make the serial pleasing to fans in every locality.

The events in chapter twelve are typical of those in the preceding chapters.

Chapter Twelve: When Stephen Holmes, Helen's half-brother, attempts to come to reach the goldmining camp by canoe, one of Dollar Holmes' men shoots away his paddle so that he is left to the mercy of the rapids, with falls a hundred feet high half a mile away. Helen sees the situations from the window of a train, leaves the train and rushes to a bridge over the river, from which she drops a rope and rescues Stephen.

Further events in the chapter deal with the growing discord between father and son when the younger man, growing disgusted with Dollar Holmes' dishonest methods, turns to aid Helen and her friends. The elder Holmes finds in other ways that his evil methods are bringing him trouble and at the close of this chapter he suffers the indignity of a "ducking" in the river by the angry lumberjacks.

"The Awakening of Helena Ritchie"

Metro Drama in Five Reels Released December 18. Reviewed by George W. Graves

THIS picturization of Margaret Deland's novel is not free enough from morbidity to be effectively dramatic, and it is also lacking in light touches of any kind to relieve the depressing atmosphere. However, there is a certain trueness to life about the story, and many of these truthful situations are brought home in a strong manner by the accomplished star. We have seen Ethel Barrymore in more attractive roles, but still, the story of this picture does not keep her from getting in some strong scenes. There is a large cast in support of the star, some being very good, while others failed to register convincingly.

John Noble's direction is uniformly good—in the creating of atmosphere he has been especially successful.

The story tells of what happens to the wife of a brutal husband after she leaves him, an act in which she is perfectly justified. The only person Helena has to turn to for a helping hand is Lloyd Pryor, who takes her away with him, promising to marry her when her dissolute husband shall have died. Pryor and the woman live in the country town of Old Chester, whose people believe them to be brother and sister. Finally, when word comes from Paris that the woman's husband is dead, Pryor, the deceiving sympathizer, refuses to make good his promise of marriage, having grown tired of Helen. He tells her to choose between him and Dave, a little boy she has adopted, knowing she will not part with Dave for any consideration.

Helen then goes to Dr. Lavendar, the minister, and confesses her false life to him. He condemns her and forces her to give up the child. Her willingness to do this for David's sake, realizing through the parson's declamations that she is not fit to be his guardian, finally convinces the old minister of her contrition and therefore her worthiness to have the child. But the minister turns from an uncharitable attitude to one of compassion and consideraion so unexpectedly that it almost takes one's breath away. So as the story ends, a surprise awaits Helena and her joy is full when the boy is given back to her.

Robert Cummings carries the part of Lloyd Pryor with forcefulness and Frank Montgomery, J. A. Furey and little Maury Stouart have important roles. The picture was produced by Rolfe Photoplays, Inc.

We certainly do not consider this picture up to the proper standard of features, mainly because of the story's poor screening qualities and its lack of real dramatic "pep." But those who come to see Miss Barrymore will not be disappointed with her individual efforts.

"Hearts Afire"

Reissue of Powerful Clara K. Young Subject by World Film. Reviewed by George W. Graves

"HEARTS AFIRE" is a re-release of the popular Clara Kimball Young picture which appeared a long while back under the title of "Hearts in Exile." It is a splendid drama having to do with the machinations of a wicked Russian Chief of Police, who exercises the full force of his powers in a corrupt way. The story, by John Oxenham and Owen Davis, is suspenseful, convincing and developed with a view to getting the last ounce of dramatic value out of the excellent situations. It was a story of possibilities, and the possibilities have been realized.

Especially fine in this subject is the Russian atmosphere. The character of the country is as well delineated as the characters of the several players. Those who saw this release when it first came out will probably remember the wonderful winter scenes and the sensational chase across the snowy plains which leads to the climax of the story. The writer has yet to see snow scenes surpassing these in beauty. The interior settings also bespeak a large outlay of money, all of which went in the noble cause of realism. The picture has been brought up to date very noticeably in the artistic handling of the subtitle backgrounds.

The portrayal of the part of Hope Ivanovna in this picture is among the most powerful of Clara K. Young's career. She seizes every chance the excellent story offers and turns it to profit. In her support Vernon Steele, as her lover, Claude Fleming, her lover and husband, Montagu Love, the malicious Chief of Police, and Paul McAllister, as a leader of nihilists, give sterling performances, one and all.

Hope Ivanovna, in gratitude for the release of her lover, Paul Pavloff, who has been saved from the clutches of the tyrant Chief of Police, marries Serge Palma, the man who interceded for Paul. Nicolai, the Chief of Police, determined to get Serge Palma out of the way and to have Hope for himself, has him sentenced to Siberia on a false charge. Finding Nicolai trying to force himself upon the helpless Hope, the Chief's jealous mistress determines to get Hope out of her way. She discloses to Hope the secret knowledge of her husband's whereabouts in Siberia, making her promise to follow him.

Paul, sentenced to a short term in the Provinces, meets Serge, and for the sake of Hope exchanges places with him. So it turns out that later, when Hope arrives in the Siberian town of Kara, it is not Serge she meets, but Paul, under her husband's name. In order to protect Serge from death, the two are forced to live in the cottage as man and wife, each trying hard to fight down the voice of love and to be true to Serge. So when news comes that Serge had been killed trying to escape on his way to the Provinces, the two realize that the barrier between them is lifted, and, in the absence of a priest, they perform their own marriage rites.

The two are dumbfounded some time later when Serge knocks at the front door of their cottage. A strong scene follows, in which the nobleness of all concerned is manifested. The Governor learns of the truth concerning the three, but Paul, Serge and Hope manage to escape in a sleigh, though they are hotly pursued by men on horseback. After miles of hard driving, the pursuers close in and there is a lively pistol fight, in which Serge is killed. The pursuers are bested, however, and Paul and Hope are left together, as if by the hand of destiny.

"The Iced Bullet"

Five-Part Triangle-Kay Bee Features William Desmond. Reviewed by George W. Graves

THIS play by C. Gardner Sullivan is well seasoned with originality. As far as the first reel reveals one thinks the picture is going to be a comedy. In a humorous way it depicts the trouble an unknown author has to get to the right man in the new Ince studios with his script. While going about this, the public is afforded some interesting scenes of this gigantic plant. Mr. Desmond is cast as the young author who, after some adventures, but no results in making it known that he has a really wonderful story, falls asleep in one of the offices of the company. From here on is the visualization of his dream, constituting a very well presented mystery story, with Mr. Desmond in the role of the detective.

The detective drama tells of a murder that has happened in a mountain lodge. The doors of the victim's room are locked from the inside and there are no evidences of a shot coming from the outside. The rich victim's ward, Donald Greene, was miles from the scene at the time of the shooting, in fact, it was he that brought the detective from New York. Suspicion is very cleverly directed towards the butler (for the spectator's sake), it being shown that the butler had protected his son, an escaped convict, on the night of the shooting. The butler is also shown to be very nervous while the investigation is going on.

Detective Lee, of New York, while rumaging around, discovers water leaking from one of the logs in the wall. This leads to an astonishing discovery which, to be brief, culminates in the conviction of Donald Greene, the ward. Those who want to know how and why, will have to see the picture, as we don't want to take any of their pleasure away.

After the drama has come to an exciting climax, the poor author is shown waking from his sleep in the office, which is now dark. Realizing the length of his nap he makes haste to get out and away, receiving a warm reception at the hands of the night watchman and barely escaping with a sound hide. The last flash shows him running toward the horizon at break-neck speed.

A very capable cast is used to interpret this refreshing offering, Margaret Thompson is "the girl." Robert McKim is a very fine heavy, and others are J. Barney Sherry, J. J. Dowling, Jerry Storm, Louis Durham and J. Frank Burke. Reginald Barker's direction is excellent.

"The Iced Bullet" is one of the best pictures coming lately from the Ince studios, and we heartily recommend it as a good attraction anywhere.

remembered, is the faithful servant who has stepped into the place of the dead Peter Barr in guarding Phillip's interests. A letter left by Phillip's supposed father instructs him to take "the sealed packet" to Paul Barreto in Paris. The journey is commenced, but in Chicago, Phillip and Juan, as well as the Princess Julia (traveling incognito), who is drawn into the affair, become the victims of Madame Savatz. But in spite of the plotters' carefully laid plans and their manifest show for success, the three slip through their fingers.

"The Sealed Packet" is a fitting addition to the first two episodes. Suspense is an element not forgotten, and because this is so well provided for the release holds from start to finish. The incident of the detained telegram by which Mme. Savatz obtains her information, and the accompanying developments are effectively handled. Detail is closely watched by the director as it was in the first two installments.

Charles Richman and Dorothy Kelly maintain the spirit of their parts, the latter being much more in the foreground than the former in this episode, which, the exhibitor may rest assured, will keep his audience interested.

"The Gilded Youth"

Richard Bennett in American Five-Reeler, Released January 1. Reviewed by G. Harris

The audiences which liked "Philip Holden, Waster," will like this play as well or better. It is the same kind of a comedy drama, though plot and characters are not alike. Its appeal is the same. It is especially to a high-class audience, keen enough to recognize clever touches of humor not of the obvious sort. There are many funny situations, but the best humor lies in the character drawing.

Richard Bennett's role is a little like that in "Philip Holden." Here he is again a ne'er-do-well, an impractical fellow who by a streak of fate makes a fortune. The social sphere is different, however, and instead of being forced into social life, in this picture, he lives in a cheap boarding house and has trouble earning enough to support himself.

The story contains many excellent points and it should prove entertaining in any theater. It is a truly acceptible offering. Bennett's work, the clever story and subtitles written by Al Santell from the original story by Aaron Hoffman, the good directing by George Sargent, and the highly commendable acting of the supporting cast, combine to make it so. Rhea Mitchell plays well the leading feminine role. Alfred Hollingsworth and Charles Newton have important character parts, Adrienne Morrison and George Periolat also are clever in their roles. Another player not to be overlooked is the dog, Teddy.

The story: John Slocum is an unimportant clerk in an office who had begun work at fifteen dollars a week and is now getting eight. However, neither business nor finance worries him. When he falls in love with Mary, a servant at his boarding house, both begin to save from their meager wages. John's Uncle Henry is very ambitious for his nephew, and wishes him to marry Bess, once John's playmate, now a successful picture actress. But John is satisfied with present conditions and Mary. And Bess ridicules the shiftless John.

Then Mary finds a lottery ticket which wins a sable overcoat. John wears the fine garment, and its influence on him is the theme of the story. For it arouses his ambition. He begins to associate with those who wear sable. His appearance in other respects improves to equal the style of his coat. At last, through his new associations, he receives a tip on the stock market, risks the money saved for his marriage, and wins a fortune. Then, after a few complications arising when Bess changes her mind and decides to win John and his fortune, he and Mary are at last married.

"A House Built Upon the Sand"

Five-Part Triangle-Fine Arts Offering Features Lillian Gish. Reviewed by George W. Graves

USING the metaphor in title above, it would seem to us that the producers of this picture had decidedly built a house "upon the sand" when they constructed this photodrama on the flimsy story material they had in hand. The story of this picture doesn't convince one of very much, in fact, it doesn't give him any sensation one way or the other. The story is practically lacking in unity of plot and action. The best thing it does is keep Lillian Gish before the camera a large part of the time—which thing is very fortunate, for Miss Gish is always good—and offer a few bits of comedy.

Evelyn Dare, a spoiled society girl, recently married, is forced by her husband to live in a cheap house and wear plain clothes. David, the husband, is interested in sociology, and has made his home among the factory people, although he is really a man of means. It takes Evelyn some time to get over her peevishness, but when she is about to forgive him her mind is poisoned against her husband by a man who wishes to avenge himself, so husband and wife are again at odds. But David rescues his enemy from a burning building and so causes the enemy to change into a friend. The latter then goes to Evelyn, tells her what a deceiver he has been, and a reconciliation of man and wife follows.

The picture is very well acted, both Roy Stuart and William H. Brown, the two most prominent in Miss Gish's support, being as convincing as they are splendid types. One "stunt" fell to the director, Edward Morrisey, that of staging the rescue from the burning house. There was a medium-sized thrill to this.

Although "A House Built Upon the Sand" may please some of the less particular people because of its good characterizations and some bits of humor, the picture certainly does not rank with the kind of films we are used to seeing under the Fine Arts banner.

"The Americano"

Triangle-Fine Arts Fairbanks Offering in Five Parts. Reviewed by George W. Graves

"THE AMERICANO" is a thoroughly enjoyable picture, and it has just the right mixture of good comedy and melodrama to take the audience by the nape of the neck and force it to be pleased and thrilled. That the critical people in attendance at the Rialto Theater in New York were well satisfied with this latest Fairbanks attraction was well demonstrated by their outburst of enthusiasm after the picture was over.

Douglas Fairbanks in his latest Triangle jollyfilm

"The Americano" is much more serious than any other of the late Fairbanks pictures. It has a story of good holding power which develops some fine melodramatic situations toward the end, giving the star a chance to do some vigorous "strong-arm stuff." Even while embroiled in a most strenuous hand-to-hand battle with his low-browed adversaries "Doug's" smile is wide and serene. Getting the best of half a dozen greasers seems to be all in a day's work with him, certainly it is nothing to get worried about. In one case where "Doug" leaps from a table and lands on the neck of one of the conspirators a number of feet away, we wonder what the hospital bill of the unfortunate victim was. This leap brought forth a burst of applause from the audience, as did another from the balcony of his sweetheart's mansion to a tall sapling tree hard by. Hardly enough "by," however, for one of less agility than Fairbanks. No easy-to-climb-on vines such as grew below Juliet's balcony are required by him when the right girl is waiting aloft.

The heroine of this picture is Alma Reubens. The spectators will have no trouble in realizing that with such a girl crying for deliverance, Blaze Derringer, the American, is justified in risking his young life in the headlong way he does. She is cast as Senorita Juana de Castalar, daughter of the "jugged" Paragonian Presidente. The evil usurper, the former Minister of War, Espada, is forcing her to choose between two things: to marry his henchman, Gargaras, or to have the pleasure of seeing her father shot. The Americano tells her to pretend to comply with the villain's demands, as he will deliver her in time.

An underground passage to the Presidente's prison is discovered, and the Americano rescues the unfortunate deposed head of the government after he has done a goodly portion of old-fashioned battling with a legion of greasers. The scene in which he bursts through the door into the prison chamber and his lightning-like handling of the touchy situation in which he finds himself is one of red-hot melodrama.

At the hour of ten Senorita Juana is to marry Garagas. About two minutes before the fatal hour, however, Derringer arrives with the beloved Presidente and makes a fool of the usurper before the people. The Americano returns money stolen from the army by Espada and promises the delighted mob that he will open and run the long-idle mines of the country. It seems the little republic was helpless without an American engineer to run its mines, and for this purpose Derringer originally invaded Paragonia. So with his work all cleaned up, the Americano is now free to marry the girl of the balcony and live a life of happiness.

Pictorially this offering is all that could be desired, some exquisite backgrounds (probably from one of the California expositions) being employed to give the gay atmosphere of the sunny South American republic. The action is also intelligently directed by John Emerson. The story was by Anita Loos and John Emerson. In the excellent support are Spottiswood Aitken, Tote Du Crow, Carl Stockdale, Charlie Stevens and Lillian Langdon.

"The Honorable Mr. Oxenham"

Fourth Episode of Vitagraph's "The Secret Kingdom" January 15. Reviewed by George W. Graves

IN the fourth episode of this comment-creating serial we have some interesting developments giving both the stars, Dorothy Kelly and Charles Richman, a chance to get in some emotional acting. In New York, where Philip is stopping en route to Paris, Madame Savatz conspires with the "Honorable Mr. Oxenham," an underworld friend of hers, to both obtain the sealed packet and take Phillip's life. Phillip is misrepresented to Julia both by Mme. Savatz, who claims he is an imposter, and by her father, the usurping Prime Minister, who says virtually the same thing, and the result is that Julia cuts him off, though hating to do so, without an explanation of any kind.

Thugs, under the bidding of the conspirators, attack and wound Phillip, getting the packet. Phillip, now aware that the girl is a princess, is nursed back to health by her. Mme. Savatz heedlessly gives the stolen packet to Julia, not dreaming that she is in touch with Phillip to give it to him. But give it to him she does, and Savatz and Oxenham have to start all over again. The second attempt to obtain the packet marks the finish of Oxenham's activities, for he is recognized by the police and taken where he can do no more harm.

Logic has not been quite so clearly adhered to in this episode as in former ones, but this episode has the same good action and is as well produced as the others. The cast employed to interpret these pictures is an exceptionally fine one, as is demonstrated by its performance in this number. Louis Joseph Vance's conceptions are no less romantic or attractive in this episode but they do not convince quite as they did in the first three.

With a number of well-handled thrills, good acting, and a moderately well sustained story interest, "The Honorable Mr. Oxenham" makes an entertaining offering, one which will no doubt make the followers of this serial come back the next week full of curiosity.

"The Island of Desire"

Five-Part William Fox Melodrama Released December 31. Reviewed by George W. Graves

CASTING aside all respect for reason and likelihood one may become interested in this latest William Fox thriller, featuring George Walsh. It is an ovedrawn melodrama which is carried largely by the spectacular thrills which are introduced again and again with breathless rapidity. The larger part of these are handled very convincingly by the director, Otis Turner, the volcano scenes and the sinking of the "Island of Desire" towards the end of the picture being exceptionally spectacular.

There are oodles of thrills in "The Island of Desire"

The acting of the piece is generally good, although some of the cast are inclined to over-act. The star puts realism into all his work, especially the fight scenes, but he would have made a much more convincing skipper and fighter of the "Seawolf" type, had not that great shock of hair bulging out back of his ears made him resemble so much a certain noted violinist. We never were convinced that a man with such evidences of an ethreal artistic temperament would make a fighter. The big muscular frame of the star, however, belies the suggestions of his hair, and the feats he does during the picture's progress certainly are virile enough.

George Walsh is cast as Bruce Chalmers, a newspaper man who stumbles onto some information about some pearls hidden on an uncharted island four hundred miles or so due east from Australia. In company with a murderer (William Burress), and a crook (Hershel Mayall), he sets sail for the place in a boat of rather small dimensions. We suppose this was to obviate the necessity of having a crew large enough to become dangerous. Arrived at the island, a lone inhabitant is discovered—a white girl (Margaret Gibson), who has been stranded there for months. She pours the pearls before eager eyes and at once there is a division among the men. Sayers, the crook, gets the gems in his possession and also casts covetous eyes on the fair maiden. So it is a battle for supremacy, Chalmers and the girl fighting against Sayers and the other villain.

While Chalmers and Leila are hiding in a friendly cave of refuge on the other side of the island, an active volcano starts to erupt. They make a sensational escape to the boat, where the crew proves loyal to its captain. Cannibals from a neighboring island now enter the action, but a few well-placed shots from the ship's howitzer puts them to rout. Meanwhile, the "Island of Desire" has sunk below the ocean's surface forever. Sayers and his henchman have a struggle between themselves over their booty, the result of which is the death of both. A photo of Leila's brings to light the fact that Sayers was really her father. As the picture closes, the lovers are sailing away to the "land of happiness."

The story of "The Island of Desire" has the appearance of being written around a certain number of spectacular feats which had to appear. But, in spite of this picture's grave lack of a really good story, it presents what a large number of people always devour with avidity. It at least has action aplenty, and there is no doubt of its being accepted in certain districts with delight. But it is hardly a picture which the exhibitor can afford to show to the most discriminating class of patrons.

Titles of Edison Pictures

An announcement of the names of some of the stories that have been dramatized and that are ready for release on the Edison Conquest Pictures program has been made by Thomas A. Edison, Inc. The titles of the dramatic features of the new program that have been completed and that will be included among the early releases confirm the recent announcement that the company has entered into a new and distinctive field and that the pictures to be released by them in the near future are very different from any that have been incorporated in any regular program in the past. They are based on stories by the world's greatest writers of stories for young people—stories of such great merit that they find as much appreciation among adults as they do among young folks. There is no doubt that such a program will find immediate favor with thousands of exhibitors who have been seeking in vain for pictures that are clean-cut and original and that are free from the banality and triteness of the majority of pictures that are being made.

One of the early releases on the Conquest Pictures program will be a two-reel dramatization of "Gallagher," the famous story that brought the late Richard Harding Davis to the attention of the literary world. This is one of the few great newspaper stories ever written and it lends itself admirably to screen production.

Two Ralph Henry Barbour stories also will be among the early Conquest Pictures to be released, according to present plans. They are, "For the Honor of the School" and "The Half-Back." Barbour is recognized as being one of the foremost writers of exciting tales of adventurous young manhood, and the two stories that thus far have been chosen for production are conceded to be among the best he has written.

Some other stories that will be released on the Conquest Pictures program are "Barnaby Lee," by John Bennett; "Shut Out in the Ninth," and "Chris and the Wonderful Lamp." The latter, by Albert Stearns, is a very clever and entertaining comedy and is an exceptionally good story for a general program. It tells how a modern boy finds and uses the magic lamp that Aladdin used so effectively in Arabia in the good old times of long ago. Needless to say, Chris and the genii of the lamp have some experiences that are uproariously funny. Some startling illusions add greatly to the effectiveness of this picture which is extraordinarily novel and entertaining.

Stories by Ellis Parker Butler and Rex Beach also have been made available for production for the Conquest Pictures program and the literary works of many other authors of established renown are under consideration at the present time.

Essanays January Releases

Essanay's January program of short subjects includes five of the strongest stories published in the Black Cat magazine, five split-reel comedies with scenic, and four more of the popular "Is Marriage Sacred?" series.

The January 2, or first Tuesday release, was "The Girl God Made for Jones." This marked Bryant Washburn's first appearance in a short production for some time. "A Dollar Down" on the following day was a 500-foot Billy Mason comedy with Alaska and the Yukon scenic. On Saturday, January 6, "When the Man Speaks" is the offering for the "Is Marriage Sacred?" series. Marguerite Clayton, Edward Arnold, Lillian Drew, Sydney Ainsworth and Thomas Commerford, form the special stock company for these productions.

All Black Cat features on Tuesday and the "Is Marriage Sacred?" releases on Saturday are designed for a screen time varying from 28 to 30 minutes.

"Among Those Present" is the Black Cat for January 9, with Richard C. Travers and Gertrude Glover. Canimated Nooz Pictorial No. 22 follows on January 10. On January 13, "The Wide Wrong Way" forms another of the "Is Marriage Sacred?" series.

"The Little Missionary," starting the next week, on January 16, is another subject for little Mary V. McAlister, the seven-year-old child star. "One on Him" is the January 17 offering, a split-reel Billy Mason comedy with Yosemite Valley scenic. "The Sinful Marriage" is the Saturday, January 20, offering of "Is Marriage Sacred?"

"Three Ways Out" starts off the week on Tuesday, January 23. This is a 27-minute Black Cat feature. Wallace A. Carlson's Canimated Nooz Pictorial No. 23 with more beautiful Alaska and the Yukon scenic follows on January 24. "The Magic Mirror," is the "Is Marriage Sacred?" offering for January 27.

In "The Price She Paid" Clara Kimball Young, the Selznick-Picture star will play the role of a girl who is forced to face life armed with only one weapon, her sex. She is made the victim of a marriage for money and the dramatic episodes of the story come through her mental and spiritual revolt against the slavery imposed upon her by her wealthy husband.

Sifted from the Studios

ATLANTIC COAST NOTES

Mabel Taliaferro has had her dressing rooms at the Rolfe studios redecorated. White and rose is the color combination used.

Violet Reed, of the Metro Corporation, is supporting Madame Petrova in "The Soul of Magdalene," under the direction of Burton King. In this picture she is playing the heavy lead.

June Elvidge, with several other picture players, left for the south to take some scenes in "The Final Hour," her current photoplay.

Claire Whitney, who has been ill in the Long Island College hospital for the last month, is rapidly recovering and will start work in a new picture soon, with the William Fox company.

Ned Burton has joined the Artcraft players to support Mary Pickford in "The Poor Little Rich Girl," under Maurice Tourneur's direction.

Grace George (Mrs. William A. Brady), William Christy Cabanne, Viola Dana and Evelyn Brent, of Metro, and Shirley Mason, Miss Dana's sister, are the latest additions to the large family of stage and moving picture folk who are skating at St. Nicholas Ice Rink, New York City.

"The Man Who Forgot," a Robert Warwick play, with Gerda Holmes and Doris Kenyon heading the cast, is the current World-Brady release. This is the drama for which the entire Prohibition forces gathered in Washington recently, lent their services for a parade and meeting on the capitol steps to be reproduced upon the screen.

Little Madge Evans, the World Film Corporation's child star, recently won a gorgeous wardrobe trunk in a newspaper popularity contest, and is hoping that some of the scenes of "The Web of Desire," the new Brady-made picture in which she has a fine part, will be laid down south, or out west, or somewhere far off. Otherwise Madge will be unable to use her new trunk, excepting to look at it.

Mrs. Ella Adelaide Fairbanks, the mother of Douglas Fairbanks, died on December 24 at her apartment at the Hotel Seymour, New York, before any of her three sons, who were racing across the country to reach her bedside, had arrived in the city. Mrs. Fairbanks was fifty-nine years old.

Owen Moore, co-starring with Irene Fenwick in "A Girl Like That," has been obliged by his cruel director, Del Henderson, to wear those "Come Hither Percy" horn-rimmed goggles throughout the entire picture. Moore's slogan for the past few weeks has been "Out of the goggles by Christmas," but the director refused to hasten the picture and Moore had to have a special dispensation in order to take off the glasses in order to see his Christmas turkey.

H. O. Hoyt, formerly head of the Metro-Rolfe scenario department, has been appointed to act in a similar capacity with the Goldwyn Film Corporation.

This beautiful bunch of hatred is Charles Clary in the leading heavy role with Geraldine Farrar in Cecil B. De Mille's historical production, "Joan the Woman."

C. W. Durand has arrived from California to act as special press representative in New York for Tom H. Ince.

Jerome F. Beatty, press representative of McClure Pictures, is the proud father of a nine-pound son, who arrived at the Beatty domicile in New Rochelle last week.

Mrs. Winnifred Harper Cooley, dramatic critic and writer of feature stories, has joined the ranks of the theatrical publicists with an office in the Longacre building.

Kitty Gordon will be seen exclusively in World Film productions for the next two years, having signed for that period of time with William A. Brady.

Contrary to report, Alice Brady will not appear in special productions during the forthcoming year, but will continue to be seen as heretofore in the regulation World program feature releases.

The World Film play formerly called "A Movie Romance," in which Robert Warwick is the star, with Doris Kenyon in the leading feminine role, has been changed to "A Girl's Folly." The story is about a movie actor and a susceptible maiden who becomes desperately smitten with him.

Ethel Clayton in "The Bondage of Fear" is the young wife of a sterling man considerably her elder, with whom she is genuinely in love. She is pursued by a persistent former lover, and is saved from his embraces by a burglar who kills him and hides the body, subsequently blackmailing the young wife until she is goaded to an act of supreme desperation.

Doris Kenyon broke a record last week. The picture player contracted to appear in person at Loew's Academy Theater, Fall River, Mass., and disdaining such plebeian things as railroad trains, negotiated the three hundred and fifty mile journey in her own motor car in seven hours.

As soon as the production he is presently working on is finished, Edwin Carewe will leave the Metro Pictures Corporation's directorial staff. He may head a company of his own.

Picture fans in Cincinnati gave Alice Brady a most enthusiastic reception recently when she visited that city to appear for a single performance of "Bought and Paid For" at the Alhambra Theater.

Lionel Barrymore has started work on his new Metro-Rolfe comedy drama, "Making Good." George D. Baker is directing the production and prominent in the cast is Hugh Jeffrey, who has worked with Mr. Barrymore in other Metro features.

American Film Company Inc. The declaration of a 2% quarterly dividend in the last month left the market unchanged. Stock was offered during last week, without takers, at 80.

Randolph Film Corporation. Stock is offered at 90 carrying the 50% of common stock.

Mutual Film Corporation. The announcement of the Frank Powell Production Company in connection with the Mutual and also the plan to bring Marie Dressler into the organization in a contemplated series of twelve pictures of this well-known star in "Tillie's Nightmare" made no impression upon the market of the securities. The real answer to this, of course, is the failure of the Mutual to meet its dividend requirements. From best advices obtainable, no dividends are expected to be paid in January, and both issues of stock are lethargic.

Lone Star Corporation. According to the latest reports, there are something under 230 prints of Chaplin in his latest release, "The Rink," now in circulation. Stockholders, however, seem to have lost interest in their stock as there is no bidding and a considerable quantity of common stock on the market around 41 to 42; preferred may be had around par.

Complete Record of Current Films

This record is intended to give, for the convenient use of the exhibitor in booking films, all the information about each film that it is possible to present in a space limited to one line. The classification is indicated by the letter at the left (D for drama, C for comedy, T for topical, S for scenic, E for educational, etc.). Next comes the date and the title, followed by the names of the stars in parentheses. At the extreme right hand end of the line is the distributor's booking number, preceded by the name of the producing company. The figure appearing just before this name indicates the number of reels—the italic letter S meaning a split reel.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

General Program

Starring in Western Stuff—(Two Reels)—Selig—January 8.—Comedy written by and featuring Tom Mix. Reviewed in this issue.

Among Those Present—(Thirty Minutes)—Essanay—January 9.—A Black Cat feature. Cast includes Richard C. Travers, Gertrude Glover and John Cossar. Colonel Stanton refuses to permit Robert Ricketts to marry his daughter, Grace, because Bob, a young millionaire, is an idler. As police commissioner, however, the colonel has not been so busy himself in the work of rounding up a notorious society burglar. The papers roast him unmercifully. Ricketts and Grace set out to capture the Raffles in order to prove that Bob is not altogether worthless. In laying their net at a society function, suspicion, by freak chance, falls upon Ricketts. The young millionaire is thus spurred to furious effort in apprehending the real robber, and finally does. Then Bob and the colonel make a little deal. Bob gives the colonel credit for capturing the burglar in return for his consent to the marriage of the young couple.

Canimated Nooz Pictorial No. 22—Essanay—January 10.—Cartoon by Wallace A. Carlson, with scenic. Canimated Nooz films a wrestling match in this number. After many tedious hours the contest is called off in order to give the contestants a chance to assume more comfortable positions. Sleep checks are given the spectators. Admiral Cheeseanrye of the Swiss Navy hears President Wilson's vivid descriptions of the American Navy and desires to inspect it. Secretary Joe Daniels whistles and the navy steams out from behind a rowboat. The first of a series of Alaska and the Yukon scenic shares this reel. It takes the spectator from Vancouver, British Columbia, to Taku glacier.

The Wide Wrong Way—(Twenty-eight Minutes)—Essanay—January 13.—In series, "Is Marriage Sacred?" Marguerit Clayton, Edward Arnold, Sydney Ainsworth and Thomas Commerford in cast. Constance Crawford and Hugh Chilvers are of different dispositions. She, standing at the portal of life, is eager to venture forth; he, who has seen all there is to be seen, desires to settle down. Hence, when they marry each other a barrier of uncongeniality rises between them. Constance listens to the evil counsel of Wilson Ardmore, Hugh's best friend, and seeks those pleasures she loves without her husband. The result is inevitable. The young wife is threatened with dire compromise when her sister, Agnes, who has had a past, rushes forth to rescue her. Agnes finds Constance in the net of the man who had brought sorrow into her life—Chilvers' best friend. Ardmore suddenly realizes the great wrong he is about to perpetrate, however, and brings happiness to Agnes as well as a better understanding between Constance and Hugh.

The Making of Bob Mason's Wife—(One Reel)—Selig—January 13.—Written by Marie W. Fellner and produced by Burton R. King. Robyn Adair, Virginia Kirtley and E. J. Brady have leading roles. Bob Mason, ranchman, marries a girl from the city, who becomes lonely in the country and runs away with a Jack Duncan. Mason follows and brings her back. Kittie realizes that she loves her husband but she fears she has forfeited his love. But when Duncan plots against Mason, Kittie aids her husband in overcoming the villain's plans and thus proves her worth and regains the love of Mason.

An Old Soldier's Romance—(Three Reels)—Gold Seal—January 2.—Featuring W. V. Mong. This story has to do with an old soldier who befriends a poor woman that cannot feed her baby. As things turn out, it seems that the police are hunting for Charles, the woman's husband, who has raised the amount of a check to provide for his little family. Charles is finally identified as Ezra's long lost son, so the story closes with a general reunion, Ezra paying up the stolen money.

Bombs and Banknotes—Victor—January 2.—With Wallace Beery. The janitor of a bank falls in love with the president's daughter and both go through many trials together, suffering many outrages at the hands of a band of crooks. But with the help of a bomb and a few other things the janitor shows himself too slick for his adversaries and the picture ends in the usual tumultuous style.

On the Trail of the Lonesome Pill—(Two Reels)—L-Ko—January 3.—With Phil Dunham and Lucille Hutton. Phil loses his job as janitor, and discouraged, ends up in an opium joint. Here he is given a pipe and immediately he is in the land of the Celestial Empire. He is taken into captivity by a powerful mandarin and made to guard his fish pond. A beautiful girl, who is also in the power of the mandarin asks for help. The two arrange a scheme which does not fool the mandarin, and things end in a general roughhouse.

"Piper's Price," with Dorothy Phillips, is at the top, and then come "The Whispered Name" and "The Mystery of Milady's Boudoir," with Violet Mersereau. All are early 1917 Universals.

Selig-Tribune No. 104—December 28.—London, England.—Interesting ceremonies mark the function known as the "Lord Mayor's Show." Jamaica Plain, Mass.—Owing to the ever increasing demand for real butterflies, the New England Entomological Company prepare thousands of beautiful specimens for decorative purposes. Juarez, Mex.—The mecca for all those devoted to horse racing. Washington, D. C.—Sailors from the U. S. S. Nevada take their short leave to visit Washington. New Orleans, La.—Wild fowl are turned loose in a flying bird cage, which is completed in Audubon Park, N. J. Philadelphia, Pa.—The University of Pennsylvania and Princeton play their annual soccer game in six inches of snow. Chicago, Ill.—Society women engaged in the work of preparing for the Allied Bazaar to be held here shortly, admire the $10,000 necklace donated. Western Headquarters, French Army on the Somme.—Many of the great new features in the present gigantic war would be impossible, were it not for these daring airmen whose feats have been emulated by their warring nation.

Selig-Tribune No. 105—January 1.—Eureka, Cal.—The U. S. submarine H-3, as she lies in the breakers after going ashore during a dense fog. Omaha, Neb.—The installation of a new double track bridge structure in 11½ minutes, sets a record for American engineering. Philadelphia, Pa.—This crowd of business men have adopted the slogan "Fat at 40 and fit at 60." Bakersfield, Cal.—The 34th annual meeting of the Pacific Coast Field Club is held with the best hunting dogs on the coast competing for honors. New Orleans, La.—Students at Newcomb College for Girls, are given a strenuous system of physical training. Quincy, Mass.—The new oil-burning freighter "Julia Luckenbach," is christened by Miss Andrea M. Fenwick. Cornell, Wis.—This little town has the distinction of being the only community in the world having and absolutely 100 per cent Christmas. Sandringham, Eng.—Women are doing the farm work on the great estates of King George at this place. Denver, Colo.—With funds raised by private subscriptions, a $9,000 automobile is added to the equipment of the Colorado National Guards. Los Angeles, Cal.—The latest innovation in education is the traveling school house introduced for the benefit of children whose parents are employed as railroad section laborers.

Mutual Pictures

Jerry's Winning Way—(One Reel)—Cub—January 11. Rube Miller, George George and Claire Alexander lead in cast. Jerry in an attempt to rescue a girl from a boarding house, where she has been placed by her father first projects himself into a melee with the police in which the latter get the wettest end of a garden hose. He disguises as a woman when he next makes an attempt at a rescue. He cannot resist the temptation to have a little fun with the cop, the boarder and the girl's father, who are misled by his costume and all make desperate love to him. Jerry's fooling on the job instead of tending strictly to business gets him into serious trouble and he does not effect the rescue.

The Vampires, Eighth Episode—(Three Reels)—Gaumont—January 11.—"The Poison Man." Venenos has become head of the Vampires, and Irma is aiding him. They learn of a dinner to be given to celebrate the engagement of Philip Guard to the girl he loves. They plan to have the Vampires serve the dinner and poison the food.

Tailor's Trimmings—(Two Reels)—Vogue—January 11.—Rube Miller, Owen Evans, Larry Bowen, Lillian Hamilton and Dorothy Armstrong are in the cast. Rube and Owen, two tramps, enter the town and the first party they meet, a banker, they hold up. To avoid suspicion they decide to get work of some kind and while wondering what it will be they come upon a deserted street car. The conductor's and motorman's clothes are in the car and so Rube and Owen don the uniforms and start the car. The motorman, Owen, becomes peeved because the conductor is collecting all of the fares and so he makes the passengers board the front of the car and "pay as they enter." Lillian, a tailor's wife, enters the car and begins a flirtation with the crew. While they are fighting over her she leaves them. Dorothy, another beauty, gets on the car and when she leaves the two follow her. She is bound for the tailor's, Lillian's husband, and when she arrives, Larry, the tailor, takes her out to dinner. Rube and Owen enter the shop and seeing Lillian order some clothes from her. They hide in some tailor's dummines on the proprietor's approach. From this point, the comedy assumes a whirlwind aspect and until the picture fades from the screen you are kept convulsed with laughter.

Shorty Hamilton and the Yellow Ring—(Two REELS)—SHORTY HAMILTON SERIES, THROUGH MUTUAL—JANUARY 15.—Featuring Shorty Hamilton. Shorty through an accident discovers a band of men, who are smuggling Chinese into this country. He goes to the city to get a position and there is hired as a body guard to Anita Keller, who is a secret service woman and has been sent out to break up the Chinese smuggling ring. Shorty overhears a plot to kidnap the girl and hires himself out to one of the band as a cab driver. He arrives at the Mandarin Inn, just in time to see Miss Keller disappearing in the door. Once in the den the girl is offered to the highest bidder and has just been sold when Shorty and the officers he had called in arrive. Shorty sees that Miss Keller arrives home safely, and feels a dawning of love for the girl. The girl gives him her photograph and card and as the scene fades she says good bye to Shorty and he is most disconsolate.

A Jack Tar in the Making—(ONE REEL)—U. S. DEFENDER SERIES—JANUARY 19.—This chapter deals with the graduating of the sailor lads from the landlubber's class into seasoned salts before they are admitted to the warships. Some extensive views of New Port and Annapolis Naval Academy are also shown in this reel.

The Vampires, Sixth Episode—(THREE REELS)—GAUMONT—DECEMBER 28.—"Satanas." In this chapter, Satanas himself, chief of the vampires, comes to the apartment of Moreno, who is fighting the crime trust. Irma Vep, former aid of Satanas but now under the influence of Moreno, is also present. She tries to protect Moreno but Satanas renders Moreno powerless by the use of his anesthetic needle and then delivers his massage.

The Vampires, Seventh Episode — (THREE REELS)—GAUMONT—JANUARY 4.—"The Master of Thunder." Irma Vep is captured and is sentenced to exile and prison for life. She is sent on board a ship bound for Algeria. Satanas, in the guise of a priest, gives her a message written in code telling her to feign illness so that she may be in the ship's hospital, near the stern of the vessel. When near shore, the master criminal will destroy the ship by a shot from his electric cannon. This will strike near the bow of the ship. In this way Irma is saved and returns to Paris.

Universal Program

A Gentleman of Nerve—VICTOR—With Carter De Haven and Madge Kirby. Nervy Nat, bound to get his girl in spite of her austere father, purposely throws himself before the girl's car, and thus gains entree into her house to recuperate, father's protests not prevailing over Southern hospitality. While out on one of their health rides, the two young people visit the minister. Many tribulations are doomed to be the lot of the two before father discovers their trick, but when he does, he proves that he is a "regular guy" in spite of appearances.

Episode 3 of "The Purple Mask"—After the discovery of the robbery of the Dupont pearls, detective Kelly orders everyone searched. The sly hand of Patricia slips the gems into Kelly's own pocket, to extract them therefrom later. On account of her splendid ability Patricia is crowned Queen of the Apaches. But Kelly raids the whole gang during the celebration, and after a hard run through the sewers of Paris captures Patricia. As the spisode closes, he is taking her, still masked and clothed in the Apache garb, to his apartments.

One Thousand Miles an Hour—NESTOR—JANUARY 8.—With Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Edith Roberts. "Honest" Harold has invented a chemical, one drop of which, mixed with two gallons of water, will run an auto for a thousand miles. Dan and Mike, two bad men, chloroform Harold. Tillie, beloved of both Harold and Dan, but loving Harold alone, rushes in, only to be confined in an old mill. Later Harold regains consciousness and rescues the girl from the two villains. Then comes a race for a one thousand dollar prize. Harold puts his chemical to work and the conspirators are blown up into the telegraph wires.

The Mystery of Milady's Boudoir—(THREE REELS)—GOLD SEAL—JANUARY 9.—Featuring Violet Mersereau and Johnnie Walker. Margaret, a pretty maid in the home of Mrs. Marshall, dons the clothes of a guest of the house and is taken for that guest by a wealthy young visitor. Frightened at the daring of her flirtation, Margaret secretly leaves the employ of the Marshalls during the night. The next morning it is discovered that a robbery has been committed in the house; Margaret is duly arrested and things look black for her. But the real crooks are finally caught with the goods and a bright future shines for the lowly maid, for Edgar, being much more attracted to her than to the girl he previously took her for, asks her to marry him.

Honorably Discharged—IMP—JANUARY 12.—With L. C. Shumway, Fred A. Kelsey and L. M. Wells. Hillar, honorably discharged from the army, finds that he has not enough money to buy his mount, Patsy. Later on he flays a team driver for beating his horses, subsequently discovering that one of them is none other than his Patsy. The driver has Hillar arrested for assault, but after the latter has related some experiences he and the horse have had in the army, the judge is perceptably influenced. The result is that the case is dismissed and Hillar gets back his old pet.

The Whispered Name—(Two REELS)—REX—JANUARY 12.—With Lois Wilson and Lee Hill. This is a mystery story which tells how an innocent man is forced to become a member of a gang of thieves through a strange decree of fate. Things become more and more complicated, but as the story ends, the man's fortunes take a turn and he not only rounds up the gang, but gets a girl whom, it seemed at the outset of the story was destined for another.

The Wrong Mary Wright—VICTOR—JANUARY 12.—With Edith Roberts and M. K. Wilson. This is a "summer vacation" comedy which deals with mixed identities. Wealthy Frank Brewer meets the "wrong Mary Wright," surely enough, but the wrong Mary turns out to be the kind of a girl he was looking for, so the mistake seems more fortunate than otherwise.

The Bad Man of Cheyenne—(Two REELS)—BISON—JANUARY 13.—Featuring Harry Carey and Priscilla Dean. Harry, unjustly accused of murder, is sought after zealously by a tough gang to whose interest it is to get him out of the way. In hiding, a faithful dog brings Harry his food, but Harry's place of concealment is finally discovered and he is brought to the sheriff for a lynching. In time past Harry has rescued the sheriff's little boy from death, so now the sheriff returns sacrifice for sacrifice, and allows the really innocent man to escape.

Midnight — IMP — JANUARY 14.—With Allen Holubar and Zoe Rae. This is a heart-interest drama laid in the slums of a big city. The story has to do with a secret revealed to a priest by a dying man, the latter wanted by the police. It seems that the death of the man's daughter had driven him to drink, which by its excessive use had, in its turn, driven him to his deathbed.

Wonders of the Orient, as Seen by Dr. Dorsey—(SPLIT REEL)—POWERS—JANUARY 14.—The first part of this reel is devoted to the educational study of the city of Pekin. The views shown give a comprehensive idea of the city's oriental atmosphere. On the same reel is: Mr. Fuller Pepp Celebrates His Wedding Anniversary—A comic cartoon. After indulging in strawberry cocktails on the occasion of his wedding anniversary, Mr. Fuller Pepp is tormented by some hideous nightmares, which make him come to a firm stand regarding his future attitude toward strawberry cocktails.

Universal Animated Weekly No. 53—JANUARY 3.—Ice skating brings out throngs of skaters in parks—Chicago, Ill. Science aids to clean-up debris after explosion fires iron works—Los Angeles, Cal. Holiday throngs join in chorus on Capitol steps—Washington, D. C. Lovers of animals give holiday treat to hard-working equines—Boston, Mass. Motor-aid-corps, that aids wounded soldiers, attend worship—Southend-on-Sea, England. Retreating Bulgars pillage city as they flee victorious invadors—Macedonia, Greece. German troops inspected by commanding officer in captured town—Lille, France. Suffragists pay impressive tribute to Inez Milholland Boissevain who died for cause—Washington, D. C. Simple ceremonies mark second induction of Governor Whitman as State's chief—Albany, N. Y. Cartoons by Hy Mayer.

Feature Programs

Hearts Afire—(Five Reels)—World Film.—Featuring Clara Kimball Young. This is a re-release of the famous Young Picture of some time ago, entitled "Hearts in Exile." Modernized, it is even more of an attraction, and will stand repetition anywhere. Reviewed in this issue.

World

The Man of Mystery—(Five Parts)—Vitagraph—January 8.—Featuring E. H. Sothern. The story, by A. C. Hunter, tells in a rather novel way of the experiences of a man who, being thought dead, is still living in a practically changed body, the result of a freak in nature in healing him of an accident. The picture was directed by Fred Thomson. Reviewed in this issue.

REAL GOLDEN EAGLES

William Randolph Hearst and his International Film Service, Inc., have no monopoly on Golden Eagle releases. Following a custom long prevalent among successful organizations the Burnet-Kuhn Advertising Company, 39 South La Salle street, Chicago, distributed golden eagles among their employes as Christmas remembrances, each gold piece being accompanied by a letter of appreciation for services rendered and wishing each recipient a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year. Every one, from department heads, down to office boys and stenographers, was remembered and Santa Claus in his corporate guise was voted a royal good fellow.

The Burnet-Kuhn Advertising Company, during the year just past, has designed and placed advertising of a national character for George Kleine's motion picture novel "Gloria's Romance," Pathe "The Grip of Evil," The Chicago Tribune's German War Pictures, the Mutual Film Corporation's multiple reel features, and the Mutual serials "A Lass of the Lumberlands" and "The Perils of Our Girl Reporters."

$200,000 Film Fire

POPULAR PLAYERS STUDIO DESTROYED—PRODUCTION GOES ON AT ROLFE PLANT

THE Popular Players studio on West Thirty-fifth street, New York City, was destroyed by fire on Sunday, January 7, injuring three persons and causing the loss of property valued at $200,000.

The first explosion, according to the New York papers, came as a result of a reel of film being wound on a machine, which became overheated. A Miss Riley and her sister who were operating the machine were enveloped in flames. They ran screaming into the studio. Manager Robert North caught them and smothered the fire with his coat.

By the time the first alarm had been turned in the interior of the studio was a mass of flames so that a second alarm was turned in and later a third, as the fire had spread rapidly and they feared for the people in the tenements behind the studio proper.

Chief Kenyon ordered the firemen to the roof of the burning studio. While the men were dragging the hose line across the slating gave in and eight men were badly bruised when they fell to the beam supports below. Other members of the fire department threw ropes to them and hoisted them to safety.

Six Months Work Destroyed

M. R. Taylor, head of the Colonial studio, said the damage done to the studio was in the neighborhood of $40,000 and was only partially covered by insurance. In addition to which were the loss of six films made by Mme. Petrova. These films were locked in a concrete vault on the second floor of the building and it is feared by the officials of the company that the vault was cracked by the intense heat and the films destroyed by water. These films represent the last six months work of Mme. Petrova, were still to be released and were valued at $25,000 each.

Mme. Petrova and company were working in the building at the time of the fire and fled in their make-up to watch the progress of the fire from a building opposite. Windham Standing and Malcolm Hamilton were also in the building. Hamilton assisted Mme. Petrova to the street and Standing, who was in his dressing room at the time, was trapped by the fire and compelled to punch out a window and drop twenty feet to the pavement below. He was badly bruised and cut. Mme. Petrova's wardrobe lost in the fire was estimated at $40,000 as her collection of rare furs were all in the studio.

Picture Making Continues at Rolfe Studios

As soon as the "flash" came into the office of Richard A. Rowland, president of the Metro Pictures Corporation, that there was a fire in the studio at Nos. 226-230 West Thirty-fifth street, where "The Waiting Soul" was being picturized, Mr. Rowland called B. A. Rolfe on the telephone. In less than ten minutes, tentative arrangements were made for the reception of the company under Mr. King's direction. The progress of the fire was so rapid that complete arrangements followed and the making of the picture continued in the Rolfe studios without interruption.

The complete re-making of the five negatives that were destroyed in the fire will be done in the Metro-Rolfe-Columbia studios. The loss involved in the destruction of these negatives and the plant of The Popular Plays and Players Company has not been definitely computed.

No interruption in the progress of Metro releases as already planned will be experienced.

FIGHT SUNDAY CLOSING

Theater Interests at Luncheon Hear Lawyers' Explanation of Sunday Laws and Advice on Methods of Combating Their Dangers

To a gathering representing the most powerful interests in the motion picture business, at a luncheon at Delmonico's in New York on January 2, Judge Samuel Seabury and John B. Stanchfield set forth in clear terms the status of the Sunday closing laws affecting motion picture theaters in New York and pointed out methods of dealing with them. Judge Seabury said:

It is the business of the courts to interpret the ancient laws which now exist in the light of modern conditions. The law is in two parts, the letter and the spirit. Judicial interpretation gives effect to the spirit of the law, and it is upon that basis that you should arrange your case before the Court of Appeals.

If you go to that court with a case that is not complicated by any other issue than a cold interpretation of the Sunday law as applied to motion pictures, you will be greatly aided by the fact that the Court of Appeals has never yet expressed itself in an interpretation of the question. If, on the other hand, through its presentation by another issue, you should lose the present case, the chances of the Court of Appeals ever reversing itself would be very small.

If the question of Sunday opening of motion picture theaters has to be decided in the legislature I warn you that in all likelihood the bill will emerge from committee so amended with all the other sorts of Sunday opening, from baseball to horseracing, that it would be construed as a general attack on the Sunday observance law which would have small chance of passing any New York legislature.

Mr. Stanchfield emphasized the peril which confronted the industry today.

You are all secure today, because the blow has not fallen. But if the Court of Appeals decision goes against you, it will not matter what your influence in your community, nor what the sentiment of your mayor or your district attorney, regarding Sunday closing, they must close your theaters and if they fail to do so, it is the duty of the governor to remove him from office. Where the people who wish the motion picture theaters closed can now only write to the newspapers they will then, in case the Court of Appeals holds against you, merely have to prefer charges against the local officials who do not enforce the law as interpreted, and the governor must remove them.

Mr. Stanchfield at the request of President Brady, spoke briefly of the Bender case in Albany, which is now the only case on the Sunday closing now before the Court of Appeals. He said:

"There has apparently been no argument by the Bender interests that the offense for which they are on trial was not complicated with the question of Sunday nuisance and interfering with other people's rights. If this is so, the Bender case is the last one with which the motion picture industry should go to the Court of Appeals for an interpretation of the Sunday law."

After Judge Seabury and Mr. Stanchfield closed, William A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, who presided, and Walter W. Irwin, chairman of the executive committee, explained the purpose of the meeting. In subsequent discussion all the interests present approved the work already done and expressed their desire to co-operate in every way toward the success of the fight for the Free Sunday.

Those present at the speakers' table were: William A. Brady, Judge Samuel Seabury, John B. Stanchfield, Louis L. Levy, Walter W. Irwin, Adolph Zukor, Lee A. Ochs, Samuel Trigger and William M. Seabury.

Those present at the luncheon were:

John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, unable to attend the meeting, sent the following statement:

I regret extremely that unbreakable engagements will prevent my attendance at your luncheon. I wish most sincerely that I could be there to voice my protest against Sunday closing of New York theaters. This latest restrictive attack on our industry is an insult to the high mission and honorable service of the motion picture to society. We should be able to expect from governmental forces support and sanction not repressing. Sunday closing tends to classify the picture with the prize fight, horse racing, and gambling. Sunday closing and censorship are stains from the same pot. We must fight them as one.

Sunday Pictures in Illinois

Rockford, Illinois, is one of the several cities having trouble with the Sunday closing question. A couple of weeks ago the city council suddenly voted to exterminate all Sunday night pictures, and this aroused a storm of protest from all sections of the city. Women were the chief objectors.

Telephone bells in newspaper offices and all the picture houses were kept in a continual jangle by persons calling up to register kicks against the new ordinance. Among the chief objectors were working people and young men and girls away from home. But every class and age was represented in the way of popular opinion, asking for a return of Sunday pictures.

The mayor of Rockford has stated that he opposes open theaters on Sunday because it "commercializes the Sabbath."

So now the question is to be brought up again soon before the city council and those in favor of Sunday pictures are expecting the victory.

In the meantime, the picture theater managers are depicting disaster if the Sunday ban goes into effect. Manager Grampp of the Orpheum states that the theaters would have to raise their prices in order to survive the blow. George Peck, manager of the Grand opera house, says all profits will be wiped out.

All the managers were unanimous in the statement that they depend on the Sunday revenue for their profits.

"We accommodate on Sunday largely the mass of working people whose long hours prevent them from attending on week days," says Mr. Grampp. "The new ordinance is neither fair to us nor to them."

Supreme Court at Sunday Question

The question of Sunday pictures in Ohio has busted into the supreme court.

That honorable body is to decide whether or not motion picture shows are theatrical performances, and hence subject to the law prohibiting such entertainments on Sunday.

The case under which the decision will be made comes from Medina county through a justice court, probate court, common pleas court, and court of appeals. The latter court decided that pictures are theatrical performances.

The cases now on trial are those of William Dunlap and William Stander of Wadsworth, who were arrested on the charge of giving unlawful theatrical performances on Sunday. A petition containing 160 names was filed asking for Sunday closing and a counter petition of 210 names filed asking for open theaters on Sunday.

It is expected that the supreme court will thresh out the entire question in its next term. Theater men of the state are watching the case with great interest.

The first episode of the new Universal serial, "The Voice on the Wire," nearly has been completed by Director Stuart Paton.

A CONEY ISLAND PRINCESS (Paramount), Owen Moore and Irene Fenwick.—"Business was fine on this picture. It was the best Saturday we have had in many weeks. The audience was very well pleased."—W. C. Lamoreaux, Lakeside Theater.—Catering to a high class of patrons.

LITTLE MISS HAPPINESS (Fox), June Caprice.—"We did a fairly good business on this picture and a great many people seemed to like this little star. We ran this picture on Friday."—W. C. Lamoreaux, Lakeside Theater.—Catering to a high class of patrons.

THE FEMALE OF THE SPECIES, (Triangle).—"Dorothy Dalton and Howard Hickman are excellent in this feature and we did a very good business with it."—W. C. Lamoreaux, Lakeside Theater.—Catering to a high class of patrons.

THE MARTYRDOM OF PHILIP STRONG, (Paramount)—"Business was only fair with this as the title was against it. It is not a good picture for us because it deals with a religious subject and it was unpleasant for many of our patrons."—W. C. Lamoreaux, Lakeside Theater.—Catering to a high class of patrons.

THE MARTYRDOM OF PHILIP STRONG, (Paramount)—"A picture that Paramount might better have kept off its program."—Martin Saxe, Knickerbocker Theater.—Catering to a better class.

THE WITCHING HOUR, (Frohman-Art Dramas) with C. Aubrey Smith—"C. Aubrey Smith's characterization is exceptionally good. The picture as a whole is very good. Drawing power good."—S. Trinz, Covent Garden Theater.—Catering to the better classes.

THE LITTLE YANK, (Triangle) Dorothy Gish—"Sherman said, 'War's hell.' This picture is full of slow, draggy war stuff. The story is very good, however, and is a fair attraction."—S. Trinz, Covent Garden Theater.—Catering to the better classes.

ON DANGEROUS GROUND, (World) with Gail Kane and Carlyle Blackwell—"More war stuff. Good picture, and played to good business."—S. Trinz, Covent Garden Theater.—Catering to the better classes.

SHOULD A BABY DIE, (Hanover-E. L. K.)—"I did a biggest matinee and evening business that was ever done in the Acme Theater with this picture. It is beautiful and will surely get the money for any exhibitor."—C. Abrams, Acme Theater.—Catering to the middle and working classes.

A HOUSE BUILT UPON THE SAND, (Triangle) Lillian Gish—"An ordinary comedy drama that did not need five reels to tell the story. This picture played to fair business and seemed to tire patrons."—S. Trinz, Covent Garden Theater.—Catering to the better classes.

A HOUSE BUILT UPON THE SAND, (Triangle) Lillian Gish—"A little long drawn out but well liked. Good drawing power."—Martin Saxe, Knickerbocker Theater.—Catering to a better class.

A DREAM OR TWO AGO, (Mutual) Mary Miles Minter—"This picture did a fair business for us. It was bad weather the day we ran it."—DeLuxe Theater.—Patrons of the better classes.

A DREAM OR TWO AGO, (Mutual) Mary Miles Minter—"This feature broke all records for admission to this house on Thanksgiving day."—Strand Theater, Denver, Colo.

A WOMAN ALONE, (World) Alice Brady—"This picture did not give satisfaction, probably due to the fact that the story was light. The picture as a whole is not up to the standard usually offered by Brady."—S. Trinz, Covent Garden Theater.—Catering to the better classes.

THE INNOCENCE OF LIZETTE, (Mutual) Mary Miles Minter—"A commonplace picture which played to fairly good business, probably due to the star's popularity. The picture as a whole was no better than the average."—S. Trinz, Covent Garden Theater.—Catering to the better classes.

Keeps His Eye on This Department

Editor MOTOGRAPHY:

I am a close follower of your pages on "What the Picture Did for Me." I think that it is a very good aid to the exhibitor and therefore a credit to the magazine.—J. B. Learner, Strand and Empress Theaters, Eveleth, Minnesota.

The Female of the Species, with Dorothy Dalton, Howard Hickman and Enid Markey (Triangle)—"A very good production. Only fair box office value because the name is not appealing."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater.—Very high class patronage.

The Heiress at Coffee Dan's, with Bessie Love, (Triangle)—"Very well liked by my patrons. As a whole, very good."—Martin Saxe, Knickerbocker Theater.—High class patronage.

The Heiress at Coffee Dan's, with Bessie Love, (Triangle)—"A very good picture which pleased all patrons. Very good box office value."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater.—High class patronage.

King Lear, with Frederick Warde, (Pathe)—"A great box office attraction. Very good picture."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater.—Very high class patronage.

The Rise of Susan, with Clara Kimball Young, (World)—"A wonderful box office success. A very good picture. This star is always well liked by my patrons."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater.—Very high class patronage.

The Road to Love, with Lenore Ulrich, (Paramount-Morosco)—"As a whole, fair. The star is good, the supporting cast fair. The story is fairly good, but is an Arabian story and is not the sort of thing wanted by the public at present. The fact that it was New Year's Eve put it over in my house."—Martin Saxe, Knickerbocker Theater.—Catering to the better classes.

War Brides, with Alla Nazimova, (Selznick-Pictures)—"Fair drawing power. As a whole the production is good and the star is very good. The cast, with the exception of a few, is poor. The battle scenes are poor and the story is drawn out. Personally, I cannot say that it is any better than the average. My patrons are satisfied and say they liked it. So I should not criticize it."—Martin Saxe, Knickerbocker Theater.—Catering to the better classes.

War Brides, (Selznick) Nazimova—"The star's work is very good and supporting cast, good. Photography might have been improved upon. Picture played to a good business."—S. Trinz, Covent Garden Theater.—Catering to the better classes.

Snow White, with Marguerite Clark, (Famous Players)—"The best picture Miss Clark ever appeared in. Appealing in every way. It follows the book exactly. I can recommend it as a money-getter anywhere. At my theater, it held them out at ten o'clock in the morning."—M. J. Weil, Castle Theater.—Downtown house.

The Right Direction, with Vivian Martin, (Pallas-Paramount)—"A very good production, with pretty good box office value. The only thing to criticize about it is the photography, which is not good. This is usually a fault in Pallas pictures and the patrons frequently complain of it. We do not like that in this theater, where we pride ourselves on the projection. The patrons may think it our fault."—M. J. Weil, Castle Theater.—Downtown house.

Broken Chains, with Ethel Clayton, (World)—"A very good picture with very good box office value."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater.—Very high class patronage.

The Stolen Triumph, with Julius Steger, (Metro)—"A beautiful picture and well produced. Very good box office attraction."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater.—Very high class patronage.

Divorce and the Daughter, with Florence La Badie, (Pathe)—"A very good picture, with good box office value. The story is true to life and appeals to a good many people."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater.—Very high class patronage.

The Black Orchid, with Cleo Madison, (Bluebird—"A very good box office attraction. This star is always well liked by my patrons and they would like to see her more often."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater.—Very high class patronage.

Oliver Twist, (Paramount) featuring Mario Doro—"This picture appealed to our audiences very much. It is a very good story of the old Dickens' book. No one seemed to object to the good looking Marie Doro in the part of a boy waif."—De Luxe Theater.—Patrons of the better classes.

The Rise of Susan, (World) Clara Kimball Young—"We ran this twice in the same week and did a great business with it a second time at fifteen cents, a raise of five cents over our regular price. We held people out all of the time and there was never a murmur at the price. Everyone was satisfied."—Charles E. Hagen, Kenmore Theater.—Catering to the better classes.

The Challenge, (Pathe Special) featuring Montague Love—"Business was fairly good on this picture. It is a strong story and took very well with our audiences."—Charles E. Hagen, Kenmore Theater.—Catering to the better classes.

Three of Many, with Clara Williams, (Triangle)—"All I can say about this picture is that it's great."—Martin Saxe, Knickerbocker Theater.—Catering to a better class.

Three of Many, (Triangle) with Clara Williams—"A very clever picture that held the audience up to the final scenes. It contains a strong, convincing story, well acted and as a whole the picture in point of excellence was out of the ordinary. I am inclined to think that the title was rather weak."—S. Trinz, Covent Garden Theater.—Catering to the better classes.

The Weaker Sex, (Triangle) Dorothy Dalton and Louise Glaum—"It indeed is rarely that I am enabled to offer my patrons a production as uniformly excellent as this one. The title of the picture is a distinct asset to the picture and this, coupled with an all star cast and directed by a director of proven ability, makes this production an A1 box office attraction which can hardly disappoint."—S. Trinz, Covent Garden Theater.—Catering to the better classes.

THE MATRIMANIAC, (Triangle) Douglas Fairbanks —"All we have to do is to put up Douglas Fairbanks' name and we hold them out all the afternoon and evening."—Charles E. Hagen, Kenmore Theater.—Catering to the better classes.

THE CRIMINAL, (Triangle) William Desmond and Clara Williams—"This picture brought us a good business and everyone seemed to like it."—Charles E. Hagen, Kenmore Theater.—Catering to the better classes.

THE MEDIATOR, (Fox) George Walsh—"We did very good business with this picture and our people seemed to like it."—M. Schwartz, Halfield Theater.—Catering to the medium classes.

THE SON OF ERIN, (Paramount) Dustin Farnum—"This went big in my neighborhood because it is an Irish section and many of the Irish comments were very favorable."—M. Schwartz, Halfield Theater. Catering to the medium classes.

JACKIE OF THE NAVY, (Mutual) Margarita Fischer —"Business was very good with this picture. It is a very fine feature, well acted and is a great film for refined audiences."—M. Schwartz, Harper Theater.—Catering to the medium classes.

MISS JACKIE OF THE NAVY, with Margarita Fischer, (Mutual)—"Although the thermometer was around the zero mark all the afternoon and evening when I was showing this feature I played to over 5,000 patrons at an admission price of ten and fifteen cents. This picture is the talk of the city."—Strand Theater, Denver, Colo.

AN ENEMY TO THE KING, with E. H. Sothern, (Vitagraph)—"A wonderful production, but it is a costume play, and they are not cared for at the present time. Cast is very good and the story and settings, but its chief drawing power is among admirers of Sothern."—Martin Saxe, Knickerbocker Theater.—Catering to a better class.

AN ENEMY TO THE KING, (Vitagraph) with E. H. Sothern—"As a whole a fairly good attraction. A costume play which played to good business."—S. Trinz, Covent Garden Theater.—Catering to the better classes.

TRUTHFUL TULLIVER, (Triangle) with W. S. Hart —"A good picture but the same old stuff. I think Hart is past due for something different. The public is getting tired of the type of stuff he has been working in."—S. Trinz, Covent Garden Theater.—Catering to the better classes.

CIVILIZATION—"Thomas H. Ince's master production. An exceptionally good box office attraction. War stuff that went over very well."—S. Trinz, Covent Garden Theater.—Catering to the better classes.

CIVILIZATION, (Thomas Ince)—"Positively the greatest production of modern times."—Martin Saxe, Knickerbocker Theater.—Catering to a better class.

CIVILIZATION, (Thomas H. Ince Spectacle)—"We ran this for a week at the Harper. It is a wonderful picture, but it did not take with my patrons as it impersonates Christ and they do not care for such things. With the middle or working classes, such a picture would go big."—M. Schwartz, Harper Theater.—Catering to the medium classes.

THE MATRIMANIAC, with Douglas Fairbanks, (Triangle)—"Just what the public wants."—Martin Saxe, Knickerbocker Theater.—Catering to a better class.

THE YELLOW PAWN, with Wallace Reid and Cleo Ridgely, (Lasky)—"Although it contains no stars with great drawing powers, it drew very well. It is a very good picture and pleased the audiences."—Martin Saxe, Knickerbocker Theater.—Catering to a better class.

THE VICTORY OF CONCIENCE, (Paramount) Lou Tellegen—"We ran this feature two days, Friday and Saturday. Business was great and we held them out both days. It is certainly a fine picture."—De Luxe Theater.—Patrons of the better classes.

MY OFFICIAL WIFE, (Vitagraph) with Clara Kimball Young—"A regular picture of a kind they used to make years ago, and I am positive that the public would appreciate more pictures up to the standard of this particular production. The picture played to good business and everybody seemed to be satisfied."—S. Trinz, Covent Garden Theater.—Catering to the better classes.

MISS GEORGE WASHINGTON, with Marguerite Clark, (Famous Players)—"I never before heard so many complimentary remarks as my patrons passed on this feature."—Martin Saxe, Knickerbocker Theater.—Catering to a better class.

LESS THAN THE DUST, with Mary Pickford, (Artcraft)—"I recently showed this picture two days, and my opinion is that it is the greatest failure released during 1916. It would probably pass as a five reel program feature at regular prices. I advertised this strongly and of course was compelled to advance the admission prices on account of the enormous price I had to pay. It drew very big the first night; but the patrons were all disappointed. As a result, the second night dropped to almost nothing. The fault, no doubt, is with the exhibitor rather than the producer. If the producer can get away with it and get big money, why not?"—J. B. Learner, manager Strand and Empress Theaters, Eveleth, Minn.

FAITH, with Mary Miles Minter (Mutual)—"This is a splendid box office attraction. I cannot tell you how much our patrons appreciated it. Miss Minter is now one of the foremost picture stars of the day and this vehicle will add new laurels to her crown wherever it is shown."—W. A. Mustard, manager Blue Mouse Theater, St. Paul, Minn.

MARVELOUS MACISTE, (Hanover-E. L. K.)—"As a novelty this production is unique and should satisfy the patrons of any theater regardless of what class of people it is catering to. The film gets away from the every day sameness of the average feature. I was a trifle dubious about booking it, but it went over great, away ahead of my expectations."—W. C. Quimby, Jefferson Theater, Fort Wayne, Indiana.

The Truant Soul, (Essanay) starring Henry Walthall—"This production is one above par. It is eight reels of strong dramatic action and one that should please any audience. Dealing as it does with the dreaded vice, the dope habit, it offers wonderful advertising possibilities to an exhibitor. I had the privilege of seeing it at a private screening and I will say frankly that personally I think it to be one of the strongest super-productions of late."—F. W. Burke, Strand Theater, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

The Children Pay, (Triangle)—"This is one of the best pictures that Lillian Gish has yet appeared in. It pleased my audiences and although business was nothing to rave about all the Gish followers were there."—F. W. Burke, Strand Theater, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

The Devil's Double, (Triangle) starring the "two gun man," William S. Hart—"The production went over big. It is a typical Hart picture and personally I think that it is the best he has yet appeared in. Supporting cast good and photography excellent. Proved to be an exceptional box office attraction."—F. W. Burke, Strand Theater, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

The Criminal, (Triangle) starring Clara Williams and William Desmond—"This picture went over nicely with me. It is an appealing sort of a dramatic subject that will please your audience. Was a great Sunday attraction for me."—F. W. Burke, Strand Theater, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

Ramona, (Clune)—"From a scenic standpoint, and photography, the production is truly wonderful. The story lacks 'pep' and becomes very tiresome as it progresses. Here the picture seemed to make quite a hit with women. Nothing to rave over."—F. W. Burke, Strand Theater, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

The Truant Soul, (Essanay), featuring Henry Walthall and Mary Charlson—"We did a mightly fine business with this exceptional feature. It is a great picture and both stars do exceptional work."—De Luxe Theater.—Patrons of the better classes.

A Lass of the Lumberlands, with Helen Holmes, (Mutual)—"I have played five chapters of this serial and my box office receipts are equal to my Saturday nights. I can heartily recommend it to all exhibitors who want a film that will get the money."—Claude N. York, Reel Theater, Catlettsburg, Ky.

A Lass of the Lumberlands, with Helen Holmes, (Mutual)—"Best serial ever booked in this house. It is going well. Had them standing out last night."—Maddox and Boyd, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Screenshine

By Mel Ody

YOU CAN NEVER DEPEND ON THE WOMEN.

FOLLOWING the announcement that Marguerite Clark would leave the screen forever for the speaking stage, Manager Weil of the Castle Theater on State street, Windycity, came out with a big blue poster when he ran "Little Lady Eileen," some time ago, on which he stated: "Special. Positively Her Last Appearance on the Screen," etc.

And a number of other exhibitors took the cue and filled their advertising full of the last appearance stuff.

Then Marguerite signed another Paramount contract for a few years.

HUSBAND—LIGHT OCCUPATION.

If you don't want anything to do and all the time there is to do it in, and a fat income (coming to your wife) just become the husband of a star.

In a Chicago taxicab the other day Annette Kellerman introduced us to her husband, Jimmie Sullivan. The girl with the fishy form divine is, by the way, now getting $3,000 a week at the New York Hippodrome.

"And, say," she chirped, "I couldn't get ten dollars a week if I used his name."

Jimmie grinned.

MAY HIS TRIBE INCREASE

As we have chronicled in this ray of Screenshine the arrival of others into the film world, it is in keeping that we mention the fact that a lusty youngster has arrived at the home of John F. Bowman, former manager of the Chicago International Exchange. Strange to say, this little Bow-man is a girl.

AND MEET THIS NEW FILM MAN.

Here's a letter from the manager of the American Standard Motion Picture Corporation, 164-166 West Washington street, Chicago, which tells its own story of beginning the new year right:

Dear Screenshine:—Whether or not it is just another degree in the line of efficiency, or otherwise, "Watty, Jr." arrived this morning at four o'clock, eight pounds strong.

"Daddy" is very proud of his boy and hopes he will get into the film game early.

Best wishes to Motography. Sincerely yours, M. G. Watkins.

YOU CAN'T TELL BY THE LOOKS OF A FROG.

We don't expect you to believe it, but an exhibitor took us out to lunch the other evening.

It was a shock to us, too.

And it knocked the exhibitor centsless.

The bill came to $1.60.

The jolly theater man fished out a one dollar bill and a quarter. Then he looked worried, as that seemed to be the extent of his ready finances. He fished some more and produced a couple of dimes—$1.45.

We were about to come to his rescue but he waved us away. Hope lit up in his haggard face. He took down his overcoat and pawed for his penny newspaper-money pocket. Perspiring but happy he pulled out a nickel and five pennies—$1.55.

And in a minute he cornered a nickel in his vest pocket and grinned. He had paid off the debt with his last cent.

If he hadn't enjoyed the fun of the situation this theater humorist could have written a check big enough to buy the building the cafe was in.

A film man friend of ours, aroused to ire and verse by the Sunday closing frenzy, dashed off the following bit of literature:

There was a man in our town and he was wondrous wise,
He would close all movie shows on Sundays towns of size;
But when the movie doors were closed on Sunday nights and noons,
The fellows had no place to go, so patronized saloons!

'MOVIE' WON'T MOVE

Several well-intentioned reformers are reorganizing the old S. S. W. M. (Society for the Supression of the Word "Movie").

Ignoble it may be, and suggestive of the silent art's lowly birth, but the word has come to remain. Fifteen million film fans use it every day. It won't budge.

And anyway it's a term of endearment—just like "Charlie."

There's a learned doctor in Boston who says that motion pictures are going to become the best cure in the world for stutterers.

The deluded fellow doesn't realize that pictures are the worst stutter—er—ers in the world themselves.

Haven't you seen a good many fine two-reelers that stutter—er—ed themselves out into five-reel features?

Tax on New York Theaters Proposed

EXHIBITORS AND PRODUCERS JOIN TO DEFEAT MEASURE

THE state legislature of New York is again endeavoring to pass measures whereby revenue can be exacted from picture theaters for the upkeep of the state of New York.

The latest indications in Albany are that advocates of the proposed plan to burden film theaters with assessments expect to raise $2,000,000 by the proposed measure and they are actively engaged in a campaign now to persuade the Senate and Assembly to support the measure when it comes up for passage.

Last week the majority leader, Senator Elon R. Brown, decided upon an appointment of a committee to investigate all film industry conditions, with the view of determining whether such a tax could be levied. This plan was immediately adopted, and only concurrence of the Assembly is required, and by now this has probably happened. Such action makes possible the appointment of a committee of investigation, which committee will draw up the bills taxing film theaters which will eventually be voted upon.

It is rumored, though nothing has been said openly, that would indicate such to be the case, that advocates of the taxation measure will compromise with the motion picture men by allowing them to keep open the theaters on Sunday.

The scheme as it now stands means that the film industry will be charged approximately $2,000,000 for the privilege of exhibiting pictures seven days a week. The advocates of the proposed taxation are not at all confident that the industry will agree to this arrangement. A bitter fight is expected during the committee's investigation, and later when the measure is carried into the legislative halls.

The Brown resolution, which promises to create an uproar, reads as follows:

Resolved (if the Assembly concur) that a joint commitee of the Senate and Assembly be hereby created to consist of three members of the Senate, to be appointed by the president of the Senate and five members of the Assembly, to be appointed by the speaker of the Assembly to investigate whether the moving picture industry is a proper subject of State taxation, and if the committee so determine, the kind and amount of taxes to be imposed.

Resolved, that such committee is hereby authorized to choose from its members a chairman and to sit within and outside the city of Albany, to subpoena and compel the attendance of witnesses, to require the production of books, records and papers, to take and hear proof and testimony, and otherwise have all the powers of a legislative committee as provided by the legislative law, including the adoption of rules for the conduct of its proceedings.

Resolved, that such committee shall report the result of its investigation to the Legislature on or before February 15, 1917, together with such proposed legislative measures as it may deem proper to carry its recommendations into effect.

Resolved, that the expense of such commitee, not exceeding $5,000, shall be payable from the contingent fund of the Legislature, on the certificate of the chairman of the committee and the approval of the temporary president of the Senate, or the speaker of the Assembly.

Though the picture interests are expected to fight the taxation proposition, it is generally believed that some agreement will be reached, of satisfaction to both parties.

The Authors' League of America has met and resolutions were adopted opposing the proposed legislation to place a tax upon either film or motion picture exhibitors.

This graceful and difficult Kiwash dance is being executed by Bill Hart, the Ince badman. Doug. Fairbanks, who was visiting Kay-Bee from Fine Arts that afternoon, is taking it all in for future reference. Note that Mister Hart has doffed his shoes in his enthusiasm.

St. Louis Theater Men Meet

A meeting of the theater managers and motion picture exhibitors, associates, of St. Louis, was held on December 29.

It was decided to instruct the organization committee to investigate and report on the following: The advisability of the St. Louis association joining the National League at this time. Second, a plan to increase the revenue of the St. Louis association.

It was decided to refer the dispute between the Arsenal Theater and the International Film Company to the grievance committee with instructions that it is the desire of the association that in the future exchanges as well as exhibitors must carry out their contracts.

The chairman of the grievance committee reported that the Metro Picture Service are not requiring deposits on "The Crimson Stain Mystery," but that they still insist for deposits on the Bushman serial. Also that a telegram was sent to their district manager, J. Scriball, at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, requesting for a final reply so that the matter may be placed before the association at their next meeting.

The chairman of the legislative committee reported that they appeared before the State Tax Commission December 22, and that their arguments made a favorable impression and that from indications they have every reason to believe that the proposed taxation on motion picture theaters will be tabled. The chairman of the legislative committee also reported that Mr. Cassidy spoke in favor of the exhibitors and that the association should be grateful to him and fortunate to have such a friend in the governor's taxation committee.

Several new members were accepted into the association, among whom were John J. Macklin, Euclid Theater; Mr. Powhattan, Powhattan Theater; William H. Young, Easton, Gaylor Theater; Edward A. Schwartz, Broadway Theater; Louis V. Stephen, Juanita Theater; J. W. Barrett, Knickerbocker Theater.

The following exchanges have informed the association that they do not require deposits on serials: Kleine, Edison, Selig, Essanay, L. F. C. Film Exchange, International Film Exchange, General Film Company, Pathe Exchange, Vitagraph, V. L. S. E. and the Universal Film Exchange.

Minneapolis Exhibitors Meet

It would seem that Minneapolis can represent as many theaters at the weekly meeting of the exhibitors as can New York City. This only goes to show that the city of Minneapolis is rapidly approaching the one-hundred-per-cent organization of exhibitors.

It was proved at the last meeting held. There are now seventy-one theaters that are paid up members in good standing, and about two hundred more theaters are affiliated and in good standing outside the territory.

The decision was practically unanimous at last week's meeting of the association, to grant power to the exhibitors' committee to cancel their service unless their deposits were returned.

Up to the present time the committee has not served a thirty-day notice on the exchanges, but it is possible and quite probable this may be done in the near future.

A "Trade Review Consulting Committee" has been appointed, the object of which is to consult frequently with the mayor of Minneapolis, William Koenig, secretary of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of the Northwest, William Hoppenrath, manager of the Alhambra Theater in Minneapolis, and Thomas J. Hamlin, chairman, editor of Amusements.

The corporation meets on the second floor of the Bijou Theater building in Minneapolis, every Tuesday afternoon at one o'clock. All visiting exhibitors are invited, whether they are members or not. The legislative committee reports its activity, and the grievance committee has been busy for the past three months settling grievances.

It is understood that only members in good standing are entitled to any of the privileges or co-operation of this association. The dues are small, being only one cent per seat per year.

Exhibitors' Ball at Minneapolis

If the present plans are carried out, the grand ball of the Motion Picture Exhibitors Corporation of the Northwest will be held at the National Guard Armory, Minneapolis, February 12.

Announcement to this effect was made at the last weekly meeting of the Corporation, by Chairman J. A. Keough of the dance committee. Efforts are being made to induce several film stars to grace the occasion with their presence.

The West Hotel, Minneapolis, has been chosen by Chairman D. G. Roberts for the annual convention to take place next May. Chairman L. V. Valvert of the legislative committee reported progress in prohibiting the thirty-day advance deposit system, and President J. G. Gilosky appointed a committee to visit all exchange managers and inform them the Northwest body did not demand that exchanges refuse to allow the booking of films to churches and other unlicensed exhibitors, but that it did demand that such bodies book their films from a near by theater instead of from the exchange direct.

The addition of several new members has been reported and Secretary Koenig urges that the exhibitors join before January, at which time the state legislature of Minnesota meets and will take up the proposed Sunday closing, taxation and State license laws.

Exhibitors Discuss Express Question

At the convention of the Montana Motion Picture Exhibitors' League at Helena in December, the main question up for discussion was that of express rates.

It was decided at the meeting to object to the high charges of big producers of feature films which are forced on those holding regular contracts. The exhibitors are forced to pay extra rates for these "heavy features," and it is declared the cost is sometimes excessive. An alleged radical change in the methods of the large film exchanges was deplored. Business sessions were confined to a discussion of the cost of feature films.

"We pay a regular rental for daily service," a speaker told the convention, "and now we are being forced to take pictures featuring well known stars and pay exorbitant prices for them. In addition to the rentals we must pay for the use of the features.

"It is true that the cost of producing them is greater, but why can't we use the ordinary films? Where we used to get films on the regular rental basis with several bright stars appearing in the plays, we are now denied these unless we pay extra. The stars are taken out of the regular films and used for only the high-priced ones. In order to meet competition we must bid away most of our profits to obtain the exclusive right to the pictures in one city."

The delegates seemed united in the belief that the increased cost of production was squeezing them into a position where they must act immediately. The exhibitors re-elected Phil Levy as president of the league, C. W. Eckhardt as secretary-treasurer and A. Heinecke as vice-president of the league.

The convention closed with a banquet and a jolly theater party.

Art Dramas Service Travels Fast

Art Dramas Service seems to be growing from a new service to one of magnitude. Manager Ralph O. Proctor of the Chicago office has just returned from a hurried trip to New York, where he went to beg, borrow or steal more prints on his new releases in order to take care of the bookings that are being offered his exchange.

Anyone interested in progress with speed back of it would do well to visit the offices of this flourishing enterprise which is less than two months old. We doubt if it would be possible to confine more energy, hustle and results than are being secured in the small space allotted to this new organization.

Mr. Proctor says that his first big special feature, "The Witching Hour," has met with tremendous success throughout his entire territory and that he has the option on some other extra fine pictures that he is not just ready to talk about now.

While in New York Mr. Proctor, in conference with the manufacturers who are supplying his productions, learned that Art Dramas Service all over the country seemed to be making a whirl-wind success both because of the policy of the service and the quality of the pictures furnished.

We look for big things from Mr. Proctor, if his optimism indicates what the future holds for him.

What Theater Men Are Doing

AN OPEN FORUM

This is a department of, by and for exhibitors. We want YOU represented here. Other managers and proprietors of picture theaters want to hear YOUR experiences, your opinions and your advice. Write to this department telling us your story, how you started, how you grew and all about your theater and how you manage it. Mention your advertising methods and your lobby displays. Exhibitor Bangs at Programs

BY E. L. BYAR

Of Gwynn & Byar, proprietors Lyric Theater, Terrell, Texas.

I HAVE always been opposed to "franchise" programs principally because they force an exhibitor to take the bad and indifferent in order to get the good. I once thought the only way to overcome this would be to organize the exhibitors.

But there's not a chance.

In one town about 100 miles from my town there is an exhibitor who runs a franchise program for which he is furnished three subjects per week for $26. His town has 15,000 population. In this town of 5,000 population an exhibitor with practically the same program pays $40 for three subjects per week, the operations being manipulated from the same branch office.

Now the exhibitor in this large town is a man of several years experience in the amusement business, keeps abreast of the times, while the managers in the small town have but little experience to their credit. If an old exhibitor were to talk to them about getting together with their opposition they would treat him as an enemy to their cause. Consequently each exhibitor must work out his own salvation, regardless of competition and exchange men.

And while over-production is in force is the time to do this work. As it is as impossible that there will be any consolidation of manufacturers and exchanges, the live exhibitor must take the same advantage of them that they take of the "rube" who leaves the farm to get into the picture game.

I am an exhibitor who never finds time to see what my competitor is doing, because I spend my time watching my own house and keeping down irregularities. Every business has its dull days. In our business there's not much reason for a single dull day. However, they all become dull unless a manager keeps a sharp lookout. But through some cause or other I fought hard again three slow dull days a week after school started, giving a better and more expensive program, and even offering premiums on these days, but to no avail. I quit that. But not being a "quitter" I studied and tried a plan which is working to perfection. This plan I pass on to others who have suffered relapses on account of school.

Instead of working against a natural source, I figured out my actual expense and cut my film service to conform with my receipts. Instead of playing a big expensive feature, I use a cheaper feature, and sometimes service from the diversified program, and find instead of losing I am making a profit. To diversify means a profit to the merchant and farmer. The same applies to pictures.

On Mondays I always run the best feature service I can get, and it pays if weather conditions are at all favorable. Being somewhat superstitious, I believe "as goes Monday, so goes the rest of the week." So Monday starts with a Vitagraph-Blue Ribbon (of my own selection); Tuesday follows with a Metro; Wednesday a fill-in date, usually a K. E. S. E. or Chaplin; Thursday, a World, and Friday and Saturday, serials and diversified program. My competitor runs the high-priced strict program, leaving no open time for the many good ones he must miss. Or if he takes them on he must shelve the program and pay for its use just the same.

It is with much interest that I read of the Vitagraph cutting its production to one each week, the K. E. S. E. to three per month, the Clara Kimball Young studio opening and Artcraft to release eight per year. These concerns intend that their pictures shall be booked solely on their merits.

NEW ERA FOR EXHIBITORS DAWNING

And all old exhibitors see a new era dawning. The program manufacturers regret this action, and I understand have even threatened to discontinue service if their customers book any of these pictures. It makes me laugh. But it looks like a bug-a-boo to those who have been in the snare so long that they don't really know there are any other releasing concerns. It will be a good thing for the program men to look back on the efforts of the once strongest film concern that has ever existed and see what happened to them. They used to say, "you must use our service and no other." Today they will rent you one film a week if you want it. In the single star movement I see the breaking of the franchise concern even though it is backed by many millions. I will live through the game, and if you will keep this letter you will read it over again with much more interest than when you first read it. I see the time when the exhibitor is coming back into his own. But for a while public money was so easy to get that it threatened the safety of the exhibitors who had sunk our money in a swell house in a small town. But we see the light once more. And the manufacturers have learned their lesson, too. Can you imagine a five or six-reel feature coming to me two to four days before I use it, then me to get instructions to send it into the home office after I've used it only one day? Does this look like over-production? Of course if it was some exchanges it could be easily accounted for its only working one day in the week. That would be through the fact that the exchange was furnished three or four copies of each subject. But such is not the case in this particular instance. In some towns this service is classed as the franchise program. But it is not a franchise with us. It's merely a merit proposition, being only an ordinary program and used as a five and ten-cent proposition—no actors or actresses that any one would lose their heads over, once in a while producing one that would make a hit.

Here's a live theater ad. Daily between eleven and three o'clock Miss Marie Ward attired in a white and silver suit of armor, mounted on a white horse with white and gold trappings, rides through the traffic on Fifth avenue, New York. Miss Ward has ridden winners of Women's Saddle Classes at the National and other horse shows. She is riding on Fifth avenue in order to create interest in the exhibition in the Forty-fourth Street Theater of Cecil B. DeMille's photoplay, "Joan, the Woman," in which Geraldine Farrar appears as Joan of Arc.

You've set enough of these ads in MOTOGRAPHY that you sometimes dream of them. But, Mr. Editor, when they begin to advertise "we've cut our output" and ask the exhibitor to "visit the exchange for a screen inspection," then they will be putting out an advertisement that will appeal to the exhibitor. This is what they need. The one that don't have to be C. O. Ded, the one that has stood the "acid test."

HAS HAD ALL KINDS OF OPPOSITION

Since I've been in the movie game I've had everything in the way of managing opposition from a loafer to a banker, and have seen them all quit in disgust. This included telephone men, electricians, carnival men, undertakers, carpenters, hotel and restaurant men, telegraph operators, paper hangers and painters, bookkeepers and gin men. But we usually find a sucker with more money than brains that is ready to start in where they left off and continue the fight, only to look forward to the time when they will be looking for a job. They quit the picture game, with considerably less money and a world of experience. It's usually this class the program exchanges look for. And right here let me say the most successful exhibitors in the larger towns are franchise dodgers. There is no sword of Damocles hanging over their heads, and usually you don't find either them or their hired help standing across the street checking up their competitor's business. They don't have time. For several seasons I was a traveling exhibitor, before the day of permanent show shop. A hall that would seat 200 was seldom found in my trade territory. In 1902 I made the Yazoo and Mississippi Delta, showing two nights in a town with a calcium, some time a week in the larger towns. And the growth of this industry has been watched with interest by me. I have always looked forward to the time when the business would be classed as legitimate and we could be permanently located. I've seen that forecast fulfilled, and have seen and still see where incompetency fails every day. I've watched the franchise wax fat with wealth of the unsuspecting public, I've noticed where they entered into cut-throat competition, bidding for actors and actresses, and I've seen the actors and actresses wax fat on their wealth and start their own producing companies, now I'm looking at a mirage. They will break the franchise and break themselves.

In the future D. W. Griffith, Thos. Ince and directors general will form the force and once a year put out a "big one" that will startle the world, and the exhibitor will depart once in a while from his usual routine to give his patrons a 50-cent, 75-cent and $1 jolt, then settle back to 5-cent and 10-cent once more and thank his stars that conditions are such as they are.

Let us look before we leap is a good slogan for exhibitors.

To Build New Theater in Philadelphia

A large real estate transaction in Central North Philadelphia, and one of the most important deals of its character in the city, has just been completed. By this transaction, that part of the city will gain a handsome new theater, and in addition a splendid building for business purposes and stores. The theater will be devoted to photoplays and musical features and it will be under the direction of Stanley V. Mastbaum and Sablosky & McGuirk. Its construction and the erection of the building will give employment to hundreds of workmen.

The details of the plans for this new building, whlie not fully matured, can be stated briefly at this time and a reporter was able to gather the outline, which is here presented to the residents of this section of the city and amusement lovers in general.

The preliminary plans call for the erection of the theater with entrances on Broad street and also stores on the Columbia avenue side. The entire structure will be ornamental in design and it will make property values increase, being an improvement that is greatly needed to enhance the beauty of that portion of up-town.

The fact that this theater is to be built by the Stanley Company and conducted under the auspices of that organization, is to say that it will be one of the best in the city. It is well known that Mr. Mastbaum, the managing director of this company, has original ideas as to the construction of houses of amusement, and he has commissioned the architects to make the new theater complete in every detail for safety, comfort and luxury. The plot of ground upon which the theater will be built has for many years been a landmark in this section of the city. It is 175 feet square. It was originally a market house, but when fire visited it it was rebuilt into stores and halls.

The amount involved in the transaction has not been disclosed, but as the site is a choice one and real estate values in that section are ever increasing, it is understood that, with the price of the land and the cost of the improvements to be made, including the theater, will run the total amount involved to more than a million dollars. Mr. Mastbaum announces that there will be no delay in building the theater and it is expected that the new photoplay and vaudeville playhouse will be in full operation early in the year.

HOW OTHERS ARE STEERING THE SHIP

THE Mecca Theater, Third street and Broadway, Dayton, O., issued a motion picture calendar to wish its patrons a Happy New Year. An effective cut of the theater, surrounded by portraits of players who appear on its screen, forms the design.

Establishment of a moving picture circuit in Montana for children's matinees is the aim of the Montana Parent-Teacher Association working through its branch at Helena.

The Yale Alumni Weekly in an editorial "views with alarm" the growing popularity of motion pictures among undergraduates, fearing that this love of pictures is seriously interfering with their interest in athletics.

A. Yarbrough, manager of the Opera House in Breckenridge, Mo., calls his Friday night offering the "family group night." One of the Paramount single-reel series forms part of the entertainment of that evening.

The Fairbanks Theater at Springfield, Ohio, is to be converted into a moving picture house, according to reports. Gus Sun has leased the playhouse. Trouble with the stage hands is said to have caused the change to be made.

The official board of the Methodist Church at North Bend, Nebraska, voted unanimously to adopt the program outlined by the pastor for the year, which includes the purchase of a moving picture machine for Sunday evening services.

"Intolerance," the big Griffith spectacle, closed its New York engagement at the Liberty Theater January 9. The picture opened in Pittsburgh and Philadelphia at the beginning of the year and is reported to be doing a turn-away business in each city.

"Service is not my motto; it is my solemn duty." Here is a pretty good motto for any exhibitor. It is the one adopted by the original and genial Fred Meyer, who caters to the show men of the Mill City territory as manager of the Minneapolis General exchange.

The city council of Butte City, Mont., has passed an ordinance that makes it unlawful to leave any vehicle "standing or parked" within 50 feet of a motion picture theater or other place of amusement. The new law carries a penalty clause providing for a $100 fine for violators.

Regal Films, Ltd., has been organized with headquarters in Toronto to handle the distribution of World-Brady made pictures throughout Canada. The president of the new company is E. L. Ruddy, head of the bill-posting company of Canada and owner of the Regent Theater.

The Screen Club of Kansas City, Missouri, gave an elaborate new year's eve banquet with large attendance of members and their friends. A first-class caterer was engaged who furnished a six-course dinner. The Royal Theater furnished the music and several of the best acts from local theaters were put on.

Have you had difficulties in printing your programs in knowing how to spell Nance O'Neil's name? Nearly everyone who has ever spelt her family designation has pondered over "one l or two?" like the sign painter in the song, "He Knocked the 'l' Out of Kelly." Anyway, the official, according to Mutual and Nance herself, is O'Neil.

Bert Ennis, former press agent of Vitagraph, Keystone and Eclair, has been appointed managing director of the Japanese Gardens, picture palace de luxe atop of Wm. Fox's Riviera Theater, at Ninety-seventh street and Broadway. Ennis has inaugurated a unique publicity campaign to attract out-of-town visitors to the Broadway show place.

The Chamber of Deputies of France has approved a batch of new taxes, among them a graduated tax on theater and vaudeville tickets. Moving picture establishments must pay 5 per cent on monthly receipts under 25,000 francs, 10 per cent from 25,000 to 50,000 francs, 20 per cent from 50,000 to 100,000 and 25 per cent on receipts in excess of that.

The motion picture has entered the school; now the school is entering the motion picture. The Arkansas State University at Fayetteville, for instance, recently had a film produced depicting student life. This was loaned to a string of theaters throughout the state. The Iowa State College at Ames has a similar film which is loaned to schools and theaters.

The Alhambra Theater, Cleveland, Ohio, gave a Christmas party at its regular children's matinee on the Saturday preceding Christmas. On the stage was a glorious Christmas tree, and there was a real Santa Claus to hand out candy to the youngsters. The picture shown was an Arabian Night's tale, "For the Heart of a Princess," with little Baby Early.

C. L. Peavey, formerly associated with the Pittsburgh Paramount Exchange, and coming direct to Minneapolis from Detroit, where he was in charge of the Artcraft office, is the newly appointed manager of the Famous Players Star Feature Film Service of Minneapolis, which was purchased recently by the Paramount Pictures Corporation from Messrs. Barnett.

Motion picture theaters in Philadelphia are aiding in the present campaign waged in that city for cleaner streets by showing special slides pointing out the need and urging each citizen to do his share. This is in accordance with a request made by Mayor Smith that the exhibitors show the slides and display in their lobbies posters sent out by the Bureau of Highways.

100 HOUSES BOOK PICKFORD FILM

Artcraft Breaks Previous Record of Eighty-one First Run Engagements With "The Pride of the Clan."

Following the trade showings given "The Pride of the Clan" in New York and other cities throughout the country, hundreds of telegrams and letters of congratulations and requests for bookings have been received at the Artcraft headquarters.

When the initial Pickford-Artcraft picture, "Less Than the Dust," was released it appeared in eighty-one first-run theaters throughout the country for runs of from one to three weeks. Last week Artcraft announced that eight days before release date one hundred bookings for first-run showings of the second Pickford picture had been closed. It is readily felt by exhibitors who have seen "The Pride of the Clan" that this subject offers the greatest work of the famous star.

Communications requesting bookings are not confined to exhibitors of the large cities and many letters are being received from small town theaters.

Walter E. Greene, president of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation, in connection with the second Mary Pickford subject, said: "Not until the real history of the motion picture, its great growth and virility are written will it be possible for the present generation to accurately estimate what part in the early growth of pictures Mary Pickford has played. 'The Pride of the Clan' more than ever crystallizes for all time not only the wonderful charm of the most popular girl in the world, but affords her opportunity to display a dramatic finesse of rare merit. The merits of this photoplay de luxe are not confined to its extraordinary drawing power but are evidenced in every department of its presentation of the sweetest story ever screened. It is undoubtedly Miss Pickford's greatest achievement."

At the advance showing of Mary Pickford's new Artcraft production, "The Pride of the Clan," given at the Strand Theater, New York, the popular star was besieged by an immense crowd of admirers. Soon after Miss Pickford arrived at the theater word circulated about the audience that "Little Mary" was present in person and immediately after the showing the lobby was crowded with eager fans who waited for her to come out.

ARTCRAFT GETS MISS SNOW

Well Known Screen Favorite Engaged by Artcraft as Leading Lady for George M. in His First Screen Subject, "Broadway Jones."

Marguerite Snow, the well known screen favorite, has been engaged by the Artcraft Pictures Corporation to appear opposite George M. Cohan in his initial motion picture subject, "Broadway Jones."

Miss Snow will portray on the screen the part of Josie Richards, the pretty stenograper at the Jones gum factory, who shows the wild "Broadway Jones" the right path.

Marguerite Snow, who is to appear opposite George M. Cohan.

The role of "Josie" offers a particularly likeable character and one especially adapted to Miss Snow's capabilities.

Born in Savannah, Ga., and educated at the Loretta Heights Academy, Denver, Colo., Marguerite Snow made her debut as an actress at an early age and after five years behind the footlights entered the motion picture field.

In motion pictures Miss Snow gained great public favor throughout the country as a result of her famous characterization of the Countess Zudora in "The Million Dollar Mystery," one of the most popular serials ever produced, "Rosemary," "The Upstart," "Corner in Cotton," "The Second in Command," "The Silent Mystery," "The Turmoil" and many other big motion picture successes.

The balance of the cast for "Broadway Jones" is now being assembled and work has already been begun at the studio in New York on some of the big sets to be used in the first Cohan film.

Film Shipment by Parcel Post

The ruling put into effect January 1 by the post-office department allowing films to be handled through parcel post was quickly taken advantage of by W. J. Sirk, proprietor of the Gem Theater, North Manchester, Indiana.

The shipment was addressed to The Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service, Indianapolis, Indiana. The package was mailed early Tuesday morning and was promptly delivered on its arrival in Indianapolis at noon the same day. The postage required was 23 cents, two cents less than the express rate on the same package.

"The Case of Simon Dudsbury" is a three-reel play being directed at Universal City by William V. Mong.

For Your Children's Programs

LIST OF FILMS APPROVED BY MOTHERS' CONGRESS AVAILABLE TO EXHIBITORS

A LIST of selected films suitable for children's programs in motion picture theaters has been compiled by the Better Films Committee of the Illinois Congress of Mothers and Parent-Teachers Associations, of which Mrs. Michael is chairman.

In making up this list Mrs. Michael has not been satisfied with taking the word of the producers for their releases, nor the suggestions offered by the National Board of Review, nor the criticisms of the newspaper critics. No film has been placed on this list which has not been seen by some one or more of the women who form this Better Films Committee, and carries with it their personal endorsement that it is in every respect suitable for children. The word "children" in this case does not mean only the little ones under twelve years of age, but also the adolescent child of from twelve to eighteen years.

No Complaints if You Use This List

"I am sure this will be good news to the exhibitor who is interested in special programs for children and those who are contemplating starting such entertainments," said Mrs. Michael. "Here is a free list already prepared and waiting for them—and they can be sure that there will be no complaints from the mothers that they are not showing the right kind of subjects."

It is a very severe test to which the pictures are subjected before they are considered worthy of being included in these recommendations for the women who are passing judgment on the films are themselves mothers or are representative women who have been working along this line for some time. The names and addresses of the producers are given so the exhibitor may know just where to obtain the films desired.

Among the pictures which have been approved by these exacting critics are the following Mutual films: "Rumpelstiltskin," "Robin Hood," "Faithful Shep," "Helen's Babies," "Doll House Mystery," "Little Life Guard," "Pirates Bold," "Rivals," "Runaways," "Little Dick's First Case," "Her Filmland Here," "His Majesty the Kind," "Burglar's Picnic," "Reel Life," and "Jack and the Bean Stalk."

The plan of this Better Films Committee is to send out this bulletin to all the motion picture theater managers who are interested in this work. This will tell them where they can secure the right kind of pictures and guide them in planning their program. This first list is simply the foundation step in a scheme which involves a regular weekly pamphlet containing the titles of additional films which have been approved. To aid in the compilation of these lists the women are going to the various producers and asking that they be allowed to see any films which might be deemed worthy for this publication.

Variety of Subjects Necessary

Experience has taught the organizations interested in this movement for better films for children that a program must not be too educational. There should be romance, fairy tales, comedy, as well as travel, nature study and history. The adolescent child particularly must be taken into consideration. The committee is particularly pleased with the magazines of the screen, the news of the day and the travel pictures, and believes they should form a part of each program of this class.

Again quoting Mrs. Michael, "I mention particularly in this respect Mutual's four weekly subjects—'Reel Life,' the magazine of the screen; 'See America First,' 'Mutual Weekly,' and 'Mutual Tours Around the World'—for these give an educational trend to the program in a manner which not only does not antagonize the children into feeling they are having pictures which are 'good for them' forced upon them, but are subjects which hold their interest and add to their enjoyment."

Mrs. Michael, whose address is 5325 Indiana avenue, Chicago, Illinois, would be very glad to receive suggestions from exhibitors as to pictures shown in their theaters which they believe would be valuable additions to this list. She would also be very glad to send this free list to all interested exhibitors. Simply write to her at the above address.

Believes in Children's Pictures

"Yes, I believe irrevocably in children's pictures," states E. W. Hammons, vice-president and general manager of the Educational Films Corporation of America, "because I think the wave of sex plays that hit the country recently have caused a swing-back of the popular taste to clean and simple stories. When you take into consideration the all important fact that the big percentage of picture audiences are women and that the mind of woman is essentially clean, you can see why the reaction has set in."

"And what woman wouldn't enjoy a children's picture, as long as it has plot?" Mr. Hammons asked the interviewer.

Giving his own answer to the query, he said: "Undoubtedly a sex story with plot is preferable to a clean story without a plot; but give the audience a 100 per cent picture that at the same time has plot and punch and you have the ideal combination."

"Recently we offered on the open market a production of 'Snow-White,' acted entirely by children, and I venture to say that no rights to a sex play sold faster than those of this obviously clean story. The best state right buyers took the picture without hesitation and their customers all seemed to be glad to get it. Most of these customers, remember, were bidding their heads off for sex plays four months ago. Perhaps censorship agitation had something to do with the change in exhibitor sentiment, but one thing is clear: there has been a change and it is toward the clean film."

Exhibitors Guests of Exchange

George M. Mann, manager of the Famous Players Exchange, Washington, D. C., opened the New Year with a luncheon to Baltimore exhibitors at the Rennert Hotel. Mr. Mann in his address stated that Paramount pictures were paramount in all the word implies, but that even so there was room for improvement, and the problem today is how to best promote the interests of the exhibitor, by furnishing him with additional co-operation and service. Mr. Mann during the past year has been able to assist the exhibitors of his district, by bringing pressure to bear upon the express companies, looking more to prompt and reliable deliveries.

Carl H. Pierce, special representative of the Paramount Pictures Corporation and of the Paramount manufacturers, dwelt particularly upon the plans of his companies for increased service to the exhibitors.

H. P. Mulford, the newly appointed publicity man of the Famous Players Exchange, delivered an able address on the publicity plans for 1917; E. R. Carr dwelt particularly upon the problems of the small town exhibitor and the problems of success of the small town exhibitor in his district; and other addresses followed from H. W. Webb, Parkway Theater; Myer Fox, Rialto Theater; J. Louis Rome, Broadway Theater.

Others present were, Bernard Dopkin, Frank D. Webb, A. F. Gillespey, Arthur Price, Thos. Goldberg, G. Horton Gaffney, W. O. Baker.

NEW CHICAGO PRODUCERS

Schwartz Films, Incorporated, to Produce in Middle West Six Two-Reel Features Based on Poems by Ella Wheeler Wilcox

Quietly and without any of the customary advance announcements and preliminary red-fire, the new firm of Schwartz Films, Incorporated, has made its advent into the feature film field of the Middle West.

It is the intention of Schwartz Films, Incorporated, to take over for direct distribution to the exhibitors in this territory only the biggest and most worthy of the super-films as they are produced. In this connection it is well to note that Schwartz Films will operate a special publicity service in connection with each feature distributed.

Among the first of the famous features handled by Schwartz Films will be the series of six two-reel superfeatures based upon the poems of Ella Wheeler Wilcox, and distributed by them to exhibitors in Illinois, Wisconsin and Indiana. There had been much speculation as to the handling of the Ella Wheeler Wilcox pictures in this territory, but the Schwartz Films people overbid all competitors.

The Ella Wheeler Wilcox series controlled by Schwartz Films consists of six two-reel dramas, each complete in itself, and each based on one of Miss Wilcox's most famous poems. The "poetess of passion" needs no introduction to the American public, being perhaps the most popular of all latter-day women writers, and her name practically a household word.

Each of the six dramas has a different cast, each headed by a well-known star, a special line of paper of exceptional worth, and a separate set of advertising. The titles of the six dramas are announced as "A Married Coquette," "Angel Or Demon," "Meg's Curse," "Lais, When Young," "Divorced" and "Lord, Speak Again." Among the prominent stars in the various casts of players are Arthur Ashley, Lucile Taft, Walter Miller, Charlotte De Felice and many others of equal note.

That the mere announcement of the Ella Wheeler Wilcox series of features will suffice to bring in a flood of pre-bookings is evidenced by the fact that without any publicity of the usual advance nature, Marcus Loew has arranged for the entire series to play his big string of New York theaters, and that the Proctor circuit has contracted for the second run following the Loew showing. Schwartz Films have announced that they will book the six Ella Wheeler Wilcox pictures for this territory in one booking, releasing them to the exhibitor at the rate of one each week.

Schwartz Films, Incorporated, with William M. Schwartz, as president and general manager; M. Schwartz, vice-president; Jack M. Schwartz, treasurer; and I. Maynard Schwartz, secretary, together with their able office staff, will endeavor at all times to cooperate with the exhibitors and give them the best to be had at prices where they will be able to net larger profits on big features.

A Colleen for Fine Arts

Chicago, supposed to be full of nothing but stock yards and wind, contributed this little bit of Irish beauty to the Triangle-Fine Arts studios. Her name is pure French — Colleen Moore.

The most recent addition to the Triangle-Fine Arts Company is Colleen Moore, a pretty Irish maid from Chicago, who will be given roles that were designed for Mildred Harris before it was decided to send Miss Harris east with Douglas Fairbanks.

Miss Moore was sent from the Windy City to Los Angeles by a well-known director of the Fine Arts Company, who met her at a social function and was so favorably impressed by her beauty and personality that he recommended her to the managers of the Fine Arts. She is a graduate of a southern convent and is an accomplished musician.

New Metro Releases

"Threads of Fate," a new five-reel feature photo drama with winsome Viola Dana in the star part, is the new release of the Columbia Pictures Corporation and will be released on the Metro program January 22.

This production is directed by Eugene Nowland, and was adapted for the screen by June Mathis, from the original story of Richard Barry. Some of the scenes are laid among the coal mines of Pennsylvania, and some of the thrills are caused by a strike, which takes place during the story.

The role of "Dorothe" played by little Miss Dana is delightful, and is one of the best she has portrayed. The supporting cast is well chosen, including, Robert Whittier, Augustus Phillips, Richard Tucker and Helen Strickland. "Threads of Fate" possesses an exceptionally strong cast. "His Perfect Day" is the new one-act comedy in which Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew are playing. This is a Metro release for January 15. It is an amusing situation handled in a capable manner by these clever two. Also a new Metro-Drew comedy is in preparation now, written by Charlotte Wharton Ayers, and will soon be finished. This, like all the comedies by Mrs. Ayers, and most of the Drew playlets by any other author, has the good luck name of "Henry" for its leading character. David Thompson of the Metro forces has left for Jacksonville, Florida, to arrange for the Metro-Rolfe companies headed by Ethel Barrymore and Viola Dana, whose next features will be partly photographed in Florida.

"When the Business Settles Down"

IT is a favorite expression of business philosophers—of which there are a few even in the film business—that things will be better all around "when the business settles down." Outside the industry, it is a favorite expression of sophisticated investors and cautious bankers. The impression still prevails, in film circles as well as out, that the motion picture, as an industry, is full of inefficiencies, inconsistencies and bad business. Some of the radicals may even be heard asserting that it is " in a chaotic condition," " all shot to pieces" and "nobody knows where he's at."

The mind of the man who voices those opinions is quite apt to be in the condition he describes. He measures the industry by his own mental state. Once rather simple and easily kept track of, the film business has become complicated, quick and kaleidoscopic. It moves too fast for the eye of a philosopher to follow it. And so the business man of philosophic tendencies (which is sometimes a synonym for easy-going carelessness) gives up the strenuous effort and waits for it to "settle down." Generally what he really means is "slow down." When it does that he figures to get aboard and ride along in a comfortable way.

Watchful waiting is not a good policy in this business, and we fear the man who wants things to settle before he carries out his plans is scheduled for disappointment.

This business isn't going to settle down. It's got to keep up the pace—the hotter the better. Some industries can sort of retire when they reach a certain age, and, like a successful old man, live on their incomes while George continues to do the odd jobs round the shop. But not this business.

It couldn't slow up if it wanted to. The people wouldn't let it. It is doomed to the eternal grind of turning out pictures as fast as they can be turned out, and they must all be good ones. It sounds like quite a sentence, but it's really a very happy sort of a destiny for everybody except the ones who are waiting for it to stop and let them get on.

No, the film business is not shot to pieces, even in the mildest sort of figurative sense. When you hear anybody say it is, just figure that the game is moving too fast for him. It's a perfectly sane business, running in a perfectly normal way; but it is geared to a higher speed than most of them, and never shifts its gears.

A well-known scientific paper the other day quoted some anonymous business man in the following terms:

"It is a surprise to me that the film producers ever get their product to the marketable stage, and that the product is of such high quality. The wonder of it is that they make any money at all, considering the inefficiency-run-riot methods in the studio and laboratory."

Alarming, isn't it? Sounds like we were doomed to failure, until we realize that your typical business man—whatever that may be—always talks that way about activities that he doesn't understand. You remember that Lord Chesterfield—a perfect gentleman—said that no dignified person should ever proceed faster than a slow walk. Lots of people look at business that way. Unless it proceeds in orderly fashion, with proper stops for inventory and to have the books audited and to install a new efficiency system, they don't think it is nice.

It seems to us that some of these folks who talk about efficiency don't really know what the word means.

There are several different kinds of efficiency. A motion picture studio, for example, is not a machine and does not even faintly resemble one. Its brand of efficiency comes not from reducing the working force to an exact number of essential cogs, and not from the adoption of piece-work methods and tabulated cost systems; it comes from completeness of equipment, the facilities it offers to the best talent it can get, and the speeding up that comes from enthusiasm and not from discipline.

Enthusiasm, of course, is the answer to all these vague criticisms. There is more enthusiasm in the film business than in any other business in the world. And so long as it continues the business will not settle down or slow up or do anything else but maintain a hot pace and strive constantly to make it hotter.

Little Old New York

LITTLE old New York, of course, is the best business town in the world. That verdict is unanimous in New York, and has a lot of supporters outside of it; so it must be true.

Most of New York's business, however, is done right there. The business man in that city doesn't have to go out after customers; they come to him. Everybody who has a wad of money to spend goes to the metropolis to spend it.

New York hasn't got all of the film business by any means, but it is film headquarters at present without a doubt.

The customers of the film business are scattered all over the country. New York has its share of them, of course—but no more. The New York film producers could not exist if they had to depend upon local trade. Neither could they exist if they had to depend upon the outside trade that came voluntarily to New York to do its marketing.

For, strange as it always seems to a New Yorker, the country is full of people who don't care anything about New York. Probably at least seventy-five per cent of the motion picture exhibitors have never been there—and what is worse, lots of them don't care whether they ever go there. Call it ignorance or whatever you will, it is a fact.

The country from Pittsburgh to the Pacific Coast thinks of Chicago before it thinks of New York, when it is considering its own business relations. It reads Chicago trade papers and even Chicago newspapers. There is no denying that when it comes to serving a geographically distributed clientele, Chicago has it all over New York.

New York is the concentrated business center. But the film business is not concentrated—it is distributed. So is the trade paper business. A New York trade paper is just as good as a Chicago trade paper; New Yorkers may think it is better. But the Chicago trade paper beats it out in the big end of the country, because the big end of the country looks to Chicago for its news and its business connections. And the New York producer does most of his business west of the city limits.

Chicago, as a distributing center for films, or trade paper influence, or both, has the advantage that its work radiates in all directions. New York's influence radiates only to one quarter of a circle. The very fact that New York is jammed into a corner is the reason why the wealth that flows into it stays there—it can't get any further. But that same fact explains why our biggest city serves itself best of all, and the rest of the country least of all.

No other paper can serve the motion picture exhibitor who operates west of Pittsburgh so well as MOTOGRAPHY; and no other paper can carry the producer's message to him with so welcome an entree. No matter where the producer is located, it is the paper that can distribute his activities over the most territory that does him the most good; and that is what MOTOGRAPHY is doing.

Vitagraph Releases "Blind Justice"

NEW YORK RIALTO PRESENTS "GIRL PHILIPPA" TO GREAT PRAISE

"BLIND JUSTICE" is the new seven reel dramatic masterpiece, written, staged, and played by the great Danish star, Benjamin Christie.

This picture is another of the high standard set by the Vitagraph Blue Ribbon pictures, and released by the V. L. S. E. exchange, and is said to be superior to those pictures which preceded its release.

Mr. Christie states it took him a year to make "Blind Justice" and the painstaking attention to the smallest of details puts this picture in a class by itself. The beauty of its settings is something to be appreciated by lovers of the "house beautiful." The exteriors are marvellous and awe-inspiring in their beauty.

In caring for the big points in the perfection of the picture, Mr. Christie has not carelessly neglected a single one of the many details of lighting, scenery and settings. Particularly beautiful are the scenes in the garden, with the pines bending almost to the ground under their heavy burden of snow which glistens in the moonlight and forms a fitting background for the tense action of the story.

As an example of his attention to details it may be cited that even the subtitles in "Blind Justice" stand far superior to those in most photoplays. In many instances these titles are printed over a dim picture of the action portrayed but which does not, in any way, hinder easy reading.

"The picture without a flaw" that is the unanimous comment of every one who has seen "Blind Justice."

Walter W. Irwin, general manager of Vitagraph-V. L. S. E., calls special attention to the fact that "Blind Justice" is a regular release, available to every exhibitor as a program feature, and has not been withheld as well might have been the case with so magnificent a production.

Comments upon the picture made by practically every critic of all motion picture magazines are identical. Wonderful, superb and gripping are possibly the words which best express the magnitude of this beautiful production. All the critics who saw this picture claim there is not one flaw to be found in the entire production.

Scene in "Blind Justice," directed and produced for Vitagraph by Benjamin Christie, the eminent Danish producer who also plays the powerful leading role.

So appreciative was the appeal to all classes by "Blind Justice" that the officials of the Vitagraph Company, after viewing it at a private exhibition, exerted every effort to purchase it for release on their program. After much trouble and at an enormous cost they were successful, and it is now offered to their exhibitors through Vitagraph-V. L. S. E.

Benjamin Christie, proving himself an artist in all three phases of the photoplay profession, is the author of the excellent story, director of the dramatic and tense situation and the star who gives one of the most remarkable characterizations ever seen on the screen.

Anita Stewart in Vitagraph's "The Glory of Yolande," a striking Blue Ribbon feature.

Outside New York's Rialto at the 6 p. m. showing of Vitagraph's "The Girl Philippa," December 31.

In this star role in "Blind Justice," Mr. Christie finds an opportunity for a masterful characterization—one that grips his audience and at the same time gives him vent for his wonderful versatility. He makes the man—first weak and pleading and then strong and crafty—one that is real, one that places him high in the constellation of film stars.

"Girl Philippa" Praised by Robert Chambers

"The Girl Philippa," the new release of the Greater Vitagraph Company, has finally had its premiere at the Rialto Theater under the able direction of Samuel L. Rothapfel, presiding genius of the Rialto's destinies, who accords it the highest praise he has yet tendered any motion picture production.

Robert Chambers, the well-known author of "The Girl Philippa," has nothing but the highest praise for the screen version of his widely read book.

Every New York newspaper critic speaks highly of the production. It is a charming play, and is even more attractive on the screen than the book. Anita Stewart makes Philippa a real flesh and blood girl. Mr. Chambers in speaking of Miss Stewart and the production says:

"The Girl Philippa" is the most beautifully handled, most artistic motion picture I have ever seen. It is simply corking. In fact, the whole presentation is perfectly delightful. The various scenes are worked out with surprisingly good effect. The studio scene is beautifully done and it is the only time I have ever seen a studio in motion pictures that looked like the real thing.

The composition of the battle scenes was perfect. The bombardment is exceedingly clever, and the chase through the wine-cellar contained magnificent action.

In the role of Philippa Miss Stewart is most charming. I admired the restraint in her interpretation of the part. I have never seen a more delightful piece of acting than of Miss Stewart's in the scene in the cabaret when she is told by Wildresse to spy on the American artist. The scene is charming.

The entire production is beautifully cast and S. Rankin Drew, the director, is entitled to the greatest credit. His acting in the role of Warner, is most excellent. A better man than Mr. Drew for the part could not have been chosen. Mr. Randolf, as Wildresse, is amazingly true to life. He is the man Wildresse himself, just as I pictured him when I wrote the story.

The whole performance of "The Girl Philippa" is delightful and most artistic—I might say, bully. I think it is fine.

Predictions were frequent on Broadway when the opening day's run of "The Girl Philippa" had been ended by Mayor Mitchell's edict that no theater should remain open after midnight, that this Greater Vitagraph eight-reel production would set a new high record for bookings and collections. One well-known motion picture man said: "Here is the first $2,000,000 picture."

This picture was produced under the personal supervision of Albert E. Smith, president of the Greater Vitagraph, and the direction of S. Rankin Drew. As the merit of the Vitagraph directors is well known, it is needless to say that the picture will find not only immediate favor with the Vitagraph fans, but will make many new friends among the motion picture fans.

This film masterpiece has literally blazed a new trail on Broadway, that hardest-of-all-to-please amusement centers. The productinon is most artistically produced and more than lives up to the high standard set by the Greater Vitagraph.

The first appearance of Evelyn Greeley in a World-Brady cast will occur in "The Eleventh Hour."

The next Gail Kane release by the World Film Corporation is to be called "The Red Woman" instead of "Her God" as formerly.

Annette Dives Through Chicago

The Australian diving Venus who stars in Fox's "A Daughter of the Gods," who gets $3,000 a week at the New York Hippodrome, and who told MOTOGRAPHY she doesn't like to wear clothes.

"I don't like to wear clothes!"

"I once did an act at White City in Chicago between the girl with the snakes and the Philippino family."

"I've just finished training 40 mermaids for my New York Hippodrome act. Gee, it's hard work! They can't use their feet or legs, you know; they've got to be all tail."

"Yes, I'm going to get three thousand a week."

"Say something against motion pictures," the news parasite asked.

"Well, I'll tell you right now, I wouldn't work in five reel features! People wouldn't give a rap to see me in them and I would hate studio work. And nobody can make one good feature a month."

"I'll never work in pictures in anything but spectacles and I'll never work for anybody except Fox, for he has spent so much money to make my pictures go."

There you have Annette Kellermann as she expressed herself on January 6 when she was in Chicago to address a special morning matinee of "A Daughter of the Gods" at the Studebaker Theater.

The Australian of the form divine was with her dog and husband, James R. Sullivan, and told the above to MOTOGRAPHY on the trip from theater to station, where Publicityman Jack Lait of the Chicago Herald staged a lightning lunch on board the Twentieth Century train for New York. Several press people of the city were present.

Annette said the hardest thing she did in "The Daughter of the Gods" was to dive from the tower into a spot of water surrounded by rocks and shallows.

Aaron Jones, of Jones, Linick and Schaefer, the prominent film men, claims, by the way, to be one of the discoverers of the diving Venus. Aaron heard of her 11 years ago, sent her money to come to White City and paid her a clerk's wages to jump gracefully into his exhibition water tank.

Peggy Hyland in "Babette"

Peggy Hyland and Marc MacDermott have started work in Greater Vitagraph's studio on "Babette." This picture story is by A. Van Buren Powell, from the famous book of the same name by F. Berkley Smith. "Babette" is a sweet atmosphere story of French life and is a splendid vehicle for Miss Hyland's cleverness and Mr. MacDermott's manly acting.

Kitty Gordon is at work on "Haunting Shadows," the first of her new World-Brady picture plays.

New Mutual Productions

KOLB AND DILL TOP THE PROGRAM FOR WEEK OF JANUARY 22

KOLB AND DILL in a five-part production entitled "Beloved Rogues" tops the Mutual Film Corporation's schedule of releases for the week of January 15. This production comes from the American Film Company's Santa Barbara studios, where it was produced under the direction of Al Santell, the director of the entire successful series of Kolb and Dill productions.

The picture offers several points of special value to the exhibitor. The cast includes a number of actors of independent drawing power and personal standing in the eyes of the motion picture patron. Miss May Cloy, the pretty young blonde person who has figured in all of the K. & D.'s is prominently cast in "Beloved Rogues." Harry Von Meter and Clarence Burton also have important parts.

Mr. Kolb appears in this production in the role of one "Louie Vandergrif" and his partner in crime Max Dill as "Mike Amsterdammer"—a pair of good-hearted blundering rascals. The plot unfolds their system of "doing others as they do you," with various attendant complications like prison terms and other sundries of fate. There is a swift interplay of humor and pathos, with a general pleasantry calculated to give genuine entertainment. "Beloved Rogues" has the distinctive flavor which has given Kolb & Dill productions an interesting history of growing success—a success pointed by some notable long run in metropolitan theaters, including Clune's Broadway in critical Los Angeles.

First of Mutual "Featurettes"

"Shorty and the Yellow Ring," scheduled for release January 15, is the first of the series of special Mutual "Featurettes" to be put out under the general title of "Adventures of Shorty Hamilton." There will be fifteen of these two-reel Hamilton productions in the series just announced. The booking of this series of "Featurettes" gives the exhibitor something worth advertising in short length film, and good short length pictures are always welcome. "Shorty and the Yellow Ring" is a tale of borderland daring in which the athletic and resourceful Mr. Hamilton appears as the knight-errant protector and guardian of the young woman secret service agent engaged in breaking up a plot for smuggling Chinese into the United States. The production includes a number of snappy encounters, several hot thrills and a happy ending, being rather of the sure fire type of picture, with a tinge of western atmosphere and a lot of detective drama. "Shorty" will be remembered by exhibitors from a number of Ince productions and the once famous line of "Bronchos."

"Tailor's Trimmings," a two-part Rube Miller Vogue that appears on Mutual's horizon January 21.

These very progressive solder merchants are Kolb and Dill in their newest Mutual Star, "Beloved Rogues."

"Tours Around the World," the Gaumont-Mutual travel reel for the week, takes the spectator for a trip from famous Gibraltar, guardian gate of the Mediterranean, to Algiers, through Tunis and bits of other North African territory. This is the land of some famed chapters of ancient history. This particular travel reel is worthy of special promotion with a view to interesting high school teachers and their pupils.

Coming back home we have "See America First" for the week of January 15, presenting a trip up Mount Lowe, California, picturing by the way a thrilling piece of mountain railway construction—this is a split reel concluded with Harry Palmer's weekly cartoon comic.

George Ovey, the comical Mutual "Cub," appears on Thursday of the week in "Jerry's Winning Way," a typical Ovey picture, cleanly funny.

"A Jack Tar in the Making," the third of the Mutual's interesting series of "Uncle Sam's Defenders" is available on Friday of this week. This release shows the steps in the making of a landlubber into a full-fledged sailor, described in nautical terms as "an able seaman."

Rube Miller and Owen Evans appear in a two-part Vogue comedy released Sunday, January 21, under the title of "Tailor's Trimmings." The comedy plot is sufficiently extravagant for the whimsical outbursts of the riotous Mr. Miller—being an affair of hold-ups, trolley car chases, accidents various and plenty and a violent ending.

"Reel Life," the Mutual Magazine in Films, for the week, pictures orange-growing in California, discusses "the air" and "the hydro."

The week's Mutual schedule is also rich in serial and serial productions with Chapter 13 of the Signal-Mutual photo-novel "A Lass of the Lumberlands," featuring of course the dauntless Helen Holmes; the eighth of the Gaumont Company's "The Vampires" stories under the title of "The Poison Man;" and "Ace High" the third of the Niagara-Mutual's series of newspaper stories featuring Helen Greene, released under the general title of "Perils of Our Girl Reporters."

"Witching Hour" Sells Next Release

Following the announced policy of William L. Sherrill, president of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, that company has, up to this time, refused to publicly state the territory already sold on its extraordinary release, "The Witching Hour," but sufficient has been ascertained to authoritatively state that there are but two territories undisposed of in the United States and Canada and that these territories will, in all probability, be closed out within the next two or three days.

As an evidence of the market for extraordinary productions, Mr. Sherrill, at an interview at his office, stated that more than fifty per cent of the state right buyers of "The Witching Hour" have requested the opportunity to purchase state rights in advance on the forthcoming extraordinary releases of The Frohman Amusement Corporation, regardless of the play being announced or determined upon.

"It appears," said Mr. Sherrill, "that state right buyers feel that we will adhere closely to our determination to release only superattractions and a desire to safeguard themselves, in advance. In this respect I may safely state my company will not disappoint them, for I would rather destroy a production than release one which does not measure up to the standard created by "The Witching Hour."

"I have three tremendous works on hand which are to be visualized but will not announce them, excepting as they are about to be put to work."

"My next extraordinary attraction will be what I might safely term "An Epic of the Twentieth Century." I shall give very little publicity to any of the matters in connection with this extraordinary release until it is completed, excepting to say that it will be no less than eight reels and if my expectations are realized, will be such a production as will take the country by storm."

Hearst-Pathe News

An arrangement by which the Pathe News and the International Weekly, are to be combined under the title of Hearst-Pathe News has created a good deal of attention.

The Pathe News has long been in the field, while on the other hand the International Weekly, of more recent inception, profiting by its news-gathering facilities, has rapidly gained strength until today, it is known to enjoy a wide popularity. The Pathe News has unusual facilities, for the getting of news pictures abroad. Pathe cameramen possess the best of reputation, and in the new combine the best of these, have been kept.

J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, is particularly enthusiastic over the new weekly. The old Pathe Weekly was inaugurated by Mr. Berst some eight years ago, and was the first news film in the field.

In the new arrangement, Pathe will assemble, edit, cut, and print the Hearst-Pathe News at the offices of the old Pathe News in Jersey City. The International will, however, attend to all details in connection with the gathering of the news pictures.

Mr. MacManus of the International was equally enthusiastic over the new arrangement.

Will Make Film in Denmark

Ellen Gierum, who at the present time is the leading lady with the Warburton Theater Stock Company, Yonkers, New York, has been engaged by Benjamin Christie, president of Dansk Biograph Company, to go to Copenhagen July 1, and play the leading feminine role in a photo-dramatic adaptation of "The Wandering Jew," the scenario of which Mr. Christie has prepared.

Mr. Christie is well known in this country through his two-film successes, "Sealed Orders" and "Blind Justice."

Fifteen Year-Old Triang-e Star

Mildred Harris has succeeded Mae Marsh in co-starring with Robert Harron. Miss Harris, who has just reached her fifteenth birthday, plays opposite Harron in the Triangle Fine Arts production, "The Bad Boy," written jointly by F. E. Woods, manager of production at the Fine Arts plant, and Director Chet Withey.

Mildred Harris is one of the most beautiful young women now in the silent drama. "The Bad Boy" was written especially for Harron. It tells of the transformation of a boy's character from a rough, loose living youth to a man with a noble purpose in life. A girl's guiding influence is largely responsible for the change. Colleen Moore, a newcomer at the Fine Arts studio, plays a prominent part in the production. The other principals in the cast include Richard Cummings, Josephine Crowell, W. H. Brown, James Harrison, Elmo Lincoln and Harry Fisher.

Triangle Studios Nearing Completion

The big, electrically lighted, enclosed studio at the Triangle-Fine Arts plant in Los Angeles is rapidly nearing completion. It is expected that it will be finished about the middle of January. When completed the enclosed studio will cover a floor space 60x120 feet. Other improvements include a new scene dock, covering 60x140 feet, a large paint shop and another open air stage covering a space 70x200 feet, all of which have been completed.

"A Gentleman of Nerve" is the title of a two-reel comedy filmed at Universal City under the direction of Carter De Haven.

First Aid to Theater Men

PRACTICAL HELP ON THE PROBLEMS OF RUNNING A PICTURE HOUSE

IN the mind of nearly everyone of you there often pops up the question of clean plays.

This is particularly true of managers of houses in down town locations. The director of a theater in a residence section knows without much doubt that it hurts him to run a picture that is morally questionable.

It is invaluable to know that in an investigation conducted a short time ago by the National Board of Review that by far the majority of exhibitors have found that in the long run it does not pay to show pictures to which anyone could take objection. There are a few exceptions, but this is the rule. And it is a good thing for other exhibitors to know definitely the conclusion of a large body of other exhibitors who have bucked up against the same question.

Ask your exchanges to give you not only strong stories and good stars, but clean stories. If they can't do it, try some of the other exchanges.

Putting "Class" Into a House

122—I am running a small suburban theater that probably is one of the poorest arranged and crude things in the world. It has a distinction, you see. I intend to make it the best in the world, for its size. I intend to make it "so different" that it will be "the talk." Have done it with others; think can do it with this. My location is good.

One or two questions please. Kindly explain just what you mean about the screen arrangement in your answer to No. 103, December 9 issue. Do not quite understand the "ragged edges" effect or how to obtain it. My screen is a homemade one, but I get a good picture. In remodeling I want to get as artistic an effect as possible. The present screen has a black border. Do you mean the painter should run the white into the black so as to get the desired effect?

Like yourself, I object to advertising slides, but see no objection to showing my own announcements between shows, and, as I have only one machine, showing two reels at a time, between reels. However, believe these should be very neat and artistic and not too numerous. Have often thought would cut out even my own announcements and show scenic slides at the breaks. How about it?

I appreciate your department very much. Best wishes for 1917 to both yourself and MOTOGRAPHY.

You have the right idea. If your house is in a good location remodel it till it is pleasant, attractive, well-ventilated and of good design and decoration.

In the answer to the question you mention we did not mean that your screen should have "ragged edges." We simply meant that the edges or box surrounding the screen should not be too stiff and unattractive. Exhibitors agree that the best way to get an artistic effect with the screen is to construct a good shadow box with well designed decorations. This, of course, costs a good deal of money, and the real art of it shows only when the lights are on.

Your present home-made screen with black border is probably about as good as any, according to most exhibitors, if it is kept well painted with whiting. Many exhibitors claim that some of the high-priced screens hurt the eyes in time.

You are certainly right in regard to advertising slides. Keep them out just as far as possible. Patrons of some high high-class houses in Chicago walk out when the screen is given over to local ads. It is, however, safe to run your own announcements, particularly if they are,—as they certainly should be,—made neatly and of simple, good design. They are more effective if they do not contain much reading matter. I would not advise you to bother with the scenic slides.

In remodeling your house be sure to avoid the over-decoration that is so common. Remember that "simplicity is sublimity." The design in everything should be first class, but subdued.

Shall I Go Into New York?

I am an exhibitor in a little Ohio town, with interests in theaters in two large cities. I am disgusted with the censorship proposition in this state and want to look around for a better field. Should like to try New York. Can you tell me something about the chances there? I would just like to know how many houses there are in the city and how they are scattered.

Although there is a good deal of sympathy due you for being obliged to work with the Ohio board of censors, I still would not advise you to go into New York City unless you have had experience in the big city game. If you can get into the right small towns, competition is much less keen.

It is estimated that there are 1,000 picture houses in New York City, with a total seating capacity of 575,000. The estimated daily attendance is 1,250,000 and the average Sunday attendance, 1,600,000. The number of houses seating 800 to 1,800 is 134; seating from 600 to 800, 232. And it is figured that there are in the city something like 514 theaters seating 600 or less.

"Look before you leap" is our advice. And you certainly will be wise enough to investigate the fields in the towns in your neighboring states before you take a chance in the "big village." And why not branch out in the big cities in which you say you now own interests? The familiar field is always the safest.

Indiana Exhibitors Meet

The regular yearly get-together of exhibitors of Indiana will take place on Thursday, January 18, at Indianapolis. The meetings will be held at the headquarters of the league on Illinois street.

One distinctive feature about this exhibitors' meeting, according to F. J. Rembusch, will be that it will be entirely devoted to business. In order to keep the members' noses on the grindstone, all social diversions, entertainments and so forth, have been eliminated. An exceptionally large attendance is expected.

"We have the strongest membership we have ever had," said Mr. Rembusch to MOTOGRAPHY, "and we are confident that we are going to have the best meeting we have ever had. It will be all business from the word go. The expositions, stars and entertainments which generally take up all the time will be eliminated and we will give all our attention to the betterment and uplift to the membership."

The new league headquarters are very convenient as they are situated above the Lyric Theater which is owned by the Barton and Olson enterprises, two prominent members of the league. The Lyric is directly across the street from the interurban station.

Triangle January Releases

Douglas Fairbanks and Dorothy Dalton are the stars of the Triangle releases for January 28.

Fairbanks appears in a serio-comic drama requiring the usual thrilling deeds, entitled "The Americano," which was written by John Emerson and Anita Loos from Eugene P. Lyle's novel, "Blaze Derringer." The piece is directed by John Emerson.

The story has to do with a young American engineer, who goes to the Republic of Paragonia in Central America to take charge of the national mines. He falls in love with a beautiful girl, and after much trouble thwarts the villain, and brings about a happy ending to the play.

Dorothy Dalton has a vehicle excellently suited to her tremendous screen personality in "Chicken Casey," a play of theatrical and literary life by J. G. Hawks, directed by Raymond B. West.

Dorothy Dalton's part in "Chicken Casey" is that of Mavis Marberry, a well known actress. Her manager reads a successful novel by a young author named Everett Hale, who has made a heroine of a slum waif named "Rags." Mavis meets Hale and demands the leading part but is rejected by Hale, who does not consider her fitted to do a "tough" type. Mavis manages to be introduced to Hale as a dance hall ingenue in a notorious bowery dive. Hale is deceived, decides to reform the girl, and casts her in the part. Mavis makes a tremendous hit. They of course fall in love and a happy future is assured them both.

New Mutual Series

The Mutual Film Corporation has contracted with the Monogram Films of Los Angeles for the release of a series of fifteen two-reel dramas under the general title "Adventures of Shorty Hamilton," the first of which entitled "Shorty Hamilton and The Yellow Ring," will be released on January 15.

This new series is to be put out by the Mutual as one of its "Featurette" star productions, just announced by President John R. Freuler.

John Hamilton, or "The Loot" as he is called by his intimates, is one of the best known motion picture stars in the country. He served six years in the United States cavalry and became associated with film enterprises four years ago, registering an immediate success in western character parts because of the precise local color he was able to inject into cowboy and western types generally. Mr. Hamilton was for five years a cowboy working on the plains of Montana and Texas. He had a distinguished career under Thomas H. Ince, being featured in "The Great Smash" with especial success.

Gripping scene in "The Yellow Ring," one of Mutual's new Shorty Hamilton series of fifteen two-reel dramas.

In the "Shorty Hamilton" featurettes, Mr. Hamilton is at his best because they portray the adventures of a cowboy character—a cowboy who is at the same time used to good society and clothes in his own home town of New York—in contact with all sorts and conditions of people who think he may be a chump because he wears "chaps" and who live to rue their shortsightedness invariably. The plays are being expensively produced with a strength of caste and general technical excellence hitherto unusual in the production of two-reel features.

Herbert Brenon Seriously Ill

Herbert Brenon, the well known motion picture director, is ill with typhoid fever at a hospital in Wilmington, Delaware. Two specialists have been summoned from New York. His wife and daughter are with him.

Mr. Brenon was taken ill with grippe in New York City while he was conducting rehearsals for a new dancing pantomime being offered by Mlle. Dazie in vaudeville under his direction. He was confined to his bed for several days, but insisted on going to Wilmington to attend the opening performance of Mlle. Dazie's act. He took a turn for the worst and pneumonia was threatened. Typhoid then developed and he was removed to the hospital.

Mr. Brenon has been associated with the stage practically al of his life, though his first big success was with Annette Kellermann in "Neptune's Daughter." Since then his rise has been rapid. He directed the production of the Kellermann picture, "A Daughter of the Gods," for William Fox. Of late he has been associated with the Lewis Selznick enterprises. He made a great success with the Nazimova production, "War Brides."

Prisoners See "The Ninety and Nine"

For the first time in the history of the city the prisoners in the county jail at Scranton, Pennsylvania, were shown a motion picture within the walls of the grim old prison. Sheriff Ben S. Philipps and Manager Frank Whitbeck, of Poli's Theater, arranged the program.

Mr. Whitbeck is showing "The Ninety and Nine" at Poli's Theater and it was he who chose this picture above all others for the prisoners to see on Christmas day. In addition, several of the vaudeville acts on the same bill also appeared in the prison, there being five acts in all.

" 'The Ninety and Nine' was the hit of the show," said Mr. Whitbeck. "It was cheered to the echo, especially the scenes showing the forest fire and the engine run. Personally, I think that 'The Ninety and Nine' is one of the best things that Vitagraph has done in some time. It is clean, has a good story, is splendidly directed, and is well acted.

"It was just the sort of picture that would at once amuse and educate, and Sheriff Philipps and I were highly pleased with the show."

The famed Maxine Elliott is below and beautiful Jane Cowl is in the center, twice. Both are new Goldwyn stars.

Here (below) is another example of the Elliott type of beauty, posed by that lady herself for MOTOGRAPHY.

Goldwyn Stars

STUDIO LEASED FOR PICTURES WITH ITS BRILLIANT PLAYERS

MAXINE ELLIOTT is now on the brilliant list of Goldwyn stars.

This news follows closely that of Jane Cowl having been placed under contract by this company. Miss Elliott, who is internationally famed for her beauty, has returned to her native land after several years abroad, where she gave her entire time and effort to European War Relief work. Known as "The Glory Girl," Miss Elliott has engaged in work of the most strenuous and tiring kind at her relief hospital along the Yser canal, where she became the idol of the officers and the soldiers in whose behalf she performed such tremendous labors.

Brilliant Career of Maxine Elliott

Maxine Elliott, who has been called "the handsomest girl who ever came out of New England," was born in Rockland, Me., of typical "Down East" stock. At the age of sixteen she began to study for the stage under the tutelage of Dion Boucecault, at whose suggestion she adopted the stage name of Maxine Elliott instead of her own, which is Jessie Dermott. She made her first stage appearance with E. S. Willard in 1890 under A. M. Palmer's management. After minor roles in "The Middleman," and "John Needham's Double," the following year she was given important roles in "A Fool's Paradise" and "The Professor's Love Story."

In 1893 she was the original Violet Woodman in "The Prodigal's Daughter," following this with engagements in "The Voyage of Suzette," "Diplomacy," "Forget Me Not" and "London Assurance." Augustin Daly took her into his famous company in 1895 and under this dramatic master she won rank as one of the foremost American actresses. With Daly she played Sylvia in "Two Gentlemen of Verona," Hermia in "A Midsummer Night's Dream" and Olivia in "Twelfth Night."

After her marriage to Nat Goodwin in 1898, the two players were co-stars in England, America and Australia.

After a time it became increasingly difficult to find plays that gave Miss Elliott and Mr. Goodwin equal opportunities, so in 1893 she was starred for the first time independently in "Her Own Way," by Clyde Fitch. This play scored an instant success and in 1905 when playing in it in London, King Edward, who occupied the royal box, led the applause throughout the evening and after the last curtain asked for an interview with the beautiful American. From that moment Miss Elliott has enjoyed the friendship and admiration of the ruling family of Great Britain. Her next big success was in "Her Great Match" in 1905 and she followed this in 1907 with "Under the Green Wood Tree" and "Myself—Bettina." In 1908 Miss Elliott and Mr. Goodwin were divorced.

Also, in 1908, she became the owner and manager of the only theater in America built and conducted by a woman since the days of Laura Keene—the Maxine Elliott Theater in West Thirty-ninth street, New York. Every detail of its construction was superintended by Miss Elliott and the opening attraction was her own performance of a new play, "The Chaperon," followed by "Deborah of Tod's." During 1910 she appeared in a successful comedy, "The Inferior Sex."

For several years Miss Elliott has devoted herself more and more to social life in London, where she has a charming town house. She has taken an almost passionate interest in the great world-war and at the very outset became one of the principal organizers of relief work for the wounded at or near the European battlefronts.

Miss Elliott is now at the very height of her remarkable beauty and her entry into motion pictures as a star for the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation will result in the making of millions of new admirers here and abroad for this distinguished artist.

Jane Cowl Has Rapid Rise

Jane Cowl has had a short but very brilliant career on the speaking stage. The daughter of a talented mother, Miss Cowl in her early teens turned toward a literary career and began writing verses for Brooklyn

Life. Later, through a friend she met David Belasco and secured an engagement at the old Belasco Theater. After playing small parts in "The Rose of the Rancho" with Frances Starr, and "A Grand Army Man" with David Warfield, she was given the leading role in "Is Matrimony a Failure?" After that came a season of summer stock in Union Hill, New Jersey, in every sort of role from Katie in "Old Heidelberg" to "Caniille." The next big role was the feminine lead in "The Gamblers."

Then came Mary Turner in Bayard Veiller's "Within The Law." After that, under A. H. Wood's management, Miss Cowl created the leading feminine role in "Common Clay," another big step upward. Acting with John Mason, Miss Cowl won a remarkable success in this play.

James Huneker's Sister with Goldwyn

Diana Huneker, sister of James Huneker, noted critic, author and musician, has joined the scenario department of Goldwyn Pictures, where she works in association with Margaret Mayo and Edith S. Ellis.

Miss Huneker has a reputation of her own, independent of her famous brother. She invented the modern woman's page in daily newspapers, and presided over the first one under the pen name of "Diana" on Colonel Elverson's Philadelphia Inquirer.

Solax Studio at Fort Lee Leased

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation announces that it has taken the Solax studios in Fort Lee, New Jersey, where it will begin at once its first big screen productions in the splendidly equipped plant. With Maxine Elliott, Jane Cowl and Mae Marsh ready to begin work, the Goldwyn organization will tax the capacity of its first studio plant and other facilities may have to be looked out for.

Previous announcement has been made that the Goldwyn Corporation will work in studios both in the East and on the Pacific coast and that six, perhaps ten, finished pictures will be on the shelves before any one of the productions is released for public approval.

Essanay Buys "The Trufflers"

George K. Spoor, president of Essanay, announces the purchase of the motion picture rights to "The Trufflers," Samuel Merwin's great novel. Its picturization is being prepared now at the Essanay studios. The film will be released through the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service, March 4. Nell Craig will be seen as the star.

"The Trufflers" first ran in the Cosmopolitan magazine as a series of short stories. "The Trufflers" refers to the colony of artists at Greenwich Village, New York. It is here that practically all of the great painters, illustrators, sculptors and writers of Manhattan Isle reside.

Director James Young has started work on the filming of the first of the three Cohan & Harris stage hits which President Spoor has purchased for picturization by Essanay. These plays, all of which were Broadway successes, are "Hawthorne of the U. S. A.," "Young America," and "On Trial."

Sol L. Lesser, president of the All Star Features Distributors of San Francisco, who recently purchased the California, Arizona and Nevada rights to Herbert Brenon's gigantic presentation of Nazimova in "War Brides," by Marion Craig Wentworth, and Thomas H. Ince's "Civilization," has secured the Alcazar Theater for the presentation of his two big film spectacles.

International's First Pathe Release

"Patria," the International's serial romance of society and preparedness by Louis Joseph Vance, featuring Mrs. Vernon Castle, is being widely booked by leading exhibitors everywhere. "Patria" is released January 14 through Pathe Exchange under the arrangements just completed between Pathe and International.

"Patria" has cost, it is said, half a million dollars to place on the market. When the idea was first conceived, W. R. Hearst directed that no expense be spared. He ordered the greatest star, the greatest publicity campaign, the greatest story, the best cast and the best production that money could buy. For a year the International's forces have been at work and according to E. A. MacManus, general manager, the results have surpassed expectations. Here are a few of the important theaters that have booked "Patria":

Kings, of St. Louis, seven days; Miles, of Cleveland, seven days; Bowdoin Square, of Boston, six days; Shenandoah, St. Louis, seven days; Strand, St. Louis, four days; Beacon, Fenway and Shawmut, of Boston, three days; Superba, Los Angeles, seven days; Grand, Columbus, O., four days; Plaza, Fall River, Mass., two days.

In addition, reports just wired in and which do not name the theaters show that San Francisco has a seven-day first run booking; Akron, O., three days; Louisville, five days; Dayton, five days; Omaha, three days; New Bedford, Mass., six days, and Providence, R. I., six days, and many cities are yet to be heard from.

Artcraft President Talks on Taxtation

"I feel confident that every fair-minded person will look with disfavor upon the contemplation of this latest infliction upon the motion picture industry," said Walter E. Greene, president of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation, in connection with the proposed taxation law.

"The claim might be made that our business is a prosperous one, but there are many other industries, especially those affecting the war in Europe, which are reaping far greater harvests than the film interests.

"Everyone knows that the motion picture is beneficial to both masses and classes. The motion picture should be encouraged and not handicapped by taxation.

"Why should the motion picture be selected from the field of amusements as a means of taxation? Many motion picture theaters are operating under as great overhead expenses as the regular 'legitimate' theaters. The exhibitor gets 'motion picture prices' in the way of admissions; the manager of the 'legit' house gets as high as $2.50 a seat. Yet the motion picture theater manager is expected to give up part of his limited revenues while the man who gets $2.50 for a seat is not taxed.

Rothapfel Remains with Rialto

Despite all rumors that he might resign as managing director of The Rialto of New York and accept one of the several offers made to him recently, S. L. Rothapfel announces officially that he will continue in his present position and devote all his time to perfecting the style of entertainment which he originated.

NEW PARAMOUNTS

Marie Doro, Wallace Reid and Anita King in New Features Head the Program for the Week of January 22.

Marie Doro in the Lasky production of "Lost and Won," and Wallace Reid and Anita King in the Lasky production of "The Golden Fetter," will be the two big features on the Paramount Program for the week of January 22.

Surrounding the program will be three short-reel features; the fiftieth edition of the Paramount Pictographs, the magazine-on-the-screen; the fifty-first of the series of "weekly trips around the world," by Burton Holmes, in which he takes the travelers to Ottawa and Toronto, and a Black Diamond comedy, entitled "He Did It Himself."

"Lost and Won" was written for Miss Doro by Channing Pollock and Rennold Wolf. Playing opposite her in this picture is Elliott Dexter, it being the first time they have co-starred since their Famous Players adaptation of "Diplomacy."

In the production Miss Doro plays the role of a newsie. The story tells of how a little newsgirl is made the ward of a wealthy stock broker, who wagers he can make a newsgirl over into a society belle within the year. The girl becomes a reporter on the paper, editions of which she formerly sold, and when her benefactor is about to win the wager, he loses his money and is arrested for theft, and the former newsgirl and reporter, by her cleverness, discovers the identity of the real thief and succeeds in freeing the man she loves, and who has learned to love her. In the cast supporting Miss Doro and Mr. Dexter are Carl Stockdale, Maym Kelso, Robert Gray, C. H. Geldert, Sydney Dean and a number of other well known Lasky players.

Wallace Reid and Anita King in "The Golden Fetter" have a thrilling story to portray on the screen, it having come from the pen of Charles Kenney Jackson, and is based on the author's short story.

The story deals with a young New England school teacher who has been cheated into purchasing stock in a mine in Alaska, and who, to prove to her own mind that she has not been swindled, goes to see the "wonderful mine" and finds that it is nothing but a hill with no improvements and no gold, silver and other minerals coming forth. But she does run into a gang of unscrupulous miners and opens a school, the attendance of which consists of but one person with whom she soon falls in love. There is plenty of action and an excellent amount of suspense in the picture.

The fiftieth edition of the Paramount Pictographs, the magazine-on-the-screen, contains four leading subjects. The leading subject is that of the dangerous and thrilling winter sport of ice-boating, which is enjoying a tremendous vogue throughout the northern part of the country. In this edition also there is shown how Industrial Diamonds "carborundum" are made, this material being second in hardness only to the diamond and which is composed of nothing less than sand, salt and sawdust. Another very interesting subject in this release is that of the remarkable advance that has been made in landscape gardening by experts in their successful transplantation of big trees. A unique piece of comedy plastique is also contributed in this edition by Ashley Miller.

Burton Holmes takes his fellow journeyers to Ottawa and Toronto, where he shows many unique and interesting places.

One of the most screamingly funny comedies that Paramount has ever issued will be released this week in "He Did It Himself," a Black Diamond comedy produced for Paramount by the United States Motion Picture Corporation.

THIRD OF McCLURE SERIES

Shirley Mason Attains Stardom in "Passion," McClure Pictures Makes Announcement of Third of Seven Deadly Sins

As McClure Pictures has announced, "Passion," starring Shirley Mason, supported by George Le Guere, will be the third of the Seven Deadly Sins, the group of five-reel features to be released through the Triangle exchanges. The seven are to be released at weekly intervals, beginning the latter part of January.

A strenuous scene from "Passion," one of McClure's "Seven Deadly Sins."

In "Passion," Shirley Mason attains genuine stardom. In the other Seven Deadly Sins, the dainty McClure actress shares honors with other famous actors and actresses but in the third deadly sin she is pre-eminent.

"Passion" attacks gluttony and drink, and raises a danger signal for girls who are prone to fall in love at first sight with brainless but handsome men.

Shirley Mason is George Le Guere's sweetheart. He is a fine type of young man and worthy of her. Shirley, however, meets a "perfect man," a professional athlete who is appearing at Coney Island. She believes she loves him. Shirley is a daring swimmer and is engaged to perform at Coney Island and there has occasion often to see Leonidas, the man she admires. Leonidas wins the wrestling championship in an exciting match in Madison Square Garden and she promptly makes a hero of him and worships.

She finds herself about to be drawn into the life led by Leonidas. Thrilling adventures beset her. George Le Guere tries to save her and at last, in a throbbing climax, exposes Leonidas as the beast he is and wins Shirley back.

Miss Mason makes a daring diving girl and George Le Guere is a brave knight of today who vanquishes the "perfect man." The settings are varied and unusually complete and careful in detail.

WORK ON WORLD PLAYS

Five Dramas in Making at Peerless Plant—New Alice Brady Feature—Last Scenes for "The Whip" Sensational

Five picture plays for the World program are being made simultaneously at the Peerless studio, Fort Lee, New Jersey. Emile Chautard is directing Kitty Gordon in "Haunting Shadows," with Mantagu Love, George McQuarrie, Alex Francis, Lillian Herbert and Norma Phillips in the supporting cast. Travers Vale is directing Ethel Clayton in "The House Cat," with Rockcliffe Fellowes. "Motherhood," with Alice Brady as its star, is being produced by John O'Brien, the most recent addition to the World's list of directors. In the cast are John Bowers, David Powell, Stanhope Wheatcroft, John Dugley, Madge Evans, Marie Chambers, Florence Crane and others. Harley Knowles is placing the finishing touches on "Who Is Sylvia," with an all-star cast including Carlyle Blackwell, June Elvidge and Arthur Ashley, and the final scenes of "Her Higher Destiny" are being made under the direction of George Archainbeaud, with Gail Kane as the star, with Frank Mills, Gerda Holmes and Edward Langford in the cast.

The picture version of "Frou-Frou," in which Alice Brady is starred, will be released under the title, "A Hungry Heart." This will be offered February 5, one week ahead of the original date. The first American stage adaptation of this celebrated French play was produced by the late Augustin Daly and at once became a sensational success. It has been revived from time to time as a vehicle for many noted stars. The public has always responded warmly to this play, for it is one of the best dramas ever supplied by the Paris theaters, where it is a classic.

The story deals with a girl who marries out of respect for her father's wishes a man whom she does not love. Later she runs away with the one who had always possessed her heart. But ruin follows for all concerned and the pathetic heroine returns home to die. Emile Chautard is directing the screen version, which is on a lavish scale. For one scene the World Film Corporation built nearly 300 feet of a "street in Venice" along the banks of Sparkhill Creek at Piermont, N. Y., at a cost of nearly $20,000 in money and five weeks in time.

One of the biggest railroad wrecks ever staged for a picture was photographed at Greenwood, Delaware, as the final step in the Paragon production of "The Whip," the picture version of the Drury Lane play, the remaining scenes of which were completed some weeks ago. Ten cars and an engine were used, including a baggage car and a palace horse car such as are used to transport valuable race horses. The scene is but one of the many for which unusual settings were used, many scenes having been taken last summer during the racing meet at Saratoga.

"Something doing" every minute, aptly describes Chapter XIII of the Mutual-Signal serial, "A Lass of the Lumberlands," in which Helen Holmes performs her usual quota of daredevil feats.

Director McGowan has shown himself master of his craft in this chapter, for, although it is necessary to show many scenes which occurred in former chapters, he has not resorted to the interest killing, footage-gaining trick of showing scene after scene which has already been seen, but by a clever use of the double exposure dissolves in the desired action in a most artistic manner.

New Edition of "Damaged Goods"

A new edition of "Damaged Goods," one of the most successful photoplays in the history of the industry, is announced by the American Film Company.

This new edition of "Damaged Goods" will be available to exhibitors in the larger cities February 12. Arrangements for special pre-lease runs will be possible through special negotiations with the Mutual Film Corporation, which will handle the distribution of the production.

The new edition is a complete revision of the big and successful original production. Richard Bennett, the famous speaking stage star, who is responsible for the production both on the stage and the screen, personally supervised the revision of the production at the Santa Barbara studios of the American Film Company. A large number of entirely new scenes have been made and incorporated in the new edition and the entire picture has been subjected to a polishing and recutting that has brought it, in the opinion of Mr. Bennett and the expert staff of the American studios, to a final perfection.

The box office power of "Damaged Goods" has been proven some thousands of times and in nearly every center in the United States.

A new edition of the production was determined upon after President John R. Freuler of the Mutual Film Corporation received through the Mutual's exchange a large number of requests for return bookings after the first edition of the production was withdrawn from the market September 1, 1916. An investigation of the records on this picture showed that in practically every instance return bookings had proven even more profitable to the exhibitors than their first runs.

"The production has had a remarkable self-promotion," observed Mr. Freuler. "Carrying the original Broadway cast of Mr. Richard Bennett and his co-workers, and following the spectacular and successful career of the piece on the speaking stage and the first edition of 'Damaged Goods' met a success that surprised even the optimism of the producers. The picture has been talked about, preached about, and editorialized about, until it is known almost to every person in the United States. 'Damaged Goods' has won friends for the photodrama and it has created new patrons for the theater. It is conspicuously successful as 'a picture with a purpose.' Opposition and barriers of censorship have largely been beaten down by the same force of a public approval that is never wrong."

The Mutual withdrew the first edition of "Damaged Goods" from the market four months ago, and it has not been seen by the public in any form since that date. The picture will start out on its new first run without any competition between the first edition and the new edition.

The Mutual will issue a complete new line of exhibitors' aids, posters and lobby displays on the production. In connection with the release February 12, for the larger cities Mutual exchange managers have been instructed to accept not less than six-day runs.

Great things are expected of Dustin Farnum in his initial production for Fox Films, which William D. Taylor is now directing. The story of the picture was taken from one of the finest and most stirring novels ever written about the northwest.

National Censors Praise Theda Bara

FOX COMPLETES FIRST YEAR IN CALIFORNIA

La premiere vamp of the United States in "The Darling of Paris," praised by the official moralists.

THEDA BARA has been lauded by the champions of purity. "The Darling of Paris," her new starring vehicle, an adaptation of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," Victor Hugo's famous novel, brought forth the censorial praise. This unusual drama will be released by Fox January 22.

Another Fox five-reel play, "The Primitive Call," in which Gladys Coburn is the star, will also be released on the same date.

Although the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures sees hundreds of photoplays and more than a million feet of film every week of the year, this board immediately sent Fox Film Corporation a special report of laudation after viewing "The Darling of Paris."

This production is Theda Bara's first special feature under the new Fox policy for 1917, under which the distinguished screen artiste will appear only in special super de luxe photodramas. Such a report as has been made by the National Board of Review is very unusual.

Here are the comments of the board on the picture:

Entertainment value—excellent; educational value—good; dramatic interest—sustained; coherence of narrative—good; acting—excellent; photography—good; technical handling—well managed; costuming—effective; scenic setting—convincing; moral effect—good.

The board volunteered this general comment on the production:

In the opinion of those present, this was an unusually interesting and dramatic picture conveying in a vivid way the atmosphere of the period and the role in which Miss Bara appeared, afforded an excellent opportunity for her versatility.

The scenes of "The Darling of Paris" are all located in Paris. A gypsy girl with her foster-mother arrive in the French capital where her beauty attracts the attention of the Apaches, and she becomes a member of their band. Her beauty attracts Claude Frallo (Walter Law), a scientist of note. She repulses him, as she has already fallen in love with Captain Phoebus (Herbert Heyes).

During a visit of the gypsy girl in the apartment of the handsome captain, Frallo kills the captain and makes his escape. Upon the arrival of the gendarmes, Esmaralda is placed under arrest charged with the murder.

Esmaralda is subjected to torture to make her confess, but is defiant, knowing that she is innocent. The bell ringer of the cathedral, Quasimodo (Glenn White), who secretly worships the gypsy girl, becomes her protector. When Frallo visits the prisoner the bell ringer interferes. There is a struggle and the former is hurled from a parapet and killed. Again the girl appears before the tribunal. Put on the rack, she admits the murder of the captain. Just as Esmaralda is to be guillotined, the bell ringer gives the true version of the murder, implicating Frallo, whom he had killed.

Quasimodo, the plucky bell ringer, who was Esmaralda's protector and her liberator, becomes her husband.

The part taken by Theda Bara in "The Darling of Paris" is one of the most interesting characters she has been called upon to interpret, since she has been an artist in the silent drama. It is an unusual one, dominating the story from beginning to end. There are but few moments when she is not in the picture, which adds to the importance of the production.

In "The Primitive Call," in which Gladys Coburn is featured, William Fox has surrounded the star with a splendid cast. The play is an Indian picture that is "different" from the general run of Indian plays.

First Fox Year in California

In the last month of 1916, Fox Film Corporation celebrated the completion of its first year in California.

"The Primitive Call," the Fox release for January 22. Gladys Coburn is the alluring shout.

Within the past twelve months the corporation has grown in the west from an organization covering less than an acre of ground and employing about thirty persons to one using thirty acres and paying salaries to more than five hundred persons.

To reach this high state of development, the expenditure of more than $1,000,000 was required.

As late as June, 1916, only two delegations of Fox photoplayers were working on the Pacific coast. William Farnum was the star of one; George Walsh and Gladys Brockwell the stars of the other.

Today, in addition to the six comedy companies, there are also five dramatic companies acting in the Fox western studios.

These directors are: R. A. Walsh, Otis Turner, Frank Lloyd, William D. Taylor and Richard Stanton.

The directors of the comedy subjects are Charles Parrott, Ed. Frazee, Walter Reed, Harry Edwards, Hank Mann, Tom Mix and Henry Lehrman.

It was in December, 1915, that William Farnum and his company was sent to Los Angeles by William Fox. The group made arrangements for a year's lease on the old Selig studio in Ferndale. When Mr. Walsh's company arrived from the east a few months later, they also worked in the Ferndale plant.

With the addition of other companies, it was necessary to lease the grounds of the National Drama Corporation in Hollywood.

The quarters occupied by Fox Film Corporation on January 1, 1917, included five acres at Hollywood, fifteen acres on Western avenue, and ten acres in locations at Silver Lake, Fernando Valley and Chatsworth.

Mutual Captures Edna Goodrich

President John R. Freuler of the Mutual Film Corporation has closed a contract with Edna Goodrich, one of the most popular stage favorites in America, for her exclusive appearance in a series of big features to be released by the Mutual.

Miss Goodrich, who is enthusiastically at work on her plans for this engagement, will begin actual rehearsal on the conclusion of an important vaudeville contract at the Park Theater, New York. This necessarily sets the date of her picture work ahead some weeks.

Miss Goodrich, the latest candidate for honors under the Mutual flag, is possessed of an extraordinary charm which renders her appearance on the screen a foregone certainty of success. Both in the United States and Europe the young actress has an enormous following.

The highest possible standard of box office earning power is represented in these star contracts which include those with Mary Miles Minter, Richard Bennett and Margarita Fischer.

"The experience of the Mutual Film Corporation and of the exhibitor has proved," said Mr. Freuler, "that the policy pursued in these contracts is a wise one.

"The engagement of big stars and the principle of the star production generally are undoubtedly correct policy from the box office point of view as well as from that of the public. We are determined to secure the best talent to be had for Mutual productions and the progress already made in this direction must be taken as an earnest of our intentions for the future."

Mr. Freuler is personally supervising the selection of directors for the new Mutual stars and is giving direct attention to the securing of adequate vehicles for the exposition of their talents.

Miss Goodrich's first theatrical appearance was as a member of the celebrated sextette in "Florodora," after a successful tour with which she joined Anna Held's company and achieved fame as the highest salaried show girl on the stage.

Miss Goodrich was Nat C. Goodwin's leading woman for several seasons, appearing in "The Genius and the Model," "When We Were Twenty-One," and other plays in which Goodwin starred. Later on she appeared with Charles Cherry in "His Neighbor's Wife."

After appearing in other stage successes, Miss Goodrich spent much of her time in Europe and she only recently returned to the United States. She is now appearing at the Palace Theater, New York, in a vaudeville sketch of her own planning.

In addition to her foregoing engagements Miss Goodrich played Jinny Hopper in "The College Widow," Nell Ruthven in "A Gilded Fool," Madge Kederly in "What Would a Gentleman Do," Grace Morton in "The Easterner," and toured with "The Master Hand," "The Native Son," "The Awakening of Minerva," and "The Runaways."

"Seven Deadly Sins" Strong in Chicago

C. B. Price, Western Division manager for McClure Pictures, has opened offices in the Mallers building, 5 South Wabash avenue, immediately adjacent to the new Triangle Distributing Corporation office, and has appointed T. C. Montgomery and J. A. Davidson, both experienced film men, as Chicago representatives.

While the offices have only been opened a short time, Mr. Price states that never in the history of his experience has such interest ever been manifested by the exhibitors as they have shown in the forthcoming new series of seven five-reel productions, each of which is complete in itself, and if this is any criterion as to the amount of business that will be done, the "Seven Deadly Sins" will break all records. The large amount of publicity given the series by the McClure publications accounts for this great exhibitor interest.

CAPITALIZATION $20,000,000

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation Increases Capital Stock and Add Prominent Bankers to Its Board of Directors.

The neat sum of $20,000,000 is now the capitalization of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. This has just been raised from the former $12,500,000. And at the last stockholders' meeting another prominent banker was added to the board of directors. The meeting was held at the New York offices of the corporation, 585 Fifth avenue.

The fact that the increasing of the capitalization from $12,500,000 to $20,000,000 is a very conservative move will be seen from the fact that the former figures represent the capitalization of the corporation when it comprised only the Famous Players Film Company, Jesse L. Lasky Play Company, Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company and Pallas Pictures. The capital of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, which was recently absorbed by the giant producing combine furnishing its program, was $10,000,000. Thus the new capitalization represents a reduction of two million in the combined capital.

At the meeting William H. English, vice-president Empire Trust Company, was added to the board of directors, and the following were re-elected for a term of four years: John F. Fredericks, cashier German-American Bank; Frederick G. Lee, president Broadway Trust Company; William G. Demorest, president Realty Trust Company and a member of the New York Chamber of Commerce.

Adolph Zukor, Jesse L. Lasky, Arthur S. Friend, Daniel Frohman, Emil E. Schauer, Albert A. Kaufman, Elik J. Ludvigh, and Cecil B. De Mille continue as members of the board.

The directorate was increased from twelve to twenty, and the eight new members were elected at the meeting of the present board on January 8.

After the presentation of the annual report, which showed the large surplus that had been accumulated during the year, a resolution was presented by the stockholders, thanking the officers and directors of the corporation for their successful administration of the affairs of the concern and expressing confidence in their continued management.

In replying to the resolution, Adolph Zukor, president of the corporation, pointed out that the growth of the concern to its present size and importance had been gradual and a healthy one.

Mr. Zukor drew attention to the fact that the ideals and principles for which the present corporation stood had all been tested out successfully by the individual companies which it comprises—that the Famous Players, Lasky, Morosco and Pallas companies had each proved the efficacy of its own methods as an individual and that the similarity of these aims and ambitions had given every reason for the belief that their individual success was only an indication of the tremendous possibilities which their combined strength would offer.

Furthermore, the fact that the companies were already allied on the Paramount program and on foreign programs, and had been acting in close co-operation throughout the world, for some time tended to add oil to the complicated running gear of the tremendous machine. As a result, the welding of these separate entities into a gigantic whole was accomplished, Mr. Zukor declared, with the least possible friction, a fact which was apparent from the progress which the new corporation has made in its very short life.

In closing, Mr. Zukor referred to the adding of Mme. Olga Petrova and Margaret Illington to the long list of stars appearing on the Paramount Program and assured his hearers that with a program comprising such names as Marguerite Clark, Pauline Frederick, Marie Doro, Fannie Ward and the many others whose names are international bywords, and with an organization such as had been built up within the corporation, he saw nothing ahead for 1917 but the eclipsing of all past records of achievements.

Nashville Has Censorship Question

The Nashville, Tennessee, board of censors is at present agitated over the question of suitable pictures for children. Exhibitors fearing that unfair and drastic measures may be taken against them, are banding together to protect themselves. Harry Anderson of the Crescent Amusement Company is leading the fight, and through a communication to the board has brought the matter to an issue.

In this communication Mr. Anderson says in part:

"Many good women in the country have attempted to solve it by inducing certain exhibitors to accept and show children's programs on certain week days. The difficulties encountered have been many, the principal one, however, has been the selection of a program, for the women themselves in committee have rarely been able to agree on the proper offering. For the reason that children form only about 12 per cent of the motion picture patronage their purchasing power has not been sufficient yet to induce the film manufacturer or the exhibitor to cater especially to them.

"As a matter of fact, children should not be allowed to see more than one or two picture shows a week. Any mother at an expenditure of five precious minutes can in perfect safety select the one or two shows that her child should see; for the Saturday and Sunday papers give details of pictures that are to be shown at all of the theaters for the coming week."

To Feature Slavic Star

Tatjana Yrrah, noted Slavic beauty, has arrived in New York from Europe after severing her connections with the German Flora Film Company, who had been starring her during the past four years. Owing to an extreme shortage of film all the available celluloid being commandeered by the government, the big German film manufacturers have minimized their output.

Since there are practically no features of any kind produced at this time Yrrah considered her contract with the Flora Film Company automatically annulled, but the company endeavored to hold her, claiming that they were not responsible for war conditions which made limitation of their production imperative.

She is now under contract to Edward Lyell Fox, well-known American war correspondent, who, on his recent trip through the warring European countries, saw a number of Yrrah feature films and signed her for two years. Mr. Fox intends forming a producing company and release Yrrah features through one of the big service corporations.

"Butterfly Girl" Fischer's Next Mutual

The "Isthmus," as the San Diego Exposition's amusement street, where the side show attractions hold forth, is called, forms the colorful background for the drama which will bring Margarita Fischer to the public in her third Mutual Production.

"The Butterfly Girl," as this drama baring the bitterness and the disillusionments behind the tinsel and the color, is one of the most distinctive photoplays ever produced. There are no "fake" scenes necessary, for the acres of the spectacular exposition itself lay at the feet of Henry Otto, Miss Fischer's director, and he has taken advantage of all the variety of setting to make this picture a masterpiece. The studios of Harry Pollard Picture Plays Company, which company is responsible for this drama of the screen, are located at San Diego.

As "Pep" O'Malley, a child adrift in this life, Margarita Fischer will charm those who see her.

"Pep" and "Bess," at the death of their mother, go to seek their aunt who is the "Butterfly Girl" in one of the concessions on the "Isthmus." The aunt is beginning to show the signs of age, and "Pep's" fresh, unspoiled charm in contrast increases the dissatisfaction of the manager of the show with the dancer. He puts "Pep" in her place, and the remainder of the story deals with the girl's attempts to get away from the manager's undesired attentions. The fairy prince comes in the form of the son of the ex-governor of Hawaii, who proves "Pep's" benefactor at every turn.

The greatest punch to the story comes at the end when "Pep" thinking that she would be forced to give up her prince entirely, tries to jump with Baby "Bess" in her arms into the crator of the papier mache volcano, Mt. Kilaeua, which is one of the most spectacular of the fire work attractions at the fair.

Miss Fischer is supported by an unusually strong cast, including Jack Mower, J. Gordon Russell, Della Pringle, Marie Kiernan, Joseph Harris, John Steppling.

Vice-President and General Manager E. W. Hammons of the Educational Films Corporation of America has appointed Bert Adler as New York manager of that concern. Mr. Adler is a pioneer in the giving of children's shows and has been interested in straight educational film work for a number of months. He was for many years advertising and sales manager of the Thanhouser Film Corporation, New Rochelle, N. Y.

KAUFMAN DIRECTS COHAN

Former Associate of George M. and Producer of Many Famous Players Film Successes to Stage "Broadway Jones."

The production of the initial George M. Cohan screen subject for Artcraft has been assigned to Joseph Kaufman, director of many Famous Players successes.

Mr. Kaufman's most recent work was "The Travelling Salesman." The successful manner in which Mr. Kaufman put over this motion picture vehicle, together with the fact that the director was formerly associated with George M. Cohan in his theatrical activities prompted Artcraft to secure the services of Mr. Kaufman in connection with the production of the first Cohan screen offering.

On the stage Mr. Kaufman met with considerable success during the twenty years he spent behind the footlights. Under such managements as Cohan and Harris, Frohman and Henry B. Harris he appeared in many metropolitan hits on Broadway and throughout the country. In motion pictures Mr. Kaufman first appeared as an actor. His wide knowledge of the drama and many valuable suggestions in the staging of scenes soon resulted in his being appointed director. Mr. Kaufman is now actively engaged in the preparation of the elaborate sets for "Broadway Jones" and plans to leave shortly for Florida with George M. Cohan, Marguerite Snow and the balance of the company to stage some exteriors.

$125,000 for "Enlighten Thy Daughter"

After refusing a number of alluring offers from several theater managers for extended runs on Broadway for his latest picture, "Enlighten Thy Daughter," Ivan Abramson, author and director, has disposed of the World's rights thereon to Winik-Brock for a sum aggregating one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars.

The production will be exploited throughout the world as a first class attraction, with the United States and Canadian territory to be disposed of on state right basis.

Within an hour after the deal between Abramson and Henry Brock was consummated, the New York, northern New Jersey and New England rights were purchased by the Merit Film Corporation at a figure close to forty thousand dollars.

The production will be handled in a special way, apart from the Winik-Brock enterprises, and under the name of Enlightenment Film Corporation.

An advertising campaign of unusual effectiveness is to be instituted at once under the auspices of Harry Reichenbach.

"Enlighten Thy Daughter" is in seven reels and will, if present negotiations go through, open on Broadway within a few weeks as a high-class attraction at a two-dollar scale of prices.

"Marcel's Birthday Present," a five-reel feature, is being filmed by Director Rupert Julian at Universal City.

The Man Inside the Booth

PROJECTION DEPARTMENT, CONDUCTED BY E. C. SCOBEY

THIS department is now a permanent feature of MOTOGRAPHY. Its editor, Mr. Scobey, is a former secretary and treasurer of the Motion Picture Machine Operators' Local No. 194, I. A. T. S. E., and was formerly associated with the Central Film Service Company of Indianapolis. He was recently elected vice-president of the Central Labor Union of Indianapolis, the first operator to be so honored. The idea is to make this department just as helpful as possible to operators and exhibitors. Send your questions and problems to Mr. Scobey. He is sure to give you some valuable information. Address, MOTOGRAPHY, Chicago.

I wish to call the attention of the readers of this department to a typographical error in the answer to the first question in the issue of January 6, 1917, page 29. The sentence as it appears in print reads as follows: "Then turn the intermittent sprocket very slowly by turning the fly wheel in the direct current-direction." The sentence should read, "Then turn the intermittent sprocket very slowly by turning the fly wheel in the correct direction."

My lower carbon burns straight down, leaving a cone about ¼ inch in diameter and 3 to 4 inches long. I am using ¾ inch cored carbon in the top and ⅝ inch cored carbon in the lower. Would it help any to use ¾ inch carbon in the lower? I don't believe that I get full 110 volts of current at the switch. I have never tried the ¾ inch carbon in the lower carbon as I was afraid it would make the lamp house too hot and break the condensers. My picture also jumps just a little. Are my tension springs too tight or too loose? There is no flicker in the picture. Sometimes there seems to be light flashed from both sides on the screen; is that the photography or my light? Please write me direct, I am enclosing stamp. You can print this letter or not, just as you see fit. I take all the trade journals but derive more benefit from yours than any of them, especially from "The Man in the Booth" department and exhibitors' criticisms.—H. B. McFarling, Tokio Theater, Morehouse, Missouri.

Your carbon trouble is caused from one of two things: either the carbon you are using is too soft, or you are carrying too high an amperage for the ⅝ carbon.

Try a ¾-inch carbon in the lower carbon holder and see whether it will needle like the ⅝-inch does. If it does, you can depend upon it that the carbons you are using are too soft.

You do not need to be afraid to use the ¾-inch carbon below, as I know any number of operators that are using ¾-inch carbons both top and bottom and both cored and they are getting good results with them. If you are using a first-class carbon you ought to be able to use a ¾-inch top and a ⅝-inch lower carbon on amperage up to 60 amperes and ¾-inch top and ¾-inch lower on anything from 60 to 80 amperes. You do not say in your letter what current you are using—A. C. or D. C.

In writing in to the department with a question of any kind it is very essential that the editor should have all the details of the case, so that he may give you all the information possible.

If you are using D. C. current, I will refer you to an article on page 1293 of MOTOGRAPHY issued December 9 and you can try out the suggestion on D. C. carbons.

In regards to the voltage, I would have the local power company take the voltage and amperage at the machine and then you can see just what you are getting.

Keep your lamp-house clean and well ventilated and you will not break your condensers by using ¾-inch carbons.

Your picture jumping on the screen may be caused from any of the following reasons: Circumferential play in the intermittent sprocket, caused by the star and cam not being set close enough to each other; intermittent shaft being sprung; intermittent sprocket being loose on intermittent shaft; worn or undercut sprocket teeth; or not having the tension springs set properly.

The flashes on the screen that you speak of are caused, I think, by worn shutter gears. Worn shutter gears allow play in the shutter and this causes travel ghost or streaks or flashes on the screen. If these streaks show all the time, then the shutter needs timing, but if they show just once in a while, then that is a sure sign that there is lost motion in the shutter gears.

I am very much pleased to hear that you appreciate the department and you may rest assured that I will be only too glad to help any and all the readers in any way that I can. But once more let me call your attention to the fact that it will be a great help to me if all questions sent in give full detail of the trouble involved.

If the above answers do not remedy your trouble, do not hesitate to write me again.

I am using a Simplex machine that has been in use for over two years and have had the sprockets renewed several times. The manager has always had this work done at a regular repair shop and it has been done in a satisfactory manner. The sprockets are worn now so that I need new ones but when I asked him about having them changed he said that some operator told him that they could be turned around and would do just as well as new ones, and that I should do the work myself and save a repair bill.

Now, I claim to be an operator, having spent the last five years at the business, and I could turn the sprockets around, but I do not claim to be an expert repair man, for if I were and had the necessary tools for that branch of the business I would be a repair man instead of an operator. I know that to change an intermittent sprocket and do it without springing the shaft, takes the proper tools and care and I know that as an operator I haven't the tools to do it with. If I attempt to do the work and fall down, then he is going to blame me, so what would you do under the circumstances? You have my consent to print this letter but please do not print my name or the city.

Your letter is one of several that have come to me in regards to differences between operators and managers and I haven't seen one case yet where these differences could not have been settled had both parties to the argument used a little judgment.

I agree with you when you say that you are an operator and not a repair man, and I don't blame you one bit for refusing to change the intermittent sprocket.

That is a job that requires the proper tools and considerable care and the average operator does not have the tools for that kind of a job, although he uses all the care that is necessary.

As to reversing the other sprockets, that can be done very easily and anyone ought to do that in a short space of time.

I have always contended that an operator was employed strictly as an operator, and that an operator's work is confined to his booth, with one exception, and that would be when there was trouble with the current and a main fuse would blow—then he should replace it. I think that every operator should be able to do emergency work on the machines he is working with, and no man is an operator who can't adjust his own machine or be able to locate the average troubles of a booth.

The whole trouble between operators and managers is this: When the picture game started the operators set a precedent by carrying films, putting up posters, sweeping out and making themselves generally useful around the house. This statement does not apply to all localities but to most of the smaller cities and towns.

Now the time has come when the operator objects to this kind of work, but the manager, knowing that he always has done the work, naturally expects him to continue it.

Your trouble evidently comes from some other brother trying to either knock you or make himself solid with the manager.

I would not be afraid to bet that this same brother couldn't do a decent job of repair work.

I know from past experience with operators that the ones that do repair work at their booths are the ones nine times out of ten that have trouble and in the long run it costs the manager more to have the machine overhauled by a regular repair man than it would have cost had he sent it to the repair shop.

The words repair work are like the words operator and manager, it covers a lot of territory, and it is pretty hard to have a fixed set of rules to go by, but I think the best rule is a little bit of good sound judgment.

If the manager asks you to do something that you know you can't do right, tell him and explain to him why you can't do it and if he is a regular manager he will appreciate you more for being honest enough to say that you can't do it than if you had attempted to do it and ruined his machine by trying to do something that you didn't know how or didn't have the tools to do it with.

The answer to the question regarding the generator set will be given in next week's issue.

Film Workers' Ball in New York

If present plans do not go astray, there will be a motion picture ball held at Grand Central Palace, New York, and will be known as the Allied Ball of the Film Workers. Miss June Elvidge will lead the grand march. It is very likely that every picture concern will be represented in the various booths that will line the floor. The date has not been definitely set as yet but will in all probability take place the latter part of this month.

New Stage for Balboa

Balboa signalized the advent of the New Year by beginning the erection of a new outdoor stage on January 2. As soon as it has been completed, Horkheimer Brothers will add a glass enclosed studio to their Long Beach plant. This is to be the largest building of its kind in Southern California.

These enlargements are made necessary on account of the new business which Balboa has already lined up for 1917. While in the East recently, H. M. Horkheimer signed contracts for new productions aggregating a million dollars.

Kathleen Clifford, Balboa's newest star, has arrived at the studio and is working under the direction of Frank Crane. She will make her initial appearance in "The Twisted Thread," a fifteen episode serial of romance and adventure, which is to be released by Pathe. Balboa expects to add two more companies to its force, in the very near future.

DeMille Returns to Coast

With wider experience, new enthusiasm and plans for great spectacles, of more striking light effects, of even greater artistic merit than the one he has finished, Cecil B. De Mille returns to the Lasky studios on the west coast after attending the launching in New York of Geraldine Farrar's great spectacular success, "Joan the Woman," which he directed.

After many conflicting rumors concerning Mr. De Mille's future activities, it is now definitely announced that he will devote himself entirely to the production of photoplays for the Paramount Program. For the next four or five months Mr. De Mille will plan an entire reconstruction of the Lasky studios with a view of increasing the effectiveness of Lasky productions. The addition of Mme. Olga Petrova and Margaret Illington to the Lasky forces will also necessitate increases in the productive facilities, all of which will be under the supervision of Mr. De Mille.

New Selig Feature

"Beware of Strangers" is the latest Selig feature play recently completed by Colin Campbell. "Beware of Strangers," it is said, will be the next noteworthy successor to such Selig features as "The Spoilers," "The Crisis" and "The Garden of Allah."

"Beware of Strangers" seeks to educate the public as the one best method of saving the unwary from traps so cleverly laid that they seem unbelievable in this modern work-a-day world. The drama is convincingly enacted by an all-star cast which includes Tom Santschi, Fritzi Brunette, Bessie Eyton, Jack Richardson, Vivian Rich, Ed Coxen, Eugenie Besserer, Al W. Filson, Frank Clark, Harry Lonsdale and others.

French Film Man Arrives

Jean Janvier has come to New York on an official mission from the French government as a representative of the cinematograph service in the army. He will exhibit new war films and tell of his trips to the front.

He has been showing the war pictures to munition workers in Moscow, Petrograd, Kieff, Kharkoff, Ekaterinoslav, Odessa and Tiflis, and has exhibited them before the imperial family by command of the Tsar.

ERBOGRAPH PLAY RELEASED

"Infidelity" Appears on Art Dramas Program January 11—Anna Q. Nilsson and Eugene Strong Co-Starred in Feature.

The first release of the Erbograph Company on the Art Dramas Program will be "Infidelity," a five-reel feature written and directed by Ashley Miller, co-starring Anna Q. Nilsson and Eugene Strong.

The story of "Infidelity" is described as a thrillingly romantic drama, full of human interest. It concerns the lives of two generations—a man and his wife and their daughter and her sweetheart. A mysterious murder, for which an innocent man suffers twenty years' imprisonment, the free Bohemian of the New York artist set, hypnotism, and the occult power of the East are the fascinating ingredients that go to make up this production.

A very serious topic is the central theme of the photoplay. It points out the dangers of marital infidelity in such earnest tones that the picture might almost be called a problem play.

Anna Q. Nilsson, who plays the leading part, is known to the public through her fine work in numerous other photoplays. She was recently featured in Pathe's serial "Who Pays?" Eugene Strong, Miss Nilsson's co-star, is also well known throughout the country as the featured leading man in many productions. The story of "Infidelity" was written by Ashley Miller, who is also the director of the picture. Mr. Miller is perhaps one of the most widely known directors in the picture business, and has written and produced many successful features. "Infidelity" is the first production made by Erbograph since the release of "The Crimson Stain Mystery."

John Barrymore New Brenon Star

John Barrymore has signed a contract to appear under the direction of Herbert Brenon in a photodramatic version of Louis Joseph Vance's popular novel, "The Lone Wolf."

This will be Brenon's next Selznick-Pictures production following "The Eternal Sin," which is now ready for release, and which will introduce Florence Reed in the tragic role of Lucretia Borgia. The finishing touches are being put upon the Victor Hugo story at the Brenon Studio on Hudson Heights, and its release date will be announced shortly.

Work on the Barrymore production will begin soon. This will be the first appearance of this popular star in pictures in nearly two years. His last season was devoted to the spoken drama, and his success as Falder in Galsworthy's "Justice" was one of the big theatrical events of the year. Mr. Barrymore had been regarded previously as a light comedian, and the power he displayed in his interpretation of the role of the victim of the processes of law was a revelation to his admirers. In "The Lone Wolf" he will have opportunity for demonstrating his talent in both the lighter and the heavier branches of his art, as the story, while of a distinctly serious nature, has many incidents of a lyric sort.

Another interesting point about this production will be its contrast with the previous Brenon productions since he joined the Selznick alliance: Nazimova in "War Brides," Florence Reed in "The Eternal Sin," and John Barrymore in "The Lone Wolf." Mr. Brenon is taking no chance of allowing any critic to say that there is a sameness about his productions.

Plays Her Opposite on Screen

Billie Billings, the beautiful Vitagraph player, is fast coming to the fore in the large constellation of stars of the motion picture world. Miss Billings, who is noted for her ability to wear all sorts of gowns in an enviable manner, is quite tall and of a Grecian type.

Billie Billings, lovely Vitagraphers.

Most of her roles have not been the sort which wins the love of the public, for time and time again she has played the scheming, aspiring woman who becomes the charming heroine's greatest foe.

In "The Enemy," a recent Blue Ribbon offering in seven parts, Miss Billings plays the role of a young society girl who, learning that one of the men in her set is engaged to a sweet girl, played by Peggy Hyland, exerts her very energy to make him fall victim to his enemy—whiskey—and thus discourage the girl he is about to marry.

So skillfully does Miss Billings work out her characterization that one finds it hard to believe that she is really entirely the opposite of her part on the screen.

Miss Billings is actually a home body and spends many happy hours with her mother in their apartment in New York City.

In "The Girl Philippa," the newest big Vitagraph production, starring the dainty actress, Anita Stewart, Miss Billings is seen in a trifle more favorable light, although this characterization does not by any means do her true self justice.

Her motto is, "Do what you do with a will, and do it well." Perhaps that is why she succeeds so remarkably in her interpretation of undesirable roles. And yet Miss Billings admits that, when she plays a good woman she finds it most difficult not to cast alluring glances at the handsome hero.

Exhibitors Elect New Officers

F. L. Emmert was chosen president at the annual election of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League held at Cincinnati on December 27. The delegates were unanimous in their choice of Emmert.

A. G. Hettesheimer was chosen first vice-president, and J. J. Hebner second vice-president. The other officers named were as follows:

Treasurer, John J. Huss; managing secretary, H. Serkowich; sergeant at arms, Mr. Horning.

Virtually all the members of the league were on hand to vote for the officers and all the winners of the offices were on the red ticket, with the exception of Mr. Hebner and Mr. Horning.

The league's membership includes exhibitors from nearly all of Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky, within a radius of fifty miles of this city and it co-operates with all motion picture owners' organizations in the states named.

Theaters Entertain Kiddies

A Christmas entertainment for more than 600 poor children of Washington, D. C., under the auspices of the Salvation Army was held just before Christmas at the Cosmos Theater.

The Salvation Army arranges the entertainment as an annual event, and through the courtesy of the theater the children witnessed a two-hour performance from 9 to 11 o'clock. These children, many of whom are unable to get the necessary money to gain admission to picture theaters, were taken to the playhouse by members of the Salvation Army.

Long before the doors were opened for the performance many of the children had arrived, and by the time the first film, "Leap Year," had started, the majority of the children were in their seats. There were comedy dramas, a thrilling scene of "The Runaway Sleeper." with Helen Gibson as the star performer; street scenes in China, together with comedy cartoons, shown to the youngsters.

At the conclusion of the performance, the Salvation Army, under the direction of Adjt. Bartlett, presented each child with a box of candy, nuts and an orange, while the Cosmos Theater management gave each a Christmas horn.

A similar performance under the direction of the Salvation Army was given Christmas morning for the benefit of colored children at the Howard Theater. These children also received gifts from the army.

Exhibitors Co-operate with Authorities

Accepting an offer extended by the Associated Motion Picture Exhibitors of Brooklyn, to co-operate in its educational work, the Bureau of Public Health Education of the Department of Health of the city some time ago loaned three educational moving picture reels, to be shown in the picture theaters in Brooklyn. The films shown were the following:

"Long Haul vs. Short Haul"—A story depicting the advantages of breast feeding.

"The Life History of a Fly"—An effective story concerning the fly menace.

"The Price of Human Lives"—A stirring picture of the havoc wrought by tuberculosis.

The association arranged all the details in connection with the exhibition of these films and, at its own expense, send the films from theater to theater. In the past three months these films have been shown in practically every house in Brooklyn, the milk reel playing two or three times in some houses. It is safe to say that in this time fully one-half million people have become acquainted with this form of the Health Department's educational activities. The Department of Health expressed its deep gratitude to the Brooklyn exhibitors for their co-operation.

Exhibitors Vote Down Slave Films

Cranston Brenton, chairman of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, accepted the invitation of the North Carolina Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, and delivered an address on the subject "The Motion Picture and the Community," at the semi-annual convention held in Charlotte. He emphasized the share the exhibitor has in the responsibility for the social welfare of the community and said:

The evil picture does not pay and I will leave it to the exhibitor himself to bear me out in that statement.

Last year the National Board of Review took a definite stand on "white slave" films.

We wanted to find out what the exhibitors thought of that kind of a picture and so we selected sixty of the most prominent in the whole United States and sent them questions relative to their stands on the matter. Almost unanimously those sixty men answered us and said that they did not believe in running them.

You must take into consideration the fact that public opinion is to determine what your success is to be.

I am positively opposed to censorship. The police regulate those things the world over and whenever there is a play, book or address given to the public which is not strictly up to the standards of morality and public decency they close it.

Ultra Releases High Class Film

Andrew J. Cobe, vice-president and general manager of the Ultra Pictures Corporation, states that there is not a doubt in his mind that the public is being educated to bigger and better pictures and that during 1917 the natural effect of the education will be the constant demand by the exhibitors for higher class pictures for their patrons. Reading the handwriting on the wall, Mr. Cobe immediately upon his return from an extended tour of the coast and middle west organized the Ultra Picture Corporation, which will handle only the best pictures which can be procured.

Contracts have been signed with two large producing companies whereby he can guarantee the exchange man twelve distinctive pictures a year, with the option of purchasing additional features in the open market. The first release of the Ultra will be "The Woman Who Dared," featuring the well-known prima donna and motion picture actress, Beatriz Michelena, in a seven-reel drama produced by the California Motion Picture Company. Mr. Cobe states that he positively will not release any picture which is not of the highest rank and mediocre features, or those containing even the slightest suggestiveness will be barred. The new company will co-operate closely with the exchange man and exhibitor in reference to advertising and publicity.

Bessie Love an Industrious Player

If Bessie Love completes "The Doll Shop" on schedule time, about the middle of January, she will have a record of three feature releases within three months. Evidently the eighteen-year-old star is envious of the record of William S. Hart, who last year made eleven Triangle productions within twelve months.

Since her first starring venture, "A Sister of Six," one of the late autumn Triangle releases, she has produced "The Heiress of Coffee Dan's," "Nina the Flower Girl," the current release, and "The Doll Shop," now in making. The last is said to give promise of even more spontaneous comedy and charm of characterization than the preceding plays, all of which were very popular.

The story of "The Doll Shop," written by Anita Loos, tells of a girl who runs a toy store in a small factory town. Her uncle is a janitor who has a deep hatred for all rich people. The girl shares his prejudice. Then she falls in love with a rich youth, believing him only a chauffeur until she is about to marry him. The situation offers unforced comedy and naive comedy and gives Bessie exceptional chances for the best screen acting of her career.

Roy Stewart is the leading man, the rich youth disguised as a chauffeur. He is six feet four in height and weighs over two hundred pounds. Naturally he almost fills the little girl's tiny shop when he ventures in among the toys. Stewart is considered one of the genuine "finds" among the various leading men who have joined the Fine Arts Stock company within the past season.

In addition to Stewart, Bessie Love is supported by Max Davidson in the role of the janitor with an aversion for the "parasite rich," Carmel Myers, who has the second feminine part, and Carl Stockdale, who is cast as a hard-fisted, self-made factory owner. Edward Dillon is directing the production.

"EXHIBITOR FIRST"

Jesse L. Lasky Desires All Paramount Exhibitors to Make Known Their Requirements to Secure More Complete Co-operation

Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has issued a statement to all Paramount exhibitors asking them to make known their every want and desire for the coming year.

The Paramount watchword for 1917 will be "Exhibitor First," and the most elaborate plans that this organization has ever contrived have been under way the past two months to render the exhibitors showing the Paramount Program every possible service from the standpoint of helping the exhibitor make money. During the latter part of 1916 Paramount distributed through its exchanges $200,000 worth of accessories of every description with which the exhibitor could better build his business for permanency and present Paramount's quality pictures in a quality manner.

In each of the exchanges the Exhibitors' Aids Departments, the Publicity and Advertising departments will be enlarged and the services that will be rendered will be unprecedented and undreamed of in the history of the motion picture industry. President Hiram Abrams of Paramount Pictures Corporation and President Adolph Zukor of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation have joined hands with all other officials in the Paramount family to make 1917 the greatest year in the history of motion pictures.

"There is no reason why," said Mr. Lasky, "with unlimited resources and facilities at our command, we should not only give the exchanges and their exhibitors the best program in the world, with the greatest stars on earth appearing in them, but should not conform to their requirements and wishes in every respect." Mr. Lasky's attitude and willingness to help the exhibitor illustrates the desire of both Paramount and its producers.

Not only have Paramount Pictures shown class and consistency during their two and one-half years of existence, but the precedence of Paramount Pictures will be more clearly shown in the next few months. This is not only due to the care with which our executives have been selecting the stories for productions and the stars to appear in them, but is due to the ever increasing desire on the part of every member of our organization to serve each and every one in the big Paramount family.

But since conditions differ in various parts of the country; since what will help one man in one locality will not necessarily be best for someone elsewhere, it is necessary to have expressions from the individual exhibitors. Would you therefore, Mr. Paramount Exhibitor, as an aid to us, be kind enough—whenever the spirit moves you—to sit down and write us a letter stating how you think that we can increase the service which we are most heartily desirous of rendering you in this New Year that is now upon us.

Any word from any exhibitor will be appreciated, either of his success or his criticism of our product, and that just in proportion to the requests and advice that we receive from you will our product and our service progress toward that perfection which we all so earnestly desire.

All communications relative to this new plan are to be directed to Carl H. Pierce, 485 Fifth avenue, New York City.

Sherman Urges Independent Exchanges

"I am an ardent advocate of the independent exchange," remarked Harry A. Sherman, president of the Sherman-Elliott Company, on his return from a trip to the various state rights buyers of "The Crisis."

"The psychological moment has arrived for the exhibitor to get aboard the feature wagon through independent bookings of special features possessing unbounded drawing power. In speaking of features, I mean productions of more than average length, with a case of high-class, well-known popular plays adapted from some famous book by a well-known author or founded on a play that has passed the 'acid test' of intelligent and well studied approval.

"The independent exchange is the thing. Mr. Exhibitor, lay your program with its uncertainty and its inability to maintain a high standard on the shelf. You have undoubtedly noticed the increasing number of stars that are breaking away from the program system and are being featured in photoplays of great length and quality. The open market is the exhibitors' salvation.

"From the box office point of view, independent bookings mean long runs with capacity houses at advanced prices. The slow stream of nickels and dimes will be overwhelmed by an avalanche of higher priced admissions that more than balance the loss incurred by laying the program aside. This has been proven by my own

Musician Makes House Popular

January 7, 1917.

Editor MOTOGRAPHY:

I noticed in the January 13th issue of MOTOGRAPHY a special article by Mildred FitzPatrick, the organist of the Boston Theater on Clark street near Madison. The music lovers of Chicago owe a debt of gratitude to the management of this theater for furnishing them such excellent music at such a small price. It is worth many times the price of admission just to hear this young girl play, and I am sure that, like myself, thousands of the regular patrons of this popular picture house will be pleased to secure the pictures of Miss FitzPatrick and to know that her ability is recognized by her employers to the extent of paying her a salary that will warrant her owning and maintaining a fine car.

The writer finds it almost impossible to pass the Boston Theater without dropping in whenever Miss FitzPatrick's name is on the programme, regardless of the hour or the weather.—Gertrude Lucas, 15 South Wabash avenue, Chicago.

experience with 'The Birth of a Nation' and 'Ramona,' the rights which I control for seventeen western states, and 'The Crisis.' I am following my own advice, for I am about to open in Chicago what will probably be the largest independent exchange in the country.

"Allow me to repeat, Mr. Exhibitor, the open market is the thing. Follow the fairest and most profitable way, and success is yours."

REAL HEROISM IN PICTURES

Picture Stunts Which Look Dangerous May Be Safe, But There Are Other Hardships the Public Does Not Guess

By Milton Sills.

Before the days of motion pictures, the methods obtaining stage "effects" was kept secret. With the picture patrons this is all changed and the public knows all about "double exposures," and other camera tricks, the use of "doubles" in dangerous scenes, until with a show of reason they have come to doubt whether their favorites are really the heroes and heroines they appear to be on the screen.

I should like to assure them that they are and they are not. Often rescue, hair-breadth escapes, fires, falls, and fights are just so much fun for the movie actor. But there is a heroism that does not appear on the screen, a silent heroism the public knows little about. And this is the real heroism of the pictures. It is the heroism of patience, of fortitude, of endurance, of fatigue, and hardship, of being on the job at all times and in all weathers and sticking to it. And it is an essential part of the picture actor's life. It may be unobtrusive or it may be spectacular, but it is always there.

In its commonest form, it shows itself in uncomplaining waiting about the studio. One makes up at nine in the morning. Something is wrong with the scenery. One hangs about, dragging out the weary hours, sweltering in summer, shivering in winter. At five in the afternoon, one is called upon to do a delicate emotional scene. Does the actor balk? Does he protest that his temperament has oozed out of every pore or frozen stiff with the cold? No, he does his scene and waits till he's told he can go home.

It may take the form of hunger and hardship. In one of the "Patria" episodes Mrs. Castle and I had some scenes on a gunboat. With our director we got on board at an unearthly hour in the morning and started out to sea. In the scenes we had to be wet so before starting to act, we plunged overboard. The rest of the day was spent in dripping clothes, and—worst of all—about lunch time, it was discovered that Uncle Sam had forgotten to provision the little vessel. About six in the evening we arrived at our hotel after a ten-mile motor drive more dead than alive from hunger and exposure. Mrs. Castle was seriously ill for several days afterwards. The public will never know that her real heroism lay not in rescuing me, but in smilingly standing up under the strain of soaked garments, a remote and rapidly receding breakfast and incipient pneumonia.

Scenes in the water are likely to be especially trying. They so often have to be done over and over again before they are just right. I recall three in particular.

Mrs. Castle had to float to shore in a life-buoy, unconscious, to be found by a Mexican and hauled out. Time and time again the camera started and time and time again she refused to float to the right spot. Finally when she did, her jaw was shaking and she was purple with cold.

Directors have a habit of postponing scenes that should be done at one season of the year to the very opposite and most inappropriate season. I had a series of adventures, for example, in the hold of a ship in "Patria." I was manacled hand and foot and thrown across the keel. Presently the sea-cocks were opened and the water began to pour in. I had to throw myself against the inrush, be hurled back, and then gradually see the water rise about me until finally when I stood it was up to my nose. Was it dangerous? Not especially. But the directors instead of doing the scene in July, demanded it in November with the water six degrees above freezing.

The public will never realize that Mrs. Castle and I when we are seen clinging to a burning spar after falling with the mast from the schooner were doing it in ice water late in the day with an arctic wind blowing. The burn of the horse liniment only increased the shock. We dived, we suffered, and finally they finished us. But the public will believe it was all done in midsummer and that after it was done we had a jolly paddle and hated to come out.

Here's Something New

President John R. Freuler of the Mutual Film Corporation announces the coming of a number of series of important short release under the general designation, "Featurettes."

Mr. Freuler has labored a long time to bring about general recognition of the importance attaching to one and two-reel productions, and success has crowned his efforts. There is an ever growing inquiry for the short film of the quality presented in "Featurettes," which are one and two-reel productions of the highest merit artistically and dramatically.

Among Mutual productions that are now classified as "Featurettes" are four Gaumont single-reel releases, "Tours Around the World," "Reel Life," "See America First," "Mutual Weekly," the George Ovey one-reel "Cub Comedies," produced by David Horsley, the Vogue two-reel comedies and "Adventures of Shorty Hamilton."

Mabel Normand as "Mickey"

As a little mountain girl, the foster daughter of an old miner, Mabel Normand is soon to return to the screen of the countless theaters where as "Keystone" Mabel she won a following. The new play so long awaited, her first as a star at the head of her own company, is entitled "Mickey" and its producers promise that it will bring only gladness to weary fans saddened by too many wars and too many vampires. Mabel believes that there is too much real sorrow in the world and as "Mickey" she will endeavor to add a bit to its sunshine.

"Mickey" is a wholesome story of a little waif, reared in the mountains and sent to the city to be civilized. There she finds her path not exactly strewn with roses, and there are wistful and pathetic touches in the story as well as humor of a delicate and sure kind.

Miss Normand became one of the real favorites of the screen through her work in comedies. Since the time, nearly a year ago, she bade farewell to slapstick plays and set out to appear as a featured player in comedy dramas at the head of her own company, her friends among fans and exhibitors have been awaiting the new play. Now after many delays it is completed and ready for distribution.

The method and date of release of "Mickey" will be announced soon.

BIG METROS FOR '17

Big Special Release Features, Beginning with Ethel Barrymore in Strong Play, Are Announced by Metro for Coming Year

Metro Pictures Corporation begins its new year with an important announcement of an expansion of its policies. Richard A. Rowland, president of the organization, called a conference of its officials a few days ago, at which time it was decided that in addition to the features already announced for regular release on the Metro program, a number of special releases would be made throughout the year.

The first of these already has been decided upon, and the work of actual production was begun the day after Christmas. This will be a seven-reel feature production starring Ethel Barrymore, who recently announced her intention to appear hereafter only in Metro wonderplays, and the special release chosen as Miss Barrymore's next vehicle will be a picturization of "Egypt," a drama by Edward Sheldon, produced on the speaking stage by Margaret Anglin. Miss Barrymore has also translated in terms of the screen another of Miss Anglin's successes, "The Awakening of Helena Richie."

Although the Metro service will be greatly strengthened by these special releases to the regular program, this will be accomplished at a price entirely within the reach of exhibitors. Stars already favorites with Metro patrons will be featured in the de luxe productions. The most famous and skillful of the dramatists and scenario writers of the present day will furnish the manuscripts to be used and the stories will be interpreted, whether the interpretation requires five, six, seven or more reels.

John W. Noble will direct the first great special release, Miss Ethel Barrymore in the seven-act production of the Edward Sheldon play, the screen version of which will be called "Egypt the Gypsy." Edward Sheldon is the author of "Romance," "Salvation Nell," "The Nigger," and numerous other successes. June Mathis is adapting the play to the screen. The entire company producing "Egypt the Gypsy" will go South to take the exterior scenes of the play. Robert Whittier, William B. Davidson and Frank Montgomery will be Miss Barrymore's leading support in play. Mr. Whittier, who plays Frederick Richie in "The Awakening of Helena Richie," has the part of Faro, the son of the gypsy chief. William B. Davidson, who plays opposite Miss Barrymore in her forthcoming Metro-Rolfe production, "The White Raven," will have the part of the business man, Von Kleet. Frank Montgomery is famed for his skill at picturesque make-ups, as well as for his ability to depict Indians and Mexicans. He will play the gypsy chief.

The part of Egypt gives Miss Barrymore a character to revel in. Egypt has all the wildness, the freedom of the Gypsy, untrammeled by the false ethics of a so-called civilization. She and her Gypsy clan live by the laws of the tribe, far more inexorable than those made and enforced by courts, and death is the penalty for disobedience. Egypt loves a youth of her own kind, but the course of true love runs no more smoothly in "Egypt the Gypsy" than it has done since time began. The screen production will unfold a story of love, hate and destiny with the fascinating background of gypsy life, of the Romany "chis" and the Romany "chals," to give it added flavor and distinction.

New Mary Miles Leading Man

George Fisher, the handsome juvenile leading man, has been engaged by Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Corporation, to play opposite Mary Miles Minter in Mutual Star Productions.

Mr. Fisher's first appearance in support of the Mutual's attractive young star, will be in "The Gentle Intruder," Miss Minter's sixth Mutual production on which she recently started work at the studios of the American Film Company, Inc., at Santa Barbara, Cal.

Mr. Fisher will appear in the role of "Arnold Baxter," a spoiled and pampered son, who finds real manhood through the efforts of his little cousin—"the gentle intruder."

George Fisher was born in Michigan and educated in Milwaukee, Wisconsin. His professional career began with stock companies in Milwaukee, Kansas City, and South Bend. Next he turned his energies towards the vaudeville stage, which led to the pictures.

Recently, Mr. Fisher has been connected with the Ince studios.

Fox Studios Rebuilt

William Fox's western studios, located in Hollywood, recently destroyed by fire, are being rapidly rebuilt. One side of the building is now so far completed that several offices have been re-established, while the rest of the place is progressing.

In connection to the new studio, the Fox company is building, they have relinquished their Ferndale studio and are now concentrating their entire force in the Hollywood plant, and the large lot which they have leased across the street from the studio.

General Representative A. Carlos and the heads of the more important departments have moved into a part of the new studio now being built. The new studio will be one of the most fully equipped and thoroughly appointed in the motion picture industry. It will take the form of a hollow quadrangle, with offices along the sides, and the center filled with stages. The front end will house the main departments, the rear will be used for scenic departments and properties, and the two sides will contain offices for stars, dressing rooms and minor bureaus.

Douglas Fairbanks Leaves Triangle

Douglas Fairbanks has announced that he has severed his present connection with the Majestic Company, for which he has been making pictures for the Triangle program.

His future plans are not yet made public. Just what steps the Triangle Corporation will take it has not yet announced. That the comedian might leave Triangle pictures has been rumored before, since Mr. Fairbanks, who has become one of the best drawing stars on the screen, has been sought by other companies with large salary offers.

"KICK IN" SCREENED

Sumptuously Produced by Pathe as a Photoplay With William Courtenay, Mollie King, and an All-Star Cast

In announcing the release of "Kick In" for January 14, Pathe brings to the attention of the exhibitor the name of a play which was a real sensation in New York City in the season of 1914 and 1915 and which had a long run in Chicago and other large cities. In London critics and public welcomed it with open arms. A. H. Woods produced the original play.

George Fitzmaurice of the Astra Company was entrusted with the production of this famous play in motion picture form. How well he has accomplished his task is shown by the fact that Pathe considers this one of their greatest pictures and this in light of the fact that Mr. Fitzmaurice produced "New York," "Via Wireless," "At Bay," "The Test," etc., is no small praise. In casting the production Mr. Fitzmaurice followed out his usual policy of selecting the best cast possible. William Courtenay plays the part of "Chick Howes"; Mollie King plays "Molly." Other well known players in the cast are Richard Clugston, Suzanne Willa, John Boyle, and Richard Tabor.

The action of the play is breathless and sensational. While it is of the type known as a "crook play," it has much human interest, arouses much sympathy for the reformed crook who tries to "go straight" and really preaches a lesson of forbearance and pity. Pathe feels that in offering this famous play it is giving to exhibitors a Gold Rooster feature which should be a tremendous box-office attraction and which because of the superb production, splendid acting and breathless action, should "repeat" not once but many times in every theater showing it. It is a photoplay at the very head of its type, and no one who loves thrills should miss seeing it.

"Black Door" Second "Perils" Story

"The Black Door," second of the thrilling series of fifteen complete newspaper stories, released by the Mutual Film Corporation, under "The Perils of Our Girl Reporters," is one of the most gruesome and at the same time one of the most fascinating motion picture plays ever produced.

Helen Greene, who plays the leading role—that of Isabel Ralston, a young newspaper reporter on the staff of a great metropolitan daily—is projected by the order of her managing editor into the middle of a mystery that recalls Poe's "Murders of the Rue Morgue," and throughout the story there is that element of criminal shadowland which defies analysis but is potent to send a shudder through the human system wherever it is encountered. Constructively and pictorially, "The Black Door" is a remarkable drama.

Prize for Annette Drawing

Miss Dorothy Varian, a student at the Art Students' League, New York, won both the first and the second prize for the best study of a full-length pose of Annette Kellermann. One hundred entries, submitted by representatives from every art school in New York City and vicinity, opposed hers. Her reward is $150, donated by William Fox, and the honor of having her work utilized throughout the world in publicity for "A Daughter of the Gods."

The decision was made at a luncheon at the Hotel Astor by Robert Henri, W. J. Glackens, John Sloan and Wallace Morgan, acting as judges. Philip Boileau and Prince Troubetzkoy, fellow judges, were unable to be present.

The competition began the latter part of last November and ended with the old year. During its progress the lobby of the Lyric Theater was thronged with art students, who set up their easels and worked amid curious onlookers. Seven oil paintings, twelve watercolors, seventy-six drawings in pencil and charcoal, five pastels, one wood carving and one bas-relief in plastline were submitted.

Miss Varian and the other winners received their prizes from the stage of the Lyric Theater during the progress of "A Daughter of the Gods" last week.

From Kay-Bee Studios

William Desmond, the popular matinee idol, has a role which reveals him in a new light, in the Triangle Kay-Bee play by C. Gardiner Sullivan, "The Iced Bullet." The play is a serio-comic story of the adventures of "T. Chittington Gall-Worth," an actor-author-artist of "movie-land." In the story he comes to the Ince plant to sell a story and instead gets mixed up with a murder mystery.

"Three of Many," by C. Gardiner Sullivan, in which Clara Williams is starred, proved how diversified were the natural endowments of Inceville. The story deals with three human beings and the great war and has its locale in New York City, Italy and Austria. The entire play was staged within the confines of Inceville.

The selection of jurymen for the court scene in "The Sin Ye Do," starring Frank Keenan, was undertaken carefully by Director Walter Edwards. As a result, each type is worthy of note. With two exceptions every man in the box has, some time or other, served in a real jury.

New Mutual Manager for New York

H. C. Hancock has been appointed manager of the Mutual Film Corporation's New York Exchange. He is in charge of the Twenty-third Street Exchange and its subordinate branches serving a large and important territory.

Mr. Hancock is widely experienced in the motion picture industry, having held various important offices under different film corporations, including that of manager of the General Film Company exchange in New York, and similarly important positions with the Vitagraph Company and the Kinetograph Company. Mr. Hancock has served as manager of the Forty-sixth street office of the Mutual and as assistant manager of the Twenty-third street office, so that he is familiar with the requirements of both.

Max Linder's First Comedy

"Max Comes Across" has been selected as the title of the first American comedy which Max Linder, the famous European comedian, is producing for Essanay. The release date should be announced within a very short time.

"Max Comes Across" will be released through the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay service.

As the title, "Max Comes Across," indicates, the comedy is based upon Linder's trip across the Atlantic to America. The big scene grows out of the ramming of the liner by another boat in mid-ocean. Newspaper accounts of the accident told of Linder's appearance among the frightened passengers, clad in flaming red pajamas and waving a scarlet sock aloft in his efforts to quell a near-panic.

Essanay has provided Linder with an excellent company for his first comedy, including Ernest Maupain, the prominent character actor and a score of very pretty girls. The comedian was given carte blanc in the staging of the production. Monsieur Linder directed it himself.

"Film Detective Work"

There is a branch of the motion picture trade of which very little is heard. It may well be called the "detective" branch of the film business. The independent exchanges throughout the country engage representatives to follow up independent releases and keep in touch with the happenings of the big companies. Very little is known of these men because they are seldom interviewed and when approached have no information to give to the public. With state rights coming back into its own, these representatives play an important part in the film industry, much depending on their recommendations, as to the state right sales.

John W. Heaney, who represents the S. A. Lynch Enterprises of the South and through whom the Dixie Film Co. is marketing "Tempest and Sunshine," and "Just a Song at Twilight," is a most interesting figure in this field. Mr. Heaney has been in the film business since the day of its inception and was the first man to plan and foresee the feature program.

On being approached with the usual question as to what the outlook of the picture business is, Mr. Heaney said, "Why ask me? You enter into the counsels of the mighty and get your information first hand. What I know, I get from reading your paper." But what is the outlook for the state right buyer? was asked. John smiled again, that knowing smile, and said, "State rights is in its own and will hold its own because there is a better understandning between the independent exchange man and the exhibitor than between the exchange man representing a big company and who is subject to rules and regulations of the company, and the man to whom he must rent his picture."

"What can you tell of the Dixie Film Company and your plans?" was then asked. "For information concerning the Dixie Film Company," he said, "you must see Harry Reichenbach, who is their authorized publicity man."

Chicago School Has Film Theater

The Lake View High School, Ashland avenue and Irving Park boulevard, Chicago, is equipped with one of the finest film theaters in the country.

By means of folding doors it is possible to shut off the theater from the class rooms.

The stage of this theater is forty feet wide and twenty deep. It possesses a well-equipped dressing room to one side, and on the other a reception room and entrance to the balcony. The main floor of the big assembly room is ninety feet long and seventy wide. As far as a point beyond the center there is a gentle decline, then a slight rise to the stage. There are one thousand seats on the main floor, and on the balcony there are eight hundred more. On the balcony floor is a well-equipped moving picture operating room.

Modern fireprof and other curtains have been provided.

New Walthall Release

"Little Shoes," Henry B. Walthall's latest Essanay feature, was released through the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service, January 15. Two other features are announced for release by Essanay within the next few weeks. These are "Skinner's Dress Suit," an adaptation from Henry Irving Dodge's story in the Saturday Evening Post, with Bryant Washburn in the leading role; and "The Trufflers," with Nell Craig.

"Skinner's Dress Suit" will be released February 5. The story tells of an extremely ordinary citizen whose wife makes him buy a dress suit and "spruce up." Skinner's dress suit wins him fame and fortune.

War Films at Chicago Bazaar

Exhibitors and others connected with the film industry in Chicago are taking a great deal of interest in the unusual war films shown at the Allied Bazaar, held in the Coliseum, January 11 to 20.

These films were made at the front with the French armies and the official government report shows that twenty-four cameramen were killed in taking the pictures. There is also on display at the Bazaar a unique collection of 1,500 photographs which show a complete pictorial history of various phases of the war since its beginning. This exhibit is in charge of Baron and Baroness Huard of France. The official French exhibit of war materials is also creating great interest. It includes everything from shells to war aeroplanes, and is in charge of Marquis de Polignac, who spent a year in the trenches and some time as war aviator.

New York Exhibitor Killed

Charles Schwarzkoff, a theater manager who conducted a motion picture house at 1034 Second avenue, New York City, was run over and killed by a street car in front of his theater last week as he was on his way to Yorkville Court to answer a charge of admitting minors to his theater without the necessary guardians. The motorman has been arrested.

Sunday Cases Delayed

The Sunday film case has not yet come before the New York Court of Appeals and moreover is not likely to receive the attention of the highest court of the state for some time to come. The Sunday picture case has as yet no place on the calendar of the court, and the clerk states that as yet no notice of the appeal has been received by the court.

For Better Insurance Regulations

Another blow to free the motion picture industry from adverse or misconceived fire insurance regulations was struck by the Committee on Fire Prevention Regulations and Insurance of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry at a special meeting called to discuss the offer of Commissioner Brown of Banking and Insurance of the state of New Jersey to consider the proposals of the National association, a committee of four was appointed to draw up a new film clause to be enacted by the New Jersey legislature as applying to the insurance on motion picture negatives. This committee consists of J. E. Brulatour, of Eastman Films, Ralph A. Kohn of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, P. A. Powers of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company and B. N. Busch of the World Film Corporation.

The committee was instructed to take as its basis the film clause which is incorporated into its policies by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, which is based on the principle of proportional residuary values on negative after the film is released. The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation places on its films an individual value, and its policies provide for an automatic decrease in the insured value of the films, as follows: 45% decrease upon release in the United States, 12% upon release in England, 5% upon release in Canada, 3% upon release in Australia, 2% for South Africa, and 13% for the remainder of the world, leaving a residual value to the policy of 20% after the film has been released all over the world, this residual estimate consisting of the value of the negative for reprints and replacements upon the availability of which much of the value of the positive prints depends.

It was agreed by the film men assembled that this was a fair basis from which to work, and the committee will proceed from this. These percentages vary from time to time and, for instance, will be radically changed after the close of the European war.

The present film clause authorized by law in New Jersey, where so many of the great film studios and storage vaults are located, limits the value of negative to $1 per foot. The producer's estimate of value on average negative varies from $3 to $20 per foot. The New Jersey clause now provides for no residual value after release, and moreover, does not cover negatives or positives of subjects "censored or rejected by the National Board of Review." This last clause, it was pointed out, was manifestly unfair, as the rulings of the National Board do not establish the value of pictures and no rejection by the National Board affects at all the value of pictures outside the United States.

The authorized film clause, like that of New Jersey, is established in connection with the legal insurance rates, and it was stated at the meeting that the insurance companies now issue policies in New Jersey covering the actual and residual value of films only on an advance of from 50% to 75% over the authorized rates.

Present at the last meeting were the following:

Charles M. Biscay, presiding, of the Insurance Press; W. J. Grill, N. Y. Motion Picture Co.; W. H. Stallings, Beidler & Bookmyer, Philadelphia, Pa.; C. F. Wilson, Kalem Company; P. A. Brenon Defends Costume Play

Regarding the supposed prejudice against what is called the "costume play," Herbert Brenon has a number of things to say. He has been filming "The Eternal Sin," in which Florence Reed will make her first appearance in Selznick Pictures as the notorious Lucretia Borgia. To the statement that the public "does not want costume plays," Mr. Brenon replies:

"If the story is strong enough, it makes no difference whether a photo drama is a so-called 'costume play,' or in modern clothes, or dressed in the garb, or absence of garb, of the Garden of Eden. It is interesting to note that not one of the tremendous moving picture successes—the milestones in the art—has been a story of our own times. From 'Cabiria' down, the photo dramas which have set the world talking, have been 'costume plays' invariably. My own most popular offerings, prevous to 'War Brides,' were 'Neptune's Daughter' and 'A Daughter of the Gods,' both of which come in the costume class—though the facetious critic may observe that the most interesting scenes were those in which the costumes were most scanty. Even Mr. Griffith's masterpiece, 'The Birth of a Nation,' goes back more than half a century for its period.

"Many producers of 'costume plays,' however, have been so overwhelmed by the scenic possibilities of the production that they have buried their stories beneath tons of costumes and furniture. So too with actors, who have a tendency to strut and pose as soon as they don clothes of another period.

"I appreciate the fact that there is a strong superstition, or rather prejudice, current among many exhibitors, against 'costume plays,' and yet if you ask these exhibitors to define specifically what they mean by the term they are at a loss to explain. Usually they will reply by citing instances of expensive productions, principally of Shakespearean plays, which have failed to 'get the money.' A little thought shows that generalization from these instances is illogical.

"It is as absurd to say that the public does not want costume plays as it would be to say that the world has no further use for horses. The automobile has crowded out the horse to a great extent, but stock raisers will tell you they are getting higher prices for thoroughbreds than ever before. A thoroughbred is always in demand, whether it be a horse or a photo drama. If the story is strong enough, I don't care a nickel what period it comes from, so long as the producer realizes that he is telling a story, and not trying to present a fashion review and exhibition of furniture."

Fox Productions for January 22

William Fox will release two productions for the week of January 22: Theda Bara in "The Darling of Paris," an adaptation from "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," and Gladys Coburn in "The Primitive Call."

"The Darling of Paris" is Miss Bara's first pictureplay under the new Fox policy for 1917.

Ohio Accepts Moss Feature

Announcement is made from the B. S. Moss office that the Ohio Board of Censorship affixed its seal of approval to that concern's latest release, "The Girl Who Doesn't Know." The picture was submitted to the Ohio board last week.

In the face of the rejection of D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," the admittance of the Moss picture is considered somewhat of a triumph, inasmuch as the theme deals with the world-old subject of social wisdom versus social ignorance in budding youth. It is said to unfold this sociological problem in all its subtle variations and ramifications, common in every period of the world's history.

It is a five-part picture, with an unusually brilliant cast of players headed by Marie Empress, an actress with a motion picture reputation both here and abroad.

Exhibitors and Censors Co-operate

When the moving picture censor board, named recently by Mayor Baumann, begins its work it will attempt to induce owners of picture houses in Springfield, Ill., to co-operate and give Springfield high-class pictures.

The foregoing statement was made by C. St. Clair Drake, secretary of the state board of health, who is a member of the board.

Doctor Drake, who returned from Chicago recently, made a study of picture censoring in that city and will receive daily a list of pictures censored by the Chicago board.

"The relations between the local censor board and the owners of picture shows will be friendly," said Doctor Drake. "We will urge their co-operation in an effort to give Springfield high grade pictures."

Griffith and Newspaper in Tangle

D. W. Griffith's spectacular feature, "Intolerance," is at present the subject of a lively newspaper fight in Philadelphia, which began when the North American, one week after giving the production a favorable review, denounced it in its editorial columns and refused it advertising space. Mr. Griffith endeavored to purchase space in the North American to answer the charges that his picture is an argument in behalf of legalized immorality. This being denied him, he has published in other local newspapers an open letter to the North American in which he contends that politics is involved in the attitude taken by the paper.

Governor Asks Censor to Resign

Governor Brumbaugh of Pennsylvania has requested the resignation of J. Louis Brietinger, former chairman of the State Board of Censors. Considerable indignation was frequently caused among moving picture promoters throughout the state at what they termed the "dictatorial" attitude of the state board. Several times the clash between the board and the film interests reached a serious state, suits being entered by photoplay magnates to test the legality of the censor's decisions.

The New York Tribune chose the Famous Players adaptation of "Snow White," in which Marguerite Clark is the star, as the special photoplay attraction which it invited 2,000 orphans to witness as its guests at the Strand Theater, New York, December 29.

Investigate San Diego Air

A new value was placed on the San Diego atmosphere when three men, each prominent in the field in which he works, went there to find out just why it is that motion pictures taken in or near San Diego have such perfect lighting effects. The three men were H. H. Cudmore, publicity manager of the General Electric Company; R. C. Moore, the man who produced the artificial lighting effects at the San Francisco Exposition and on the Statue of Liberty, and Chance Ward, a motion picture director.

The project upon which the three men are working is an educational film, to be produced by the General Electric Company, showing the evolution of lighting methods since the first spark was made by primitive man.

Theatrical Producers Meet

A conference attended by many of all the big vaudeville and picture producers of the East was held recently in the offices of Fred G. Nixon-Nirdlinger, owner of a chain of vaudeville houses in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. The purpose of the meeting was to discuss the theatrical situation throughout the country.

After the meeting, Mr. Nirdlinger entertained the magnates at a dinner in the Manufacturers' Club. Some of those present were: Fred Leopold, William Dunborough, Charles Worthington, J. W. Moorehead and Thomas Dougherty.

Griffith Wins Long Suit

Judge Heard of the Superior Court of Chicago has finally decided in favor of David Wark Griffith in the latter's suit for a regular permit for the showing of "The Birth of a Nation." The moving picture board of censorship of Chicago decided that children must not see "The Birth of a Nation," which had a run of eight months in 1915, and four months in 1916. Chicago was the only city in the country in which children were not permitted to see the play.

Jacksonville Entertains Kessel

A. Kessel, president of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, was the guest of honor at a banquet in Jacksonville given him recently by the motion picture committee appointed by Major J. E. Bowden which visited New York last year in the interest of Jacksonville. Prominent financiers and motion picture producers of Jacksonville attended the banquet.

Circuit Head in New York

W. S. Butterfield, head of a circuit of theaters in Michigan, is in New York City to look over the big feature pictures. At the same time he will attend to the booking of vaudeville productions for his string of theaters in the middle west.

Four burning reels were recently taken from the operating booth in a Park River, North Dakota, theater, carried out by the operator, who was severely burned, while the audience continued its interest in a picture on the screen unaware of the danger.

"Redeeming Love"

Kathlyn Williams in Morosco-Paramount Play. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THE drama selected for Kathlyn Williams' first appearance in Paramount productions has many elements of popular appeal. The public has demonstrated that it likes stories of this kind and we have little doubt that exhibitors in theaters of every class will report that the offering "went over big."

The theme is the career of a woman who, after spending her girlhood in a Puritanical small town, elopes with a gambler, becomes a notorious adventuress and in the end, after many stormy events, repents and is reconciled with her first lover, who has never ceased to mourn for her. Highly emotional situations, in a very elaborately produced picture, swift action, at least one spectacular "thrill," a popular star in a fitting role, these form a combination which looks promising from a box-office standpoint.

Miss Williams has in former plays with another company proved her skill at playing youthful innocence and worldly sophistication in the same picture, and again she begins her story as a pleasure-loving and wholly innocent country girl, with hair in curls. But she shows her real ability in the later scenes, as the reckless, worldly gambler. She is at her best in this phase of the role.

The whole picture is beautifully presented. Every scene is pictorially a delight. The outdoor locations in the first part of the story are well chosen and well photographed, while the later scenes, representing Naomi's gambling resort, are given superb settings, of unusually good design. Miss Williams' costumes too are in keeping with the elaborate scenes. The well-worded sub-titles are given interesting symbolic backgrounds, which adds a further touch of distinction to the play.

A worthy supporting cast surrounds the star. The leading man is Thomas Holding, as Bancroft, the evangelist. Wyndham Standing as Hugh Wiley draws a convincing "heavy" character. Other players are Herbert Standing, Jane Keckley, Helen J. Eddy and Don Bailey.

In character a melodrama, the action and interest of a story of this kind usually sweep the spectator along too rapidly to allow him to worry over minor points of probability. However, this play keeps well within the bounds of credulity. Perhaps the sudden display of financial genius on the part of the country girl who had been so unworldly previously may arouse a doubt but, of course, her experiences may have aroused latent talent.

The film, released December 28, is five reels in length.

The Story: The early scenes of the play, which begins slowly, show the growing love interest between John Bancroft, a minister in a country town, and Naomi Sterling, one of his youthful charges. The appearance in the town of Hugh Wiley, a gambler from the city, changes the situation, for he wins the love of Naomi away from the minister. After several misunderstandings with the minister, Naomi elopes with the gambler, leaving the village for life in the city.

There Naomi is very unhappy, hating the life into which Wiley has drawn her. A few years later, Bancroft has also left the village to accept a charge in the city. He becomes a noted evangelist. In his work, he discovers Naomi and her husband and their gambler associates and shows his horror at such a life. Naomi becomes hardened and decides to make money her aim thereafter. As a result, she is soon able to build a palatial gambling resort, which becomes notorious in the city. Bancroft, in the meantime, has turned his efforts to raising money to build a Home for Unfortunates.

Naomi's associates convince her that Bancroft is her worst enemy and she agrees to aid in a plot to discredit him. She meets him, pretends repentance and lures him to her resort. There Wiley and his aids steal from him the combination of his safe, containing the charity funds. They have already requested that the gambling hall be raided and have also reported the minister's presence there to his fellow churchmen. In the confusion they are able to rob his safe and get away, but Naomi, realizing that she has been tricked by her own associates, aids Bancroft and from her own fortune replaces the money stolen from his safe. Wiley and his pals, escaping with the stolen funds, meet with an accident which sends their automobile over a cliff into a river below. The close of the picture shows Naomi, truly repentant, reconciled with Bancroft.

"Nina, the Flower Girl"

Triangle-Fine Arts Drama Featuring Bessie Love. Reviewed by Geo. W. Graves.

THIS is the story of a blind girl who, lead to believe that her hunchback lover, Jimmie, is a handsome Prince Charming, that she abides in a sumptuous palace, etc., lives a life of dreams. The story wanders through a long series of incidents, showing how the girl meets some kind artist friends and a certain Fred Townsend in particular, who persuades his mother to finance an operation to restore Nina's sight. The poor hunchback, because he will not be admitted to the wealthy Townsend's dwelling by the stiff-mannered butler, and because he has seen Fred alone with Nina, gets the idea that "the swells" mean harm to the girl, and tries to shoot her benefactor. In a very undramatic way he fails twice in this attempt.

Finally Jimmie learns the true motives of the Townsends and all is well in that respect. However, when Nina's operation proves successful, Jimmie, dreading to have the girl see him as he really is, starts to commit suicide—that is, he gets as far as the top of a railing high over a freight yard. The spectators are left to form their own opinion about whether or not he takes the fatal jump. Nina is not happy without Jimmie, whose strange disappearance cannot be accounted for. But, as the audience probably suspects, Jimmie is alive, and he is having an operation performed on his back by the kind doctor who has helped Nina. Explanations are in order, showing how the doctor trailed the troubled Jimmie to the aforementioned railing and forced him to abandon the perilous leap. So, with Nina's eyes cured and the hunchback straightened out, becoming the handsome ideal of her dreams, there is a happy ending, and Nina never knows the disappointment from which she has been saved. Incidentally, too, young Townsend loses Nina, who, out of gratitude, promised to be his wife.

The fact that Bessie Love is the star of this picture is its chief bid for popularity. This bid is not bolstered up any by the story, which is lacking in dramatic essentials to an alarming extent and is hardly substantial enough to make the spectator leave the theater with a satisfied sense of having spent a profitable hour. This offering is a staunch advocate of the doctrine that "the story's the thing."

Lloyd Ingraham's direction helps the production a great deal, giving it the finished artistic touches and providing a generally good atmosphere. The direction is largely convincing. Elmer Clifton puts feeling into his Jimmie and acquits himself in a satisfactory manner. Bert Hadley appears as Fred Townsend.

We are not at all satisfied that the public will be pleased with this offering. Surely the Triangle standard is a bit beyond this.

"Whoso Findeth a Wife"

Five-Reel Art-Dramas Picture Released December 28. Reviewed by George W. Graves

A PICTURIZATION of J. Wesley Putnam's novel, written in refutation of the arguments presented in Hall Caine's "The Woman Thou Gavest Me," makes this offering good entertainment.

Jean Sothern, who sprang into the firmament in International's serial, carries the starring role with adequate realism, a role which is quite prolific in opportunities. Leo Delaney is an excellent opposite and the work of the cast is worthy of favorable comment. The story is not wanting in situations of force, and its production is of such a nature that the exhibitor can count on it as being very presentable entertaining material for his patrons. In respect of interest, the picture can hold its own with the better five-reel subjects of the day.

Whether or not J. Wesley Putnam's book offered substantial points in refutation of Caine's doctrine that a woman is free to "live her own life," regardless of the consequences, we are not in a position to state, but the film-ized form of "Whoso Findeth a Wife" doesn't arrive at any proven truth in the matter. It simply shows how a woman, on the point of divorce, is lead by a kindly minister to live up to the terms of the marriage covenant. In this particular case the woman has been selfish and has not realized that "true love is born of sacrifice," while her husband is entirely worthy of her love. We never saw a picture yet that proved anything in general about human nature or proved anything in ethics through inductive reasoning. A chain of pictures, all vindicating one principle, or even a chain of specific cases in one picture, might satisfactorily do so.

The husband, not knowing of the change wrought in his wife as a result of the minister's rebuke, prepares to kill himself after he has arranged for his wife's marriage to the man she has been encouraging. But the wife is quick enough to prevent her husband's self-destruction, and this provides the last strong scene of the story.

"Among Those Present"

Essanay "Black Cat," Release of January 9. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

A DETECTIVE story comedy drama describes this entertaining offering from the Essanay studios. With Richard C. Travers and Gertrude Glover in the leading roles, supported by a competent cast, an interesting story briskly told and well photographed, the play will doubtless please most audiences. It is light, pleasant and away from hackneyed situations. Of thirty minutes screen-time, it is a good short-length subject which merits no adverse criticism.

Grace fears Bob is guilty of the theft.

The Story: Grace Stanton, daughter of a police commissioner, loves Robert Ricketts, a wealthy idler, whom her father objects to because he has never accomplished anything worth while. Stanton is at that time annoyed over his failure to capture a clever society crook. Grace decides that she will play detective and capture the thief and put her father in a humor sufficiently good so that he will withdraw his objections to Bob. Bob at the same time decides that he will capture the thief and prove his cleverness to Grace's father.

At a reception both amateur detectives, their plans unknown to each other, try to capture the thief, whom they feel sure is "among those present." A theft of jewels is committed and Bob, in his zeal as a sleuth, has brought suspicion upon himself. Even Grace thinks him guilty and believes him a kleptomaniac. Bob continues his investigation and discovers that a maid in the household and one of the guests are notorious criminals in disguise. He gets evidence against them, but gives the credit for the work to the police commissioner, who rewards him by giving his consent to Bob's marriage to Grace.

"The Pride of the Clan"

Artcraft Five-Reel Drama Released January 8. Reviewed by George W. Graves

MARY PICKFORD in the role of Marget MacTavish, head of the clan in this fascinating Scotch production, is as charming as she is "full of fight." It is a role calculated to set off all petite star's allurements, give her unnumbered opportunities to register the inimitable girlish and human mannerisms which have made her famous. The story is perfectly satisfying in its light, human moods, drawing much on little sketches from life for comedy effect, but it is not one of great dramatic intensity or conviction. This fact the average spectator will overlook in favor of the winsomeness of the star and the general exquisiteness of the production, made more real and delightfully exotic through Maurice Tourneur's art. All the detail of the quaint island hamlet is as scrupulously looked after as is the general foreign color, manifest in the quaint types and customs. The public ceremenoy of betrothal, each couple plighting their troth with a broken sixpence is one of the latter, happily introduced.

Matt Moore, although in reality he is Irish, makes a splendid type for Jamie, Marget's lover. This is among Mr. Moore's best impersonations, if not his very best. His work deserves unstinted praise. Warren Cook, Kathryn Browne Decker, Ed.

Roseman and Joel Day are in the support. Numerous animals and fowls also have their part in the support, among which are a goat and a duck, the latter receiving much attention on the Artcraft press sheet. The use of pets in a production of this kind is always profitable. It makes for naturalness, and always has its appeal to human nature.

"The Pride of the Clan" is sure to make its appeal to the majority of people. The charming portrayal of the star, as well as the efficiency of her support, will amply atone, in the mind of your average spectator, for any insufficiency in the story. The picture is sure to start some coin in motion for the exhibitor.

Jamie, in love with Marget, head of the clan, is supposed to be the son of old Mrs. Campbell, but it finally works out that he is in reality the son of Robert, Earl of Dunstable. He was the child of the Countess of Dunstable by her first marriage, and had been left by her with the old fisherwoman. Robert knows nothing of this child, and the Countess herself, influenced by a report of the death, is not aware that he exists until notified by Mrs. Campbell on his twenty-first birthday. Both set out in their yacht for the island, where they influence Marget to give up her lover, telling her that she will not be happy in the new life which Jamie must assume. They have no difficulty in making her see that she must make the sacrifice, and later Marget repulses her lover without his understanding the reason.

After the Dunstables have boarded their yacht, Marget, resolved to end her life, puts out to sea in a leaky old hulk. But when the boat begins to sink, "youth clings to life" and the girl makes some desperate struggles for freedom when she is caught beneath the heavy hatch. Through a note which Marget left tied to one of her pets, Jamie is notified of her danger and a rescue is made in time. The Earl and his wife realize that the young people's affair is no surface love, and Marget becomes a passenger on the yacht.

"Blind Justice"

Seven-Reel Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature Released January 22. Reviewed by George W. Graves

THIS feature was reviewed by MOTOGRAPHY some weeks back, when it was shown to the press by the director, Benjamin Christie. It is a thoroughly remarkable picture, suspenseful and entertaining to the highest degree. This is among the few seven-reel features that justify the use of seven reels. The whole picture is thoroughly imbued with a melodramatic punch which gives it an absolute grip on the audience. Benjamin Christie, the famous Norwegian actor, who has written and produced the picture, and who also stars in it, has given us an all-round flawless performance. The picture is truly a work of art and the credit all goes to him. Mr. Christie's characterization is one of the finest things the screen has yet offered.

"Strong John," falsely accused of murder, is sent to prison. He escapes and breaks into the orphanage where his infant son is being cared for and seizes the child. Again he is captured and sent back to prison. Fifteen years later John is released. He is now a broken man in body and spirit. He has his opportunity for revenge upon the woman he holds responsible for his second arrest, and in a mentally unbalanced state he tries to kill her. John is shot and mortally wounded. He lives just long enough to learn that his son is being well taken care of by the woman he desired to kill.

The exhibitor can certainly place the utmost confidence in what this film will do for him. It is more than a mere "movie." It is a powerful, soul-stirring dramatic production.

"On Dangerous Ground"

Five-Part Peerless-World Drama Released January 8. Reviewed by George W. Graves

THIS is a war drama having to do with France, Germany, secret agents of both countries, and the "papers." There is nothing distinctive or above the ordinary about this piece, save, perhaps, that it features two very popular stars, Carlyle Blackwell and Gail Kane, who give an average good performance, considering the weak story support.

Robert Thornby directed the picture with an eye to keeping things moving, and in this he succeeded pretty well. He succeeded even better in building up a good atmosphere, the scenes in a German hotel being among many others indicative of the surroundings intended by the author. Some of the battle scenes, however, are no more convincing than is the reason for their employment. The picture interest is practically spent at the end of the fourth reel and the last reel seems to be built up merely for the sake of these battle scenes. It is possible, for a war drama to be good without scenes of actual conflict, and we believe this picture would be more striking without them—at least at the time and in the way they are handled.

Some of the members of the cast are quite stagy and the support taken as a whole cannot be considered strong. A certain German officer was made up with such an eccentric mustache and he acted in a way to remind one of a slapstick comedy character. It cannot honestly be said that "On Dangerous Ground" makes a very acceptable offering. It is bound to "go" in some places, but it is really not a picture for a discriminating clientele.

Bradford Stewart, a young American studying in Germany, finds himself in a curious position. A pretty French spy, Little Comrade, who is fleeing from Germany with papers stolen from a German officer, Matz, appeals to him for help. Knowing that if the girl is caught it will mean death, Stewart agrees to help her out of the country as his wife. Together they touch up the passport and manage to get as far as the frontier, where they are held for identification, it being suspected that Little Comrade is the one who stole the papers from Matz. Stewart and his "wife" are forced to spend the night together in a hotel pending the arrival of Matz. Trapadoux, head of the French Secret Service in Germany, who has been secretly watching over the spy, comes to her rescue disguised as the German officer, Matz.

Both Stewart and the girl escape into Belgium, but the latter after a German attack is taken captive. Stewart, to whom she has entrusted the papers, delivers them to General Joffre, who bestows upon him the ribbon of the Legion of Honor. Later one of Stewart's closest friends, at whose mercy the girl spy finds herself, learning that Stewart and Little Comrade are lovers, allows the girl to go free, with the excuse that there is not sufficient evidence to convict her. And so there is a happy reunion of the lovers and a subsequent trip to America, the land of peace.

Chapter 13 of the Signal Serial Starring Helen Holmes. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THE thrills continue in this chapter of the Helen Holmes serial. Helen is kidnapped by her father's men at his orders when he learns that it is through her influence that the sympathy of Stephen is turned to the lumber owners. The leader of Holmes' men, who knows that Helen is the heiress of "Dollar" Holmes' fortune, plans to marry her. But Helen escapes from her captors by swinging by her hands on an aerial steel cable suspended over a canyon. From there she drops to the roof of a box car running beneath.

There are other spectacular events in the episode of the sort which added interest to the preceding chapters. The plot is advanced by the return to the story of one of the men Holmes had sent to prison, Jack Dill, who knows that Holmes is the murderer of the Indian chief whose lands he obtained by fraud. He reveals his knowledge to Little Bear, the old chief's son and Helen's friend.

The story is rapidly and well told. The dissolve scenes which take the spectator back to the beginning of the story are cleverly managed.

"Great Expectations"

Five-Part Famous Player-Paramount Drama Released January 8. Reviewed by George W. Graves

HERE is another Dickens picturization—perhaps not as dramatically powerful as "Oliver Twist," but delightfully absorbing and entertaining. The whole production is a thing of beauty, Robert G. Vignola, the director, having concentrated a large portion of his efforts upon the picture's artistry. The story, above all things, is of the human-interest variety, calling for strong work on the part of both the stars, Louise Huff and Jack Pickford. They both delineate the emotional moments with fine realism and deserve much laud. The people are going to appreciate the efforts of these stars as much as they will the story and elaborate production. Every member of the carefully chosen cast knows how to act, and therefore gives aid to the leads, as well as stimulation to the effect of the story. In it are Frank Losee, W. W. Black, Marcia Harris, Grace Barton and Herbert Prior.

"Great Expectations" is a picture which people will make an effort to see, the land over, as soon as they hear its name, and when they have seen it they are sure to recommend it to their friends as something entirely worth while. It is a production of real "class."

"Pip," an orphan, is forced by Provis, a criminal, to aid him in making his escape. The criminal is caught, but, out of gratitude, he does not allow the boy to be implicated. Jaggers, a lawyer, is struck by the fine qualities of Pip, and appoints him companion for the daughter of a certain Miss Haversham, a most eccentric old maid. No sooner have Pip and Estelle, on growing older, come to care for each other, than Miss Haversham, through sheer wickedness, forces the two to separate.

Pip, sent to school in London, believes his expenses are being paid for by Miss Haversham. But he discovers later that the expenses are being defrayed by Provis, who, although living in captivity, has acquired a good sum of money. The latter escapes from the penal colony and puts in appearance in London, much to the discomfort of Pip, who, having located the whereabouts of Estelle, and wooed her, thinks his chances with the girl will be shattered once it is found out that he has been educated by a convict. Finally, though, Provis proves to be the father of Estelle, equalizing the relations of the two young people. The poor criminal, who has at least shown one strain of nobleness, is killed in his second attempt to evade the police, and the lovers renew their vows over his dead body.

"Beloved Rogues"

Kolb and Dill in American Comedy of January 15. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THE quality of the comedy dramas in this series featuring Kolb and Dill, released through Mutual, has remained very even. The pictures are of a type of their own, like no others that have been produced. This is because the featured comedians are "different," and because the whimsical stories which serve as their vehicles have had a distinctive style. The manager who has run with success the previous Kolb and Dill comedies may be sure that this one will be also appreciated. If the earlier ones were not enjoyed, this one may not be. And if the exhibitor has never shown any of these features, Kolb and Dill as "Beloved Rogues" are well worth introducing to an audience.

Aaron Hoffman is the author of this and of some of the previous comedies. There is the same quiet humor, the fantastic events which still hold much of human interest, and less slapstick than in the previous releases. Kolb and Dill have again the humorous but sympathetic roles of the eccentric Germans, Mike and Louie. May Cloy is their adopted daughter, for whom they become burglars. Thomas Chatterton, as Madge's lover, is an acceptable addition to the cast. Clarence Burton and Harry Von Meter have less sympathetic roles.

The story is fanciful and complicated—perhaps too much so. There are some unusual and humorous situations, but the chief element of appeal lies in the mingling of humor and pathos in the characterizations of the leading players.

The Story: Two foreigners, Mike and Louie, one from Pennsylvania and the other from Holland, own a hardware store. A hardware trust wishes to buy this and when they will not sell, ruins their business. Later when their ward, Madge, is threatened with blindness, they sell at a sacrifice to get money to pay for the attention of a specialist. The money is stolen from them and in desperation they become burglars. They pay for the operation and the girl's sight is restored. Jack, her lover, is accused of the burglary, but Mike and Louie confess and are sent to prison.

Later Madge is proved the heiress to a large fortune. Mike and Louie work out their prison term cheerfully. Toward the close Madge and Jack are married at the prison so that the girl's beloved guardians can be present. At the banquet, the governor of the state, present at the occasion, presents Mike and Louie with pardons.

Toyland Films for Children

The hue and cry for some kind of picture which has strong appeal to children and at the same time is enjoyed by grown-ups is offered exhibitors in the split-reels of animated toy subjects made by the Toyland Films, Incorporated.

These pictures make a most pleasing offset to the tenseness of prevailing offerings in feature pictures and gives the audience a novelty that makes them talk about the program after they leave the theater—which is mighty good advertising. They serve a better purpose than a cartoon and the variety of subjects injects a new interest with each week's program. They cause young and old to wonder how the toys are made to perform with such lifelike naturalness and the opportunity to take off leading screen favorites has not been overlooked by the makers.

In the picture entitled "The Three Bears" is an excellent example of how the screen can make real the nursery story that has come down to us for many generations. "Dingling of the Circus" is full of laughs and the take-off of the best known picture comedian in "A Midnight Frolic" catches the audience instantly.

This style of picture fills the wants of women's clubs, who are clamoring for appropriate films for children.

Motion pictures are to supplant books, to a partial extent, in the schools of Lorain, Ohio. As an experiment, a machine is to be set up in one building. If it is a success, a machine will be installed in each of the buildings.

Complete Record of Current Films

This record is intended to give, for the convenient use of the exhibitor in booking films, all the information about each film that it is possible to present in a space limited to one line. The classification is indicated by the letter at the left (D for drama, C for comedy, T for topical, S for scenic, E for educational, etc.). Next comes the date and the title, followed by the names of the stars in parentheses. At the extreme right hand end of the line is the distributor's booking number, preceded by the name of the producing company. The figure appearing just before this name indicates the number of reels—the italic letter S meaning a split reel.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

General Program

The Fireman's Nemesis—KALEM—"HAZARDS OF HELEN" SERIES.—JANUARY 13.—Featuring Helen Gibson. When Joe, the Wop, is promoted from the round-house to fireman, he stops and tells Helen, the operator, about it on his way home. He is shot from ambush by Scarlotta, vendetta member and all around villain. Helen drags the wounded lad to safety just as the Limited dashes by and when it is discovered that his wound is not serious he takes out his train. After Helen has been bound and locked in a clothes closet by the persistent Scarlotta, freed herself and reversed the switch which Vendetta has left open, he climbs the engine next morning and overpowers the engineer. Joe is tied to the driver's seat and the engine uncoupled from the train. Helen gives chase on her motorcycle and pulls herself up to engine cab by the rope that binds Joe. She throws out the stick of dynamite left by Scarlotta and which is about to explode, onto the ground below where it tears a great hole in the right of way.

The Little Missionary—(TWENTY-EIGHT MINUTES)—ESSANAY—A BLACK CAT FEATURE—JANURARY 16.—Featuring little Mary V. McAlister. The darkness in the home of Caleb Howe and his wife was due—though they did not realize it—to the absence of a little ray of human sunshine. This old couple had grown crabbed in their loneliness, and almost hated each other. They called her "Sunshine Billy" at the orphanage, for, though she herself was an orphan, the little girl was the sunshine of the dreary, sad institution. She "muvvered" the other little orphans and each evening prayed that they would all get good homes soon. It was Sunshine Billy fate decreed should go to the home of Caleb Howe, when he applied at the orphanage for a girl to help his wife with the housework. Though the aged couple at first were cold towards the little girl, it was inevitable that they soon should recognize that the real happiness of life which they had missed was a child. Having found that happiness in Sunshine Billy, life took on a new aspect for them.

One on Him—(SPLIT REEL)—ESSANAY—JANUARY 17.—Yosemite Valley Scenic. Hunting a job as a chauffeur a rich idler is told that the boss employs only married men. He promptly decides to get married and win the job. The first girl he meets is willing and they are married at sixty miles an hour in an automobile. He shows up for work and discovered he has married his prospective employer's daughter. Beautiful scenic taken in Yosemite Valley makes up the rest of the reel.

The Sinful Marriage—ESSANAY—(THIRTY MINUTES)—JANUARY 20.—Margeurite Clayton featured. The marriage of Jesamine Rogers to the wealthy Richard Denslow has not the sacred seal of love. The girl's ambitious mother deemed the ample Denslow dollar mark quite sufficient and her maternal domination leads to her daughter's sale at the altar. Jesamine loves Dr. Roderick Tredmore. Denslow is good to her, however, and so she did her best to be a loyal wife to him. Through a diabolical plot of a lawyer who seeks the Denslow fortune, Jesamine's husband is poisoned. Dr. Tredmore, now risen to fame, is called and saves his life. But Denslow, in the greeting between his wife and the physician, detects that her old love still lives. He declares that his marriage has been a sinful one, and permits his wife to obtain a divorce and marry the man she loves.

Selig-Tribune No. 2.—JANUARY 4.—New York, N. Y.—Commissioner of police and Mrs. Woods prepare Christmas boxes for windows of members of the police department. New York, N. Y.—Squadron A of the 8th regiment is given a cordial greeting after duty on the Mexican border. New York, N. Y.—Les Darcy, pugilistic marvel of Australia, arrives here. Brooklyn Navy Yard, N. Y.—Children from tenement district receive Christmas boxes. Omaha, Neb.—"Judas" as one of Omaha's abattoirs, proves that in some instances it is good policy to be the goat. New York, N. Y.—Mrs. F. Sheehy Skeffington, widow of the Irish editor shot by the British, starts her tour of the United States. El Paso, Tex.—The moving of heavy ordance by caterpillar tractors by Battery C, 5th Field Artillery. With the Armies on the Somme.—French troops camping on conquered positions. Yonkers, N. Y.—Villar Kyronen wins the 25 mile Marathon race. New York, N. Y.—Ice tennis becomes one of the winter sports.

Selig-Tribune No. 3.—JANUARY 8.—Albany, N. Y.—Governor Whitman is inaugurated for a second term. Washington, D. C.—Thomas W. Lawson visits Washington. Hempstead Plains, L. I.—Army aviators flying 165 miles from here to Philadelphia. Seattle, Wash.—Breeding and training carrier pigeons for use as message bearers. New York, N. Y.—Notable figures in the world of science gather at the Scientists' Convention. Mt. Holley, N. J.—Several persons are killed and many injured when the acetylene gas plant in a hotel explodes. Rockland, Me.—The Allen, U. S. torpedo boat destroyer, speeds along at thirty-five miles an hour. Seattle, Wash.—The boy scouts do their hiking on snow shoes. Brooklyn, N. Y.—Thousands enjoy smooth ice in Prospect Park. Omaha, Neb.—High school cadats stage a snappy exhibition. New Orleans, La.—The mid-winter racing season opens.

The Resurrection of Gold Bar—KALEM—TWO-PART EPISODE OF "THE GIRL FROM FRISCO"—JANUARY 10.—Cast consisting of Marin Sais, Frank Jonasson, True Boardman, Ronald Bradbury, and Edward Clisbee. Barbara coaxes her father and Congressman John Wallace, her fiance, to take her to her birthplace, the now deserted town of Gold Bar, as a birthday gift. They take provisions for several days' stay and upon arriving find that part of their supply will be needed by an old prospector, living all these years in the camp. They make him comfortable and set out to explore the abandoned store of Dick Dingle, now a convict. When the floor gives way under Barbara's weight they find some gold nuggets under the boards and these they bury near the creek for the old prospector to find. Later they discover gold and general excitement finishes the episode.

The Trial of Graft—KALEM—ONE-REEL EPISODE OF "GRANT, POLICE REPORTER."—JANUARY 12.—When Tom Grant lays the finished story of a graft scandal, involving Boss Kelley, a city politician, before his chief he is asked for the proof. With the help of Nell, Kelley's stenographer, he secures the check stubs and incriminating letters but before they are safely transferred he and Nell are tricked into entering a taxi, bound, gagged and taken to a deserted house. He contrives to make his escape and that of Nell by a spectacular hand-over-hand stunt on a rope. An hour later he reports to his chief, takes the check book stubs from his shoe with the damaging letters and receives the congratulations of the grinning chief.

Mutual Pictures

The Vampires—NINTH EPISODE—JANUARY 18.—(THREE REELS)—GAUMONT COMPANY.—"The Terrible Wedding." The Vampires, through one of their number who is a fortune teller, gain entrance to Philip's home. They are put to flight after trying to asphyxiate Philip and his wife. Jane and Augustine are kidnaped and carried to a house in the suburbs where Philip and Normandin follow them, led by a trail of oil, leaking from the automobile. They go for the police, all of the vampires are killed or captured in the resulting raid and the series closes with everyone living happily ever after.

Almost a Friar—AMERICAN—(ONE REEL)—JANUARY 20.—Featuring Warren Kerrigan. The old mountaineer and his religious son live near an old mission, where they see the friars wend their way over the mountains every morning. The father wishes the son to become a friar so the son packs his belongings and starts for the mission. On his way he meets a girl and not being able to concentrate his mind on the mission he feels the call of love and seeks out the girl's mother and asks for work. Later he marries the girl and with their little baby they set out for the old mountaineer's. The old man is furious when he finds out that his son has not become a friar, but when he sees his wife and little baby there is a happy reconciliation.

The Butterfly Girl—(FIVE REELS)—POLLARD—JANUARY 11.—Featuring Margarita Fischer and directed by Henry Otto. Molly "Pep" O'Mally and her little sister Bess are sent to live with their aunt, Trixie Boniface at the San Diego Exposition and there encounter all sorts of adventures in the colony of Concessionists. The owner of her aunt's show, Marcus Renshaw, sees "Pep" in a cast-off ballet dress and puts her in her aunt's place as "The Butterfly Girl." She is an immediate success but Renshaw makes life miserable for her with his attentions. She escapes to the Hawaiian village, assisted by her aunt and Robt. Whipple, Jr., a rolling-stone, and one of her first friends on the exposition grounds. Mr. and Mrs. Robt. Whipple, Sr., visit the Hawaiian village and recognizing their son Robert they effect a reconcilliation. He suggests that they take "Pep" with them but they refuse. Thereupon "Pep" tries to commit suicide by throwing herself into the "volcano" of the village, Mt. Jilaeua. Robert rescues her, the father is thawed out by such heroism and all ride gaily away in a luxurious limousine. The fairy fortune of "Pep," related to her by the fortune teller when she first joined the Concessionists has come true.

The Lass of the Lumberlands—CHAPTER 13—(TWO REELS)—SIGNAL—JANUARY 15.—Features Helen Holmes. Reviewed in this issue.

A Lisle Bank—(TWO REELS)—VOGUE—JANUARY 14.—Paddy, the boarder in arrears, and Arthur Moon, worthy chap, both love the landlady's daughter. Arthur is the favored one. Paddy is thrown out, is late for work, gets fired and decides to commit suicide. The action from that on Treat 'em Rough—Nestor—January 15.—With Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Priscilla Dean. Two jealous wives afford the motives for comedy action here, each of them before marriage having had an affair with the other's present husband. Things appear to be carried out as per suspicious prophesy and trouble is about to be generated when a young grizzly happens along and solves the difficulties beautifully.

Filming "The Pride of the Clan," the latest Artcraft feature. Mary Pickford is in the little ship and her leading man is in the same boat. Director Tourneur is standing.

The Prodigal Widow—(Three Reels)—Gold Seal—January 16.—This story deals with the remoulding of the character of a pampered and flirtatious woman who has caused the death of her husband. She falls into the hands of the latter's brother who at first spurns her and then, out in nature's wilderness, brings her to her senses and to her first sense of what real love is. It seems that a little forceful tuition is all the girl has needed.

The Masked Cupid—Victor—January 16.—In this comedy an irate husband thinks better of giving his wife a new frock and returns home to say so at the time their maid's steady decides to steal some jewels. Adventures meet Mr. Husband on his way home, and the officers arrive in time to get him and the steady, who, instead of getting the jewels, gets some baby clothes which Mr. Husband does not know are in the course of construction. Learning the truth of things, the officers efface themselves.

A Slave of Fear—(Two Reels)—Imp—January 17.—With M. K. Wilson and Agnes Vernon. Robert is a big, good-looking chap, but very timid. He loves Kate, but is afraid to declare himself. Bud, a bully who has always pestered Robert, insults him before the girl and her father. At last determined to teach the bully a lesson, Robert follows him, and sees him, together with his pals, commit a robbery. Robert later succeeds in rounding up the gang and winning the girl's love.

Heartsick at Sea—L-Ko—January 17.—With Dan Russell. Mr. Dinty Dozzleberry gets a letter from his uncle which informs him that he has left him $2.60, and so he starts to Hong Kong, China, to collect. Mr. Doozleberry adroitly takes passage on a ship bound for the above port, and trouble starts when he tries to serve soup. He is put in the kitchen when he can't pay his fare. The chase after Dinty is finally staged on an aeroplane, and some good situations are the result.

Bloodhounds of the North—(Two Reels)—Big U—January 18.—The action of this story takes place in a camp of refugees from justice in the Northwest. Two members of the Northwest Mounted Police, Mac and Lon, in search of an embezzler, learn that the pretty Pauline is his daughter. Lon proves to be unscrupulous and strives to win the girl's love at all hazards, even if he has to kill his comrade, but Mac, though he honestly loves the girl, proceeds to do his duty. Fate, however, intervenes—the embezzler is shot accidentally and Lon is put out of the way by the men of the camp, who misinterpret his intent. The arrival of another member of the Northwest gives the two lovers a chance to escape safely.

His Little Room-Mate—(Two Reels)—Victor—January 19.—With Carter De Haven and Madge Kirby. Carter, a young college man, through a peculiar incident, finds himself the guardian of a girl who has lost her memory. He has a hard struggle keeping the young lady effectively secreted and finally her presence is discovered—at which time Carter is turned out. He marries the girl, but still has fears that she may turn out to be the mother of twins. However, it is finally revealed that she is the daughter of a wealthy manufacturer, friend of Carter's father, so all is well at the finish.

The Little Rebel's Sacrifice—Big U—January 19.—A story of the Civil War, this deals with the experiences of a Southern girl who, to avenge the death of her father, becomes a spy and takes all kinds of daring chances. She is finally caught by the Federals, but her unusual story wins for her sympathy, resulting in a pardon. Finally the girl marries a Union lieutenant into whose path fate has steered her.

Brute Force—(Two Reels)—Bison—January 20.—With George Pearce and Jane Bernoudy. Lew Sanderson, a desperate character, when he is not able to secure the hand of the wealthy Harding's daughter, Bess, by fair means, builds some liquor stills on Harding's land and then calls the revenue officers. Clayborn, a minister and Bess' lover, learns of the plot and notifies the officers in time. Through forged letters Lew gets Clayborn and the girl in his power in a deserted shack. He demands that the girl marry him or he will ruin her good name, as well as send her father to prison. As the helpless Clayborn is about to perform the ceremony, however, help arrives, and the villain's game is off.

Barred from the Bar—Joker—January 20.—With Gale Henry and William Franey. Bill, a bar-tender, gets out upon the sidewalk to carry a banner for the saloon. Here he collides with some members of the Anti-Saloon League, who are marching behind their own banner. In the mix-up Bill gets the ladies' banner and they his. The League visits the saloon, where the leader recognizes the proprietor as her long-lost husband. Because Tessie Tuff, Bill's sweetheart, fails to see the joke, a general fight takes place and things end in an uproar.

Homeless—Laemmle—January 20.—With Matt Moore and Jane Gail. This story is about a beautiful pet dog, who strays from his mistress' protecting roof. He is rescued from the hands of two lads who are tormenting him by a ragged and homeless boy. Upon restoring the dog to its mistress, the boy is rewarded by a good home and good opportunities.

The Bubble of Love—(Two Reels)—Rex—January 21.—With Ruth Clifford and Douglas Gerrard. Jack, losing his fortune, loses at the same time the love of Daphne, a woman who has found his money handy. Violet, an orphan girl whom Jack has educated, is in love with him, but he regards her as a mere child. Depressed at the general turn of affairs, the man attempts to do away with himself, but Violet, her love manifesting itself in constant watchfulness, prevents the act. Then Jack realizes that Violet is really a woman and loves him.

Putting One Over on Ignatz—Victor—January 1.—In this comedy a stranded theatrical troup, without funds, plays a game on Ignatz, a storekeeper, and successfully manage to fool this shrewd individual out of $250. In the cast are Alida Newman, Al McKinnon and Walter Belasco.

Mr. Fullerpep—He Goes to the Country—(Split Reel)—Powers—January 2(.—Mr. Fullerpep, tired of city life, goes to the country and with American Film Company, Inc. Is very inactive—with small lots offered at 80. This company has added Miss Gail Kane to its list of stars and the demand for Mary Miles Minter films is exceeding expectations.

Famous Players-Laskey Corporation. Small transactions have been reported in this stock above current quotations, and outside of a few small offerings, no stock is obtainable under 115 to 120.

Frank Powell Producing Corporation. Deal with Marie Dressler seems to be off, but contracts have been closed with Nance O'Neil and Marjorie Rambeau.

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. Is securing some very bright stars, including Maxine Elliott and Jane Cowl.

Lone Star Corporation. There has been quiet buying in expectation that 20% of the outstanding preferred and all fractional shares will be called at 110, payable February 20, and regular cash dividend declared. Small sales of common have been made under recent quotations. The policy of producing a comedy each month has been changed to more elaborate productions every six weeks.

Mutual Film Corporation. Management now plans to adopt policy of giving stockholders more information than formerly and a financial statement is being prepared which is expected to make a much better showing than last statement, and will be much easier to comprehend. Other changes of policy are also expected to benefit the stockholders.

Pathe-International Combine. The combining of these companies gives Pathe the benefit of publicity through Hearst papers.

him goes a flivver. Both never get back—that is, at the right time—and their adventures cover much ground and fun. On the same reel is: In the Land of the Son of Heaven, as seen by Dr. Dorsey. This picture consists of out-of-door scenes in Peking. Street scenes and festivities with their attendant ceremonies make up a large part of the picture. The far-famed temples of the land are also shown.

Feature Programs

Art Dramas

Whoso Taketh a Wife—(FIVE REELS)—ART-DRAMAS.—With Jean Sothern and Leo Delaney. In this story, from J. Wesley Putnam's novel, a young girl makes the sacrifice of marrying a man she does not love, for the sake of bringing money into her family. Conditions become more and more strained, until finally the husband is about to give the woman her freedom to marry another man. But, after some dramatic developments the woman is lead to see that it is possible for her to love the man to whom she is at present married. Sacrifice and unselfishness are pointed out to be the attendants of true love.

Blue Bird

Her Soul's Inspiration—(FIVE REELS)—UNIVERSAL—JANUARY 15.—Featuring Ella Hall, supported by Marc Robbins, R. Hasset Ryan, Edward Hearn, Marcia and Margaret Whistler. Little Mary Weston, who dances to school, dances at play, and even to church, is given an opportunity to achieve her life's ambition by her father, who promises her dying mother that he will bring this about. He purchases a traveling show so that Mary Weston may become a dancer, but is fatally stricken a short time afterward. He gives his wardrobe mistress, Madame La Rue his small savings and asks her to take the child to his brother upon his death. She takes her own daughter instead and Mary becomes a public charge. The small orphan runs away and makes her way to her uncle and happiness.

Christie Comedies

Her Crooked Career—CHRISTY COMEDY—JANUARY 8.—Betty Compson, Eddie Barry and Neal Burns in the cast. The police force of Weedville is hoodwinked by a clever and beautiful, "queen of crooks," Alofa Breada, whom they take for Jane Slickem, famous lady detective. She sends to the city for her pals and they pull off a job, but the real Jane Slickem arrives and the robbery is discovered. Weedville's finest catch the band of crooks and save the money.

Black Hands and Soapsuds—CHRISTIE COMEDY—JANUARY 15.—Billie Rhodes as the cashier of "the scientific scrubbery" and Eddie Barry as the engineer and Harry Ham as the chief rubber, make the fun in this film. Engineer and Rubber are rivals for the hand of the pretty cashier, and the engineer gets the worst of it. He prints a Black Hand on the back of a sheet, worn by a patron of the bath, and the result is a laughable series of chases until he is discovered in the engine room. He is turned out and peace is restored.

GOLDWYN PICTURES

How Goldwyn Pictures Will Win the Great American Public

GOLDWYN PICTURES CORPORATION has been founded with the intention of contributing three important elements to its feature films QUALITY, NOVELTY and STANDARD OF PRODUCTION. This will be accomplished by:

GATHERING together the ablest dramatic playrights ever assembled under one management. Only those playwrights who have written tremendous financial successes will be called as our dramatic aides. They will write the Goldwyn plays, which will mean GOLDWYN QUALITY.

ENGAGING, whenever we want and can get them, stars of tremendous personality and fame who have made their reputations because of their work—not stars created by dubious publicity and silly advertising. Also, by bringing fresh and new personalities to the screen to support our celebrities. This will mean GOLDWYN NOVELTY.

RECRUITING able directors who will make refined and intelligent pictures; men who know drama and life—not just picture men who grind out so many thousands of feet of film to fill a program. Men whose productions always have box office value. This will mean GOLDWYN STANDARD OF PRODUCTION.

New Campaign Against Censorship

D. W. GRIFFITH HEADS NATIONAL ASSOCIATION COMMITTEE

HERE'S a new drive at hand on the censorship front. David W. Griffith, heading a committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, has been placed in control of the entire nation-wide campaign against the censorship of motion pictures.

This was authorized by the resolution adopted by the Executive Committee of the National Association placing its power in the hands of a small committee headed by Mr. Griffith, who will handle the situation practically without restrictions. It was decided that in view of the necessity for prompt and concerted action, a small committee was desirable as it would have behind it the united support of the entire industry and could act quickly and definitely. The other members are to be announced in a few days.

This winter is the first time that the entire motion picture industry has presented a solid front on the censorship question, a position which was taken five months ago when the National Association, after thorough deliberation, decided that it would oppose all forms of legalized censorship. Mr. Griffith was active at that time and the campaign of this winter has been turned over to him because of his willingness to see the issue through and because of the need of a strong and small body to arrange for the presentation of the industry's side to congress and to the legislatures which are considering censorship legislation. The procedure of the new committee has not been announced, but Mr. Griffith indicated last night something of what may be expected of it.

Motion Picture Art League

"One of the first things that I think we should do," said Mr. Griffith, "is for our committee to form what we may call a Motion Picture Art League, which shall determine some limit and reach some idea of how far we shall go. The stage has a limit. The stage has never shown a naked woman. And that is about the only thing you hear from people of culture and breadth, that we show in motion pictures what they don't show even on the stage—nakedness. My idea of this Motion Picture Art League, is to form a body to which all questions of ethics shall be submitted and by whose decisions the industry will abide. This can and I think will be done, as one of the first activities of our committee, with the support of the industry as represented completely in the National Association.

"For the appeal which we shall make to the legislature and congress, I can only say that I feel that at this time we are girding ourselves to face such an issue as the printing press faced in the days of John Milton. And we pray for the same success as that given to the author of Paradise Lost who appeared before Parliament when the business of printing was in its infancy, and secured the defeat of a measure to censor the press, a measure so dangerous that had it passed, I doubt very much if the freedom enjoyed by the people of America today would now be possible.

"Our battle today is the same battle that John Milton fought. I believe that the written and printed word has made the human race what it is today; it is that which divides us from the brutes that snarl at our heels. And of all words expressed in pictures or in writing, I believe that the motion picture word is a more wonderful, a more beautiful and a better word than any. It is threatened today by enemies of every sort, not least of them the fanatics and the office-seekers.

"Federal Censorship Greatest Evil"

"I think all other evils are small compared with the threatened blight of censorship, of which the frightful menace of federal censorship is the most terrible. Here is something which would make our business childish, which would soon have us making pictures so innocuous that no one would go to see them. Every prejudice too would have its innings, every political axe would be whetted to a razor edge upon our backs, every suggestion of the truth about the abuses of government and society would be weeded out, by a power greater than the power of the sovereign people. It is to save society as well as ourselves from this blight that we are united in the campaign against censorship. And before we have gone far we shall have a united people behind us, for we are fighting the people's battle."

The following were present at the meeting of the executive committee of the National Association:

W. W. Irwin, general manager of the Vitagraph V. L. S. E. presiding; William L. Sherrill, president of the Frohman Amusement Corporation; P. A. Powers, treasurer of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company; J. E. Brulatour, of Eastman Films; Lee A. Ochs, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America; Samuel H. Trigger, president of the New York City Exhibitors League; Louis F. Blumenthal, of the Auditorium Theater, Jersey City; Louis L. Levine, of the Regent Theater, Brooklyn; William M. Seabury, general counsel, and Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary of the National Association, and Mr. Griffith.

"Purity" Marked Pure

The Audrey Munson feature "Purity" has been reviewed by the Board of Censors in Trenton, the capital of New Jersey, and passed by them without eliminations, and with very complimentary comments as to its being a highly artistic and moral production.

Here Is a Vital Fact

San Diego, Cal., Jan. 4, 1917.
Paul H. Woodruff, care Motography, Chicago, Ill:

I believe MOTOGRAPHY is a trifle closer to the individual exhibitor than any other trade paper.—R. E. Hicks, president and manager, Plaza Amusement Company, San Diego, California

This is but another proof of the high artistic value of this production and contradicts entirely any ideas that may have prevailed in the exhibitor's mind that it is of a suggestive nature.

NEW ASSOCIATION BRANCH

Minneapolis Film Men Get Together and Form Local Section of the National Association of Motion Picture Industry

Minneapolis branch of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry was formed and officers elected at a recent meeting held in the offices of the Vitagraph company of that city.

Several meetings had been called previous to this, but owing to the fact that the purposes of the association were not thoroughly understood, no definite results occurred.

While all of the exchanges were not represented the most representative companies were on hand. Thomas Furniss, one of the exhibitor vice-presidents of the National Association, was present and went over the ground thoroughly with the exchange men. After hearing Mr. Furness' talk on the subject, it was decided to complete the organization.

Henry Friedman of the Pathe exchange was elected chairman of the advisory committee, W. K. Howard, secretary and treasurer, and S. N. Robinson of Fox, vice-chairman.

In view of the fact that the parent companies of all those present are already members of the organization, an admission fee of $2.00 was charged for the membership of individuals. It was decided that the advisory committee meet once a week at a luncheon and that a membership meeting be held once a month in the office of the secretary. Elected officers were Fred Gubberly of the Universal, R. E. Bishop of Mutual, C. L. Beavy of Paramount, J. R. Levy of World, and Thomas Furniss of Duluth.

The organization will work in much the same style as the one established in Chicago and other film centers.

Steps toward securing other exchanges in the Twin Cities will be taken up in the next meeting.

It is the intention of the present organization to build up to such a point that individual headquarters for the local can be maintained permanently with some one in charge.

St. Louis Theater Men Meet

The Theater Managers and Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of St. Louis held its last meeting in the Benoist building on January 5. President John Mogler presided.

Two new members were elected to the organization: Eugene Freund, Cinderella Theater, and Edward F. Mayer, New Bridge Theater.

It was decided during the course of the meeting that this is an opportune time for the St. Louis association to join the National league.

All exhibitors, members, were reequested to run a slide or fifty feet of animated advertising, the proceeds of which would be for the benefit of the association.

The association decided to create two more classes of memberships, "Associated," and "Honorary," the associated members to pay $5.00 initiation and $1.00 per month and to be entitled to all the social privileges of the association but to have no vote, and honorary members, who shall pay no dues, will be entitled to all social privileges, but will have no vote.

It was also decided that the organization employ a competent attorney to draft a constitution and a new set of by-laws.

The grievance committee reported that the dispute between the Arsenal Theater and the International Film Company had been adjusted satisfactorily.

The following exchanges informed the association that they do not require deposits on serials:

Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay; L. C. F. Film Exchange; International Film Exchange; General Film Co.; Pathe Exchange; Vitagraph—V.-L.-S.-E.; Universal Film Exchange; Metro Film Service.

The St. Louis Association has now fifty members. Its quarters are so crowded at the regular meetings every Friday that it will soon be necessary to procure larger rooms. It is the purpose and hope of the officers of the association that it will not be very long before they will have appropriate club rooms.

Big Association Dinner

Plans for the big dinner and entertainment of the General Division of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry on January 26 are going forward most satisfactorily. Several restaurants are in view, but the entertainment committee is anxious to arrange with one which is well located in the center of Broadway's life and, if possible, one of the restaurants popular with motion picture people. The difficulty of realizing this desire is that most of the Broadway restaurants have no private dining rooms large enough to accommodate the crowd of 200 or 300 people who are expected. Both men and women are to be present.

The entertainment side of the arrangements are going along under the direction of Harry L. Reichenbach, chairman of the committee, and he promises a line of novelties both in speeches and features.

The Famous Players-Charles Frohman Company, a combination formed by the Famous Players Film Company and Charles Frohman three years ago, for the purpose of presenting the dramatic properties controlled by Charles Frohman on the screen, has been discontinued according to announcement made by Adolph Zukor, its president.

New $2,500,000 Producing Company

FREULER AND CHARLES FROHMAN FORM COMPANY TO PRODUCE FOR MUTUAL

EXHIBITORS will be interested to know that in the very near future the stars and plays of the Charles Frohman Company will be available for their screens.

The Mutual Film Corporation and the noted company which has produced so many stage successes have formed a $2,500,000 producing corporation which will begin active work about February 1. The productions will be released through Mutual exchanges.

The news comes from both the offices of John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, and Alf Hayman, representative of the Charles Frohman Company interests. The new concern has been legally christened "Empire All Star Corporation," with the amplifying sub-title of "Charles Frohman Successes in Motion Pictures."

Studios in New York, Chicago and California

The project stands unique among picture promotions in that the capital stock of the concern is fully paid up and none offered for sale. The new company will maintain offices in New York, Chicago and London, with studios in New York, Chicago and California.

A number of the Frohman stars of major magnitude have been placed under special picture contracts and operations are to begin at once. The announcement carries special significance in connection with Mr. Freuler's declaration of policy "big stars only." The magnitude of the project is reminiscent of the daring stroke by which Mr. Freuler employed Charles Chaplin for Mutual comedies at a salary of $670,000 a year.

"The ground work of policy which has borne fruit in this announcement was laid way back in 1915," observed Mr. Freuler. "I am pleased, at this time, to point to my assertion that for 1917 the Mutual Film Corporation would be interested in only the stars and productions of the first quality and that 'no proposition is too big for Mutual.' The Mutual Film Corporation is fortunately equipped and ready to deal with the biggest possibilities in the industry, and to carry through its projects and plans with safe assurance.

"It is particularly significant of the future of this industry, that I am now able to say this. Such a project as the Frohman transaction we are now announcing was not conceivably possible two years ago. We are on the way.

"The new picture company brings to the screen the famous array of Charles Frohman successes and the Frohman players; also a corps of directors trained in and chosen from the fields of the highest attainment in Europe and America."

Augustus Thomas to Be Scenario Chief

Augustus Thomas, eminent dramatist, whose name is a part of the institution of the Charles Frohman Company, becomes an important factor in the new producing corporation. Mr. Thomas is the scenario chief and advisor to the picture producing interests of the Charles Frohman Company, standing there in the same relation that he has held so long with so much distinction in relation to the Frohman stage productions.

"It is the intention of the new concern to give the name of Charles Frohman the same high value in the motion picture field that it has had so long in the theater of the speaking stage," says the official Charles Frohman Company announcement.

"It was one of Mr. Frohman's principles, strictly adhered to all through his long managerial career, to deal fairly with the authors who wrote to him and to see to it that they were always promptly and well paid for their work. The new corporation will pursue the same policy with reference to the authors of the plays to be put into pictures. At regular intervals they will be given full and complete statements of the receipts upon which their royalties are based, just as they are when they write for the legitimate stage, and all payments to them will be made up with the promptness that Mr. Frohman made the rule of his office.

For the first time in the history of the film business the author will be given full complete weekly statement of the receipts upon which his royalty is based.

Work on the first of the Frohman-Mutual pictures will begin in New York about February 1. Announcement will be made later of the title of the play and the name of the star who is to appear.

It will be the policy of the picture concern to produce only the great successes of the Frohman offerings, presenting the stars of the original stage presentation and using the complete original casts in so far as it proves possible to re-engage the players in the supporting parts.

OPPOSE TAXATION

Many of Lawmakers of New York State Disagree That Industry Should Be Burdened With More Taxation

Taxation of motion pictures is being strongly opposed by some of the members of the legislature of Albany, New York. The appointing of a committee for the purpose of preparing some form of taxation for the motion picture industry has created considerable dissatisfaction, from the fact that the resolution was rushed through by means of a rapid roll call and a great number of the legislators did not realize the proposition was of such great importance, and were not given an opportunity of informing themselves of its real purpose before their votes were recorded in the affirmative.

The Republican leader assemblyman claims he was not familiar with the details of the measure, not having read the resolution. He intimated that the members voted upon the resolution before it had received the proper consideration. Many of the members realize the injustice and the effect it may have in imposing upon the exhibitors and producers of motion picture films regarding an additional tax.

Even now ten theaters are paying a heavy license fee and the corporations manufacturing films are also contributing to the state's revenue and claim that a further tax would prove excessive.

Some of the legislators declare the proposition to be nothing less than a hold-up affair and are opposed to further taxation of films. Members of the legislature have freely expressed the opinion that when the report of the motion picture investigation committee is filed, if found to contain any recommendations of obnoxious character in reference to further taxation, it will fail to receive the support of the majority of the members of both branches of the legislature.

Carnival and Ball for Brooklyn Exhibitors

The carnival and ball to be held under the auspices of the Associated Motion Picture Exhibitors of Brooklyn and Long Island on February 21 at Stauch's Palace, Coney Island, promises to be the biggest affair ever given by the motion picture showmen of Greater New York.

All branches of the industry will be represented, as well as a big public attendance expected, to make the festivity the greatest gathering of patrons, exhibitors, manufacturers, and photo players ever collected under one roof.

Beginning February 1, the Brooklyn Daily Eagle will conduct a voting contest to elect the most popular actor and actress to be crowned king and queen of the carnival.

The Brooklyn organization is to-day the largest local of the National League, comprising 110 theater owners in Brooklyn and Long Island. It has in addition enlisted the active support of 190 more exhibitors who are not as yet members of the league, but who have vouchsafed enthusiastic co-operation to make the grand carnival and ball the Brooklyn affair of the season. The proceeds of the entertainment will be used in a fund to fight the pending Sunday closing law also the proposed picture tax legislation.

One of the meritorious features decided on by the entertainment committee is the fact that an advertising program will not be issued. In doing this the Brooklyn organization is shattering all precedents as it has been the past custom to issue programs and then solicit advertising from film manufacturers and others in the trade. "Eat, dance and be merry" has been adopted as the slogan and all efforts of the organization are concentrated to make this slogan a reality.

Can Exhibitor Cut Films?

Maurice Tourner, the well known director, has called attention to a grievance in behalf of producers and more particularly directors. In a letter to Motography he questions the right of the exhibitor to tamper with a picture after he has contracted to show it. Part of the letter is as follows:

Has a showman the right to cut down a film for his own purpose and in order to play other things on a program with a time limit?

The making of a picture is no easy matter. The fierce light of criticism that concentrates upon a new production featuring a well-known star in this business makes it essential that the production shall be in every way as perfect as the intelligence of those responsible can make it.

The cutting of a picture in order to get it down to reasonable limits sometimes takes over two weeks. What takes us two months to construct, the energetic, unofficial censor at the theater destroys in probably two hours.

I do not, of course, intend to let the matter rest here nor am I alone in this matter, because as it is on the directors' shoulders that the blame of a failure usually falls, it is time that the responsibility for a fiasco was known to the public, and it is time that apparent inequalities and irregularities in a story were traced to their true source.

If we are to make the art of the motion pictures better from day to day, and if those of us who are in the producing side of the business are ever to attain the slightest measure of perfection, it can only be when it is rendered impossible for an exhibitor to take liberties with a story as it leaves the director's hands; and in other words, to put the exhibitor precisely on the same plane as the editor of a magazine who would never dare to touch so much as a comma in a story by Rudyard Kipling or Booth Tarkington. The public has a right to see the best of which a director is capable, but under no circumstances should the exhibitor stand as an obstacle between the public and the enjoyment of its art.

Chester B. Clapp has been added to the staff of Eugene B. Lewis, scenario editor at Universal City. Clapp for a time occupied the position of editor at the Pacific coast studios of the company. He has been associated with the Biograph, Fine Arts and Keystone companies.

Screenshine

By Mel Ody

IT seems like a shame that when your cash-box is full you can't heap it up a little.

But that's what got Exhibitor Perry of the St. Dennis Theater of Montreal into legal difficulties last week. His house holds 2,600 persons, when they are all sitting down. When Mr. Perry ran "The Fall of a Nation" there were a lot of folks who didn't care to sit down.

So he let a thousand more of them come into the St. Dennis and stand up, just to please them, according to officials. Then the authorities pinched him, and now "his name is Dennis."

The Saint doesn't seem to be working.

A DOUBLE PROXY

Mabel Taliaferro, the story goes, recently received a handsomely engraved invitation to her own wedding. At least, the name of the bride-to-be was Mabel Taliaferro, and she was to be married at Madill, Oklahoma, to a doctor, and to be "at home" at Sherman, Texas, after January 15. Miss Taliaferro was compelled to send her regrets, as she was busy in the final scenes of her latest story, "A Wife by Proxy."

WELL, SHE DIDN'T CARE

Here's the romantic manner in which Bob McKnight, of the Chicago Examiner announced the meeting of the Reel Fellows Club on January 12:

"Officers-elect of the Reel Fellows Club will be installed tonight in the headquarters over the Band Box Theater, where 'The Girl Who Did Not Care' lives."

MATINEE FILLS LOBBY WITH CASH.

Manager Moore, the prominent exhibitor of the Colonial, Tacoma, Washington, pulled off a stunt recently from which he hasn't yet fully recovered.

He gave a potato matinee—one tuber for admission and all to go to charity for those who had been unfortunate in the past year.

Somebody told Moore that Tacoma people were not generous; that they were cold, indifferent and selfish, so he had ten sacks only to hold his box office receipts.

Everything was ready. A Paramount feature was filled. The doors were thrown open. The organist was soulfully playing "My Boyhod Days Down on the Farm," while Moore was in his office lulled into a delightful reverie, when he heard a commotion below. He thought perhaps some patron with a big potato wanted change in smaller ones.

Rushing down, he found a surging crowd in front with a line a block long and potatoes coming in by singles, doubles, trios, pecks, bushels and wholesale.

The ten sacks were filled, the big closet under the stairway leading to the balcony was opened. In ten minutes the door couldn't be shut and the big white tubers were piled on the lobby floor.

When the matinee was over just thirty-one hundred pounds of big luscious Burbanks were eyeing their new quarters.

That evening and the next morning Moore's name was smeared all over the front pages of all the dailies, with column after column of the best kind of publicity any showman ever hankered after, and a hundred needy families gave thanks unto the exhibitor with the big idea.

"What the Picture Did for Me"

ACTUAL CRITICISM OF FILMS BY EXHIBITORS, FROM A BUSINESS STANDPOINT

(Editorial Note:—"The trade paper that can give the most accurate information about current features is the paper every exhibitor wants," said a prominent manager recently. In addition to its regular reviews, MOTOGRAPHY will each week hereafter print the actual unvarnished opinions of exhibitors on films they have run in their houses, with the idea of aiding other exhibitors in making up their programs. The theaters mentioned here are in Chicago, unless otherwise noted. Managers and bookers like to get various opinions concerning a feature before they run it. Upon request MOTOGRAPHY will gladly furnish the opinion of men who have run the feature in question. Give both titles and makers of pictures about which you inquire. Simply address, MOTOGRAPHY, Chicago.)

OLIVER TWIST, (Paramount) Marie Doro—"Credit is due Lasky for the beauty of a great many of the scenes contained in this production. The characters in the story are about perfect, and Marie Doro as Oliver Twist is very good. Hobart Bosworth as Bill Sykes is very good also. Tully Marshal as Fagan renders an excellent characterization. People who like Dickens' work will be especially well satisfied and will consider the picture a treat. People who are not familiar with Dickens' works will be pleased by the characters and settings."—Martin Saxe, Knickerbocker Theater.—Catering to the better classes.

THE VICTORIA CROSS, (Paramount) Lou Tellegen—"The story of this picture has to do with the Sepoy Rebellion of India, and people did not care for it. The picture as a whole is not a drawing card. In fact, it is a picture which will keep patrons away if they see posters in advance."—Martin Saxe, Knickerbocker Theater.—Catering to the better classes.

THE MAN WHO FORGOT, (World) Robert Warwick—"A good picture, one showing the regeneration of a man who rises from being a cocaine fiend and a drunkard to a national figure who successfully carries out a nation wide fight for prohibition. This picture will appeal to all people but booze-comedians and such people as are connected with the liquor industry in any way."—Martin Saxe, Knickerbocker Theater.—Catering to the better classes.

MARRIAGE A LA CARTE, (World) Clara Kimball Young—"A very pleasing picture. Miss Young's work satisfies. Picture considered better than her recent offerings. Considering the fact that the weather was bad, we did a good business with this picture. The picture is a re-issue, having made its initial appearance under the title of 'Marrying Money.' The picture satisfied the public. What more can you ask?"—Martin Saxe, Knickerbocker Theater.—Catering to the better classes.

THE TRAVELING SALESMAN, (Paramount) Frank McIntyre—"Although it is not as good as the stage play, this picture will make a hit with most any audience. It has a sense of humor which does not need to be served up to an audience with slap stick comedy. Comments on this picture from patrons were very favorable."—Martin Saxe, Knickerbocker Theater.—Catering to the better classes.

THE RIGHT DIRECTION, (Paramount) Vivian Martin—"The best Vivian Martin picture ever put out, which, however, is not meant to indicate that it is an exceptional picture. It will please the majority of audiences."—Martin Saxe, Knickerbocker Theater.—Catering to the better classes.

THE WITCHING HOUR, (Art-Dramas) C. Aubrey Smith—"People liked the picture. Mr. Smith's acting very good. Story rather vague, dealing with mental telepathy, not altogether convincing."—Martin Saxe, Knickerbocker Theater.—Catering to the better classes.

THE PRIMITIVE CALL, with Gladys Coburn, (Fox)—"A fair attraction, well photographed."—Harry Miller, Boston Theater.—Downtown house.

THE SLAVE MARKET, with Pauline Frederick, (Famous Players-Paramount)—"A clever picture and a good money-getter. Star is very clever, one of the very best."—M. J. Weil, Castle Theater.—Downtown house.

REDEEMING LOVE, with Kathlyn Williams, (Morosco-Paramount)—"Good of its kind but with rather too much of the religious element. Its box office value is good because Kathlyn Williams is popular. This is her first Morosco picture and interesting for that reason. I think she is going to do good work with this company. The picture is well directed."—M. J. Weil, Castle Theater.—Downtown theater.

THE AWAKENING OF HELEN RITCHIE, with Ethel Barrymore, (Metro)—"Went very well with our patrons. Ethel Barrymore is a good drawing card in our neighborhood."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater.—Catering to high class patronage.

THE COSSACK WHIP, with Viola Dana, (Edison)—"This is a great picture which went over very well."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater.—Catering to a high class patronage.

THE PIPER'S PRICE, with Dorothy Phillips, (Bluebird)—"A fair picture, liked fairly well."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater.—Catering to a high class patronage.

TRUTHFUL TULLIVER, with William S. Hart, (Triangle)—"The best Hart picture in a long time."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater.—Catering to a high class patronage.

WIFE BY PROXY, with Mabel Taliaferro, (Metro)—"A good picture for a neighborhood audience, but not for general trade. Mabel Taliaferro draws better with women than with men. The photography of this offering is only fair."—Harry Miller, Boston Theater.—Downtown house.

The Bitter Truth, with Virginia Pearson, (Fox)—"A very strong yet very clean picture in six reels. It features Miss Pearson as a young girl of the underworld and it is the best work she has done for some time, though Miss Pearson's work is always pleasing. She is one of the most versatile of players. The story contains a good moral. As a whole it is a first class picture for any locality."—Harry Miller, Boston Theater.—Downtown house.

The Bride of Hate, with Frank Keenan, (Triangle)—"Keenan is very good. There are several subtitles in the picture in regard to the negro race which may cause dissatisfaction in outlying houses in some locations. It ends with a good moral."—Harry Miller, Boston Theater.—Downtown house.

The Pipe of Discontent, (Triangle Comedy)—"One of the worst comedies I ever ran. If this is comedy, excuse me!"—Harry Miller, Boston Theater.—Downtown house.

Her New York, with Gladys Hulette, (Pathe)—"Another picture good for neighborhood houses. Miss Hulette is the type of star of Mary Miles Minter, June Caprice and Ella Hall, who are very popular on family programs. Not so good for transient downtown audiences."—Harry Miller, Boston Theater.—Downtown house.

The Man Who Forgot, with Robert Warwick, (World)—"Robert Warwick holds this up. As a whole, fair."—Harry Miller, Boston Theater.—Downtown house.

Hearst-Pathe Weekly No. 5—"As a whole, very good."—Harry Miller, Boston Theater.—Downtown theater.

The White Raven, with Ethel Barrymore, (Metro)—"One of the best pictures Miss Barrymore has appeared in. The photography is good. The star is good, though a trifle heavy to play certain roles."—Harry Miller, Boston Theater.—Downtown theater.

Selig-Tribune Newsweekly, January 13, (Selig)—"This news-weekly is one of the very best released. It is from one to five days ahead of any other I have seen, and gets everything worth while. This issue is the best of all."—Harry Miller, Boston Theater.—Downtown theater.

The Pride of the Clan, with Mary Pickford, (Artcraft)—"I reviewed this picture on its opening run and, although I had heard some uncomplimentary remarks about it, the only thing I could see wrong was in the music which accompanied it. Poor music will murder any picture. When I play this picture at my theater, the week of January 21, I am going to pay special attention to my music, and I expect a big week. Good music should put this picture over anywhere. It is a fine family picture, clean, wholesome and entertaining, without any unpleasant elements."—Harry Miller, Rose Theater.—Downtown house.

Hearts and Sparks, (Keystone)—"This is an unusually fine comedy which pleased the audience immensely."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater.—Catering to high class patronage.

The House Built Upon Sand, with Lillian Gish, (Triangle)—"Very good. Very well liked by the public."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater.—Catering to a high class patronage.

The Romantic Journey, (Pathe)—"Pretty good picture, of good box office value."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater.—Catering to a high class patronage.

War Brides, with Alla Nazimova, (Selznick-Pictures)—"A fine picture. Nazimova is surely a great actress. This went so well in my theater that I am repeating it next week. I had to call the police to handle the crowds when I first ran it. I have heard that in other parts of the city it did not go so well, but my people certainly liked it."—B. Perlmutter, New Strand Theater.—Catering to the middle class.

The Sunbeam, with Mabel Taliaferro, (Metro)—"I did not see this but my patrons said it is a very good play."—B. Perlmutter, New Strand Theater.—Catering to a middle class.

The Matrimaniac, with Douglas Fairbanks, (Triangle)—"A fine picture. We are always sure of good business when we run Fairbanks."—B. Perlmutter, New Strand Theater.—Catering to a middle class.

Miss George Washington, (Paramount) Marguerite Clark—"I think this one of the best things that Marguerite Clark ever did, and it is a great money getter."—Theo. Johnson, Isis Theater, Boise, Idaho.

The Heir to the Hoorah, (Paramount)—"Went big here. Will make a good return booking."—E. C. O'Keefe, Regent Theater, Billings, Montana.

Panthea, (Selznick-Pictures) Norma Talmadge—"Panthea is doing a tremendous business at this theater and is creating a great deal of satisfaction. In my opinion it is one of the most powerful dramatic stories I have seen in the last two or three years."—S. L. Rothapfel, Rialto Theater, New York City.

The Social Pirates, (Fox Comedy)—"This new two-reeler is a bird. It's the first comedy that I have seen for sometime that will give the Keystones a run for the money. Photography excellent, action in first reel a little slow. The second reel closes with a wonderful water scene climax. Received much favorable comment."—F. W. Burke, Strand Theater, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

A Gamble in Souls, (Triangle)—"One of the best five-reel dramas released by Triangle for some time. Story good, action a trifle slow, but the story contains wonderful photography and scenic effects throughout. My patrons liked it. Proved to be a fair drawing card for Sunday show."—F. W. Burke, Strand Theater, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

THREE OF MANY, with Clara Williams, (Triangle) —"A fine picture. The audience liked it and commented favorably."—B. Perlmutter, New Strand Theater.—Middle class audiences.

THE HOUSE BUILT UPON SAND, with Lillian Gish, (Triangle)—"Seemed to entertain the patrons well. It is a good production."—B. Perlmutter, New Strand Theater.—Middle class audiences.

ANTON THE TERRIBLE, (Paramount)—"This was not well received by my patrons. I don't think the story is strong enough. I would not call the offering a good one." —B. Perlmutter, New Strand Theater.—Middle class audiences.

THE FEMALE OF THE SPECIES, with Dorothy Dalton, Howard Hickman and Enid Markey, (Triangle)—"Dorothy Dalton's work is especially fine in this, and the acting of the whole play is good. It is a good offering and my patrons liked it."—B. Perlmutter, New Strand Theater.—Middle class audiences.

THE LASH, with Blanche Sweet, (Lasky-Paramount) —"An excellent production which was much appreciated by my patrons."—B. Perlmutter, New Strand Theater. —Middle class audiences.

THE PEARL OF PARADISE, (Mutual), with Margarita Fischer—"This is some picture. It made a great hit with our patrons. Although we have a very large house and keen opposition the house was filled to the doors the night we showed it."—L. T. Gaines, Globe, Arizona.

THE PERILS OF OUR GIRL REPORTERS, (Mutual), Helen Greene—"Our first showing of this series was the biggest opening ever seen for a series or serial in Buffalo. It was given a royal greeting and at times waves of applause seemed to rock the house. This will please any audience."—Jules Michaels, Academy Theater, Buffalo, N. Y.

THE CHILDREN OF THE FUED, (Triangle)—"Starring Dorothy Gish, this Triangle Fine Arts production is nothing out of the ordinary. Business poor on this show."—F. W. Burke, Strand Theater, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

THE MARRIAGE BOND—"Starring the man of many wives, Nat Goodwin, this picture proved to be above the average feature. Cast good, story fair and photography very good."—F. W. Burke, Strand Theater, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

THE OCEAN WAIF, (International)—"A very pleasing picture. Starring Carlyle Blackwell, the production makes a great hit with the women. Supporting cast good throughout. Business just fair."—F. W. Burke, Strand Theater, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

Classy Exchange Men's Party

A New Year's party was given all the salesmen and heads of departments by R. C. Cropper, district manager of Universal exchanges in the mid-west territory, and manager of the Kansas City exchange.

The party began at the Gaiety Theater and then transferred itself to the Hotel Edwards' grill. A young lady, dressed entirely in purple, wearing a purple mask, descended the stairs into the grill room, with the spotlight thrown on the stairway. The young lady gave each of the guests a purple mask as a souvenir.

New Jersey Exhibitors' Ball

The first annual ball of the Exhibitors' League of New Jersey will be held in Newark February first. Many screen stars have accepted the invitation to attend, among whom are:

Anita Stewart, who will lead the grand march with a personage whose name will be announced later.

Miss Florence LaBadie, the Thanhouser star, will judge the contest of young ladies to enter films. Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, Metro comedy stars, have engaged a box, and will hold receptions throughout the evening. Marguerite Courtot, of Famous Players, will act as chair lady of the ladies reception committee.

Among the others who have promised to be present are:

Dorothy Green, International-Pathe star; Violet Mersereau, and her special Universal Company; Norma Talmadge; little Madge Evans, child artist of the World Features; Pearl White, Pathe; Carlyle Blackwell, Ralph Kellard, Earle Williams, E. K. Lincoln, and Paul Panzer.

Billy Quirk, president of the New York Screen Club, says that he is going to bring a big delegation of screen club boys with him.

Buffalo Bill Rides No More

"What time does the big show begin?"

These were Buffalo Bill's last words. He died at the home of his sister in Denver on January 10. At the time his old time "pardner," Johnny Baker, was speeding across the continent from Buffalo in a vain effort to bid farewell to the noted scout, fighter and showman.

Colonel Cody was 72 years old. With his noted "wild west" show and circus he had appeared in every city and town in America and before the royalties of Europe. For the past few years preceding his death he had made his home in Chicago, where he was a familiar figure. The town of Cody, near one entrance to Yellowstone Park, will carry his name down to history.

Buffalo Bill got his nick-name from the time when he contracted to supply a pioneer western railroad construction company with fresh buffalo meat.

Censorship in New Zealand

By a recent order in council relating to the censorship of cinematograph films in New Zealand, all films must be submitted to the censor at his office in Wellington, and application for approval must be made in a prescribed form, according to Commerce Reports. Respecting imported films the censor must be informed of (1) the title of the film, (2) the name of the manufacturer, (3) the length of the film, in feet, and (4) the date of importation. Appeal from a decision of the censor may be made to a board of appeals.

A photographic reproduction of the censor's certificate of approval will be attached to a film on payment of $1.20. The fees for examination of films are $1.20 for the first 1,000 feet and 60 cents for every additional 500 feet or part thereof; and for appeals, $2.45 for every 1,000 feet of film or part thereof, with a minimum of $7.35 for any one film.

FAIRBANKS STATES HIS CASE

Griffith's Withdrawal From Triangle Freed the Star From His Engagement with Majestic by Terms of His Contract

In regard to his break with the Triangle Company, Douglas Fairbanks issues the following announcement in which he emphasized the statement that the Majestic Company and not he violated the contract. He says:

In my contract with the Majestic Motion Picture Company there was inserted the following provision:

"Said corporation agrees that the motion picture or pictures that said Mr. Fairbanks is to render services in the making shall be supervised by Mr. David Griffith, general manager and chief director of said corporation, and in the event of said Mr. Griffith severing his connection with the company, or discontinuing the active management of the same, the said Mr. Fairbanks may at his option withdraw from the employ of said corporation, but said action on the part of said Mr. Fairbanks shall not prejudice his right to said compensation already earned by said Mr. Fairbanks. . . . Said corporation shall give or cause to be given the name of Douglas Fairbanks chief prominence and by 'chief prominence' is meant that his name shall appear in larger type than any other part of the subject matter in which his name appears on all positive films, and in all advertising and literature used in connection with the motion pictures in which he appears, and shall not specially feature any other person in the cast representing any motion picture in which Mr. Fairbanks appears except with Mr. Fairbank's written consent first had and obtained."

Mr. Fairbanks further stated that he had especially desired the benefit of the ability and judgment of Mr. Griffith as supervisor of the pictures he appeared in. Also, at the time of making the contract, he said the Triangle Film Corporation was being promoted largely upon the names of Mr. Griffith, Thomas Ince and Mack Sennett. Fairbanks believed that the clause calling for Griffith's supervision would protect him in case of financial disaster, for then Griffith would cease to be active in the making of its pictures and that would enable the star to withdraw from the enterprise.

When Griffith ceased to devote his time to supervision in the studio, Fairbanks made a vain effort to ascertain the true status of the director with the company. When he learned that Griffith has virtually severed his connection with the Triangle Company, Fairbanks declared his contract void. Another clause of the contract which Fairbanks declares has been continually violated is the advertising of actresses playing with him and the effort made by the company to establish a value to their names by connecting them with his, without his written consent.

Fairbanks' latest picture, "The Americano," was completed at Hollywood. Several weeks ago he came to New York with Director John Emerson and a company of Fine Arts players, but had not begun a picture.

Fairbanks has as yet made no announcement regarding his plans for future work. Unconfirmed news from New York states that he has joined Artcraft.

The Fire Prevention Bulletin which the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry published recently, has been given an appreciative reception on all sides. It has been copied and commented upon editorially in Fire Protection and other publications of the sort. Daily newspapers have been discussing it editorially. In addition, trade journals and the house organs of the great distributors of films have taken it up.

EXHIBITOR FIRST

Paramount Uses Unusual and Efficient Scheme to Keep in Direct Touch with Demand from Exhibitors and Public

Helping the exhibitor is the important factor in the motion picture industry and Paramount has taken as its watchword, "Exhibitor First." With that motto it is not to be intimated that the public will be forgotten for a single instant.

The Paramount system is to please the theater-going public by a system of criticisms on each and every picture from the Paramount exhibitors all over the country, as well as the audiences. It all began at the inception of Paramount, when it was an absolute requisite to make a success of a distributing organization, and to know precisely what pictures the public wants most to see. It was necessary to know why one theater would be crowded while another had many empty seats. Also different pictures will be required in the first run theaters to what was desirable in the community houses.

It is necessary to know to a precise degree of accuracy, what the public wants. Paramount analyzed the situation as follows:

Paramount has twenty-two exchanges or distributing points throughout the United States. Each serves from two hundred to three hundred and fifty theaters. With each film that is sent from the exchange there goes with it a "criticism blank," which the exhibitor must fill out, and which, when they are returned to Paramount's main office in New York City, gives the experience of each particular theater with each particular production. Either it did good business, fair business or bad business; conditions unavoidable taken into account. Either the people were enthusiastic about it or they were luke warm about it, or else they didn't like it at all. It also tells the manager's personal opinion.

Thousands of these blanks are returned each day. After a picture has been shown throughout the country for a month hundreds of return blanks are recorded on that picture and are classified in percentages to show exactly how the feature stood in the judgment of the public. It shows also how the star registered in personal popularity on the screen. Productions that fall under a certain mark of public approval are considered as distinct warnings. Stars who are in such productions are apt to go by the discard.

This analytical system has proved on some occasions that supposedly popular plays and players have been unpopular, and on the contrary, players who have never been reckoned on have jumped into the high salary class.

"Marcel's Birthday Present," in five reels, practically has been completed at Universal City with Rupert Julian and Louise Lovely.

The publicity and advertising departments of the David Horsley interests are now in charge of Harry H. Poppe.

Mr. Poppe was with Mr. Horsley before in the same capacity. Recently he was associated with Chester Beecroft in the New York office of the American Film Company.

What Theater Men Are Doing

AN OPEN FORUM

This is a department of, by and for exhibitors. We want YOU represented here. Other managers and proprietors of picture theaters want to hear YOUR experiences, your opinions and your advice. Write to this department telling us your story, how you started, how you grew and all about your theater and how you manage it. Mention your advertising methods and your lobby displays. If possible send in photographs of yourself and your house. Address, The Forum MOTOGRAPHY, Chicago.

Exhibitors' Good Resolutions

DID you make any New Year's resolutions?

Grace Wyndham Vail, director of publicity in the Southern Paramount Pictures Company of Atlanta, distributors of Paramount Pictures in that vicinity, asked the exhibitors of that district to make ten New Year's resolutions. In getting her request across to the exhibitors she wrote each of them a story, and she has been congratulated upon it by hundreds of them since the issuance. Her story was to this effect:

He was an exhibitor. Good to look at, frequent to smile, believing still in man's preference to be right,—it was a New Year of greater accomplishment than had even been his last, that stretched out before him.

His eyes rested for a moment on hurrying crowds of folks, as they passed and re-passed on the opposite side of the street. From his office window he had always this panorama of humanity before him.

Because he was a successful exhibitor he saw in this passing many a tragedy, many a comedy—but rarely he spoke of such.

His mind was on the year born the night before,—365 days that were to be lived and loved and worked. And finally "writing came upon the wall"—a writing that could only be deciphered by one who had lived and learned and kept up in the front ranks with this exhibitor.

And here are the thoughts of this modern exhibitor:

RESOLVED—

1. To give my theater a thorough overhauling until it shines and glows with cleanliness, sanitation, and comfort, and to shower its every nook and corner daily with the exhilarating essence of Public Service and Courts.
2. To clean out from the lobby of my house photographs of former stars no longer appearing there, and to give space to a few well selected frames and pictures.
3. To make my box office comfortable for the ticket-seller, that there may be no reason of my making for a lack of good nature there.
4. To present to attaches clean uniforms, from doorman to porter.
5. To give particular care to the music of my house—that it may be fitting, properly attuned, and not led astray by a too vigorous drummer.
6. To put into the lighting of my theater wisdom that shows how practicability and beauty—to say nothing of feminine becomingness—may be combined.
7. To put into my stage setting a dignity, simplicity and Puritanic charm that shall blend into any special feature decoration I may want to give to a special screen feature.
8. To put into practice a belief that God's free fresh air is sweeter balm to lungs and nostrils than any combination of scents ever conceived by perfumer, foreign or native.
9. To imperson in my operators and machines my highest standard of perfect workmanship.
10. To play the best pictures for every ounce of fine timber, big humanity, exquisite romance, jolly, kind humor, wonder soundness and glorious decency.

A Modest Little House in a Modest Little Town

The Princess Theater is located in the hustling little city of LeRoy, 1,750 population, 16 miles east of Bloomington, Illinois. Van Atta and West are the proprietors.

The building is 92 feet by 38 feet, constructed of brick, concrete and steel. It is one story in height, dark colored mat face brick, with Green River Kentucky stone trimming, making a very pleasing and ornamental exterior.

The lobby entrance has two pairs of heavy glazed doors, opening into a lobby 15 feet wide by 28 feet long, with a 16-foot ceiling. The floor is reinforced concrete, laid off in 12-inch squares. The plastered walls of the lobby are done in raised panels, affording an excellent opportunity for the highly artistic decorating, in which the basic color is different shades of tan, overlaid with a Tiffany glaze, in a skillful combination of lavender, old rose, and very light green effects in the borders and figures.

Leaving the lobby and going into the auditorium, one passes through glass paneled doors (of which there are two pairs) through a foyer, the inside wall of which, while providing ample entrance and exit space, prevents direct light from striking the screen.

The auditorium, a room 65 feet long by 36 feet wide, has a sloping floor of solid concrete, and is unobstructed by posts or supports, the roof weight being supported by massive steel I beams, which are done in an artistic manner in the ceiling decoration.

Near the screen end of the room on each side are double exit doors, equipped with panic bolts or safety locking appliances, which while securely locking the doors from without, are easily opened by a small child from within.

A feature of the auditorium to which great attention was paid is the ventilating system. An ample supply of pure outside air is secured by being brought in through a screened opening on each side of the building, through fresh air ducts to cemented tunnels next to the outside walls, under the cement floor, with an opening under each steam radiator, there being two of these on each side of the room. Thus warming the fresh air before it enters the room. The used air is drawn off through four register openings at the screen end of the room into shafts connecting with a large ventilator in the roof, also a large ventilator is located in the center of the ceiling, with damper doors to same to carry off the excess heat in warm weather.

The auditorium is seated with 350 comfortable opera chairs, with a spacious aisle on each side of the center tier of seats.

The lighting is the semi-indirect system, eight large bowls with a late pattern, very ornamental, brass red fixture, for bright lighting, and at the rear of the room, while the picture is on the screen, two of the fixtures have blue lights, which shed a soft light, being of great assistance to patrons in finding seats, as well as to give a most beautiful effect. All wiring in the building is carried in conduits, there being 15 circuits, all centering in a fuse box located in the operating room.

The booth is equipped with two Powers late model projecting machines, motor driven and is of fire-proof construction, with reinforced cement floor, and ceiling, with solid brick walls, and has a large skylight and ventilator.

The opening program was a Paramount picture—Fannie Ward in "Tennessee's Pardner"—and despite the fact that rain poured down all day and evening, it was necessary to give three shows to accommodate the people who wished to see the initial performance in the new house.

The managers have been paid many compliments on the building and believe that it will compare favorably with the better class of houses now being devoted exclusively to high-class photoplays.

Staging Pictures

The Paramount-Empress Theater, Salt Lake City, Utah, makes a practice of staging Paramount Pictures and for Christmas considerable ingenuity on the part of the electrician and others connected with the theater was brought into play. On the Saturday preceding Christmas the crowds of youngsters who make the 10:15 special matinee such an institution every Saturday were treated to a surprise.

When the house was darkened prior to showing "The Christmas Carol" and other features on the bill, the drapes were parted and the youngsters got a glimpse of the moon shining over the top of a snow-laden tree outside. Then variously colored lights slowly dawned exposing a Christmas tree appropriately decorated and when all stage lights finally showed the stage set with an interior, glowing fire-place with stuffed stocking hanging from the mantel, rocking horses and toys distributed around and a child peacefully sleeping in its crib, the youngsters gave one long-drawn gasp and broke into applause.

It was a complete surprise. Again slowly the lights dimmed out and across the Christmas tree was projected "A Merry Christmas." As though the children had rehearsed it they one and all with one voice yelled spontaneously "the same to you."

Manager George E. Carpenter and the house force were tickled to death with the success of the surprise and when the afternoon papers came out both printed a half column story on the stunt.

The front of the house was appropriately decorated with evergreens, Christmas trees, bells and holly wreaths. These decorations and stunts were held for one week until the close of the holidays on New Year's.

It happened that the school teachers of Utah and Southern Idaho were holding their annual convention in Salt Lake and a large number of teachers and county superintendents attended the children's matinee at the Paramount-Empress with the object in view of starting the same idea in their home town.

The subject of better motion pictures for young folks was one of the topics discussed at the convention and a member of the Home and School League of Salt Lake addressed the convention at length on the question going into detail of how the movement started in Salt Lake and how the Paramount-Empress co-operated with the committee in putting the proposition over.

Harking back to the house decorations and stage setting, they were distinctly timely not only on account of the season of the year but due to the fact that "The Traveling Salesman" and "Snow White" were booked for the holidays.

Big New House for New York

New York is soon to have a new $400,000 motion picture theater. It will be built at Forty-ninth street and Broadway. It will have a marble front, no store fronts, offices or outside distractions. Russell B. Smith, civil engineer, recently stated that the new theater will be constructed under the personal supervision of Robert E. Hall, the man who built the Rialto, a playhouse regarded as one of the most perfect in the world.

The new Broadway playhouse is to be on the site now known as 1614-20, just north of Forty-ninth street on the east side of the thoroughfare. The deal was consummated when the Barney Estate Company, 1620 Broadway, lessees, represented by Attorneys O'Brien, Boardman, Harper & Fox, executed a long lease for the uses of the new playhouse.

The new Broadway theater is to be called the Triumph, and is to be specially devoted to motion pictures, although it will be built in a way to house and project plays of all size and importance. The Triumph Theater is to be fully equipped with loft, stage space and furnishment for the most extensive dramatic productions, although it is to commence activities as a motion picture house.

The new Triumph, as designed and contracted for, is to be the most perfect example of theater architecture and construction in the world. The work of building it will commence not later than April 1, and the structure will be completed by late summer or early autumn of this year. Notice has been served on the present tenants of the premises who will presently vacate, and the old buildings at this Broadway corner will be razed at once to make way for the new building.

With the consummation of the deal there came scores of bids from managers who realized the importance of the enterprise.

Pending the completion of their new offices, Sherman-Elliott Company of New York are now temporarily located at 218 West Forty-second street, second floor; Telephone, Bryant 4922.

"Split Reel" Notes for Theater Men

HOW OTHERS ARE STEERING THE SHIP

DO you ever give away seats on Sunday? Manager Weil, of the Castle, a classy downtown house in Chicago, running Marguerite Clark in "Snow White" recently, advertised, "Free seats for children between 10 A. M. and 1 P. M. on Sunday."

The New York lodge of the Moving Picture Operators' Union held its fourth annual ball on Sunday, January 14, at the Central Opera House, East Sixty-seventh street.

F. L. Cassel, formerly an exhibitor of Red Cloud, Nebraska, recently disposed of his interests there, and has joined the traveling staff of the V. L. S. E. exchange in Kansas City.

The Spooner Theater, in the Bronx, New York, which a short time ago abandoned pictures to produce new speaking plays, has after one week returned to its former policy of Triangle pictures.

The largest vaudeville house in Chicago, the Majestic, is going to run a motion picture serial, International's "Patria," the preparedness story, starring Mrs. Vernon Castle and released through the Pathe exchanges.

The management of the Strand Theater of New York announces that it has signed a contract with the Essanay Film Company whereby the Max Linder comedies will be presented at the Strand, on exclusive release dates.

Through the courtesy of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, three thousand orphans of Minneapolis were given an invitation performance of "Snow White" Christmas day. Similar performances were given in other cities.

Twenty newsboys were the guests of Frank Heller, manager of the Starland and Meridian theaters of Anderson, Indiana, at the matinee performance at the Starland a couple of weeks ago. The boys attended in a bunch and it was good publicity.

By a governmental decree, all places of amusement in France must close one day each week. This is in line with the general precautionary measure taken by the authorities to lessen the use of electric lighting, on account of the present shortage of coal.

Milwaukee's newest motion picture theater, "The White House," was opened December 18, playing to capacity business. The seating capacity of the house is 2,000. A seven-piece orchestra and a pipe organ furnish the music program. O. L. Meister is the manager of the theater.

The program of the Strand Theater, New York City, last week was headed by "Great Expectations," a play adapted from Charles Dickens' book of the same name. It was produced by Famous Players and features Louise Huff and Jack Pickford. The "German Official War Pictures" were also on the bill.

A specially designed Paramount bookmark has been distributed throughout the United States recently through the Paramount exchanges. These marks have been given to book dealers and libraries by Paramount exhibitors and have become an important means of publicity in many sections.

Here's an exhibitor that is going to conduct a house to take care of his "hold-outs." Herman Zander, proprietor of the Majestic Theater at Rhinelander, Wisconsin, has leased the Cozy Theater, and will operate it on such nights each week that the Majestic is unable to seat those desiring admission.

Walter S. Merrill took possession of the Stevens Opera House of Booneville, Missouri, on January 1, changing the name of the theater to the Lyric, and although not making any radical change from its former policy, has inaugurated a live publicity and advertising campaign for the theater.

The Strand Theater, Louisville, Ky., formerly the Masonic, has passed under control of the B. F. Keith circuit, making the third playhouse in Louisville for the Keith interests, the others being the National, where vaudeville holds the boards, and the Mary Anderson, where high-class pictures are shown.

Even though it portrays conditions which the commissioners are trying to eliminate, the Cook County (Chicago) Commissioners have made resolutions proclaiming "Intolerance," now running to big crowds at the Colonial, a production of merit. Word had come to them that the film "libelously reflected on the public charities."

The Screen Club of Kansas City entertained sixty-five couples at a New Year's celebration in their club rooms. An orchestra played throughout the entire evening, and there was dancing. A high class vaudeville entertainment was provided by the program committee, and souvenirs were distributed by the various exchanges.

Portland, Oregon, enjoyed quite an auspicious "first night" when the newly remodeled James Broadway Theater was opened as a moving picture house on December 24. The theater was packed and the audience included practically all of the prominent people in the city. "Idle Wives" was the initial film offering and it met with success.

The new Victoria Theater is to be erected in Pittsburgh, on Center avenue. The Enterprise Amusement Company is erecting it and it will be one of the finest theaters in that part of Pittsburgh. The seating capacity will be 1,000. The new Victoria will be one of a chain of five theaters, operated by the Enterprise Amusement Company.

Kurtz Brothers of Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, are planning a new opera house. The new building will be on Broad street, having a frontage of 100 feet and a depth of 190 feet, leaving proper room for exits on either side. The interior decorations will be unusually attractive, with the most modern electrical fixtures, and have a seating capacity of 2,000 persons.

The management of the Casino Theater of Des Moines, Iowa, have secured a lease, for a term of years, on the Majestic Theater, and will show only the better photoplay attractions. The Majestic was closed at the beginning of the summer months and reopened December 24 by its owners, Elbert and Getshell. The Majestic is one of the finest motion picture houses in Des Moines.

Exhibitors of Baltimore are heading a movement to reorganize the Maryland Branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League. The third meeting held recently took place January 7 to adopt a constitution and by-laws and select permanent officers. The temporary officers were Louis Schlichter, chairman; Frank A. Hornig, treasurer, and Thomas Goldberg, secretary.

The bonus checks which were awarded to the employes of the Strand Theater as a Christmas gift were apportioned according to the amount of their yearly salary. All employes receiving $2,000 a year or less received 10 per cent of their annual salaries, and those earning over that amount were given 5 per cent of their yearly stipend. There were 116 employes to receive these gifts.

How would you like to see a fifteen-cent piece in circulation—you picture men who charge that amount for admission to your house? President Freuler of the Mutual Film Corporation advocates the coinage of such a coin and Tom Furniss, a prominent exhibitor of Duluth, seconds the motion. Someone has suggested that "E Pluribus Film" be the inscription on the new piece of money.

The New York license bureau is said to be watching certain manufacturers whose productions are, as a rule, more innocuous than harmful, but often give the public the wrong impression through the use of suggestive titles. The moment these producers make a false move it is reported the bureau will move more swiftly than it has hitherto, because of the activities of the city's numerous reform organizations.

A six-cent admission price is being charged by the Woodward Theater Company of Detroit, which controls the Comique, La Salle and Rosebud theaters in that city. Not being ready to raise their admission price from five to ten cents, General Manager Bert Williams tried the unusual price, which makes little difference to the patrons but a big difference in the net receipts at the box office.

Five hundred grade school pupils attended the song fest and motion picture show in the Oskaloosa, Iowa, high school assembly one afternoon. The five-reel film production of George Barr McCutcheon's famous narrative, "Nedra," was the feature of the program. This was followed by a one-reel comedy, "Lou and Heine, Caught in a Jam." The show was repeated at night for high school students.

The music stands in the orchestra pit at the Rialto of New York have been equipped with a new type of lamp which illumines the music without casting light in any other direction. The pictures on the screen and the fine color effects in the scenic panels of the collonade may now be seen at their full value by all spectators, including those in the few seats formerly touched at times by distracting beams of light from the music racks.

At a meeting of the Board of Censorship for Children's Motion Pictures, held recently in the assembly room of the main library at Louisville, Kentucky, a letter from the Edison Company was read, stating that hereafter an advance of children's pictures will be arranged for the Louisville board. Such films as the board selects will then be given at the Saturday morning picture shows at the Mary Anderson Theater.

E. W. Griswold, manager of the Savoy Theater, Syracuse, New York, has taken practically the last step in artistic theater decoration. In connection with his floral decorations in the theater, he has installed numerous birds whose singing can be heard at most all times. The carrying out of this plan of decoration, creating an out-door effect, has been taken up by Syracuse as a decided novelty and has attracted considerable attention.

A new motion picture theater on the fringe of the most congested part of Boston's slums is to be erected as an experiment which will be watched with interest. For years overtures have been made at the City Hall for the erection of such buildings in the North End, but all were turned down until the present West End enterprise was projected and passed upon by the mayor. A group of men organized as the Lancaster Trust are responsible for the experiment.

"The Crisis," the Selig feature, rights for which were bought by the Sherman-Elliott Company for the entire United States and Canada, received its first public showing before a large and enthusiastic audience on Christmas eve at the Lyric Theater, Minneapolis, Minnesota, the home city of the Sherman-Elliott Company. "The Crisis" is doing a big business at the Lyric and is booked for an indefinite run.

A parade of the Spanish-American War Veterans' Sons' Drum and Bugle Corps was the unusual "stunt" which called attention to the opening of "Pearl of the Army" at the Hippodrome Theater, Portland, Oregon. The parade, which was suggested by W. W. Kofeldt, cashier of Pathe's Portland office, caused lively interest in the city, got big publicity in the newspapers and helped to bring crowded houses to the theater showing this newest Pearl White serial.

Norma Talmadge appeared at the Rialto Theater, New York City, recently in "Panthea," her first Selznick production. Hugo Reisenfeld, director of the Rialto orchestra, intensified the appeal of the picture throughout by a rendition of the ballet suite from "The Queen of Sheba." A violinist of great merit, Miss Helen Jeffrey, also played. Others on the program were Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, in "The Pest," studies of lion cubs, in color, and the "Literary Digest of the Screen."

"Professional matinees," an old custom in legitimate houses, are to be introduced into the Studebaker Theater, Chicago, where "A Daughter of the Gods," the Fox-Kellermann spectacle, is running. Among the companies who have been invited to attend matinees on Mondays, Tuesdays, Thursdays and Fridays are Ziegfeld "Follies," Al Jolson's "Robinson Crusoe, Jr.," "Fair and Warmer," "Major Pendenis," "Hit the Trail Holliday," "The Boomerang," and "Mile-a-Minute Kendall."

Exhibitors in the vicinity of Minot, N. D., met recently in that city to discuss the Sunday closing law, enforced in North Dakota. A committee was appointed, with H. L. Hartman of Mandan chairman, to get in touch with the representatives of the various districts and house committees. A committee under the leadership of J. Walker McGuiness, of Williston, was appointed to arrange for the co-operation of all the exhibitors in the state with the present organization. J. Walker McGuiness of Williston was made chairman.

The "catch-line," "Simplex Makes Projection Spell Perfection," won for Al. G. Wells, manager of the Bijou Theater, Minneapolis, Minn., the first prize in a "catch-line" contest conducted recently by the Theater Equipment Co., of that city. P. Poggenpohl, manager of the Empress Theater, Gordon, Nebr., and J. C. Hemberger, operator at the Princess Theater, St. Cloud, Minn., won the second and third prizes. Fifty dollars in gold was given away, twenty-five for the first prize, fifteen for second and ten for the third.

Superintendent Warner, of the high school at The Dalles, Oregon, recently allowed his students to put on a regular photoplay. He presented a prize to the author of the best story submitted and chose his actors from school talent. The cost of producing such a photoplay naturally varies with the different conditions that are encountered, but all the essentials should be provided at a cost somewhere between $1.25 and $3 per foot. This works out at a cost of from $1,250 to $3,000 for producing the negative of a one-reel subject.

The management of the Eau Claire (Wisconsin) Theater Company showed their patriotism to the boys of Company E and to the Eau Claire people by offering their theater houses as a place of refuge, until the troop train from Mexico pulled in. Many of the vast crowd tired of the long vigil and returned to their homes but over 2,000 stuck it out and welcomed the troops. Just before the train pulled in, the Orpheum and O Klare theaters were packed. On the stage at the Orpheum Theater the Wisconsin State Band played several musical selections while the audience sang and gave cheers.

A novel method of stimulating interest in "The Truant Soul," the Essanay Super-Feature, released through Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay, was adopted by the Empire Theater, the Bronx, New York; Sidney Cohen, manager. A slide was prepared with the following sentence: "Your doctor ought to see this. It is to your interest to give us his name and we will invite him." The result was that hundreds of names of physicians in Greater New York were left at the box office and Mr. Cohen was particular to see that each one received an invitation to witness "The Truant Soul." Many physicians who accepted the invitation declared that the picture carried with it a great moral lesson.

Connecticut is another state in which exhibitors have a Sunday closing law to fight. Throughout the state, motion picture theater owners are combining in a movement to abolish the "blue" laws which forbid Sunday pictures. Among other weapons they have the Connecticut Liberal Sunday Laws State Journal, a publication formed to record the exhibitors' fight from the beginning of 1917 until a victory is won. Senator Michael J. Quinn heads a committee to further the interests of exhibitors in the state congress. In this state, picture theaters are allowed to run on Sundays only in some of the large cities. In the smaller towns Sunday shows are strictly prohibited.

A clever advertising scheme by which exhibitors in small towns may build up a clientele among the surrounding rural districts was worked out by the Widenor Brothers of Belvidere, a New Jersey town of 1,800 inhabitants. This was done through co-operation with the local weekly newspaper. In addition to a regular advertisement of the house, synopses of the current features were run and marked copies, about one hundred each week, were mailed to a list of automobile owners in the surrounding territory, non-subscribers to the paper. The result was that the farmers both came to the show and became subscribers to the newspaper, which pleased both exhibitor and editor.

The Jones, Linick and Schaefer circuit of Chicago theaters announces a complete shift of managers at the opening of their new vaudeville theater, the Rialto, January 8. Harry Earl, present manager of the La Salle, will manage the new house, assisted by William Rosenblum, for the past three years assistant manager of the McVicker Theater. Louis J. Jones will remain manager of the Studebaker and Lyric theaters and will also act as treasurer of the new Rialto. Norman E. Field will continue as manager of the Colonial Theater and assume temporarily the charge of the La Salle, assisted by Mike Simons, his assistant at the Colonial. Benjamin Anderson, assistant manager of the Studebaker, becomes assistant to John G. Burch of McVicker's. Chester Amberg, manager of the Willard Theater in its vaudeville days under this management, becomes assistant manager of the Studebaker.

Lucas to Star in "Orpheus"

Scenario rights to "Orpheus," a story by Samuel Hopkins Adams, recently published in Collier's Weekly, have been purchased by the Triangle-Fine Arts studio for picturization under the direction of Wilfred Lucas and Tod Browning. Lucas will play the star role.

Lucas has not yet selected his cast but it is probable that Carmel Myers will be promoted to a leading lady and will support the star. Work on the production will be started as soon as "Jim Bludso," is completed.

The story has unusually dramatic screen possibilities and the transformation of it into scenario form will be supervised by Lucas himself. He was struck by the unusual plot and persuaded the studio management to secure the film rights without delay.

"Orpheus" is one of the "Our Square" series. It is threaded with pathos, romance and tragedy, combining to make strong heart interest and dramatic effect.

Following her success in the screen adaptation of the Grimm fairy tale "Snow White," Marguerite Clark will star in an adaptation of the late Molly Elliot Sewell's play "The Fortunes of Fifi," which will be released by the Famous Players through the Paramount Pictures Corporation in February.

Big Exhibitors' Plan

Live Theater Men of Five Middle Western States Combine to Rent Pictures on Efficient Co-operative Arrangement

A co-operative association has been formed among the exhibitors of Missouri, Kansas, Oklahoma, Iowa and Nebraska for the purpose of booking feature productions at less cost than they can be booked through the regular exchanges located in that section of the country.

The association, called the United Theaters Company, has opened a Kansas City branch, under the management of Ted L. Morse. The list of membership in the new organization includes a large number of exhibitors in all five states, and a majority of the theater owners in Missouri and Kansas, among them the best houses in Kansas City.

The United Theaters Company will buy outright feature productions from the producers when these productions are judged suitable to that section. This will check the efforts of exchanges to force upon exhibitors features at extremely high rentals which he must show at a loss.

By buying the feature productions from the producers outright and booking them through the membership houses of the booking circuit of this company, the exhibitors are thus able to eliminate the cost of the overhead expense which the exchanges must charge for, the cost of exploitation and rental of features. A more careful selection of features can also be made, with the needs of this particular section in mind. An effort will be made not to antagonize the exchanges. The object is merely to remedy an evil in the present distributing methods which seems unfair to the exhibitors.

Exhibitors Oppose Unclean Pictures

The Exhibitors' Corporation of the Northwest held its last meeting at the Bijou Theater at Minneapolis, and it was well attended.

Mr. Rubin, of Rubin and Finklestein, in a letter to the association assured the exhibitors that Rubin and Finkelstein would assist the organization in the future matter of refusing to pay advance deposits.

The vice-president of the South Dakota state organization inquired in a letter as to the attitude the organization has assumed against objectionable pictures.

The association went on record as being opposed to pictures of that kind.

Committees appointed some time ago were changed. Mr. Hitchcock was appointed chairman of the public ball committee, in place of Mr. Keough. Mr. Rodgers was made chairman of the special grievance committee in Mr. Powers' place and Mr. Hoppenrath was made chairman of the legislative committee.

The National League has given the state of Kansas $500 towards defeating censorship in that state. The Northwest, it is claimed, shows more objectionable films than any other part of the country.

The following members were present: James Gilosky, president; William Koenig, secretary; Thomas Furniss of Duluth, L. V. Calvert, D. G. Rodgers, H. P. Greene, Ed Hinz, Fred Upham, James Agnew, M. S. Nathan, Billy Watson, C. H. Hitchcock, Mr. True, Thomas J. Hamlin, of Amusements, O. E. Lee, A. L. Hill, S. G. Lebedoff and Jacob Barnet.

Sunday Closing Case Postponed

The Bender case in New York, which involves the Sunday closing issue, is not on the present calender of the Court of Appeals, and so the case will not come up for another month. This will give the motion picture cohorts of New York state a welcome opportunity to frame a vigorous fight for their rights.

It is safe to believe that the legislature will drop the Sunday closing question for the time at least. The members of the Senate and Assembly have no desire to attempt the enactment of legislation dealing with Sunday amusements, until they know the attitude of the Court of Appeals on the subject.

The legislators seem to be of the opinion that the highest court will refuse to uphold the appellate division's interpretation of the law, and that it will be unnecessary for the legislature to come to the rescue of the motion picture industry. In the event this does not prove right, they are prepared to offer several remedies for the picture interests.

Senator John J. Boylan of New York City feels that it would be a grave mistake to close the motion picture houses on Sunday, and that it would be a bad thing also to close them in such cities as Buffalo, Rochester, Syracuse and smaller towns. The workers in these places have come to look upon the films as a regular Sunday institution, and wherever Sunday theaters flourish the saloons experience a marked falling off in business.

Would you know how to go at it to manufacture a roaring, destructive flood and then make it stay where it belonged and not run over into the neighboring town? Here's the way they did it at Fine Arts for the making of "Jim Bludso."

The Program Question

THE weakest link in the program system is the impossibility of making all pictures uniformly good. The exhibitor who runs program is pretty sure that some of the stuff he shows will be poor, no matter how good the majority of it is. And he will always see pictures elsewhere that he covets but cannot use without discarding a part of his program—which means double cost and an economic waste.

It takes a higher order of showmanship to run a house on miscellaneous feature bookings than it does to run on a cut-and-dried program. Or perhaps it would sound better the other way around; it is easier for the exhibitor to run a specific and adequate program than to select a continuous supply of satisfactory features from miscellaneous sources.

The program exhibitor, while he may be the most ingenious and experienced of showmen, depends largely on the sagacity and efficiency of the producer for the success of his shows. The exhibitor who chooses to pick his shows wherever he can find them among the multitude of samples on the market has little to guide him but his own skill in selection. If he is shrewd and possesses good judgment he can maintain a constant supply of first class subjects. If he allows himself to get stung a few times with poor features it is likely to cost him much more than the price of the undesirable pictures in loss of satisfaction among his patrons. In that case he can blame himself for selecting a poor picture. With a program, he could blame the producer for giving him a poor picture. The best of showmen running miscellaneous features will pick a lemon once in a while, just as the best of producers will make one occasionally. It is just a question whether the exhibitor is safer to rely on his own judgment or the judgment of the program producer.

We said it required better showmanship to use selected features than to use provided programs. That doesn't mean that the best showman will always use the feature system by any manner of means. It means that the feature system makes a heavier demand on the exhibitors' ingenuity and experience, in return for which he gains a certain amount of independence and the satisfaction of blaming only himself for poor pictures.

Good showmanship essentially consists of ability to please the people. The good showman, therefore, will adopt the quickest, easiest and most certain method of attaining that end. The only difference, from the showman's standpoint, between program policy and feature policy is a matter of judgment as to which, under the care of any particular exhibitor, will best please that exhibitor's patrons.

The exhibitor who has the utmost confidence in his own ability to pick winners ninety-nine per cent of the time, and has less confidence in the producers' ability to strike public taste all the time, will probably be happiest with a miscellaneous feature policy. The exhibitor who feels that some producers, at least, have studied the public taste, and are competent to manufacture a continuous supply of attractive pictures, knows that he can book a program service that will give him the greatest good with the least trouble.

There are, of course, a large and increasing number of exhibitors who employ a combination of the program and the open market methods. These men contract for the programs in which they have confidence, for a portion of their week's bills, then draw from other releases and other programs for the remainder of their bills. This is a logical method, for it secures the best continuous programs for the house and as well gives the manager an opportunity to exercise his taste and judgment in choosing his own features without any outside aid.

The producer or distributor of program service carries a greater burden of responsibility than the manufacturer and distributor of miscellaneous features. Every exclusive program contract is in effect a guarantee that all the pictures of the program will be uniformly good. Within the limits of human possibility everybody engaged in the supply of program service makes a sincere and constant effort to meet that condition.

Within reason the program service is analogous to the publication of a magazine, the open market feature corresponds to the publication of a book. The reader of the book may or may not like it, and still may buy more works from the same house. The reader of the magazine, if he does not like it, will discontinue his subscription at the end of its period. The feature producer must depend more or less on big hits for his success. The program producer must supply continuously good, but not necessarily brilliant stuff.

Since there is no probability that either system of distributing and exhibiting will drive the other out of the field, arguments as to the superiority of one or the other policy are rather futile. The program system will always be the last word for the exhibitor who is willing to concede that producers know what the people want. It has become a duty of the program producer, therefore, to ascertain what the people want, no matter what the expense of the investigation. The producer who makes detailed and systematic studies of past performances, present tastes and future probabilities will still be taking service contracts in increasing numbers when a good many of the hit-or-miss feature producers of the day have quit for good.

"Fan" Circulation

SIXTEEN year old girls and hall room boys can generally find the price of a magazine that tells them something—anything—about film stars. Motion picture papers placed on the newsstands rapidly disappear for that reason. A film "trade" paper that wanted only "circulation" in quantity, so that it could talk large numbers to prospective advertisers, would find the newsstand sale the easiest road to a big printing bill.

We put MOTOGRAPHY on the newsstands once at the rate of five thousand copies a week. Most of the five thousand sold—to somebody. We never did know who bought them. Whoever it was didn't appear to be doing our advertisers any good, and we could not conscientiously call it trade circulation. That is why we cut it out. The only newsstand sale we have now is a few hundred copies, mostly in places where exhibitors or operators have actually complained because they wanted to buy their copies that way.

MOTOGRAPHY HAS NO FAN CIRCULATION. It does not want any fan circulation. Nine thousand copies that we mail each week go to the owners and managers of motion picture theaters, and to no one else. There is an order in our subscription files, from a picture theater owner or manager, for every one of those nine thousand copies. So far as the film trade is concerned, those orders are "open to the public."

We know that some motion picture advertising men are pessimistic on the subject of trade paper circulations. They are frankly skeptical about the responsiveness of the exhibitors. But we have proved that exhibitors will and do respond to the things that really interest them. A good trade paper, one that they feel they can rely on, one that is unbiased and impartial and uninfluenced by its business conditions, is the thing that interests them most, next to their film service itself.

Far more important to the motion picture trade than the quantity circulation of its trade papers is the quality of their circulation. In a field the size of this one, MOTOGRAPHY'S present subscription list is very nearly the maximum possible paid circulation. Any trade paper claiming more must reveal, on investigation, either a considerable free list or a fan circulation.

Aids Patrons to Find Good Plays

"NEW PHOTOPLAY LEAGUE" TO CO-OPERATE WITH EXHIBITORS

A MOVEMENT which, coming during a time of censorship discussion, Sunday closing agitation and higher licenses, seems to be a sensible way of introducing the better class patron to the picture he can especially appreciate is the organization of "The Photoplay League," by which a number of influential people interested in picture progress have pledged themselves not merely to ask for their kind of photoplays but to search for them and, when found, to support them. The movement is one which will interest especially the exhibitor who caters to a high class clientele either in an elaborate downtown theater or a house in an exclusive neighborhood. Doubtless clubwomen and educators have aided or harmed this exhibitor before with their demands and he is sometimes suspicious of any new "fad" concerning pictures.

The least possibilities for harm and the greatest chance for winning the good will of the patrons, as well as increased attendance of discriminating people, are contained in the project which "The Photoplay League," organized in New York City, has set about to make national.

The Photoplay League explains itself as "A National Organization of Patrons for the encouragement of the higher forms of Motion Picture Art." It had its beginning in the minds of a few people who wanted to see good pictures but did not always know where to find them. Charles Dana Gibson, the artist, was one of these people, and is now a member of the advisory committee. Another member active in planning the organization is E. H. Blashfield, the mural decorator. Others typical of the class of membership are E. H. Sothern, Julia Marlowe, Norman Hapgood, Frederick A. Stokes, Cornelius Vanderbilt and Kate Douglas Wiggins.

"Everyone is talking of the need for cleaner, better motion pictures. It is no use talking about it, unless you do something to support the best motion pictures when they come to your town." This sentiment expressed in explaining the object of the league is an echo of the report of many an exhibitor, as is also the next sentence, "Careful investigation and reports of leading picture producing conditions show that the best pictures are not as a rule the most profitable."

In order to overcome this state of affairs, the method of the league is to enroll members in various towns and cities, who will support such pictures as are approved and recommended by the advisory committee of the league. The method of insuring attendance consists in issuing invitations to local members for a certain evening at the showing of any picture recommended by the league. The members thus attending in a party and many of the New York exhibitors have offered special theater rates to these league parties.

The Rialto Theater, New York, under its director, Mr. Rothapfel, has at once become interested in the league and the latest invitation sent out by the advisory committee to its New York members called them to this theater on the morning of January 17, when a motion picture exhibition was given showing "The Development and Psychology of the Photoplay," with description by S. L. Rothapfel.

Just what strength this league may attain among theater goers cannot be foretold. Its influence will be of course among the wealthy, socially prominent. Helen Varick Boswell began a tour of visits to various cities in the interests of the league by a brief sojourn in Chicago where the first two new members were Mrs. Potter Palmer and Mrs. Ogden Armour. The plan to include a committee to recommend films for children will also interest educators and will be a guide to that rapidly growing list of exhibitors who give special showings for the younger set.

The progressive exhibitor whose ambition is to have his theater an influence in the community and to represent high class entertainment will do well to cater to this plan of the patrons to communicate to exhibitor and manufacturer their likes and dislikes, especially since it seems entirely fair to all concerned. The exhibitor is assured of financial support in his attempts to provide wholesome pictures, and the patrons are guided in their choice of subjects. The league, by the way, is utterly opposed to censorship in any form except this way of encouraging, not by words alone, but by their attendance in the theater, the exhibitors of fine pictures, "thus promoting the only effective system of censorship, that of educated public opinion."

National Association Making Reels

Practically all of the prints for the sample reel of the film "How the Great Stars Make Love" are in the hands of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and work on the assembly has been begun. This reel is the first of the series of at least five which the National Association is going to issue as its "Annual Review" of the motion pictures of 1916. The films are to consist of cut-outs of the great scenes of the great pictures of the year.

The reel on "How the Great Stars Make Love" promises to be of unique interest. All sorts of stars will be included from the sweetest girl in the films to the most famous "vampire."

Prints for the second reel "Great Fights of the Films," are already coming in, as are those for the next, "With the Funny Stars." The subjects of the other reels will be "Daredevil Stunts," and "Great Thrills." It is possible that other reels with scenes selected for their artistic beauty, their perfection of composition and their elaborateness of setting will be included. The series will be released at weekly intervals.

Director Lynn Reynolds is filming at Universal City a five-reel Alaskan drama, "The Code of the Klondike."

Studio Folks Read Motography

MOTOGRAPHY is eagerly looked for here every week and is read with avidity by all hands in the studio.

The Exhibitor Free at Last

By Lewis J. Selznick.

"The exhibitor's day of bondage is ended," declared Lewis J. Selznick in an interview last week.

Calling attention to the fact that the advent of the new Goldwyn company in the open booking market already makes it possible for the exhibitor playing one picture a week to book his theater without depending on program attractions. Mr. Selznick prophesied that 1917 would see the complete overthrow of the old system.

"With Goldwyn, Artcraft and Selznick-Pictures already in the field," declared the noted producer, "the exhibitor is free at last. With our thirty-two or more productions a year to choose from; with Artcraft puting out twelve or more and Goldwyn coming out with an additional thirty-odd pictures, it is no longer necessary for the exhibitors to pay for service and tie themselves hand and foot to any program.

"Furthermore, the exhibitor can now force the program producers to let him select features from the program and play them as he desires.

"I have often been asked in the last few weeks what I thought of our new 'competition,' meaning the Goldwyn company. A little thought on the part of my questioners would show them that Goldwyn is not my competitor but my ally. The advent of this big company into the open market is not only an insurance on the success of my proposition but means the emancipation of the exhibitor.

"Between the Goldwyn, Artcraft, my own company and the several individual companies producing special features we can already supply the entire needs of the biggest exhibitors in the nation and even keep the smaller fellow's house open for the better part of the week.

"Within the next few months I am confident we shall see the big program companies taking their principal stars out of the programs and releasing them as 'specials' on the open market."

Manager Reports Vitagraph Booming

H. D. Naugle, western division manager of Vitagraph-V. L. S. E., with headquarters in Los Angeles, and a former exhibitor, has arrived in New York after an absence of six months, in which time Mr. Naugle has visited all the exchanges of his company west of the Mississippi.

In his report Mr. Naugle points to the tremendous increase of business done by the various branches in his division. Several Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. exchanges show, according to Mr. Naugle, an increase of more than sixty per cent in gross bookings. A number of the western exchanges also report a steady result of 100 per cent collections.

Mr. Naugle says: "Since we gave him the opportunity practically to write his own ticket, the exhibitor feels morally bound to keep his agreements throughout."

The report continues that the three E. H. Sothern Blue Ribbon features have exerted a tremendous force in creating new patrons for all moving picture theaters, as has also "The Secret Kingdom" serial.

Down in St. Louis, Missouri, Wm. Sievers has been cashing in with Selig's "The Crisis." The Winston Churchill play, exploited by Sherman-Elliott Co., has been packing them in at a St. Louis theater for three solid weeks. "Old Veterans," "Those Who Remember Civil War Days in St. Louis," and "Men Who Knew Lincoln" have been utilizing the columns of the St. Louis newspapers in arguments pro and con concerning details in the picture. Sam D. Drane as Abraham Lincoln, and George Fawcett, as Judge Silas Whipple, score in the press notices.

F. I. L. M. Clubs Booming

The rapid growth of F. I. L. M. clubs, of which the Chicago club was the first, is shown by reports of the formation of similar clubs in Buffalo, Albany and Pittsburgh, and of the increasing membership of the New York club. At a meeting of the latter organization held recently at the Hoy Reporting Service, New York, Mr. Hoy, president of the Service, announced that many other large centers were preparing to organize clubs; that inquiries for his credit service were increasing so rapidly that office managers would be placed in training in New York and in Chicago to meet the demands.

John T. Cronin has been appointed Mr. Hoy's associate and will aid in the developing of F. I. L. M. clubs throughout the country. Mr. Cronin has had wide organization experience and will be a valuable acquisition to the Hoy Reporting Company's staff. He is at present serving his second term as mayor of Beacon, New York.

The New York club received with interest the recent announcement of the Chicago club regarding a national convention and agreed that Chicago deserved the honor of the first convention, owing to the fact that it was first introduced there.

The weekly meetings of the F. I. L. M. Club draw out a full membership and various subjects of interest to distributors are discussed.

Caine Takes Up Aviation

Derwent Hall Caine, the Arrow Film Company star, who is featured in his father's super production, "The Deemster," is on his way to Lake Worth, Florida, where he will take instruction in the art of aerial navigation. Mr. Caine has laid his plans and placed his order for a Burgess-Wright hydro-aeroplane, and is now preparing for a course of instruction in the same.

In an interview Mr. Caine stated:

"I have tried nearly every form of sport, and, as you may remember, at one time I held the record for the Saint Moritz toboggan course. I have driven high-powered cars, and have already owned fifteen of the best American cars on the market. I believe that the coming sport is aerial navigation, and I am taking a course in it."

Exhibitor Sells "The Crisis"

Carol A. Nathan, former manager of the Actograph Theater of Sacramento, California, has gone to Louisville, Ky., where he will take charge of "The Crisis" sales in Indiana, Kentucky, Alabama, Georgia, North Carolina, South Carolina and Florida for Colonel Ford Levy, who owns the rights on the feature for those states.

Director Rex Ingram of Universal City is filming "The Flowers of Doom," a five-reel Chinese drama.

Children's Morning Shows Successful

ADVERTISING VALUE FOR THEATERS IN APPEAL TO YOUNGSTERS

BY GEORGE E. CARPENTER

Manager of the Paramount-Empress Theater of Salt Lake City.

IT was the Motion Picture Committee of Salt Lake which first became interested in special Saturday morning shows for the young people in this city. Tactfully paving the way with a liberal amount of bouquets, they put their request to me. The Paramount-Empress, they said, was one house they could send their offspring to without undue qualms. Would I not give special showings for them?

Committee Co-operates

The committee volunteered to boost the movement provided that the management would pay for the advertising in the form of newspaper announcements and a half sheet to be displayed on the bulletin boards of the thirty-two public schools and the Public Library. The committee also reserved the right of censorship and supervision over the programs and pictures to be shown.

At the start the committee was right on the job with many doubts and misgivings. Now the members express themselves as being perfectly satisfied with the selections of the management and they receive the programs offered without question, at the same time admitting that they were wrong in some of the ideas they had regarding the juvenile mind. It took a little patience and tact on both sides before things were running smoothly.

Strictly educational films and mawkish children's stories are not a howling success for boys' and girls' programs. The modern youngster likes a little dash of romance, some action and a story. He likes a good comedy and animal pictures. To date the shows put on in Salt Lake include "Cinderella," "Patchwork Girl of Oz," "Hearts of Men," "Fanchon the Cricket," "Bootle's Baby," "The Warrens of Virginia," "Little Pal," "The Virginian," and others. Six reels constitute the program.

Youngsters Are Persistant Advertisers

Youngsters are the greatest advertisers on earth. Realizing this fact, the Home and School League and the theater management split fifty-fifty on 20,000 announcements to parents which were distributed by the league in the public schools and taken home by the children. In order to keep business booming one has to be on the job with something new to attract attention all the time. After the preliminary advertising for the boys' and girls' matinee, interest was further stimulated by the institution of grade days. On a specified day a specified grade would hand in the names of those present and the name of the school having the biggest percentage present would win the contest, the winning youngsters being admitted free to the next boys' and girls' matinee, when a picture of the winning school would be flashed on the screen.

Gives Theater Good Standing

There is no big money in boys' and girls' matinees, and some exhibitors do not think the game worth the candle. They resent the idea that somebody else proposes to run their houses for them. They have neither the time nor the disposition to argue with a lot of well-meaning but misinformed men and women.

The progressive exhibitor, however, is prone to take kindly to these matinees, for even if they are not lucrative, they are a good advertising investment. Boys' and girls' matinees properly put over under the right auspices give a theater a standing in the community.

It pays to advertise, and if you lose money on them charge it up to the advertising. Stick and you will get good business eventually. But remember this, in order to show boys' and girls' matinees successfully you must keep your own screen clean during the remainder of the week and you must enlist the support of the church and lay organizations. Pull every string, let the women's clubs act as chaperones, invite the teachers to come along to see that the children are safe, and let the promoters run the show.

Juvenile Shows as Holiday Gifts

Reports come in with each mail of delightful afternoons and mornings in theaters throughout the country where progressive exhibitors took occasion to give their juvenile friends a Merry Christmas season by arranging for them special film programs.

The Liberty Theater, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, leads with its enthusiastic comment, "We claim world's record for children's free show." Eight thousand youngsters, a young city of "kids," came to celebrate the second annual "Christmas treat" for children held in that theater. The "treat" this year consisted of Mary Pickford in "Cinderella" and Charlie Chaplin in "Shanghaied." In addition, the children were given candies and chewing gum. It was a real children's party.

They came in rags, they came in tags and they came in silken gowns and in limousines. There were few elders. Generally a toddler would come with some sister or brother a few years older, or a group would come together.

But the almost entire lack of adult accompaniment and the knowledge, it was their party, made the little ones feel at home immediately and it would have done the heart of the most sour misanthrope in the world good to listen to the shrieks of enjoyment when Charlie did any of his many ludicrous stunts. While the Cinderella picture was on, one could almost hear a pin drop, so intent were the youngsters in the play.

The Strand Theater, New York, had the busiest week of its existence during Christmas holidays, when the morning performances were given for children exclusively. During the week, 25,496 children attended the morning performances. Out of this number 17,000 were poor children who came as guests of the management and the different newspapers, children from different schools and institutions. Manager Harold Edel had made provisions so that each child whether a guest or whether he paid admission, received a box of candy, or some toy. The show consisted of various Christmas pictures, the main feature being "Snow White," with Marguerite Clark.

The orphan children of Kansas City were given a holiday treat by Frank Newman, the Paramount exhibitor of the Royal Theater, December 28. Marguerite Clark in "Snow White" was also selected for them. The various Orphans' Homes of Kansas City, were invited, the details of which were handled by the Welfare Board of the city.

Manager Bailey of the Alamo Theater, Kansas City, also gave a special matinee for two of the orphanages of Kansas City, Missouri. His program was a varied one, including in it the Paramount-Bray Cartoons and Burton Holmes Travel Pictures.

Special Children's Shows in Vermont

Miss Mary Gray Peck, working with various committees on Films for Young People, spoke on January 8 and 9 at Troy, New York, and Burlington, Vermont. In Troy, under the auspices of the Parent-Teachers' Association, she discussed the Better Film Movement and the question of censorship. In Burlington she addressed the Parent-Teachers' Association, various women's clubs and others interested in pictures. She spoke against censorship and in favor of special performances for children, which are creating much interest in that city. These are conducted by representatives from each of the schools and of the two women's clubs. Within the last two weeks Miss Peck reports three other places in Vermont have begun to take interest in carrying on the same work. That section of Vermont seems to be keenly interested.

Children's Plays Posters for Exhibitors

In order to provide exhibitors and societies advertising children's pictures with suitable and beautiful posters, the National Committee on Films for Young People (affiliated with the National Board of Review) two months ago conducted a poster design competition offering prizes and appointing prominent artists as judges. Art Schools in Philadelphia, Newark, New York and Boston were informed of the competition and it was emphasized that the poster should be such as would portray the multitudinous kinds of adventure, including comedy, which appeal to the normal young person, and would suggest these to him or her in an enticing manner.

The result has been a great many unsually appealing and original posters. The prizes have been awarded and the posters will shortly be exhibited in several galleries in New York and vicinity.

Youngsters Aid in Making Health Film

At Flushing, New York, recently an entire class from a public school was given an hour's recess to visit the studio of the Gaumont Company. The occasion was the showing of "Reel Life" No. 37, the Mutual Magazine in Film released January 14. One subject, "Good Teeth Mean Good Health," had several scenes taken of a public school class going through a tooth brush drill. It was this class which came to see itself on the screen.

New Alice Brady Play

Alice Brady in "A Hungry Heart" will be the first Brady-made release by the World Film Corporation during the month of February. This play, derived from the French stage, was directed by Emile Chautard, and the production is said to be unusually elaborate. Miss Brady's costumes include a number of the latest creations of Lucile, Ltd., and the role she plays is described as exceptionally affecting.

Ethel Clayton's next release by the World-Brady interests is called "The Web of Desire," with Rockliffe Fellowes featured. Others in the cast are John Hines, Edward Kimball, Richard Turner, William Williams and little Madge Evans.

The new Braddy-made World picture, "A Square Deal," was formerly called "The Parasites." The characters are authors, newspaper men and women, artists and social climbers. The studio scenes are picturesquely bohemian and filled with the spirit of fun and fellowship. There is also some tense drama. Carlyle Blackwell is the star and the leaders of the cast are June Elvidge, Muriel Ostriche and Henry Hull.

"Tillie Wakes Up," the World-Brady screen farce made late in the Summer at Coney Island, has been released. It is the tale of two of the couples living in the same New York apartment house who have domestic squabbles at breakfast.

New Robert Warwick-World

The next Brady-made World picture play with Robert Warwick as its star promises to contain a quite uncommon quantity of novelty. Its present title is "A Girl's Folly," substituted for "A Movie Romance," and its principal male character is a notable star.

The story is laid in the studio and "on location," and it shows pretty much everything about the manner in which a picture play is carried to completion, from the make-up of the star to the release.

The romance begins when the star goes out into the country to "do a fall" on horseback down the side of a cliff. A beautiful young girl (played by Doris Kenyon with the utmost simplicity and charm), living near the location, sees the picturesque rider dashing along the edge of the cliff, and runs out to warn him of his peril.

Just as horse and rider come tumbling down, this innocent and well meaning girl runs in between the camera and the figures undergoing the filming process —and spoils the picture.

The director is mad all over. The star, who has received several hard bumps in his fall, is sore in a double sense. Even the camera-men swear like troopers. We'll leave the rest of the interesting story for your screen to tell.

Big Insurance Policies

The heads of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation took out a number of life insurance policies in various companies, the total amount of which will be $1,000,000, on the lives of Adolph Zukor, Arthur Friend and Jesse Lasky.

It is the idea of the heads of this corporation to insure the corporation against any possible loss because of the death of any of the three. The amounts of insurance which have been equally divided among Mr. Zukor, Mr. Lasky and Mr. Friend provide that in the event of the death of any one of them the amount received by the corporation shall be added to the assets.

The men at the head of the motion picture industry seem to be the most progressive and enterprising in the show business.

Another motion picture magnate to take out a large block of insurance is Joseph M. Schenck. He took out two policies in one company of $50,000 each on his own life and that of his wife, Norma Talmadge.

About New Vitagraph Releases

"THE GIRL PHILIPPA" APPEARS JANUARY 21-28—OTHER VITAGRAPH NEWS

The charming Anita Stewart in Vitagraph's "The Girl Philippa."

A SLIGHT change has been made in the order of the Blue Ribbon releases in the Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. program for late January and early February.

The posters on "The Glory of Yolande" did not reach the standard of quality demanded by Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the Vitagraph-V. L. S. E., and this necessitated a change.

"The Glory of Yolande," with Anita Stewart, as a result will not be released until January 29, however. "Blind Justice" has been substituted and will be released January 15.

The place made vacant in the Blue Ribbon program by moving "Blind Justice" up a week, has been filled by putting in a story featuring Peggy Hyland and Antonio Moreno, entitled "Her Right to Live," and will be released on January 22.

"The Glory of Yolande" will appear on January 29.

Edith Storey and Antonio Moreno in "Money Magic," their first western picture, is scheduled for release, as the Blue Ribbon feature on February 5.

"The Girl Philippa," the Greater Vitagraph's dramatic presentation of Robert Chambers' famous story, which had its premier at the Rialto Theater, New York, two weeks ago, will be released through the Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. exchanges in the east on January 21, and in the west January 28.

Anita Stewart never was seen to greater advantage than in "The Girl Philippa," which, by the way, was produced under the constant personal supervision of Albert E. Smith, president of Greater Vitagraph. No detail was spared to make this screen presentation of Mr. Chambers' novel the acme of realism.

Samuel L. Rothapfel, managing director of the Rialto, wrote, on January 3, four days after "The Girl Philippa" opened its run, to Walter W. Irwin, general manager of Vitagraph-V. L. S. E., as follows:

> Our financial statement for yesterday (the day after New Year's) showed receipts larger by several hundred dollars than those of election day, which was the best previous business on our books up to that time.
> We are opening the doors here at 10 o'clock every morning, in order to accommodate the crowds, and from present indications the week's total business should establish a new record in returns from the presentation of any motion picture.

"The Secret Kingdom," Greater Vitagraph's new fifteen-episode serial, has been booked by the Pantages

At the right is one of the many spine-chilling scenes from Vitagraph's big serial, "The Secret Kingdom." Below are two views of "Her Right to Live," with Peggy Hyland.

Circuit of theaters throughout the west. Panrages corresponds to the Marcus Loew chain of theaters in the east.

Marcus Loew booked "The Secret Kingdom" in all his twenty-five theaters, after he himself had seen it on the screen.

"The Secret Kingdom" has met with public and exhibitor popularity—evidenced by its solid bookings in all twenty-four of the Marcus Loew theaters and in similar chains of theaters in other communities—as will probably bring about the largest quarterly bonus payments ever made in the history of Vitagraph-V. L. S. E.

Vitagraph Bonus Plan

It may not be generally known that, under the personal supervision of Walter W. Irwin, general manager of Vitagraph-V. L. S. E., a profit-sharing plan was adopted and has been carried on with great success for the last eighteen months.

This plan calls for the payments of quarterly bonuses, based on the net profits of Vitagraph-V. L. S. E., to every employe of that company from Mr. Irwin down to the newest office boy in the most distant exchange. These profit-sharing payments are computed on the basis of weekly salaries.

The next step which Mr. Irwin took, after establishing this profit-sharing plan, was promotion from within the ranks of Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. In only three instances in the last year has a departure from that custom been made. The result has been to develop a big family of Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. employes.

The three Sothern pictures, "The Chattel," "An Enemy to the King," and "The Man of Mystery," also have developed into a mere banking proposition. Exhibitors have written in to Mr. Irwin: "To show one of these Sothern features is to make a record-breaking bank deposit."

So it has been with other Vitagraph releases for the last four months, and the product from the Flatbush studios, scheduled for the next three months, seems to emphasize the fact that greater stars, greater plays and Greater Vitagraph are combining to produce greater box-office receipts, greater rentals, and greater runs on all Vitagraph productions.

"Her Right to Live" Next Blue Ribbon

Peggy Hyland and Antonio Moreno will be featured in the forthcoming Vitagraph Blue Ribbon release entitled "Her Right to Live."

In Miss Hyland's previous pictures she has been seen in the most gorgeous of gowns and her parts have called for the high-born, well-bred, delicately nurtured type of girl. In "Her Right to Live" it is the other women in the play who wear the fine clothes and Miss Hyland is seen in a close approach to rags.

Nothing could make clearer than does her work in this picture that this Vitagraph star is not a "clothes-rack." Garbed in the poorest of clothes, such as would make even a poor-farm child think twice about wearing them, the ineffable charm of Miss Hyland comes through this drab setting and is fairly radiant.

David Horsley has arranged for the re-engagement of Frank Crompton as technical director of all David Horsley productions. Frank Crompton is accepted as one of the best authorities on technical construction in the motion picture business, in which he has been engaged for the past nine years.

Robert Warwick in New One

"The Court of St. Simon," by E. Phillips Oppenheim, has been adapted into scenario form and will be used as a starring vehicle for Robert Warwick.

For this production Harry Rapf, president of the Robert Warwick Film Corporation, has secured the services of the celebrated French director, Leonce Perret, who arrived in America last week. Mr. Perret is popularly known as "The Griffith of France," being without a peer among the directors in that country. His most recent screen triumph was the presentation in Paris of a spectacular film entitled "The Heroes of The Yser."

Perret is best known on this side of the Atlantic through his direction of the Suzanne Grandais features that were all the rage four or five years ago. Until his departure for this country Perret was director general of the Gaumont Company and supervised the production of almost all its biggest features.

The story of "The Court of St. Simon" is particularly well adapted to Director Perret's training, the greater part of the scenes being laid in France. It is one of Mr. Oppenheim's most popular novels and the central character will offer Mr. Warwick a splendid role for the screen. The scenario is being completed by Frederick Chapin, who was recently engaged as scenario editor for all the Selznick companies, and work on the production is expected to start next week.

Huge Press Sheet

The Fox Film Corporation has just printed what is probably the largest sheet ever assembled, devoted to press comment on a single theatrical production. It measures 60 inches in width by 40 inches in depth and is required to contain only a small portion of the reams of enthusiastic newspaper comment on William Fox's million-dollar picture beautiful, "A Daughter of the Gods," in the three cities in which the spectacle was first revealed—New York, Philadelphia and Pittsburgh. The press comment from Washington, including the accounts of President Wilson's wedding anniversary theater party, came in just as the sheet was going to press.

Some idea of the amount of type contained may be gathered from the fact that the galleys, if placed end to end, would measure 960 inches or 80 feet; or the type slugs placed end to end would measure 161 feet.

The film is now being booked throughout the United States and soon will be shown in Great Britain, in the beginning of an around the world tour of exhibition.

Rothacker Company Holds Election

At the recent annual stockholders' meeting of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company the following directors were elected: Watterson R. Rothacker, chairman; H. J. Aldous, N. J. Baumer, A. A. Rothacker, David Beaton, Jr.

A dividend of 7% on the preferred stock of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company was declared and paid this month.

The Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company is now using the elevated railway stations for advertising stands directing the public to its laboratory-studio.

Noted Director Joins Goldwyn

ALLAN DWAN, ONE OF FILM LAND'S MOST POWERFUL CREATORS, SIGNS

Allan Dwan handling a hundred players through a megaphone during his Fine Arts days.

GOLDWYN PICTURES CORPORATION has signed Allan Dwan, who has just completed the first Norma Talmadge picture for the company bearing that star's name. Dwan is the first of the able directors who will be signed by Goldwyn Pictures.

Mr. Dwan is perhaps best known as the director who made the best of the Douglas Fairbanks pictures which established that buoyant star as one of the sensations of the screen world—"The Habit of Happiness," "Manhattan Madness" and "The Half Breed."

He is the clean-cut, collegian type, trained in and graduated from Notre Dame University, Indiana. He is an electrical engineer and after graduation taught electrical engineering at Notre Dame.

This precise, skilled training shows in all of the work he has ever done as a motion picture director, and he adds to this equipment his earlier experience as scenario editor both for the Essanay and American Film Companies. Goldwyn Pictures in signing Allan Dwan obtains the services of one of the most liked directors by the exhibitors of America. His pictures for the Triangle and other companies invariably have been big box-office successes.

Here and there in the picture industry a director becomes personally known to a portion of his big public, but as a rule the director is known only by the pictures he makes. If this latter is true of Dwan, his public has cause to remember him because of the following splendid pictures that he directed: "The Wild Flower," William H. Crane in "David Harum," Mary Pickford in "The Girl of Yesterday," Maclyn Arbuckle in "The County Chairman," Douglas Fairbanks in "Manhattan Madness," "The Good Bad Man," "The Half Breed," "The Habit of Happiness," and Norma Talmadge in "Panthea."

Maxine Elliott Receives Remarkable Welcome

Maxine Elliott's decision to become a star of the cinema for Goldwyn Pictures has aroused intense interest and in many sections of the United States editorials of welcome have been printed by influential newspapers and critics addressed to the noted beauty.

Edward B. Perkins, the international journalist and Parisian staff correspondent for a syndicate of influential American magazines and newspapers writes:

I was sailing for America on the day that announcement was made of Miss Elliott's capitulation to the screen. Brief cables from New York announced this fact in the London newspapers, but the news was not permitted to pass without comment.

News footnotes were added in several of the influential London journals telling of Miss Elliott's noble work for the relief of Belgian refugees and the Allied wounded, while one paper spoke of her as a "tender and beautiful heroine whose nobility and zealousness have brought cheer to thousands of people of a desolated nation."

Owners of motion picture theaters have sent the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation many telegrams of approval over the capture of Miss Elliott for their pictures and great curiosity is expressed as to the plays in which she is to appear on the screen.

Every effort is being made by the Goldwyn officers to hasten the arrangements for the beginning of Miss Elliott's first picture. She has put in two tremendously busy weeks with the dressmakers and costumers and but two brief hours with a photographer.

At the left is the keen and genial Samuel Goldfish, president of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. The charming lady is Margaret Mayo, the noted playwright who is to give her unusual talents to Goldwyn productions.

What Margaret Mayo's Film Advent Means

The most difficult type of motion picture scenarios to obtain for production are farce comedies and straight farces. America has many men and women most expert as actors in farce or farce comedy, but very few authors who can write them.

Margaret Mayo's entry into motion picture production and authorship is therefore of great moment to the industry and to the millions who see the screen productions—for Miss Mayo is the most expert and skilled author of farce and farce comedy writing in the English language.

Her activities in Goldwyn Pictures Corporation will be manifold, but it is not to be expected that she will ignore this special field in which she has won an international reputation.

With Edgar Selwyn and Edith S. Ellis, Miss Mayo will pass upon and put into shape for production all of the manuscripts of the new company.

Margaret Mayo has what the authors of French farce and farce comedy so sorely lack—a sense of cleanliness and decency. She has built an enduring and permanent reputation in the American theater by her ability to be delightfully entertaining without being suggestive or improper.

And because of this she has achieved spectacular success—a success that has caused her plays to be translated into all of the modern languages as well as such an ancient one as the Chinese. Both in London and Paris her plays enjoyed long runs and in the case of "Baby Mine" it was translated into Russian and acted by a special company at Petrograd at the command of the Czar of all the Russias.

Miss Mayo's supervision over Goldwyn Pictures at their inception means a service of the most expert character which, if rendered on a broader scale throughout the industry, would have saved American films from a vast amount of deserved ridicule.

Free Mae Marsh Films for Poor Children

Mae Marsh, Goldwyn Picture star, has just made a most unusual agreement with her managers.

Miss Marsh came hurrying into the Goldwyn offices the other day filled with enthusiasm over a new idea. She had been in one of the congested downtown districts of New York in search of a quaint old piece of furniture. While rambling around the East Side, she encountered a wistful bunch of youngsters outside of a motion picture theater without money to gain admission. Having once been poor herself, Mae Marsh was touched by the children's disappointment and gathering all around her took every child in sight inside to see the picture.

And in this dingy, dirty theater a new idea was born. This idea is now embodied in the following agreement:

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation agrees at the behest of Mae Marsh to furnish, without rental, cost or fee of any kind, a print for an evening performance of any and all pictures in which Mae Marsh is starred for a free exhibition to:

The Henry Street Settlement, New York City; Hull House, Chicago, Ill.; the Lighthouse, Kensington, Philadelphia, Pa.; the South End House, Boston, Mass.; the San Francisco Settlement, San Francisco, Cal.; United Jewish Educational & Charitable Association, St. Louis, Mo.; the Neighborhood Settlement, Los Angeles, Cal., and to any and all regularly organized and chartered social service or settlement house institutions in the United States making a request for such use of the Mae Marsh films.

ARBUCKLE WITH PARAMOUNT

Celebrated Comedian So Long With Keystone Begins Work on Production of Two-Reel Pictures in March

"Fatty" Arbuckle, "the funniest fat man on the screen," who has long since abandoned the first name Roscoe with which he was endowed by his parents, has entered into a contract with the Paramount Pictures Corporation, by the terms of which he will begin the production of two-reel comedies on or about March 1st. These pictures will be distributed by Paramount.

Near this historic spot will be found the dignified likeness of one Roscoe Arbuckle who has caused this note in film history by leaping from Keystone ticklers to Paramount fun films.

"Fatty" Arbuckle ranks today uniquely in the field of comic productions and possesses the added faculty of directing the pictures in which he stars. Arbuckle is the jovial fat man who is the butt of every joke—except the ones which he turns on his tormentors.

The secret of Arbuckle's great popularity is the fact that he makes his audiences laugh at him as well as with him, never fearing to be made the victim of a joke himself, instead of insisting upon always being the one who plays the tricks upon others.

The fact that Arbuckle directs his own pictures is important because he will set tasks for himself to do that no other director would have the moral courage to ask him to perform.

The Arbuckle comedies will be released to all exhibitors the same as all other short-reel subjects handled at the present time by Paramount Pictures Corporation without being influenced by the feature branch of the program.

Manager Ruffner of the Liberty Theater, Spokane, showed Pathe's "The Life of Our Saviour" for a full week recently. Mr. Ruffner stated that "The Life of Our Saviour" is the finest picture he had seen in eight years' motion picture experience and advertised it heavily.

First Aid to Theater Men

PRACTICAL HELP ON THE PROBLEMS OF RUNNING A PICTURE HOUSE

YOU probably have often turned over in your mind the advantages of the program and open market plans of running a house, and you will be interested to learn what Paul H. Woodruff, editor of MOTOGRAPHY, and a man of long experience in the film field, has to say on the subject in his editorial on another page in this issue.

And if you will turn to your last week's issue of MOTOGRAPHY you will find, under the heading, "What Theater Men Are Doing," an exhibitor's view of the same question; and he rips a lot of theories up the back. The subject is a vital one. Write us your experiences and opinions and don't be afraid of hurting someone's feelings.

How to Buck Vaudeville

124—I am manager of a small picture theater here in a small town of 700 people. Up till last May we had the only house in town. At that time a fellow who lives here bought out a cheap outfit, brought it in here, remodeled an old store building and set up against us. He is showing cheap and trashy stuff. We are showing good pictures such as Triangle, Vitagraph and Pathe. He has a stage in his house and he brings in road and vaudeville shows almost every week. We get nearly all the business in pictures, but when he has Stock Companies he takes a good bit of our legitimate trade. There is room here, as you know, for but one house. He has a little the newest and nicest house. We have to cater largely to country trade, and we are running too good pictures for the patronage we get. What would you advise me to do in this case, and how can we get rid of these stock companies? I am a constant reader of MOTOGRAPHY.

There are certain laws of human demands that absolutely cannot be gotten away from. The fact that the people of your town prefer your competitor's vaudeville to your good pictures is only an example of one of those laws,—the law of the interest of human beings. In other words, most people prefer to see live performers, rather than the silent ones on the screen. However, most people prefer good pictures to poor vaudeville. But some people are not discriminating, and perhaps the public of your city is not showing the best taste when they leave your good programs and go to see the stage performances.

But the fact remains, they do it. If possible, remodel so as to accommodate one vaudeville act along with your pictures. Another prominent exhibitor with whom I discussed your problem agreed with me that this would be a good method of procedure. You'll have to give the people what they want.

If it is too much expense for you to construct a stage, the best you can do is to advertise extensively the quality of your bills and make people believe so far as possible, that they are seeing something of a higher class when they see splendid pictures, produced at a cost of thousands of dollars, with the biggest stars in the country, than when they attend common vaudeville. Go to the different clubs and offer them inducements to come in a body at special rates. Get the school and church authorities on your side. Try children's matineers and so get the mothers interested. Above all, advertise.

These things will not stop anything that may be inevitable, but they are the weapons in your hands. Of course the best weapons would be a better house and vaudeville a bit better than that of the other fellow. Here's wishing you good luck. Let's hear from you again.

Window Cards in Stores

125—This is a pretty lively town of 20,000, and I have been thinking about using cards in the windows of some of the stores on Main Street to help out with my other advertising. What do you think of that kind of advertising? What is the best kind of a card to use in the windows?

There are a lot of exhibitors in small towns who think that, next to the programs they send out, their cards in the store windows are their best advertising. This is particularly true of the exhibitors who use little newspaper space.

The more you can make your theater a part of the town and the community, the solider it will be in its power to bring people to it. Stores and shopping are a part of the every day life of the people to whom you cater. Therefore if you can make a connection with these people while they are in the stores or passing them, it is going to work to your advantage. The more you keep your house, in a favorable way, in the minds of the people, the quicker they will think of your house when they are looking for entertainment. Use window cards by all means. But be sure they are the right kind and in the right stores.

The best kind of a card to use is one that combines a short, strong ad with attractiveness in appearance. The card should be a decoration to whatever window it is placed in. If you have them printed, see that the wording is well arranged. If you have them painted, see that they are not too "fancy" and that the colors are not so bright as to look cheap and to attract too much attention. Merchants do not want your card to detract from the advertising value of his own displays and most of them are choice of their window space. One of the best arguments to use, by the way, in securing the permission to place your cards in the windows, or inside the stores if the windows are unavailable, is to make the merchant see that by aiding in telling people where they can find good entertainment and by keeping folks posted regarding the attractions at your house, he is rendering his customers an added service. He is dealing out free news that makes his store seem more "live." Of course, that implies that your house is one that the merchant can truthfully recommend, and your programs should be above reproach so far as it is possible for you to make them so.

One of the best window cards that I have seen is a style used by the owner of three houses in Chicago. He gets a large number of stills of each feature, has them mounted in good looking cardboards of some soft shade of color about 12 by 14 inches in size, and across the corner of the card is lettered the name of the theater, the attraction and the date. Photographs are interesting, good looking and harmonize with any surroundings, so the merchants accept them more readily than they do most cards. And people usually stop and look the photographs over. It is a good idea to get away from the style of sign that is all tiresome type or lettering.

126—I am thinking of joining the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. Will you tell me where is the proper place to apply? Who are the officers?

You certainly are showing the right spirit. If all exhibitors took the same interest in organization, the business would stand a better show of progressing more rapidly in the right directions.

Complete information regarding how to become a member of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry will be given you if you will write to Louis F. Blumenthal, Auditorium Theater, Jersey City, New Jersey. Mr. Blumenthal is one of the exhibitors who is a director in the association and will be glad to give you all the information regarding the method of procedure, entrance fees, the possible benefits to be derived and so forth. The headquarters of the National association is in the Times building, New York City. William A. Brady of the World Film Corporation is president. The vice-presidents are Thomas Furniss, Brunswick Amusement Company, Duluth, Minnesota (an exhibitor); Adolph Zukor, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; Donald J. Bell, Bell & Howell Company, Chicago; Hiram Abrams, president of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, New York. The treasurer is J. E. Brulatour, Eastman Films, New York City.

New Method of Releasing Features

John W. Heaney, New York representative of the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, distributors for the Southern territory, has devised a plan whereby the state right buyers of the country, and independent feature film manufacturers who produce for the state right market, may clear their business through a centralized office.

Mr. Heaney's experience has taught him that much time and money is wasted in the effort to bring together State Right buyers from outlying territories and the manufacturers who release through the New York market.

As an exchange man of considerable experience and one whose reputation is beyond reproach, it is his intention to gain the confidence of exchange men throughout the country, and the manufacturers. All pictures which are released through him must first meet with his approval, and then a reasonable price per territory is fixed. Each picture stands on its own merits, and only such pictures which show artistic production and money-making possibilities are accepted for release.

The State Right buyer through his office gets first-hand information, and is relieved of the suspense until the manufacturers' representatives call on him. This method saves the expense of local representation. Mr. Heaney's services to the State Right buyer assumes the nature of a gratuitous one.

Mr. Heaney now has ready for the state right market, "Tempest and Sunshine," "Just a Song at Twilight," produced by the Dixie Film Co., and "The Valley of Fear," the latest Sir A. Conan Doyle's Sherlock Holmes story, a six-part feature picture.

New Ivan Director

William Humphrey, who for the past seven years has been a leading player and director in the Vitagraph organization, has been engaged by the Ivan Film Productions to direct several of its forthcoming photoplays.

Mr. Humphrey has selected as his initial offering a powerful drama purchased by the Ivan Film Productions from the well-known dramatist, Mr. Willard Mack. The play, the director and the cast promise an interesting development in the steady progress of the Ivan Film Productions. The scenario has been prepared by Don Dundas.

Death Claims James A. Delves

James A. Delves, former secretary of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, died at the age of fifty years in Pittsburgh, December 27.

For many years Mr. Delves conscientiously worked for organization in Pennsylvania, and was repeatedly honored by being elected secretary and treasurer of the state and local organizations. Untiring in his labor as he was modest, when he was extended a vote of thanks by the national convention for his faithful discharge of his duties, he asked no greater reward.

An Englishman by birth, Mr. Delves came to this country in his early youth. He worked under great handicaps, but overcame them by hard work and patience. He was beloved by all who knew him.

Frederick J. Herrington, former national president and present national organizer, in speaking of the services rendered to the organization by Mr. Delves, said: "During my term of office as president few men were closer to Mr. Delves than myself. No man labored more unselfishly for the cause of the exhibitor than did Mr. Delves, and I found the co-operation and council of Mr. Delves a great help at all times."

Higher Prices in Wichita

The exhibitors of Wichita, Kansas, have joined the ranks of the twenty-cent admission price to theaters.

Joseph Fox, who owns the Holland Theater at Wichita, advertised in the papers announcing that the exhibitors would allow the patrons to decide whether or not Wichita would become a ten or a twenty-cent picture town. If the patrons wished to pay only ten cents the exhibitors would be forced to show only the smaller pictures with lesser stars. If the public wanted high class pictures, with leading stars, it would have to pay an entrance fee of twenty cents, instead of the customary ten cents.

Joseph Fox put on "Less Than the Dust," charging the higher price, and judging from the patronage received it was decided by the exhibitors that the theater-goers have unanimously voted for higher-priced productions.

Exhibitor Books Serial Twice

The Mehesy Theater of Salt Lake City, owned and managed by Edward Mehesy, was contracted to show "The Vampires" every Thursday. Mr. Mehesy has written into the Mutual offices that this series of pictures has played to the same capacity business as on Sundays. Mr. Mehesy, immediately after showing the sixth episode contracted for a second run, starting Sunday, January 28, just two days after showing episode No. 9, on Thursday, January 25. He further claims "The Vampires" has proved to be the biggest drawing card that has ever been shown the Salt Lake City public.

Mutual service is exceptionally well represented in Salt Lake City, the Mutual trade mark appearing on every screen in the city, with the exception of three.

Director Joseph De Grasse has under production at Universal City a five-reel mountain comedy-drama, "The Flashlight Girl."

George M. Cohan Before the Camera

CAST SELECTED FOR "THE POOR LITTLE RICH GIRL" NEXT PICKFORD STORY

George M. Cohan, the original Yankee Doodle boy (in center), Marguerite Snow, his leading lady, and Joseph Kaufman, his director, discussing the script of the first Cohan Artcraft feature, "Broadway Jones."

THE progress in Artcraft circles since the last issue of MOTOGRAPHY is seen in the facts that George M. "United States" Cohan, the premier musical comedy genius of America, is hard at work before the camera, and the exceptional cast for the next Mary Pickford feature, "The Poor Little Rich Girl," has been chosen.

"Here he comes!"

"'Ats him awright, lookit 'at walk!"

"Some swell gasoline consumer!"

"Is everything ready?"

Such were the nervous ejaculations among the property boys, carpenters and other studio employes as George M. Cohan drove up to the studio for his first day's activities before the motion picture camera.

The wonderful George M. Cohan had arrived! Every person at the studio was up on his toes in a state of excitement over the presence of the famous actor author-producer who at last had succumbed to the lure of the silent drama. Everyone except Director Joe Kaufman, for he knew George M. from way back in the dark ages when they were associated in many of the Yankee Doodle Boy's stage enterprises. Director Kaufman knew there was no cause for nervousness and endeavored to re-assure his co-workers of this fact before he had reached the studio. No one realized the fact that George M. Cohan, although one of the greatest theatrical celebrities, was a "regular fellow," a man whose head had not been turned by his wonderful success, more than Joe Kaufman and it took exactly three minutes by the studio clock, for everyone to realize the truth of his statements concerning the famous favorite of the stage.

With a good-natured smile George M. dodged out of the way of the fumbling property boy and with a display of democracy that has made him one of the best liked individuals both in and out of the profession, he lost no time in becoming acquainted with all hands.

Strange to say, not a single American flag was in sight as George M. faced the motion picture camera for the first time. "Here goes, with the best there is in me," said he, whereupon he plunged into his new work with an energy that was soon taken up by every member of the company.

Upon conclusion of his first day at the studio everyone was astonished at the amount of work that had been accomplished.

Cast for New Mary Pickford Play

In selecting his cast for Mary Pickford's new Artcraft production, "A Poor Little Rich Girl," a screen adaptation of the popular Eleanor Gates play and novel of the same name, Maurice Tourneur has succeeded in assembling a company of artists of exceptional talent and experience.

As the careless mother of Gwendolyn, who seeks high social standing rather than the love of her child is Madeline Traverse, whose many years of theatrical and screen experience it is expected will result in making this characterization one of the features of the production.

In the part of the father of Gwendolyn, who prefers the excitement of Wall Street to his home, is Charles Wellesley, whose success with the Vitagraph Company for the past four years has made him popular among motion picture patrons. Prior to his becoming connected with the silent drama.

Gladys Fairbanks, who appeared in the original stage production of "A Poor Little Rich Girl," again displays her talents in the play before the motion picture camera. As Jane, the nurse, Miss Fairbanks appears to good advantage in an important supporting character to the star.

Frank McGlynn, who portrays the part of the kindly plumber, has achieved success as a director as well as an actor. As "Trask" in "Gloria's Romance" with Billie Burke he added many new admirers to his large following. Other screen characterizations, too numerous to mention, have won him wide recognition.

Other important characters in "A Poor Little Rich Girl" have been entrusted to such sterling actors as Emile La Croix, Marciea Harris, Charles Craig, Frank Andrews, another member of the original "A Poor Little Rich Girl" stage cast, Herbert Prior, George Gernon and Maxine Hicks.

Little Madge Evans has a new contract with the World Film Corporation.

Jean Sothern, supported by Earle Metcalfe and William H. Turner in some striking scenes from "Her Good Name," a new Van Dyke-Art Dramas feature.

NEW KALEM STUDIO

Will Immediately Put Several New Companies to Work at Glendale, Cal.—Nothing Over Two Reels its 1917 Policy

William Wright, of the Kalem Company, is now in California with the plans for a new indoor studio to be erected immediately in Glendale.

This will be equipped with the very latest illuminating devices and will provide room for several companies to work at the same time. The new glass-topped studio will triple Kalem's producing capacity and it will also guard against any delays that might be caused by California's freaky weather.

Immediately upon his arrival, Mr. Wright called a conference of the Coast staff to determine upon the number of new companies and their personnel that are to be set to work upon one and two-reel dramas, comedies and series pictures. Kalem's experience with one and two-part series pictures indicates that more and more attention will be paid to releases of this kind. It is certain that "The Girl from Frisco" series will be continued indefinitely. Frederick R. Bechdolt, famous author, has been engaged specially to prepare an indefinite number of additional episodes. Bechdolt has made his reputation as a short-story writer by his contributions to the Saturday Evening Post, Collier's, the Red Book, and many others.

Kalem's 1917 policy, as announced, calls for nothing over two reels in length. Its determination to stick to the short length pictures that are the logical kind for the smaller theaters to exhibit, is also based upon carefully tabulated statistics which prove, to Kalem's satisfaction, that one and two reel features are as necessary to the industry as films of greater length.

Another important bit of Kalem news is its decision to proceed at once with a new "Stingaree" series, written by E. W. Hornung, that will feature the popular True Boardman, who portrayed the Australian bushranger in the original series. Mr. Hornung's further adventures of "Stingaree" are now in the hands of Phil Lang, Kalem's scenario chief, who is now making his headquarters in Glendale.

During this year the Kalem Company will continue its policy of gradual expansion as conditions warrant increases in its producing units. Under the new plan adopted by the General Film Company, that of putting the manufacturers whose releases make up its program upon a percentage basis, an unusual incentive is offered to create a country-wide demand for Kalem subjects. In this connection, Kalem will enlarge its advertising appropriation for a direct-by-mail campaign to reach exhibitors and the public and will co-operate to the fullest extent of its ability with the thirty odd General Film exchanges in aiding exhibitors to get advertising helps, lithos, photos, etc., that they need to exploit Kalem pictures successfully.

Several changes in the personnel of the Jacksonville company are under consideration but they are not ready to become public, nor will they interfere with the continuation of the "Grant, Police Reporter" series of single-reel thrillers directed by Robert Ellis and featuring George Larkin and Ollie Kirkby.

Laemmle Denies He Will Sell

Some time back it was rumored that Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Company, was to sell some of his stock in the company, and that there was to be a reorganization with a capitalization of $12,000,000. This Mr. Laemmle persistently denies.

Yet several significant developments featured in Mr. Laemmle's hurried visit to Chicago. Immediately upon his arrival he conferred with I. Van Ronkle, Chicago manager of the Blue Bird concern, and Morris Spreckles, its New York manager.

There have been a lot of surmises, but no official report of the meeting given out for publication.

Vitagraph Weekly House Organ

W. C. Gookin, branch manager of Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. in Kansas City, Mo., is publishing a weekly house organ, which he calls "The Pepper Box and Ginger Car News," for the benefit of the employes of that exchange. It is a four-page bulletin devoted to the interests of Vitagraph and Vitagraph exhibitors.

In "The Pepper Box" Mr. Gookin also publishes a sort of sales manual, in which he shows the salesmen how the results may be accomplished by that co-operation between exchange and exhibitor which Walter W. Irwin, general manager of Vitagraph-V. L. S. E., insists shall be the basis of his company's relations with its customers.

The Man Inside the Booth

PROJECTION DEPARTMENT, CONDUCTED BY E. C. SCOBEY

THIS department is now a permanent feature of MOTOGRAPHY. Its editor, Mr. Scobey, is a former secretary and treasurer of the Motion Picture Machine Operators' Local No. 194, I. A. T. S. E., and was formerly associated with the Central Film Service Company of Indianapolis. He was recently elected vice-president of the Central Labor Union of Indianapolis, the first operator to be so honored. The idea is to make this department just as helpful as possible to operators and exhibitors. Send your questions and problems to Mr. Scobey. He is sure to give you some valuable information. Address, MOTOGRAPHY, Chicago.

Seeing you are giving advice in the projection department of MOTOGRAPHY, I would like to ask you a few questions. My lens throw a picture too big for my screen. What can I do to make it throw a smaller picture? I have a Power's 6A machine. Does heat cause carbon to burn to a point? My carbon burn into a slender point from the tip to where it fastens onto the holders. Would you advise me to get a motor for my machine when I am running but four nights out of the week? Can you use any kind of a motor? Do you necessarily have a regular attachment for this?— F. C. Perry, Star Theater, Colo, Iowa.

Yes, it would be possible for you to cut down the size of your picture by lengthening the distance between the lens combinations, but I would not try to make the change if I were you. You could also change it by shortening the throw between the machine and the screen. If you can't shorten the throw, then I would buy a new lens of the proper size.

Your carbon trouble is caused from one of two things, either the carbon you are using is too soft or you are carrying too high an amperage for the carbon. If you are using a first class carbon you ought to be able to use a 5/8 inch carbon, top and bottom on amperage up to 60 amps. and a 3/4 inch on amperage from 60 to 80 amps. Use soft cored carbons both top and bottom.

In regards to the motor proposition, I would put one on. The operator never lived that could crank a machine for any length of time and crank as steady as a motor will turn a machine, not only the crank end of the job is better but it gives the operator time to rewind his film (where he does not have a rewind boy to help him) and keep it in proper condition.

There are several kinds of motors that you can use on a picture machine, but I would advise you to buy a motor drive outfit made a purpose for the work by the company that makes the machine you are using. You can take the blades and guard off a 16 inch desk fan and put a pully on the shaft and use it but you will not get the results from it that you will get from a regular outfit. I would by all means use a regular motor attachment. I have seen pullies attached to the fly wheel, shutter shaft (where outside shutters were used) and on the take-up feed pully, but all of them are a very crude way of attaching a motor drive.

I wish to ask you a few questions regarding my light. I am using a Ft. Wayne compens arc and am getting a very poor light, in fact so poor that dark sub-titles are almost impossible to read. I shoot the lever up to 60 amps., too. My throw is about 91 or 92 feet, using a 6½ lens and it is a very good one, too. I also use ¾-inch soft (National) carbons, same size top and bottom. Does an iron jaw and clamp on the lamp make any difference? I am using a Power's 5 and am getting as steady a picture as the operator in the other theater is getting with a new Simplex, but my light fails me. Is a Power's 5 lamp too small for 60 amps?

I would suggest that you have the power company that is furnishing you current, take a volt reading on the line at the transformer and see whether you are getting the proper voltage to start with. If you are getting 110 volts at the transformer, then take an ampere reading at the lamp to see if the transformer is giving the proper amperage. To get good results on the screen, your transformer should show 60 amps. at the lamp. Your trouble could come from a loose connection at the transformer, lamp or switch; ground on the lamp, low voltage to the transformer, or not sufficient amperage at the lamp. Be sure that your carbon jaws are clean and that the carbon makes a good contact. An iron jaw and clamp on the lamp will offer a little more resistance than a brass or steel clamp will but not enough to make an material difference.

A Power's 5 lamp is not too small to carry 60 amps. on.

I have been an operator in this theater nearly a year. As this machine (Power's 6A) is the first I ever operated, I am not as well acquainted with the machine as I would like to be. Can you advise me as to where I could get books that would help me in this way, or are there any? Thanking you in advance for any information that you may give me, Yours respectfully, Ben Stevenson, Julesburg, Colorado.

I would advise you to write the Nicholas Power Company, 88-90 Gold street, New York, and request them to send you one of their books, "Hints to Operators." This book will give you the information that you want in regards to Power's machines.

There are several good text books on the market and if the above named book doesn't give you all the information, then write me, enclosing a self-addressed envelope and I will mail you a list of good text books.

Carlisle, Ind., Jan. 8th, 1917.

I have been a reader of MOTOGRAPHY for some time and have not asked any questions. Now I am the manager of a picture theater in a small town of about 1,000 population. I have my own plant, one 12 H. P. Special Electric Oil Engine, two dynamos, one is a 110 volt, four K. W. from which I run the house lights and fans, and the other one is a 60 volt, three K. W. from which I run the arc lamp. There is nothing used from the 60 volt machine but the arc lamp. I am using belt off of each fly wheel for the two machines. I am not having serious trouble and have been running the plant for three years and have not missed a night except Sunday nights. Now all of the trouble I have is with the condensers. It seems that I cannot get the right combination. I have a 69-foot throw and get a blue spot in the center of the screen. I have used two 7½ condensers and have tried two 6½ condensers and have also tried a 6½ and a 7½ condenser and cannot get rid of the blue spot. I have a Motiograph machine, 1913 model, and a gold fibre screen. I use Bio carbons 5/8 inch soft cored in bottom and top. I have set the carbons in every shape that they would burn. I have switched the condensers in several different ways, but still the spot appears. I have moved the lamp house backward and forward with no good result. The spot is about the size of a half bushel basket. I hope you can suggest something to get rid of this trouble and then my projection will be perfect. Now, the reason I describe my whole outfit to you is that you may know that there is such an outfit on the map and you may receive more questions than I have asked you about the outfit. Hoping my letter is not too lengthy and that I may see an answer soon in MOTOGRAPHY, I remain, Very truly yours, Wm. Tongate, Carlisle, Indiana.

Try the following suggestions and see if they do not help you out in your trouble. Set the top carbon about ⅛ inch behind the lower one, using soft cored carbons top and bottom. Try 6½ and 7½ condensers, moving lamp house forward and backward with light on the screen. If this does not clear it, then use 6½ and a 8½ or 9½ and try them the same way. If that combination does not clear then use the 7½ and 8½ or 9½ and I am sure that one of these combinations will clear the screen for you. The reason I say 8½ or 9½ is that I do not think you can get an 8½.

If you cannot get results from the above suggestions then write me and give the size of the screen and the size of the lens tube and I will see if I can help you further with it.

Your letter is not too long and it is a pleasure to get a letter giving the information like your letter does. I wish that all the managers and operators would be sure to send in all the information possible when writing to the department so that I may know just what the conditions are that is causing the trouble.

The Broken Film

The villain held the dagger high,
The hero calmly met his eye;
A blaze of flame—the room in smoke—
Wow! The crazy film has broke!

A yawning chasm far below!
There the hero meets his foe;
A hurtling body—this ain't through—
Gosh! The film has come in two!

Suspense, the secret of the game;
The thing that makes the movie fame.
To loosen up a mind that's rusted—
That's the reason why they're busted.

Two New Selig Plays

William N. Selig has announced the forthcoming release in K. E. S. E. service of "The Princess of Patches," a Mark Swan melodrama adapted for the screen by Gilson Willets. The release date is scheduled for Monday, January 22. The stars include Vivian Reed and Charles Le Moyne. Director Al Green escorted a company of Selig players to Tennessee, where true-to-life plantation scenes were filmed. Among the more exciting episodes announced for "The Princess of Patches" are the blowing up of a house-boat, the fight for life in the dead of night, etc. Beautiful photography, including scenes taken in southern cotton plantations and to the attractiveness of the photoplay, it is stated.

"The Heart of Texas Ryan" is the title of the Selig Red Seal play announced by William N. Selig for release in K. E. S. E. on Monday, February 12. It is said to be a gripping drama of the Texas borderland. Certainly an exceptional cast of players is announced, including George Fawcett, Bessie Eyton, Frank Campeau, Tom Mix, Goldie Colwell and others. Some exciting episodes are announced, including a realistic forest fire, a sensational hand-to-hand battle between two infuriated men—a battle which is said to compare favorably in realism to the fight in "The Spoilers," and an automobile crash. Wonderful views of the Texas cattle country are presented. According to K. E. S. E. the release is an exceptional one.

Superintendent Applauds "Charity"

"Charity?", the remarkably successful sociological play, written by Linda A. Griffith, wife of David Wark Griffith, producer of "Intolerance," and "The Birth of a Nation," is receiving encomiums from men and women associated with the welfare departments of municipal governments throughout the country.

President John R. Freuler of the Mutual Film Corporation has received scores of letters, among the most recent being one from Myron A. Kesner, superintendent of playgrounds and public recreation of Dallas, Tex., who writes:

"The subject is well chosen as this is the day of the child and one in which special stress is being laid on the constructive development of child nature.

"Your picture is splendid. It touches the low and high spots in a manner that compels people to think. Economic conditions can only be ameliorated through public condemnation of such practices as are depicted in your picture."

Similar letters of approval have been received from municipal officials of fourteen large cities, as well as from officers of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and similar organizations engaged in national reforms.

Directors' Association

The Directors' Association, of Los Angeles, which numbers among its members most of the big directors in the country, was formed by four men who just talked it over one evening and brought it into being—William D. Taylor, now with the Fox company, Alan Curtis, the Universal comedy director, Joseph De Grasse of the Universal and Murdock MacQuarrie, actor and director.

The concern is now a national affair and nearly every director of note is affiliated. It is doing a lot of quiet good and is self-protective rather than aggressive. Taylor, Curtis, De Grasse and MacQuarrie have every reason to be proud of their first little talk.

Greeting Around the Globe

It has remained for a woman to be the first to send a wireless message around the globe. Standing in the midst of a company of scientists and men of letters Annette Kellermann, the star in "A Daughter of the Gods," on the last day of 1916, dictated to a Marconi operator at 42 Broad street, New York, the twelve words, her message to the war-stricken world.

Fox Has 13 Photodramatic Companies

William Fox now has thirteen different photodramatic companies. Seven work on the Pacific coast and six in the Fort Lee, N. J., studios.

NEW ART DRAMAS EXCHANGES

South and West Invaded—Next Art Dramas Feature to Be "Her Good Name," Starring Charming Jean Sothern

The Art Dramas Corporation has established offices in Dallas and New Orleans, from which it will distribute features to Oklahoma, Texas, Louisiana and Arkansas. These offices will each week distribute the Art Dramas releases from the studios of the Van Dyke Film Corporation, the William B. Sherrill Feature Corporation, the U. S. Amusement Corporation, the Erbograph Company, and Apollo Pictures, Incorporated.

Francis J. Gilbert, a widely known and popular exchange man in the southwest, is the head of the new organization and will take personal charge of the Dallas office.

The western offices are to have headquarters in Salt Lake City and Denver for the distribution of films through the states of Colorado, Utah, Wyoming and Idaho. These offices will be known as the Photoplay exchanges and will be under the direct personal supervision of Lester Parks, who is a widely known exchange manager and owner. The western branch will distribute each week the current Art Dramas, featuring Jean Sothern, Gertrude McCoy, Anna Q. Nilsson, Dorothy Bernard, Alma Hanlon, and others.

Mr. Parks is engaging a force of experienced road men for the exploitation of the pictures. Publicity and service departments are being installed in both offices to assist the exhibitors.

At the studio in New York City all directors are busy on productions. The next Art Dramas feature will be "Her Good Name," in which Jean Sothern is being starred. The piece is being directed by George Terwilliger at the Van Dyke studios.

The story of "Her Good Name" was written by Horace Hazeltine and scenarioized by Elfrid A. Bingham. It tells a rather pathetic story of a country girl whose innocence leads her to commit certain indiscretions which her father misinterprets. He kills a man who he thinks had debauched his daughter. She adopts the only way to save him from the gallows and admits that the murder was justifiable under the unwritten law. During a particularly dramatic trial scene, however, the truth is discovered and the girl's reputation remains unsmirched.

Supporting Miss Sothern in this production are Earle Metcalfe, who plays the leading part opposite her; William H. Turner, character actor; Arthur Housman, Barbara Castleton, and Mrs. Parker Spaulding.

Unity Releases "Glory"

The initial statement of the organization of the Ultra Pictures Corporation made by Mr. Cobe last week has evidently started something, judging from the number of inquiries Mr. Cobe is receiving, requesting full particulars in regard to the company.

The exhibitors seem to be unanimous in stating that the opportune time has arrived for the launching of a distributing company which will furnish nothing but high class features, as the average producing company who also distribute their products do not keep up the quality of their pictures, which is the main reason for independent bookings.

A new producer in the motion picture field is Maude Lillian Berri, a comic opera star of other days. Her first production will be "Glory," which is to be released January 15, by the Unity Sales Corporation.

Juanita Hansen and Kolb and Dill are featured in the new release.

The old adage, "Truth is stranger than fiction," was certainly proved during the making of "Glory."

The story deals with the discovery of oil and in seeking a location for the scene, the director decided on San Louis O'Bispo in Los Angeles County, California.

The heroine, Miss Hanson, was playing with some dirt and sand for the action of the scene and naturally quite a few of the oil workers in the vicinity came to watch the scene being made. After Miss Hansen was through with her work she found that her hands and clothing were very dirty and the odor of oil was extremely strong.

Upon investigation by some of the oil men, it proved that Miss Hansen had accidentally been working in what is known as a seepage, a spot where the oil has soaked through to the surface of the earth. A drill was immediately erected and in a few days a fair sized flow of oil was struck.

Miss Hansen was called over to suggest a name and christen the well. She immediately christened the well "Glory" in honor of the picture.

Pathe's "Patria" Party

In honor of the premiere Chicago run of the opening installment of "Patria," Pathe's patriotic preparedness picture, to be a bit alliterative, which is shown at the Majestic Theater, devoted to the highest class vaudeville, C. W. Bunn, manager of the Chicago branch of the Pathe Exchange, Inc., entertained at dinner in the Congress Hotel, a party composed of representatives of the daily papers and motion picture magazines. Also present at the party were John Bowman, former manager of the Chicago International Exchange, and J. K. Burger, International's assistant general manager. The business of the former International office is of course now transferred to the Pathe Exchange.

After the dinner, the guests viewed the first chapter of the serial at the Majestic Theater, where the pictured appearance of Mrs. Vernon Castle will each week share honors with smart vaudeville headliners.

Judging by the eager attention and applause given "Patria" by the critical audience and the fact that it held them to the close of the bill indicate that the serial has a strong appeal. Mrs. Castle is an excellent photographic subject, and the scenes in which she plays her role of "Patria" appeal especially to high class audiences. The exciting race which closes the first chapter called forth a burst of applause. It is a real thrill.

The serial has received very favorable reviews in the regular dramatic columns of the Chicago dailies, as well as in photoplay departments. Its timeliness, its "different" character and above all its attractive star, have won it an unusual reception.

Elkas Rejoins Vitagraph

Edward Elkas, renowned character actor and player of distinctive heavy types, has returned to the Greater Vitagraph studios. He will be seen in a new play, as yet unnamed, in which charming Dorothy Kelly starred with Charles Richman in "The Secret Kingdom," is being featured under the direction of John Robertson.

Mr. Elkas will be recalled for his work in "The Dollar and the Law," "The Scarlet Runner," "The Enemy" and "The Man Behind the Curtain."

Detroit Exhibitors and Censors

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Detroit will in the future hold monthly, instead of weekly meetings, as has been done in the past. The Hotel Cadillac was the place of the first meeting, held January 4. A luncheon preceded the meeting. The office of Secretary William H. Shiek, in the Majestic building, will, however, be the weekly meeting place of the executive committee.

State censorship again threatens Michigan. During the present session of the legislature, some time in January, Fred Easton will introduce a bill which calls for a state board of censors. This board would comprise three people, one a woman, and would be paid for its services. All films prior to the showing in the motion picture theater, would have to be screened before this board, which would have the right to reject, any or all of the film if it so deemed.

Fred Eaton would provide a reasonable censorship over all films that go into Michigan by creating a board of censors that would meet in Detroit. Each picture would have to pay a small fee to the censors, and if passed would have a seal placed on the picture, showing the state's indorsement.

Buffalo Bill in Films

Shortly before the death of Buffalo Bill (Colonel William F. Cody) Essanay completed a feature, "The Adventures of Buffalo Bill," the star being none other than the old scout himself. He has enacted before the camera his entire life from the time he faced his first peril as a pony express rider, back in the 50's, through the great Indian wars in which he played so prominent a part, and up until his declining years.

To obtain accuracy and realism the pictures were filmed almost in toto in the Bad Lands of the Dakotas. Five thousand Indians mobilized from the varied government reservations, and United States troops are seen in the conflicts.

The production portrays the battle of Warbonnet. The historic knife duel between Buffalo Bill and Chief Yellow Hand of the Indians, during this battle is shown.

"The Adventures of Buffalo Bill" will be released soon through the Kleine, Edison, Selig, Essanay service.

Cleveland Exhibitors Meet

The Republic building was the meeting place for the Motion Picture Exhibitors of Cleveland last week.

The principal business of the meeting was the biennial election of officers.

W. J. Slimm was elected president, Henry Lustig, vice-president; Walter Horsey, financial secretary; Sam Bullock, corresponding secretary, and A. Maher, treasurer. Members are elected to office in January and July.

Robert Lieber has been "cleaning up" with Selig's "The Garden of Allah" in Indiana, according to reports from the Hoosier State. The big spectacle with Helen Ware and Tom Santschi has been playing to "S. R. O." at the Circle Theater, Indianapolis. The Indianapolis newspapers have been full of flattering reviews concerning the Selig feature play.

Film Waste

The picture industry has probably more wastage than any other business to-day. Mack Sennett says that all pioneers are wasteful. Taking a Keystone comedy as an example, when a picture is finally finished, he says, the director takes enough film to make five or six pictures into the projection room. On the average there are four or five feet of film cut for every foot that remains. The record in this regard, is Mabel Normand's new feature play "Mickey," some of the scenes of which have been made twenty times. Not so much because the first takes were not good, as because the director would think of ideas that would call for retakes.

Mack Sennett, in speaking of Mabel Normand says: "Mickey, the adorable little girl around whom this story is woven, is as real to me as though she were a living person. If I let Mickey go out on the road to seek her fortune, knowing there was one more thing I could have done for her, I would feel as though I had starved a child. Robert Louis Stevenson said that good writing consisted not in writing, but in re-writing. Our way of re-writing, is to take a lot of film and use a little of it."

New Dressing Rooms for Signal

Plans are being drawn and estimates made for the construction of a new row of dressing rooms for the Signal players. The new rooms will be twenty in number and will be built large, with windows on two sides and hot and cold running water installed in each room. The building of these new rooms will permit the tearing down of the old ones which will increase the studio space nearly one hundred per cent. In addition to these improvements, the original stage is to be torn out and a new one built in a more suitable portion of the grounds. The new stage will be somewhat larger than the old one and will be so constructed that it can be converted into an indoor studio for use during rainy weather.

Re-Books Film in Interests of Fashion

Go to the motion picture show for your fashion hints.

That's what the women in Columbus, Ohio, do whenever a Valeska Suratt photoplay is being flashed upon the screen.

Manager Muller, of the Colonial Theater in that city, in requesting a return engagement of a Suratt film from William Fox, wrote:

"One of my patrons told me that she had seen the picture five times and although she had sketched Miss Suratt's coat, she did not quite understand how the back of it was draped. When I had similar requests from others, I decided that a re-booking was absolutely necessary."

Mary Loans Hawks

At the request of the Metropolitan Opera Company, Wells Hawks has been loaned by Mary Pickford for a brief period to take charge of the Chicago and Middle West cities publicity for the Diaghileff Ballet Russe. The genial Hawks left Saturday night for Chicago and several of his many friends saw him off at the Grand Central. Mr. Hawks had charge of the road publicity of the ballet last season before becoming personal representative for Miss Pickford. He will continue his work for the Artcraft star on tour and on his return to New York.

EXHIBITORS OUST BAD FILMS

Theater Men of Fresno, California, Organize to Enforce Clean Standard of Pictures and Advertising—Will Aid Police

The exhibitors of Fresno, California, have taken a step that might well be taken in many a town and city.

In consequence of the recent agitation against the showing of films of a questionable nature, and the public advertisement of these, Fresno theater owners at a conference have signed an agreement to discontinue the exhibiting and advertising of such plays. All owners that attended the meeting signed the agreement. The others will be approached at once.

The agreement is addressed to the mayor and board of police and fire commissioners, and guarantees that the owners will refrain from exhibiting pictures not entirely clean. The agreement also pledges the assistance and cooperation of the theaters in enforcing the local ordinances dealing with this question.

A short time ago the Lyric was forced by the police to remove certain billboard displays from the front of the theater because of the nudity of the figures. This is the first time that police regulation has been deemed necessary, but other houses have in the past presented plays of a questionable nature.

Members of the organization formed yesterday will enforce their own rules. If a member exhibits or advertises a picture that transgresses the agreement, then the chief of police will be appealed to and the censorship requested.

Following is the agreement:

Hon. Mayor A. E. Snow,

To the Board of Police Commissioners:

Whereas, films have recently been shown in Fresno containing matter more or less censorable, and,

Whereas, the Fresno public has expressed disapproval of such films,

Therefore, we, the undersigned exhibitors do hereby agree to refrain from exhibiting any films of a questionable nature, or of using any advertising matter that might give offense to Fresno public, and to assist the local police in enforcing any infringements of the local ordinances.

William Desmond Ince Play

William Desmond soon will make his re-appearance as a romanticist-adventurer, when he is presented by Thomas H. Ince in a whirlwind Triangle Kay-Bee drama, entitled "Blood Will Tell." In this play, the popular star is said to have eclipsed all his previous screen successes, not excepting even that in "Bullets and Brown Eyes."

"Blood Will Tell" is the swiftly moving tale of a care-free collegian, whose weakness threatened to undo the work of two generations, but whom love made worthy of his heritage. It is enacted partially under the busy marts of commerce, partially in the atmosphere of the college campus, and partially in the glare of Broadway's white lights, unfolding, all the while, the pages of a compelling, human narrative.

Desmond has the role of "Samson Oakley III," a high-spirited, good-natured youth with no more of his forebears' sound business judgment than a jackrabbit. He is at once impressive and entertaining in the rendition of the part and goes rollicking through the greater portion of the story, until Fate—and a girl—lead him to mend his ways.

In the supporting cast, are seen Enid Markey, David M. Hartford, Howard Hickman, Margaret Thompson, Charles Gunn and J. Frank Burke. The production was directed by Charles Miller and photographed by Clyde DeVinna, with art direction by Robert Brunton.

KEITH BOOKS "PATRIA"

International Serial Featuring Mrs. Vernon Castle and Released by Pathe to Run Throughout Big Circuit in New York

A motion picture deal of considerable importance was consummated last week between E. F. Albee and Paul Keith, of the Keith circuit, and executives of the International Film Corporation. Arrangements were made for the showing of "Patria," the International photoplay serial of preparedness, at all theaters of the Keith circuit in Greater New York. This marks the first appearance in Keith theaters of a motion picture serial.

Up to the present time the only pictures shown at the Palace Theater have been news pictorials, while at the other Keith houses nothing has been shown except features par excellence.

In booking "Patria" at the Keith houses, Messrs. Albee and Keith are introducing an innovation and establishing practically a new policy for their popular houses, particularly for the Palace. The latter theater caters to the most exclusive and refined audiences, as, in fact, do all the Keith houses. It was because of this that "Patria" appealed so strongly to the management.

Mrs. Castle's personal appeal and her great pop-

The estimated loss at this fire is $200,000. Production was immediately removed to the Rolfe plant.

There was no trouble getting sufficient action in the scene around the Popular Plays and Players studio at 226-230 West Thirty-fifth street, New York, when fire broke out there on January 3. The fire was under control when the picture above was taken. The small picture shows Mme. Petrova and May Siebel. The star and General Manager Robert North did a real hero and heroine act in rescuing Miss Siebel from the flames.

ularity had much to do with the decision of the management to book "Patria" for the Keith houses. The enormous success of the private showing of "Patria" in the grand ball room of the Ritz-Carlton several weeks ago was also an important factor. Upon that occasion more than one thousand of the cream of New York society flocked to the hotel to view the picture, and were most enthusiastic over it. So great was the crowd that two showings were given, the second starting at 11 o'clock. Since the showing at the Ritz, similar private showings have been held at the Congress Hotel in Chicago, at the Tremont Theater in Boston, Bellevue-Stratford in Philadelphia, Georgian Terrace in Atlanta, St. Francis in San Francisco, Alexandria in Los Angeles and at leading hotels in Providence, Omaha, and other cities. Arrangements are now being made for a great private showing in Washington, D. C.

Mrs. Castle, who has been in the west, is now back in New York City for a rest after her strenuous activities in the filming of "Patria."

"Perils of Our Girl Reporters"

Reports from the Mutual Film Corporation's sixty-eight exchanges indicate that the Mutual has hit on one of the most compelling subjects ever presented in pictures in the series of newspaper stories, "The Perils of Our Girl Reporters," which began releasing December 28. At even this early date after the first public showing of the opening story of the series, "The Jade Necklace," enthusiasm enough has been shown to insure an unparalleled run for those fascinating stories out of the daily life of the newspaper woman, a theme which has always proved interesting in fiction.

In the advertising of "The Perils of Our Girl Reporters," the Mutual Film Corporation, in accordance with its usual policy of "service beyond the films," is doing everything possible to aid the exhibitor in interesting his patrons in this series.

Five thousand twenty-four sheets, picturing a thrilling moment from the picture, in colors, have been posted in one hundred and fifty of the leading towns and cities of the country.

These cities include New York, Chicago, Boston, Atlanta, Ga.; Buffalo, N. Y.; Cincinnati, O.; Cleveland, O.; Detroit, Mich.; Indianapolis, Ind.; Philadelphia, Pa.; Pittsburgh, Pa.; St. Louis, Mo.; Washington, D. C.; Dallas, Tex.; Kansas City, Mo.; Minneapolis, Minn.; New Orleans, La.; Omaha, Neb.; San Francisco, Cal.; Seattle, Wash.; St. Paul, Minn.; Denver, Colo.; Duluth, Minn.; Dayton, O.; Des Moines, Ia.; Fort Wayne, Ind.; Erie, Pa.; Memphis, Tenn.; Muskogee, Okla.; Baltimore, Md., and other places of equal importance.

He has just absorbed an overdose of the "punch" which characterizes "The Perils of Our Girl Reporters."

At the same time the exhibitors who are booking the series receive a press book prepared by the publicity department of the Mutual, which furnishes them with copy to use in newspaper advertising in their local papers.

Four page "Movie Novelettes," containing the remarkable newspaper stories from which the screen stories were made, written by Edith Sessions Tupper, one of America's foremost short story writers, have been published and are being obtained by exhibitors to give as souvenirs to his patrons. The "Novelettes" are illustrated by pictures, in colors and black and white, of big moments from the picture plays and portraits of the popular players. Thousands of these are being handled by each Mutual exchange.

"The Jade Necklace," the first of the series, which made its appearance December 28, was followed by "The Black Door," released January 4, "Ace High," the release of the week of January 8, is the third of the series, and is followed by "The White Trail."

Brady-Mades Going Well

Director General William A. Brady and the other officers of the World Film Corporation are naturally elated with the remarkable increase in the demand for World Pictures Brady-Made. This growth has been manifested in all parts of the country and also in Europe, where the Gaumont Company, of London, reports that the entry of these pictures has been amazingly successful. Mr. Brady recently said:

The further we proceed the more I am convinced that the present policy of the World is the right one, with no come-backs. It involves nothing more than getting out the best pictures it is possible to get out, and selling them absolutely on their merits, never promising anything more than we can deliver.

Even and reliable excellence is what we are after. We have many reasons for the belief that the public has grown to look for precisely this quality when it sees a World Brady-Made announced, and that the condition is becoming more and more widespread every day.

A Denial by Goldwyn

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation issues an emphatic denial of rumors that it has made an arrangement with any distributing organization to handle the Goldwyn productions, when made. This denial, given out by Samuel Goldfish, its president, is as follows:

Seemingly deliberate rumors are being spread by one or more producing and distributing organizations that they have closed or are closing a deal with the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation to distribute the Goldwyn Pictures. These rumors are utterly false.

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has made no arrangement or contract of any kind for its distribution. This corporation has announced specifically that no effort will be made to release its pictures until at least six and perhaps as many as twelve complete pictures are on its shelves. This plan will be followed to the letter.

Hart Lassos Two Men

The deftness with which William S. Hart handles the lariat occasionally in his productions has excited wide comment among the photo-playgoers of the country. Hart found occasion to rejoice recently over the fact that he had studied and experimented with the lariat, when he was filming the production of "Truthful Tulliver," the

New Triangle Kay-Bee play. In this drama, which concerns the adventures of a western newspaper man in a lawless Arizona mining town, he is called upon to ensnare two men at once in the loop of his lariat, while riding a horse.

Fourth of McClure's Series

McClure's Pictures has compiled a special advertising book for each exhibitor who shows "Seven Deadly Sins," the series of seven five-reel features that are to be released through the Triangle exchanges at weekly intervals.

McClure Pictures is endeavoring to aid the exhibitors in every way possible, and this book will show the many different ways of advertising that can be used in connection with the "Seven Deadly Sins" series.

Nance O'Neil has made "Greed," one of the five-reel features, a drama of great power. "Greed" will be the fourth of "Seven Deadly Sins," the first of which—Ann Murdock in "Envy"—will be released on January 29.

Theodore Marston, director, has outdone himself in "Greed" by presenting the Wall street atmosphere without the ancient scenes of brokers' offices and curb antics.

"Greed" tells of Shirley Mason, who has come to a fortune, but who wants to make more money. George Le Guere tries to keep her from gambling but she will not be stopped.

Miss O'Neil plays "Alma," a woman who formerly had been involved in shady stock transaction, but who is now leading an honest life. Miss O'Neil becomes involved with "Doc" Danton, played by Harry Northrup, who knows of her past life.

Shirley Mason is drawn into the rather wild life led by the Wall street gamblers. George Le Guere seeks to protect her.

Richard Cole (Robert Elliot) and Jimmie Hobson (Alfred Hickman) are in love with Miss O'Neil and Shirley Mason, respectively. Shirley, in spite of the efforts of her friends, is caught in Danton's net. Miss O'Neil strives to protect her. Only by sacrificing herself can she make Danton give up Shirley.

The test of friendship comes. Miss O'Neil is about to surrender. In a dramatic scene, Danton is killed and a glancing bullet strikes Miss O'Neil, temporarily affecting her mind. Le Guere is convicted.

The denouement is a startling one and in the end Shirley is effectually cured of her desire to yield to "Greed."

Alfred Hickman, who supports Miss O'Neil, has played in many of her stage successes and in most of her photoplays. Harry Northrup's picture career includes excellent work for Vitagraph in "The Christian," "The Battle Cry of Peace," "The Blue Envelope" and "The Secret Kingdom."

The celebrated dramatic star, Nance O'Neil, is on the left and below are tense scenes from "Greed," fourth of McClures' "Seven Deadly Sins" series, in which the powerful and popular star is featured.

A Real Court Room

In the good old, bad old days of the moving picture, one of the things that called forth derision and brought sorrow to the hearts of all onlookers, versed in legal procedure, was the all too frequent court room scene with its lawyers acting as no lawyer was ever known to act and its judges administering justice without regard to code or precedent.

Now all this is changed. In the Triangle Kay-Bee play, "The Sin Ye Do," by John Lynch, in which Thomas H. Ince presents Frank Keenan, a big scene in court constitutes the chief situation of the story. Both Keenan and the director, Walter Edwards, devoted much time to making this correct in every detail. And it so happened that Lynch, the author of the piece, was himself a student at the Cornell Law School in the days when Charles Evans Hughes was a professor at that institution. He therefore was able to avoid any glaring inaccuracies in the construction of his manuscript.

The big court room setting—perhaps the largest and most elaborate ever used in a picture play—was designed, it is said, from photographs of a court room in New York City. No detail was omitted; even the furniture was especially made to exactly reproduce the original. The judge's robe was ordered by telegraph from a firm of New York outfitters who make a specialty of legal raiment. Its cost ran to three figures and it was used but for a few minutes; but it carried the satisfaction of being just what it should be.

Mutual Captures Marie Cahill

Miss Marie Cahill has joined Mutual's forces. The brilliant actress will appear in a series of two-reel comedies to be released every two weeks.

The date of the first release has not yet been set, but studio operations are already under way in New York where the Mardan Photoplay under contract with the Mutual Film Corporation is preparing for immediate work in connection with Miss Cahill's engagement.

Marie Cahill, brilliant stage star who will appear in Mutual two-reel comedies.

Miss Cahill is the latest among many distinguished stars, including Marjorie Rambeau. Nance O'Neil and Gail Kane, with whom contracts have been recently announced by President Freuler, of Mutual, and the engagement of the clever comedienne is renewed evidence of the Mutual's determination to live up to Mr. Freuler's announced policy, "only big stars for the Mutual."

Miss Cahill and her associate stars added to the already strong array of talent in the Mutual forces, including Mary Miles Minter, Richard Bennett, Margarita Fischer, and Charlie Chaplin—the world's greatest comedian.

Marie Cahill is known from one end of the country to the other as one of cleverest comediennes on the American stage. Before signing a contract with the Mutual Miss Cahill had appeared but once on the screen, when her most successful comedy, "Judy Forgot," was screened.

Because it is Miss Cahill's idea that a comedy, to be effective must be short and snappy, two-reel productions will be the limit of any picture in which she appears under present contract.

"La Belle Marie," as she is known among her friends of the profession, has a way of dispensing original comedy business that is distinctively her own and just as distinctively popular with a fun-loving public. The first of the Cahill comedies will be "Flirting with Romance," and this is said to be one of the screamingest things in which the young actress ever has appeared.

Among Miss Cahill's most pronounced successes on the talking stage in recent years were "Molly Moonshine," "Nancy Brown," "Marrying Mary," "The Boys and Betty," "The Opera Ball," and "Flirts." As a comedienne she has probably a larger following throughout the country than any other laughmaker.

Miss Cahill is a native of Brooklyn, N. Y. She made her first stage appearance in that city in "Kathleen Mavourneen" and later her regular professional debut at Poole's Eighth Street Theater in "C. O. D." Her next appearance was as "Patsy" in Charles Hoyt's "A Tin Soldier," and after that she appeared at the Shaftesbury Theater in London in "Morocco Bound." Later productions in which Miss Cahill scored successes were "Sporting Life," "A Runaway Girl," "Monte Carlo," and "Three Little Lambs."

Steger to Direct Norma Talmadge

Joseph M. Schenck has entered into an agreement with Julius Steger, president of the Triumph Film Corporation, whereby the next and future screen appearances of Miss Norma Talmadge, to be released through the Lewis J. Selznick Enterprises, Inc., will be personally directed by Julius Steger and Joseph A. Golden. Messrs. Steger and Golden have a long list of successful photoplays to their credit, the most recent of which are "The Prima Donna's Husband" with Holbrook Blinn, Clara Whipple and Kathryn Browne Decker, and "The Libertine" with John Mason and Alma Hanlon.

Mr. Steger has selected for Miss Talmadge a powerful story, based upon a well-known play of modern life, which will afford this talented artist splendid opportunities to reveal to the fullest extent her rare dramatic gifts.

Mr. Schenck is also associated with Messrs. Steger and Golden in the production of a photoplay of which Miss Evelyn Nesbit Thaw will be the star, the story of which is a page from life eminently fitting her personality.

Hughie Mack Comedies Scheduled to Ap

The Hughie Mack "Big V" comedies from Greater Vitagraph, distributed through the Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. exchanges, will hereafter be made at Vitagraph's western studios. Hughie Mack's company has left the Flatbush studios for Los Angeles.

The "Big V" comedies, from February 5 to April 9, are as follows:

February 5, "Rips and Rushes"; February 12, "He Never Touched Me"; February 19, "Cops and Cussedness"; February 26, "Dubs and Drygoods"; March 5, "Masks and Mishaps"; March 12, "Footlights and Fakers"; March 19, "Bombs and Blunders"; March 26, "Turks and Troubles"; April 2, "Pests and Promises"; and April 9, "Guff and Gunplay."

Seven of the Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. exchanges have doubled their comedy one-reel bookings with the Hughie Mack and the Frank Daniels series in the last three months.

Conan Doyle Writes Scenario

Sherlock Holmes again makes his appearance in the latest of A. Conan Doyle's detective story, "The Valley of Fear." The scenes are laid in a mining district of the United States, and carried across the waters to London.

The film, a six-reel feature, like the story is full of action, mystery and deductions, and holds the audience tense from beginning to end. Sir A. Conan Doyle, the author, personally gave his attention to the cast.

This picture is sold on a State Right basis, and is handled exclusively by John W. Heaney, 1480 Broadway, Longacre Building, New York.

"White Raven" at Rialto Theater

Ethel Barrymore's magnificent Metro-Rolfe production, "The White Raven," was the feature attraction at the Rialto Theater, New York, the home of important first-run features, for the week beginning January 14.

COMING PARAMOUNTS

George Beban and Charming Vivian Martin Are the Stars on the Unusual Program for Week of January 29

In all the annals of stage and screen, there is no star who has won distinction in the portrayal of a racial type in quite the degree that George Beban has, as an interpreter of the Italian. In the Morosco-Paramount picture "His Sweetheart" he adds to these laurels. This picture, together with the Pallas-Paramount production of "The Wax Model," starring Vivian Martin, will be released on the Paramount Program the week of January 29.

"His Sweetheart" is a tender, quaint photodrama showing the real heart and soul of the Italian with the added interest of American environment and a strong story of politics and love. It was written by George Beban and Lawrence McCloskey, and the characterization of Joe Ticiarri, is a sincere portrayal of the temperamental, excitable and lovable Italian in America.

"The Wax Model" in which Vivian Martin is starred was written by G. Vere Tyler, and is a serio comic tale of a French model in England, who nearly starves to death for love.

In "The Wax Model" Miss Martin is seen as the foremost and most popular artist's model in London. She has not won this prominence by beauty of face and figure alone, but by her charming and youthful manner and grace.

A young Englishman falls in love first with the wax figure and then with the original, but seeing her enjoying the gay Bohemian life which he does not understand, turns him against her. She writes many notes of explanation after he has lost faith in her, but they are returned unopened. How she saves his sister from the clutches of a married man, how her love leads her to abandon her profession and into poverty, and how the tangled threads are finally unravelled and she is restored to the man she loves, are brought about in an interesting and gripping manner.

Thomas Holding is featured with Miss Martin and others in the cast are George Fisher, Helen Jerome Eddy, Senor Buzzi, Kathryn Vaughn and others.

Surrounding the Paramount Program for this week are three short-reel subjects of importance; the fifty-first edition of Paramount Pictographs, the magazine-on-the-screen; the fifty-second series of "Weekly Trips Around the World," personally conducted by Burton Holmes in which he takes his fellow travelers from the Georgian Bay to Winnipeg, and also a Klever Komedy, "A Honeyless Honeymoon," in which Victor Moore plays the leading role.

In the Paramount Pictographs are four interesting subjects dealt with this week, the first of which is "An Army on Skis."

Burton Holmes, the world's greatest traveler, has been taking the American public to some interesting points on his Canadian pictorial tour, and during the week of January 29th, his trip leads from the Georgian Bay to Winnipeg.

Victor Moore has made an unusual success of his single-reel comedies since he has entered the field of "little features" and in the "Honeyless Honeymoon" he is a screaming success from start to finish.

Paramount is issuing all of its pictures during 1917 in an exceptionally good amount of free advertising and publicity aids for the exhibitor's use, the inauguration of which campaign some time past has aided the exhibitor to a large extent to greatly increase his business.

Ohio Exhibitors to Hold Convention

The exhibitors of Ohio will hold their first meeting at Cleveland the early part of February, according to plans being made by the Screen Club of that city.

The North Eastern branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America proposed the convention and exposition. The local organization, following the request for co-operation with the national body, will appoint committees to perfect plans for the meeting.

The indications are that the event will take on the proportions of a larger exhibition of progress in the motion picture industry, than anything hitherto attempted in that locality.

Corresponding Secretary George H. Oldfield of the Cleveland screen club has resigned and M. A. Malaney has been elected to fill the office. New members elected are F. C. Backus, Canton; P. L. Turner, Exchange Service Company and J. Goldberg, Unity Film Company.

New Metro Releases

"Bridges Burned," with Mme. Petrova as star, will be released on the Metro program January 29. The star herself is the author of "Bridges Burned," which was adapted for the screen by Wallace C. Clifton. Perry Vekroff directed the production, made at the Popular Plays and Players studios, and photographed by Neil Bergman.

"Bridges Burned" is a story of the European war and of the modern trend of feminism. The story is laid in Ireland, and Mme. Petrova is Mary O'Brien, daughter of one of the landed gentry, who has come to want in his declining years. As a result of circumstances far removed from the conventional, Mary marries Ernest Randal, the younger son of an English baronet. But since Randal has had to be persuaded into the marriage Mary, in order to keep her own self-respect, declines to live with him. She goes away and obtains employment in a cotton mill, and brings up her son alone and unaided. She organizes the Uplift Club for the welfare of the factory hands, becomes known as one of the most progressive women in Ireland, and is widely quoted. Randal traces her at last, and tries to induce her to return to him, but she refuses.

To win her good opinion, Randal enlists and goes to war. O'Farrel, the owner of the mill, who has tried to win her love, also enlists, and these two men, battling for their country, are also fighting to win the heart of the woman they love. But as the race is not always to the swift, nor the battle to the strong, the result is a complete surprise, and the story, while having powerfully dramatic incidents, has that supreme heart interest which is one of the prime requisites of a successful drama on stage or screen.

Mahlon Hamilton is again Mme. Petrova's leading man in this production, having the part of Ernest Randal.

Ethel Barrymore, Metro's famous star, B. A. Rolfe, president of Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., and John W. Noble, her director, with the supporting cast and executive staff, have gone to Jacksonville, Fla., where the exterior scenes for Miss Barrymore's stupendous screen version of Edward Sheldon's famous play, "Egypt."

Arrangements for the arrival of the entire party have been completed by David Thompson, who preceded the troupe. Mr. Thompson also arranged for the Viola Dana Company and is now attending to the preliminary arrangements for Emmy Wehlen's company, which will be under the direction of George D. Baker.

Metro's representation in Florida during the next few weeks will be greater than any company that has ever pictured plays in the South. Miss Barrymore's company will be in the South for three or four weeks.

Miss Dana's company will be there for about a month, perhaps longer, as a second picture play for this dainty little star has been practically decided upon, and this is also true of Miss Wehlen, whose second story for screening in the South has just been selected.

ESSANAY CREATING NEW ONES

"Burning the Candle" with Henry B. Walthall, "The Trufflers" and "On Trial" to Be Produced with Powerful Casts

Henry B. Walthall's next Essanay feature is to be a powerful exposition of a man's fight with drink. "Burning the Candle" is the title of this photodrama. Mr. Walthall and his company are now on the Gulf Coast near New Orleans being filmed in the preliminary scenes. The picture will be released March 18 through Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service.

Two other notable features are in the process of preparation by Essanay for near-future release. These are "The Truffiers," presenting Nell Craig in a drama of Bohemian life; and "On Trial," adapted from the Cohan and Harris stage hit of that title.

"Burning the Candle" hinges on a young southerner, reared in ignorance of the saloon and the "wet" cafe, who obtained a position in a New York cotton broker's office. His introduction to saloons and the cafe cocktail mark the beginning of his downfall, the loss of his bride's love, and eventually the wrecking of his home. He falls to the very gutter. It is the true love of his young wife, however, which finally draws him up from the depths of depravity to which he has sunk, and makes a man of him again.

Mary Charleson, who so creditably portrayed the role of the little nurse in Walthall's great drug feature, "The Truant Soul," again is seen as his leading woman in "Burning the Candle." Harry Beaumont is directing the production. He directed "The Truant Soul."

March 4 has been fixed for the release of "The Trufflers." The Keys Service will handle the film.

This story was written by Samuel Merwin, the well-known magazine writer, and was published serially in the Cosmopolitan magazine. It is based upon life in the artist's colony at Grenwich Village, New York. Miss Craig is shown as an artist's model—a modern Trilby. The plot is replete with tensely dramatic situations. The picturized revelries in the artist's studios offer some stupendous scenic effects. Fred E. Wright is directing the production.

The release date for "On Trial" will be announced shortly. This photodrama is one of three which Essanay will produce from Cohan and Harris stage successes. The other two will be "Hawthorne of the U. S. A." and "Young America." James Young is directing the production of "On Trial."

A "SHRINKING MARKET"

A. W. Goff of Greater Vitagraph, Gives Shrewd View of Present Conditions in Industry and Condemns False Advertising

Here is a new and keen light on present day film conditions.

A. W. Goff, assistant general manager of the Greater Vitagraph Company, when he was in Chicago last week, stated that the film industry was in the midst of a "shrinking market."

The expression requires a lot of thought, and the ideas brought forth by Mr. Goff in speaking of the conditions from that angle are so correct and truthful in their import that they cannot be passed over without the consideration of which they are deserving.

What is the average exchange and distributing company subjected to at the present time? Mr. Goff says:

That there is an over-production of features is a fact.

The confusion of the exhibitors throughout the country as to what they want to book is a fact.

The elimination of the unfair and unjust exchange manager and salesman is a fact.

The injustice of State censorship without restriction is a fact.

And, with all those facts and numerous others staring the manufacturer in the face and the difficulties to which he is subjected by the increased cost of production and the non-increase of admission price to the public, is gradually forcing into the film industry a "shrinking market," and if all of the conditions surrounding the manufacturer, the exchange, the exhibitor and the public are weighed in the balance, we can readily appreciate that the term a "shrinking market" has a wide scope of meaning.

After all, the public is the determining factor as to the future success of the picture industry and probably has had thrust upon it such a conglomeration and variety of productions, a great percentage of which have been undesirable from many viewpoints, they have come to where they are skeptical and do not recognize the truth of advertising when it appears proclaiming any picture a masterpiece.

They have seen advertised and announced through every conceivable channel of publicity, pictures that would aid in the moral support of a community, pictures that had lessons that would benefit young and old, and a vast number of other misnomers, and when it has come to the actual viewing of that picture, have met with such disastrous disappointment that the skepticism has hit the reputable manufacturer a blow that it will take a great amount of time to overcome, and the unstaple manufacturer or distributor has thrived through his imposition upon the public, and as the elimination process reaches into these weaknesses of the industry, the "shrinking market" must be the final conclusion, and is unquestionably upon us at the present time.

Above is a real bit of human acting in Triangle-Kay Bee's "The Crab." The little lady is Thelma Salter. Center, above, is more human nature, as evidenced in "Jim Bludso." Wilfred Lucas of Fine Arts has the main part.

Above is a glimpse of Constance Talmadge in "The Girl of the Timberlands," and in the oval is Robert Harron and young Miss Mildred Harris in "The Bad Boy," another new Fine Arts presentation.

Bessie Love in "The Doll Shop"

Director Eddie Dillon of the Triangle Fine Arts is in the midst of a production of "The Doll Shop," a comedy drama written by Anita Loos, directed by Eddie Dillon and featuring the inimitable Bessie Love.

In this production is told a very pretty love story showing how a young girl with an inherent hatred for wealth and all that wealth implies finally falls in love with the son of a millionaire who, she thinks, is a poor chauffeur. Miss Love plays the part of a girl who takes care of her uncle. This uncle is lazy and would rather smoke his pipe and talk to himself than work. He keeps telling his niece that if it wasn't for the fact that his employer, who is very wealthy, did not grind down upon his poor employees, he would be worth millions instead of having to work for small wages. The niece believes it, but when she takes a trip to the factory where her uncle is employed and finds the employer, working 18 hours a day, living in fear of his life from dissatisfied employees, and eating dyspepsia tablets, her eyes are opened. Then she discovers that the man with whom she has fallen in love is a millionaire.

Carmel Myers, the daughter of Rabbi Isadore Myers, plays an important part in the production. Roy Stewart, who played opposite Lillian Gish in "The House Built Upon Sand," plays the leading masculine role in "The Doll Shop."

New Triangle Komedies

Much interest is being shown in the new single-reel Triangle Komedies, which are announced for immediate release. Twelve komedies have been completed, and are declared by impartial critics to be crammed with clean fun and rib-tickling situations.

Titles and release dates have been announced at follows:

"Love Under Cover" and "The Pipe of Discontent," January 14; "A Noble Fraud" and "Honest Thieves," January 21; "Heart Strategy" and "A Grab Bag Bride," January 28; "The Male Governess" and "The Road Agent," February 4; "Won by a Foot" and "His Deadly Undertaking," February 11; "The Telephone Belle" and "When Hearts Collide," February 18.

The demand for single-reel comedies has been insistent since the beginning of the motion picture industry, and will undoubtedly continue as long as pictures retain their universal appeal. Triangle has utilized its best resources in putting on these short laugh-makers and this assurance should be enough to stimulate the interest of exhibitors generally.

In the William Fox Studios

About the time that Washington's birthday is observed, this year, a new photoplayer, who is said to be a great-great-grandniece of George Washington, will be seen in a William Fox production.

The new acquisition with the distinguished ancestry is Eleanor Washington, who is descended directly from John Augustin Washington, a full brother of the General.

Miss Washington has been in motion pictures since 1912, when she began her career in the silent drama with the Majestic Company. She is the wife of Harris L. Forbes, the photoplay director.

Another newcomer to Fox Films is James Grover Tarver. Mr. Tarver, who is seven foot four inches, is undoubtedly the tallest man in filmdom. He will work on the west coast.

Valeska Surratt completed another feature for William Fox last week, and Stuart Holmes will furnish his big production within a few days.

Harry Hilliard plays opposite Miss Suratt. Kenean Buel was in charge of the direction. Miss Suratt has the only important feminine role in the picture.

Stuart Holmes' film will unquestionably be one of the most remarkable cinema presentations William Fox has ever made. The story for it was taken from a book of which millions of copies have been sold. The new screen play gives the noted Fox villain a role entirely different from any which he has ever essayed.

Last week the Holmes company went aboard the replica of the Half-Moon, Hendrik Hudson's famous vessel, which is moored in the Hudson at the foot of Bear Mountain.

Another production which will soon go into the cutting room is Virginia Pearson's new starring vehicle.

Progress is also being made on Dustin Farnum's premiere production under the Fox standard.

William Fox's next release is "One Touch of Sin," with Gladys Brockwell in the stellar role. Richard Stanton directed the film. Jack Standing will be seen in the role opposite Miss Brockwell.

"One Touch of Sin" will be released on January 29.

Chaplin Dolled Up

Charlie Chaplin is probably the only man in the world who could wire across the continent for a statue of himself and get it within twenty-four hours.

When the world-famed comedian was requested

A certain rather well known comedian and the replica of himself he ordered in New York from Los Angeles.

to contribute a doll, dressed like himself, to a charity bazaar he wired from Los Angeles to a famous doll shop in New York for a three-foot replica of himself, minus nothing from the dinky derby down to the shuffling shoes.

The doll was at its destination in Chicago twenty-four hours later. Not even the stickpin in the flimsy red tie had been forgotten, and the well-known cane hung on the bisque arms in a most Chaplinesque manner.

Coming Captain Jinks Comedies

The Captain Jinks series of Greater Vitagraph comedies, starring the redoubtable and renowned Frank Daniels, is definitely assured at least until March 12 through Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. exchanges. The following titles name the Captain Jinks comedies from February 5 to March 12:

Feb. 5, "Captain Jinks' Wife's Husband;" Feb. 12, "Captain Jinks' Love Letters;" Feb. 19, "Captain Jinks' Cure;" Feb. 26, "Captain Jinks' Explosive Temper;" March 5, "Captain Jinks' Kids;" and March 12, "Captain Jinks' Alibi."

The Captain Jinks series has met with great favor throughout the United States. Popular Frank Daniels has created in these Vitagraph pictures a new standard of laugh-making and the response has been extremely gratifying both to producer and the many exhibitors who have booked them.

Norma Talmadge on Colors

Of all the problems faced by the motion picture star, that of the choice of colors in clothes is the most vexing, according to the lovely and popular Norma Talmadge, now starring in her first Selznick-Picture production "Panthea."

What difference can colors make, one is tempted to ask, when the picture is presented entirely in black and white on the screen.

"That is what I am often asked by my layman friends," says Miss Talmadge, "but when they come to the studio they quickly understand why we have to be so careful in the selection of every gown and hat we wear. For instance, light blue photographs nearly white, whereas bright red photographs absolutely black and all intermediate shades have their different effect in photography. The combination of colors I sometimes use are ridiculous in themselves but when photographed the gown gives an entirely different effect of light and shade and appears really becoming.

"If I know it is going to be a hurry call I study my costuming as I work the first rehearsal. If it is a costume play of another period books must be studied and authorities consulted. If it is a modern production I can get many of my ideas from up-to-date fashion books and shop windows.

"It is impossible to over-estimate the importance of 'dressing for the part.' It is part of the characterization of every role. Many an excellent performance has been spoiled by the star because of the inappropriate manner in which she garbed herself.

Earle Williams in "Apartment 29"

Earle Williams, Greater Vitagraph's popular star, has been chosen to play the leading role in "Apartment 29," an original story by Edward J. Montagne which is particularly adapted to Mr. Williams' methods of character portrayal. Miss Ethel Grey Terry will play opposite Mr. Williams. In the supporting cast are Billie Billings, Denton Vane, L. Johnston, V. Stuart, Bernard Seigle, Frank Mason and Tommy Brett. "Apartment 29" is scheduled for release through Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. exchanges on April 16.

Florence Crawford Now a Fox

Florence Crawford, who has appeared in many productions for several big film companies, is now with William Fox.

She has been cast for a part in June Caprice's picture-play, now in work in Georgia.

Miss Crawford is a native of Pittsburgh, and some of her most recent work was done with Universal.

"The Girl of the Timber Claims," featuring Constance Talmadge and directed by Paul Powell, is now receiving its finishing touches at the Fine Arts Studio.

Tungsten Lamps for Studio Work

THE MODERN SOURCE OF LIGHT

ELECTRICITY is used to produce light in various ways. There are at least five practical and entirely different systems. But three of these have come into common use and are known to almost everybody: The carbon arc, the incandescent, and the mercury vapor arc. The latter, because of the actinic or photographic qualities of its rays, has come into prominent use in motion picture studios as a substitute for daylight. Some forms of carbon arc have also been used occasionally in this work. The incandescent lamp, mainly because of its comparative feebleness, has heretofore seen little use as a photographic illuminant. It is, however, by far the most convenient of all forms of light, and in the new forms developed in recent years is replacing both carbon and mercury arcs in every department of activity.

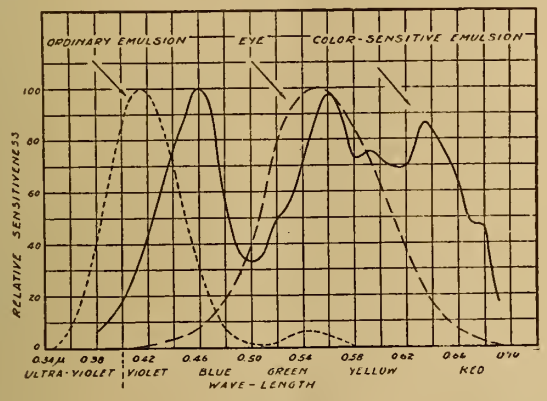

Fig. 1. Relative sensitiveness of eye, ordinary emulsion, and color sensitive emulsion to rays of equal energy value.

With the introduction of gas-filled construction in its manufacture, the Mazda lamp became well adapted to the needs of photography, and although it has been available for only two years, the Mazda C lamp ("C" designating gas-filled construction) is now in extensive use in this field. The considerations involved in its application to the various branches of photography may be most readily explained by a brief preliminary analysis of the photographic process and its relation to light, for which we are indebted to W. E. Brewster of the engineering department, National Lamp Works of the General Electric Company, who has discussed this subject in the General Electric Review.

Photographic processes, with a few exceptions, depend for their operation upon the chemical alteration by light of a sensitive coating, upon some base such as glass or celluloid, of a salt of silver suspended in a medium, usually gelatin. The coating is generally known as an emulsion. The photographic image which is thus produced is made visible by the application of some developing agent which reduces the altered compound to metallic silver. The density of the image, that is, the amount of silver reduced, is a measure of the photo-chemical energy, or actinic intensity, of the light with respect to some particular emulsion. Emulsions such as are used on ordinary photographic plates are most sensitive to ultraviolet violet and blue light. These same emulsions, if modified by means of organic dyes which absorb rays such as green and red, may be rendered photographically sensitive to green and red light also. Thus emulsions may be made which will register the brightness values of all colors more nearly as the eye sees them. The curves of Fig. 1 show the relative sensitiveness of the eye, an ordinary emulsion, and a color-sensitive emulsion, to the rays of the spectrum. It is evident from these curves that if a light is to be used for producing approximately correct photographs of objects as they are seen, its spectrum should include all the rays from violet to red. Also, it is obvious that the candle-power of a light source is not necessarily a measure of its ability to affect a sensitive emulsion; a yellow light of a given candle-power may be more active in altering the silver of a yellow dyed emulsion than a green light of higher intensity. The emulsions in common use are sensitive to color in widely varying degrees and it is evident therefore that, in stating the actinicity of a given light, reference should always be made to the type of emulsion on which the actinicity is based.

The filament of the Mazda C lamp operates at a higher temperature for a given life than that of the Mazda B (vacuum construction) and produces light containing a higher percentage of blue and violet rays. Although the light emitted by the filament of a Mazda C lamp has a higher percentage of green and red and a lower percentage of violet and blue rays than noon sunlight, there are enough of the latter to meet even the exacting demands of motion-picture photography; and, since the light is produced by incandescence, it gives the continuous spectrum which, as previously explained, is essential in an illuminant that is to be of general use in photography. Furthermore, the Mazda C lamp has those merits which are common to all Mazda lamps. It is portable and will operate on alternating or direct current. It gives a steady light of constant quality, whose candle-power is well maintained throughout life. It is simple, noiseless, and reliable in operation. It is sturdy in construction, and its design is such as to permit the direction of its light to be efficiently controlled by reflectors and the intensity by resistors. Its installation and operating costs are both low; and the user may readily avail himself of new developments as they are made from time to time.

The amperes, watts, candle-power, and ordinary-emulsion actinic intensity of a Mazda C lamp vary with changes in voltage. With an increase in voltage the candle-power increases at a faster rate than the wattage, and consequently, for a given consumption of electricity, a greater quantity of light is obtained by operating at a voltage higher than normal. For example, if a Mazda C lamp is operated at a voltage 10 per cent higher than the voltage rating appearing on the lamp, the electrical consumption is increased only 16 per cent while the candle-power is increased 37 per cent. Of even greater importance is the accumulative effect on the ability of the light to reduce the silver in an emulsion; for not only is the total quantity of light increased, but, of the total a higher percentage is actinic. An increase in voltage to 10 per cent above normal produces an increase in actinic intensity of 50 per cent.

In general, multiple Mazda C lamps have an average life of 1000 hours when operated at their rated voltage. When lamps are operated at a voltage 10 per cent higher than normal, their life is decreased to approximately 300 hours. It is obvious, therefore, that the advantage of operating lamps over-voltage to secure greater actinic intensity is tempered by the disadvantage of having to make more frequent lamp renewals. The fact should not be overlooked that the lighting service conditions for which lamps are, in general, rated are entirely distinct from those which obtain in studio lighting. In motion picture photography, where short exposures are necessary for successful results, overvoltage burning becomes essential.

The short exposures required in motion picture photography demand a high intensity of actinic light. At the same time, in order that the reproduction of facial expressions may be natural, the brightness of the light should not be such as to cause the subject to squint. These contrary requirements led to the development of a special blue-glass bulb for 1000-watt Mazda C lamps, which is known as the "photographic-blue" bulb. This bulb screens out about two-thirds of the light emitted by a Mazda C lamp filament, but it transmits all those rays which are actinic to ordinary emulsions and nearly all those rays which are actinic to those green and yellow sensitive emulsions that are usually called orthochromatic. Furthermore, the light from photographic-blue-bulb Mazda C lamps appears like daylight, and its ordinary-emulsion actinicity per candle-power is so nearly equal to that of daylight that it may be mixed with daylight without any allowance being made in judging the proper time of exposure. This is an important quality, for it enables the photographer to estimate amounts of exposure by the brightness of the subject in accordance with his usual practice. Obviously, these advantages, namely, the reduction in brightness and likeness to daylight, can be utilized to the fullest extent with ordinary emulsions. and since most motion picture photographs are made on such emulsions, the photographic-blue-bulb Mazda C lamp is particularly adapted to the illumination of the usual studio.

For the sake of convenience, the lamps may be mounted on portable, adjustable stands equipped with suitable reflectors and diffusing screens. A type of porcelain-enameled steel angle reflector that is especially satisfactory for use on such stands is shown with its distribution curve in Fig. 2.

No matter how the lamps are mounted, in wiring them it is important to remember that a general ruling of the inspectors calls for a separate 10-ampere switch for each 1000-watt lamp. In this connection, it should also be borne in mind that the voltage at which the lamp operates is an essential consideration in photography, and good practice calls for wiring of such size that less than 2 volts drop will occur between the lamp and the service connection. No. 12 wire will usually meet this requirement. If a pair of lamps is connected to an ordinary lamp socket, the drop in voltage may be from 5 to 10 volts. Unless lamps of correspondingly low voltage rating are used, the actinic intensity of the light is likely to be too low. Therefore, care must always be exercised to provide proper wiring for a minimum voltage loss so that the lamps can be operated at a voltage fully up to their rating.

Photographic printing, with the exception of work on emulsions such as are used in blue printing and bichromate printing, may be done to advantage with clear-bulb Mazda C lamps. In view of their higher efficiency, printing may be done with greater speed and greater economy of operation by substituting these lamps for the Mazda B lamps used in the numerous printing machines which were designed prior to the introduction of the Mazda C lamp. The wide range of sizes obtainable makes it possible to select the lamps best fitted to individual requirements.

Motion picture photography demands, as previously stated, an exceptionally high intensity of actinic light because the exposure given to each picture is of the order of only one-fiftieth of a second. However, since the actors must face the light, its brightness should be kept as low as possible; and since the light from photographic-blue-bulb Mazda C lamps is visually only one-third as bright for a given ordinary-emulsion actinic intensity as that from clear-bulb Mazda C lamps, the blue-bulb lamps are particularly adapted to the illumination of motion picture production studios.

The lighting requirements of a studio vary according to whether only one size of set, or any size of set that a scenario may call for, is to be illuminated. For a single size of set the equipment may be fixed permanently in position. In some of the larger studios, sufficient equipment is provided to light one or more of the largest single sets that may be required and is so mounted that it may be readily moved from one set to another. Such an arrangement permits the greatest economy in equipment, for although it may require hours to rehearse a scene, only a few minutes are required to record it on the film; and it is only during these few minutes that a high intensity of illumination is required.

Sets commonly used are from 10 to 20 feet wide and from 10 to 30 feet deep; the depth is the distance between the background and the front line. The camera is placed from ten to fifteen feet back of this front line. Since the pictures are 1 inch wide, the horizontal angle of view with a lens of 2-inch focal length is 28 degrees. Although it might be assumed from the rectangular dimensions of the stage that it would be necessary to illuminate the area included by them. It is apparent from the diagram in Fig. 3 that light is actually needed only on the area ABCDE which is but two-thirds of the total area of the stage. Because of this and also because, as pointed out above, the ratio of area to illumination is not constant, the power requirements for motion picture stages should be expressed in terms of the total wattage needed rather than in watts per square foot of their rectangular area. On this basis from 15 to 100 kilowatts are required for lighting the range of sets given above. All, or nearly all of the power should be expended in 1000-watt photographic-blue-bulb Mazda C lamps, the number of lamps required depending upon the degree of overvoltage burning. In some cases it is desirable to provide from one to four high current arc lamps for giving emphasis to the most important part of a set, more character to the faces of the actors, or to produce the effect of daylight shining through a window. These arcs usually take from 3 to 4 kilowatts, and the number used in a given set depends on its size and the emphasis desired.

The proportion of the light emitted by the lamp filament which reaches the set depends upon the design of the reflectors used and the arrangement of the reflector-equipped lamps. In general, porcelain-enameled steel angle reflectors utilize the light to the best advantage. These reflectors are sturdy and have a reflecting surface which may be cleaned, without appreciable impairment of its reflecting qualities, as frequently as the collection of dust may demand. The arrangement of the units depends on the size of the set and the lighting effect desired. Small sets should, as a rule, be lighted entirely from lamps arranged along the front and sides, while large sets or sets of medium size should be lighted from above as well. For greatest economy of operation, overhead lamps should be used sparingly and placed well toward the front of the scene. They should be equipped with reflectors of the type shown in Fig. 4, which distribute the light according to the curve shown, and suspended about 12 feet above the floor, at which height they will not interfere with the scenery. Front and side lamps should have reflectors such as shown in Fig. 2. In addition to the above, several Mazda C lamps equipped with angle reflectors and connected to flexible conductors should be provided for lighting fireplaces, tables, and for other special purposes.

Fig. 7. Section of film taken with eighty-three 1000-watt photographic-blue-bulb Mazda C lamps and one arc lamp.

Lamps for lighting from the sides and front may be mounted on portable floor stands or on frames supported by overhead trolleys. The trolley system is particularly commendable in that its use eliminates the annoyance to the actors resulting from heavy cables strewn about the floor. However, even where trolleys are used, one or more floor stands should be provided for lighting those parts of a set which are inaccessible to the trolley-supported lamp.

The voltage rating appearing on Mazda lamps is chosen with due consideration to the more common uses to which the lamps are to be put. When lamps are applied to special service where there is a departure from normal conditions, the voltage rating is of interest only as a basis upon which the performance of the lamps may be predicted. As previously explained, more actinic light per watt may be obtained by burning the lamps at a voltage higher than their rating. In general, motion-picture studios may be illuminated to the best advantage by burning the lamps 10 per cent above their voltage rating during the exposure of the film, and about 20 per cent below their rating when light is needed for rehearsing. The fact that the voltage on Mazda C lamps may be readily varied is important since it makes available for rehearsals a light of comparatively low intensity which gives the same character of lighting as that produced during exposure. Figs. 5 and 6 show diagrammatically how the voltage may be varied on typical alternating and direct current circuits. The voltage values as given will result in a voltage at the lamps 10 per cent above their rating with the switch closed, and 20 per cent below their rating with the switch open. If the line voltage is sufficiently high, the necessary variation in voltage can be obtained with lamps rated at any particular voltage within the range of 105-125 volts by inserting a reactance in the line as shown in Fig. 5; a short-circuiting switch, so controlled by a spring or weight that it will stay closed only when so held, should be connected across the reactance or resistance so that the higher voltage may be conveniently thrown on the lamps. When the line voltage is below 116 volts, it is necessary, in order to obtain the desired increase in voltage of 10 per cent above normal with regular lamps, to use an auto-transformer if the supply is alternating current as shown in Fig. 6, or a motor-generator in case of direct current. An auto-transformer is a simple and inexpensive device, whereas the cost of installing a motor-generator would seldom be justified.

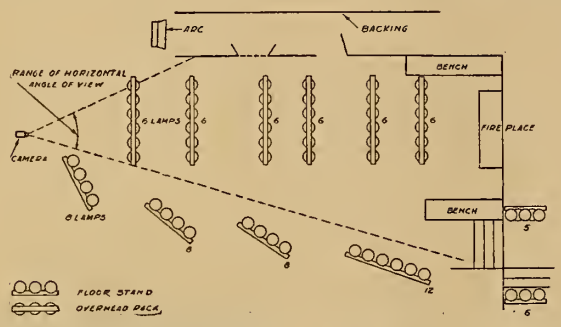

Fig. 8. Arrangement of lighting equipment for set shown in Fig. 7.

In motion picture studios, it is often desirable to vary the intensity of illumination in imitation of sunrise, sunset, or an approaching storm, or to produce the "fade-away" effect. This can best be accomplished by placing a dimmer in the circuit. The various steps of the dimmer should consist of resistance grids of sufficient capacity to carry the total current of the circuit.

An example of motion picture photography with Mazda C lamps is furnished in Fig. 7 which shows a section of the film of a large set taken at a lens aperture of f-4.5 with eighty-three 1000-watt photographic-blue-bulb Mazda C lamps and one high-current arc arranged as shown in Fig. 8. The fact that light from the blue-bulb lamps is so nearly like daylight that it may be used in conjunction with daylight has resulted in the installation of these lamps in a number of sunlight studios. With the aid of the lamps these studios can operate regardless of weather conditions. Mazda lamps are likewise in extensive use in studios relying entirely on artificial light. One large studio has just installed 600 1000-watt photographic-blue-bulb Mazda C lamps and expects to increase the installation to a total of 1300 lamps in the near future.

Press Club Sees "Intolerance"

A private presentation of "Intolerance" was given to the Press Club of Washington, D. C., by D. W. Griffith, on January 8.

Mr. Griffith was called upon for a speech during the intermission. He talked upon the attempts that had been made to establish a Federal censorship of film productions. This form of persecution he argued against eloquently, claiming it would stifle genius and which, but for its defeat, in the days of Milton would have shackled the great writers of the English language to such an extent that the world would have been deprived of some of the greatest works of literature.

He compared the effect such a law would put upon producers of worth-while photoplays, with the muzzling of the press. How, he asked, could any of the writers present toil to produce fine ideas and thoughts into writing if they were in constant fear and dread that the board of censorship might not allow it to be printed.

Marjorie Rambeau in Second Mutual

Marjorie Rambeau's second Mutual Production will be a picturization of "Motherhood," a play by the well-known author and playwright, Frederick Arnold Kummer. Miss Rambeau has already commenced work on this production at the studio of the Frank Powell Producing Company under the direction of Frank Powell.

"Motherhood" will mark Miss Rambeau's second appearance on the screen. She has a role entirely different from that of "The Greater Woman," which introduced her to the photoplay stage, and one which will afford her a wide range of artistic expression. "Motherhood" is a virile, gripping, modern story, unusual in treatment and built, as the title indicates, on a theme of universal appeal.

Mary Fuller Supports Lou Tellegen

Mary Fuller has been engaged by the Lasky Company to appear in support of Lou Tellegen in "The Long Trail," the director of which will be Howell Hansel.

The name of Mary Fuller is identified with the old Biograph when she appeared in the productions of that concern at the time that Mary Pickford. Like so many of the youthful players of that time, Miss Fuller had had only a brief stage experience, but by persistent effort and the cultivation of her natural ability, she rapidly developed into a great favorite. She has played with many companies.

"The Great Secret"

Five Episodes of Metro's Serial Featuring Bushman and Bayne. Reviewed by Geo. W. Graves

THIS serial picture is to run in fifteen chapters released weekly, the first chapter to be released January 8. The titles of the first five episodes are: "The Secret Seven," "The Casket of Tainted Treasure," "The Hidden Hand," "From Sunshine to Shadows," and "The Trap." According to the synopsis sheets,

Francis X. Bushman in "The Great Secret."

the picture was produced by the Serial Producing Company, and is presented by the Quality Pictures Corporation. The story, by Fred de Gresac, was adapted for the screen by William Christy Cabanne and directed by him also.

Featuring the two popular stars, Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, supported by a large and efficient cast, of which many of the gangster types are "the real article," and having as its base a story of good serial possibilities, "The Great Secret" holds its own in entertaining power with the current serials. There is a great deal of rapid action in each episode, although the story doesn't develop very rapidly in its general theme, and each episode has at least two thrills, and sometimes more. Many of these thrills consist of violent fights, and these struggles, by the way, are more than mere make-believes. You feel that someone is getting "biffed" good and hard, and it is evident that those "rough-neck" characters who are working in the picture are game for taking a good deal from the heavy arm of the star.

In the first episode the thrill consists of blowing up a barn, the pieces of timber falling all about the players; in the second it is a sensational rescue of the heroine from being run over by a railroad train, the hero dashing across the track in front of the oncoming train and scooping the girl up from his position on the auto's running board, and so on, there always being a good number of fights. Seeing the episodes one right after another makes these encounters pall upon one, but then, this is not the way the public is going to see them.

W. Christy Cabanne is due for some praise for his part in the picture's making. He gets after the detail and presents the story in a lucid fashion, leaving nothing to be imagined or guessed at by the spectator. The directing of a serial always involves some difficult work. Most of the picture's "rapid fire" scenes are handled with realism.

"The Secret Seven" is a group of wealthy men, convening in regular session for criminal purposes, presided over by a man known as the Great Master. Thomas Clarke, one of its members, has stolen a large sum of money from his brother and left his niece penniless. He now wishes to atone for this deed and to repay the niece, Beverly Clarke, in full. But the Secret Seven does not so decree, since Clarke has pledged his fortune to this group. Dr. Zulph is appointed to see that Clarke carries out his promise. But the multi-millionaire dies without the criminals attaining their point, and the treasure falls into the hands of William Strong, an idle bachelor looking for adventure, who comes to Beverly's aid. When Strong is attacked by thugs, his Japanese servant, Wee See, takes charge of the treasure. There are many complications which take the form of sub-plots, and, of course, these constitute the substance of the individual episode, but at the end of the fifth episode, the treasure is still out of the grasp of the criminals, although they have captured Beverly and put her through the third degree. For some mysterious reason, the Great Master does not hold Strong, but, working against one of his own men, Dr. Zulph allows the club-man to get away. Of course there are many rescues, but there are just as many captures, and the end of the fifth episode sees the trouble cloud gathering again.

"The Master Passion"

Edison Five-Reel Drama Released January 8. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

A STORY of an old-fashioned kind, with situations which usually make an appeal, forms the basis of this picture, released through K. E. S. E. Made some time ago, the photography and acting is below the modern standard for feature plays. Judged by critical standards, one cannot give much praise to the story. Yet the average photoplay fan will like the offering. Its chief element of popular appeal is its romantic story with "heart interest" and emotional appeal. Its various ramifications hold the attention, though they are narrative rather than dramatic.

The plot deals with a woman who for ambition sacrifices first the man she loves, and later a happy home life, for ambition. But when the last test comes she makes a supreme sacrifice for her daughter. In the construction of the story one can easily point out faults. It is illogical and unconvincing. But many, perhaps the majority of theater patrons, merely follow the story of a play and sympathize with its characters, and these will like the play because the story is clear and varied and there is plenty of chance to sympathize.

Mabel Trunnelle and Robert Conness have the leading roles. Others in the cast are Helen Strickland, Richard Tucker, Olive Wright and Bigelow Cooper.

The Story—The ambitious mother of Julia Long urges her to give up the man she loves and marry George Bender, who is wealthy. The marriage proves a very happy one until Bender becomes so deeply absorbed in business that he neglects his wife. She is thrown much into the company of a teacher of singing. The man convinces her that she has a wonderful voice and urges her to go with him to Paris. Though not in love with the singer, Julia is influenced by ambition and leaves her husband and little daughter to elope with the man.

In Paris she becomes a famous opera singer. Years later she meets her daughter, grown to womanhood, when the father brings the girl to Europe to break up a youthful love affair. Through the daughter Julia becomes reconciled with her husband. Then Julia finds that the girl is engaged to a dissolute nobleman and to prevent the marriage she confesses her former relations with this nobleman. This destroys her husband's love for her, and he takes the daughter back to America. Julia loses her voice and faces poverty, when her husband, realizing her great sacrifices, returns to her.

"Carriage Call No. 101"

Fifth Episode of Vitagraph's "The Secret Kingdom." Reviewed by George W. Graves

THIS episode is replete with melodramatic action, coming fully up to the demands of the serial standard in this respect. Louis Joseph Vance introduces a new character into his story at this point—Ramon, Simond's cunning Prime Minister, who is to figure largely in the subsequent evolution of the story's plot. M. Savatz overhears a plan of Phillip's to call, in the guise of a chauffeur, for Julia at a masquerade ball in New York, whisk her by automobile over to New Jersey and be married. Phillip is successfully put out of the way and left to expire by gas asphyxiation, while Ramon, in the chauffeur's costume, makes away with the girl. He and M. Savatz take the girl to an insane asylum, where Savatz has pre-arranged matters with the authorities, who understand that Julia is her daughter and that the girl thinks she is a princess. But Juan, the faithful servant of Phillip, has not been asleep. He learns of Julia's fate and procures the address of the asylum. Phillip, by unhooking the receiver of his telephone, gets in touch with the hotel office, and the latter's investigation saves his life.

The interest is well sustained in this episode and Charles Richman and Dorothy Kelly, the stars, maintain a good acting average. Some of the developments, if not novel, are at least clothed in new form, giving the desired effect. Some things happening in it may strain the credulity a little, but the serial picture has a certain mission, and this serial is fulfilling it as well, if not a little better than some of the most presumptuous.

"Infidelity"

Art-Dramas Release in Five Parts Produced by Erbograph. Reviewed by George W. Graves

THIS drama, featuring Anna Q. Nilsson in a part which she enacts with telling realism, holds its own in entertainment value with the other Art-Dramas releases, although as a complete picture it is not exceptional enough dramatically to outclass any of the previous offerings of this company. The story, written by Ashley Miller (also the director) finally arrives at a climax of good proportions, employing along the way some Hindoo hypnotics, or shall we say mental telepathy, giving the piece an air of mysticism and resulting in added conviction in this particular story. The two principal members of the supporting cast are Eugene Strong, a not very essential hero, and Miriam Nesbitt, who plays a dignified role with dignity and conviction.

Those who sat near us in the theater playing "Infidelity" seemed quite impressed with it. The picture has the right constituents for general popularity, exhibiting touches of originality, being acted by an efficient cast, and free from anything like shabby production. Its story at least has the advantage of having the chief climax in the right place. The exhibitor knows the value of Anna Q. Nilsson's name. Featuring it pretty big in the theater advertising is pretty sure to stimulate action around the ticket window. The exhibitor need not be afraid of speaking of her work in this particular production.

Because of his superheated jealous tendencies, Wayne is sentenced to a long term in prison, while his wife, embittered by her experience, brings up her daughter, Elaine, in a strict manner. Elaine's twentieth year sees her a student in an art school, at the head of which is, all unknown to her and her mother, Wayne, her father, bearing now an assumed name. The girl falls into the hands of Ali Delna, a hypnotist, through whose dastardly operations it is finally made apparent to Elaine's lover that she is false to him. But Wayne, learning of what is going on, frees Elaine from the elusive clutches of Ali and brings the lovers together. And then, to make the finish of the play complete, the long postponed meeting of Wayne and his wife occurs. The latter, for a long time determined to keep Elaine from marrying because of her own unfortunate experience, now removes the weight of her decree from the shoulders of the young people, and at the end two couples are supremely happy.

"The Price of Silence"

William Fox Drama in Five Reels Features William Farnum. Reviewed by George W. Graves

IN "The Price of Silence" William Farnum is cast as a senator, who, for the sake of the girl he loves, accepts a bribe and is sent to prison, misjudged by both the girl and the world. The story, by Wm. Piggott, develops enough situations of power to rank it in a place a little above what has recently been coming from the Fox studios. It has been produced on a large scale and its action and well-sustained interest carry one along with it at a breathless pace. All things do not convince, but enough do for the dramatic purpose. The picture, too, has the advantage of a "different" ending. Fate doesn't intervene this time to bring about a jolly wind-up, but the hero, having defied the law, even though for the sake of another's honor, is shown behind the bars, in the last scene, forsaken by everyone.

William Farnum shows himself able to handle these "Eastern" roles with a good deal of conviction. He doesn't have a chance to exhibit any emotional ability until the picture is well spent, but when he got into dramatic action the audience at the Academy of Music in New York seemed very much stirred. In Mr. Farnum's support are several people of note. Charles Clary, who plays a very fine villain, had an important role in "Joan the Woman." Frank Clark and Brooklyn Kellar handle their parts nicely, and so does Gordon Griffith, who has the part of a crippled child worker.

Frank Damon, senator, has one aim in life—to wife out child labor in his state. McCarthy, a corrupt factory owner, tries to bribe him but is vehemently repulsed. It seems that the deceased father of Grace, Frank's sweetheart, unknown to her, had stolen one hundred thousand dollars' worth of bonds. to save Grace's honor, but is unable. Desperate, he accepts a bribe from McCarthy (the bribe consisting of the robbed package of bonds, filled with empty paper) on the consideration that he, Frank, will defeat the child labor bill. Frank defeats the bill, but later, overcome with remorse that he has sacrificed thousands for the sake of his sweetheart, he confesses, and receives the maximum penalty for accepting a bribe. His sweetheart, not knowing the reasons for things, and the world, also ignorant of Frank's motives, the senator is placed in prison—his only joy being in the fact that the child labor bill is going through.

"The Evil Eye"

Blanche Sweet in Mexican Story Lasky Offering. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

MEXICAN atmosphere and Mexican types are a feature of this latest Paramount-Lasky release starring Blanche Sweet. Unusually beautiful Southern California locations serve as backgrounds for the action and the large number of extras which throng many of the scenes are well chosen and made up as the Mexican villagers among which the woman doctor works. The unusual locale, the situations having a timely interest, and the popularity of Blanche Sweet give this picture whatever value it has. It will not bore an audience, but on the other hand it is not as satisfying as most Lasky productions. One reason is that Miss Sweet is not convincing as the woman doctor. We doubt whether her Dr. Katherine Torrance would win much confidence as a physician in any community, though she might be well liked personally. The story, which begins in a promising fashion, somehow fails to get anywhere until near the close, when an unpleasant episode is brought in to form an ending.

Her wayward brother was not the least of Katherine's troubles.

The portrayal of Mexican life and superstitions is well done and convincing and when the story opens we watch with interest the advent of the woman doctor and the beginning of her fight against conditions. But she accomplishes little except to arouse the superstitious fear of the natives. Also she wins the love of the owner of the ranch who saves her from the violence of the enraged Mexicans but who would have done better never to have allowed her to venture among them. There are other moments of suspense and action, and the story ends with Katherine respected by the natives and betrothed to Sheldon, the rancher, after a sad and unnecessary scene in which Sheldon assumes the blame of having betrayed a Mexican girl when he believes Katherine's brother the culprit. Then both are proved innocent.

The acting of the supporting cast is generally good, many bits of characterization among those playing Mexican roles standing out vividly. Especially one notes Walter Long as the revengeful Mexican and Ruth King as the wronged girl. Tom Forman as Sheldon, Webster Campbell as Frank King and J. Parks Jones as Katherine's brother sustain their roles well. The story is by Hector Turnbull.

The Story: Katherine Torrance, a doctor, comes to a Mexican settlement to fight a diphtheria epidemic which has broken out in the vineyards of which Leonard Sheldon is manager. With her is her brother, Clifford, a frivolous youth. Katherine arouses the fear of the Mexicans and they declare the light she wears on her forehead when examining the throats of her patients is the "evil eye." Because they refuse to obey her instructions, a large number die of the plague. The Mexicans plot against Katherine and finally kidnap her and intend to burn out her eyes. But Sheldon arrives on the scene in time to save her.

Sheldon and Katherine are in love but each thinks the other indifferent. Rosa, a Mexican girl, is in disgrace and refuses to tell who is her betrayer. Sheldon believes Clifford, Katherine's brother, guilty and to shield Katherine from the knowledge accepts the blame himself. Katherine's grief reveals her love for Sheldon. Then the real lover of the Mexican girl confesses and marries her and Sheldon is exonerated. Katherine in spite of difficulties has cured some of her patients and wins the confidence of the Mexicans. She decides to marry Sheldon and as his wife continue her uplift work among the people.

"Little Shoes"

H. B. Walthall in Romantic Essanay Five Reel Play. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS latest Walthall picture, released January 15 through Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay service, has the first requisite of any good photoplay: it is very interesting. It holds the spectator's close attention, and it is a very pleasant interest, one aroused by the charm of a well told story, at once fanciful and real. It does not depend upon a problem or upon harrowing "strong" situations. There is no villain, no villainess, no unpleasant complication of circumstances, but the story is much more absorbing than many a plot in which the leading players flirt with death and disaster.

The story is taken from the novel by Eleanor M. Ingram. Its plot is simple, the meeting of the poor boy with the rich little girl, the boy's love for the girl and his efforts to find her when he has become a man. Much of the credit for the production is due its director, Arthur Berthelet. It is very well presented for while the story is easily followed in general and the events themselves are clear, their outcome and real meaning is a mystery to the leading character and to the audience, who becomes as eager as the hero to learn the truth. The interest in the play is largely due to this clever handling of the suspense element. This and the romantic, appealing nature of the story make the play an admirable one for a family program.

As a whole the offering may be rated very high and can be offered with confidence in any theater and especially in neighborhood houses whose patrons like wholesome, pleasant plays to which all the family can come.

During the entire first reel, the action takes place between the two children, played by Mary V. McAlister and Jack Paul. Both are attractive youngsters and acquit themselves well. The subtitles, however, seem rather stilted for the conversation of children. Walthall and Mary Charleson play the characters grown up. Both are players too skilled to play any roles badly, but neither seems well fitted to the part assigned in this story. Their acting, however, makes up to a certain extent for this fact, and they will have little trouble winning the liking of their audiences.

The Story: Rosalind meets David Noel when both are children, the girl a daughter of wealth, the boy a little beggar. Noticing that the boy's shoes are especially dilapidated, the little girl pulls off her own white ones and offers them to the waif. David is later adopted by a wealthy South American and when he grows up, inherits a fortune. He then returns to the northern continent to search for the little girl, whom he has never forgotten.

David meets the girl's guardian.

In the States again, he learns that his princess has married. Disappointed in his dream of finding his princess, he turns to a girl he meets under unusual circumstances. He falls in love with her but when he tells her his story she is angry that he has put her in the place of his dream girl. Later, after much mystery and suspense, he learns the reason for her anger and wins her forgiveness, for she is Rosalind and the report of her marriage was false. After many vicissitudes, during which her father had lost his fortune and his sanity, they had been reduced to poverty. Then David marries her and takes her to the palace he had built for her on his South American estate.

This scene from "The Girl Philippa" is a great deal more stirring than it looks here.

"The Girl Philippa"

Five-Part Vitagraph Picturization of Robert W. Chambers' Novel. Reviewed by George W. Graves

THERE is not much doubt about the popularity of this late novel by Robert W. Chambers. This is indicated in a large degree by the reception of the picture at the Rialto Theater in New York. And to one who has read a book, its picturized form, if it be anywhere near presentable, is always a source of keenest enjoyment, even though its power of suspense is lost to him, for the pleasure he derives from the "movie" interpretation is the result of the same curious desire that makes a book filled with illustrations popular with both children and adults.

Vitagraph's "The Girl Philippa" interprets with accuracy the main points of action in the story and goes, too, a great way in portraying much of the author's colorful description and transferring the book's personality, if the term may be used, to the screen. Entertaining story material, good acting, lots of action, and intelligent direction characterize this film version. The story was adapted and directed by S. Rankin Drew.

In the title role Anita Stewart will be welcomed with enthusiasm by her vast army of admirers. However, there is a good deal of "sameness" about the role, and it doesn't give Miss Stewart an exceptional number of opportunities to display talent, but it does offer some excellent chances, which the star does not waste. We think that Anita Stewart comes pretty close to being the author's conception of the character. Frank Morgan, as Halkett, the English officer, and S. Rankin Drew, as Warner, the American artist, both deserve praise for their work. Anders Randolf, in the role of Wildresse, suggests the book's description of this character and makes a splendid "heavy." Other important roles are taken by Miss Curley, Ned Hay, Stanley Dunn and Alfred Babcock.

Halkett and Gray, English officers, regain plans of the American Harkness shell, which, loaned to Great Britain, and bound for that destination, have been stolen by German spies. In France, they have to separate to evade the latter. Grey is killed, and Halkett takes into his confidence Warner, an American artist. Philippa, cashier at the Cafe de Biribi, is forced by Wildresse, a traitor to his country, to spy on Warner. Finally, however, she runs away from Wildresse, who has brought her up to believe that she is a mere waif and therefore owes it to him to do his bidding, and goes to Warner for protection. At first the artist looks upon her as a mere child, and an encumbrance, but when Philippa proves her daring and her real worth in helping the two men evade the spies, Warner gradually changes his attitude, his new view of her cultimating in love. Many thrilling experiences are undergone by Warner, Halkett and the girl, the commencement of the war making things not a little more dangerous. But, to come to a finish, the plans are delivered intact to the English war department, Wildresse is shot as a traitor, and Philippa discovers herself to be—not a waif, but a princess, stolen from one of the Balkan kingdoms in her childhood..

"The Bondage of Fear"

World Film Drama in Five Reels Released January 22. Reviewed by George W. Graves

IN "The Bondage of Fear," Rosalind Ivan, the author, has given a slightly new twist to some old situations in story construction and has provided the popular star, Ethel Clayton, with a role of dramatic possibilities. Most of these are turned to good account by Miss Clayton, who, judging by this picture, is well versed in the knowledge of screen effect.

The story wastes a good deal of time in the beginning on non-essentials, and then works up to the first situation of size, where we find the wife placed in a position compelling her to keep quiet about the murder of a man she had known previous to marriage. This man's queer actions have aroused her husband's suspicions, and although she is innocent, the shooting of Mortimer in her bedroom by a crook, necessitates her keeping "mum" to avoid a scandal. The crook, Skinny, drags his victim to the river, and so no one is any the wiser about the killing.

Skinny blackmails Vesta, the wife, constantly. After she has given him all of her jewelry, he comes for a final sum with which to get out of the country. Having nothing more to give him and angered by his persistence, she shoots him. Right after the shooting she exhibits a remarkable presence of mind for one in a like position. Calling up the police headquarters Vesta tells the chief that a burglar is in the house. He asks her if she has anything to defend herself with and she says there is a revolver in her husband's drawer. Leaving the receiver down, she waits a second, then screams, overturns furniture and fires a shot. The result of all this is that evidence of her shooting in self-defense is established and she goes free, with her tormentor out of the way forever.

The moral effect of this unpunished shooting is all right, since Vesta is defending herself against a common thief who knows of her innocence. The story is a little awry on its logic, however, in the hold that Skinny has over Vesta. They are the only ones on earth who know of Mortimer's murder, and why wouldn't Vesta's account of the tale to the authorities carry much more weight than that of the gangster with a bad reputation?

A number of unusual effects were secured throughout by the director, Harry Davenport, who produced the picture in a creditable manner. Edward Bowers, Rockliffe Fellowes and Arthur Ashley have important parts, the latter being a good type for the gangster. Photography is of a good quality and many of the exterior sets are gorgeous, interiors also being artistically constructed. The picture will satisfy those who don't get too serious about fishing for motives for acts. This production surpasses many of the recent World Film plays in general "class." Ethel Clayton is well known among picture-goers and therefore her name has considerable advertising value.

"The Butterfly Girl"

Marguerita Fischer in Pollard-Mutual Star Production. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

IN entertainment value, this offering ranks high. It will genuinely please any audience because of its out of the ordinary location, its vivacious and appealing heroine, and its entertaining, well told story. Its chief claim to distinction is its location, the Exposition Grounds at San Diego. The carnival spirit and the vagabond life of the concessionaires is depicted realistically. The various characters are interesting and well drawn.

Marguerita Fischer plays the role of "Pep" O'Mally, a little waif who, with her baby sister Bess (Marie Kiernan), adventures among the show people of the Midway. Jack Mower plays the hero's role, Robert Whipple, Jr., very acceptably. J. Gordon Russell as Marcus Renshaw is at once the villain and and an interesting type. Della Pringle as "Pep's" aunt plays her part well, and John Steppling as the "weinie" man adds a comedy touch. This light entertaining spirit fills the play. Judging from the comments, the offering pleased decidedly the audience at the Pastime Theater, with which the writer viewed it, as it doubtless will the average audience elsewhere. It fits into a family program in spite of the fact that much of the plot hinges upon the unwelcome attentions of the show-owner to Pep for this episode is not handled in too sensational a manner.

The Story: "Pep" O'Mally and her little sister come to the Exposition grounds bearing a letter consigning them to the care of an aunt. A young singer from a Hawaiian group guides them to the booth where, under the management of Marcus Renshaw, the aunt is doing a "flying act" as "The Butterfly Girl." After that Pep and her sister roam at will about the exposition grounds and Pep has her fortune told, in which she is promised a diamond dress and a prince in disguise. Her young beauty causes Renshaw to give her her aunt's place as "The Butterfly Girl." She is at once very popular. Then Renshaw's attentions frighten her and she runs away. Again she is aided by the singer who gets her a position among the Hawaiian dancers. She falls in love with the young man whom she discovers is the son of a wealthy family and has quarreled with his parents. Brokenhearted by the separation which seems inevitable, Pep throws herself into the crater of the facsimile of Mount Kilacua on the fair grounds, imitating the Hawaiian girl of a story she has heard who committed suicide in the real volcano. She is saved by the young man, who induces his family, to whom he is now reconciled, to take Pep home with them to be educated.

"Human Flotsam"

Sixth Episode of Vitagraph's "The Secret Kingdom" Reviewed by Geo. W. Graves

IN this episode coincidence, our old friend, gets unusually active, and this subtracts materially from conviction, and therefore interest. The action of this episode, however, is fast and strenuous, embracing as many thrills as have found their way into any other single episode. The titles of these episodes, by the way, are of no little value in making the people curious over what's going to develop next week. The titles of each episode indicate that they have been written with this end in view.

Although the story interest in this particular episode, considered separately, as well sustained, the interest in the complete story, including all episodes, begins to wane, for we have the repetition again and again of the conspirators' unsuccessful attempts to kill the hero, each chapter seeing him extricate himself from the perilous position produced at the end of the previous chapter, and the end of each chapter seeing him again immersed in the hot tides of adversity. The serial follower's suspense is not held over the mere question of whether the villain lives or dies. The spectator is most concerned about how the original complications, brought about by the man at the bottom of the whole plot, are going to be adjusted.

Dorothy Kelly and Charles Richman prove as much of an attraction as heretofore in this chapter.

Ramon, the rascally prime minister, throws Phillip into the North River from a ferry. Juan dives after Phillip and both fall into the hands of river pirates, later to be shanghaied abroad the yacht in which Ramon purposes to convey Julia back to Alania. At the end of this episode, Julia is in a New York hotel awaiting the conspirators' pleasure. She has been told by Ramon that Phillip has committed suicide.

Fox Signs Seven Foot Giant

James Grover Tarver.

That's the name of the newest William Fox photoplayer—one who literally towers above everyone else in the motion picture profession, and above nearly everyone in the entire United States.

Mr. Tarver is short in name, but long in person. He's just 7 feet 5 inches tall from tip to toe, and his weight is perilously close to four hundred pounds.

Mr. Tarver's tonnage is distributed so well over his enormous frame that he does not seem to be quite the giant that he really is. He has a magnificent physique and has never been ill a day in his life.

Mr. Tarver was born in Franklin, Texas, thirty-odd years ago, and has been with the foremost circuses almost since he was able to walk. He is well-known throughout the country.

Although Mr. Tarver admits that he is blessed with a height fairly adequate, he asserts that he is nearly a full foot shorter than an Irish giant named O'Brien, who lived in Northampton.

"He enjoyed a pipe," says Mr. Tarver, "and inasmuch as he was 8 feet 3½ inches, the lamps of the town gave him splendid opportunities for lighting it.

"He always stopped before the door of a grocer in Bridge street, withdrew the cap of the lamp, whiffed his tobacco into flame, and then walked on as though nothing out of the ordinary had taken place.

"On one occasion he kissed a young lady who was leaning out of the upper window of a house to look at him as he walked along the street. Another time the huge carriage in which he was traveling was stopped by a highwayman.

"O'Brien put out his head and as much of his body as possible to see what was the matter. The robber became so terror-stricken that he fell unconscious."

As a boy Mr. Tarver was introduced to Captain Martin Van Buren Bates, the famous Kentucky giant, whose stature was 7 feet 11¼ inches and who weighed four hundred and ninety-six pounds.

He wore a 26 collar and a No. 15 boot, Mr. Tarver declares, and his wife, who was Miss Anna Swan, was exactly his height and tipped the scales at only ninety-six pounds less than her husband.

J. G. Tarver, whose 7 feet 5 inches have just joined the William Fox players, brings a gasp of amazement even from big "Bill" Farnum. R. A. Walsh, who staged "The Honor System" has to look at Tarver through smoked glasses, and Jim Marcus, Fox veteran, takes off his hat to him.

ARTHUR JAMES PRODUCES

"One of Many" Is Title of First Production Made by Head of Metro's Publicity and Scenario Departments

Metro Pictures Corporation announces the release date of "One of Many," the feature screen play which is the initial offering of Arthur James, head of Metro's scenario, publicity and advertising departments, as February 12, (Lincoln's Birthday). An unusually enthusiastic report has been received from the National Board of Censorship, members of which reviewed the film recently at a private showing.

Frances Nelson, in "One of Many."

"It was the majority opinion of those present," to quote the board's report, "that this was a delicately handled and dramatic picture, vividly presented and most excellently acted." It was pronounced good in both educational and moral value, its artistic handling and entertaining power being far above the average. The women members were especially enthusiastic, considering it one of the most powerful moral lessons they had seen in a motion picture.

It was due to the strong moral lesson taught in "One of Many" that Arthur James chose the picture to mark his debut as a producer of feature films. Wm. Christy Cabanné, long associated with D. W. Griffith, and now directing Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in Metro's fifteen-chapter serial, "The Great Secret," is both anthor and director of "One of Many." Frances Nelson, one of the most beautiful emotional actresses known to the screen world, is the star. In the role of Shirley Bryson she has one of the greatest opportunities of her career. Mr. Cabanné was the first director with whom Miss Nelson worked at the Biograph studio, and in "One of Many" the little star has fairly outdone herself. Not only did the part appeal to her strongly, but the director, being acquainted with her possibilities, has been able to make the most of her unusual powers in dramatic intensity.

Shirley Bryson, in "One of Many," works in a manicure establishment to support herself and her invalid mother. Unable to provide the luxuries the sick woman's condition requires, she accepts the aid of an unscrupulous rich man, being urged to do so by the manager of the shop where she is employed. On her mother's death she goes out into the world again to renew her struggle for a livelihood, meets and loves a youth and marries him. The young man introduces his bride to his father, and the two are transfixed with horror. We leave the final thrills of the powerful feature for the screen to tell your patrons.

Complete Record of Current Films

This record is intended to give, for the convenient use of the exhibitor in booking films, all the information about each film that it is possible to present in a space limited to one line. The classification is indicated by the letter at the left (D for drama, C for comedy, T for topical, S for scenic, E for educational, etc.). Next comes the date and the title, followed by the names of the stars in parentheses. At the extreme right hand end of the line is the distributor's booking number, preceded by the name of the producing company. The figure appearing just before this name indicates the number of reels—the italic letter S meaning a split reel.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

General Program

What Would You Do?—(THIRTY MINUTES' SCREEN TIME)—ESSANAY—A BLACK CAT FEATURE—JANUARY 23.—Featuring Richard Travers, Frances Benedict and Ernest Maupain. Ruth Walton is a country girl whose ambition leads her to refuse to wed her simple but prosperous suitor, James Martin, and go to the city. She finds, however, that the pathway to fame in the city is a stony one. After losing successive positions, she is entrapped by the evil designing Roger Blakely. Her soul crushed, Ruth returns to her country home and marries "Jim." Just as happiness begins to dawn upon her, though, Blakely turns up as a friend of her husband. What would you do, if you were Ruth? She asks that question of friends to whom she has been reading the manuscript of her first photoplay, for, instead of being a reality her plight is one she has simply conceived for the plot of her 'script.

Animated Nooz Pictorial, No. 23—CARTOON—(FIFTEEN MINUTES' SCREEN TIME)—ESSANAY—JANUARY 24.—The first unauthentic picture of the North Pole has been camerized by Canimated Nooz.. Through the brave efforts of its notably unreliable correspondent, Dr. Stew, the picture was obtained at Hundredbelow, a settlement at the top of the world. The pole looks pretty much like a barber's pole. Dr. Stew enjoys the hospitality of a Polar bear and his family. The two speediest chickens in the world are seen in a race at Tapioca, Cal. "Maizie" would have won, but she became frightened at an extremely wild flower. The jockies wear long mustaches as eye shields. William Jynx Bryan and Col. Tedious Roosevelt pat each other on the back at a luncheon at Oyster Bay, New York.

Is Marriage Sacred?—TWENTY-NINE MINUTES' SCREEN TIME)—ESSANAY—JANUARY 27. Marguerite Clayton, Edward Arnold, Lillian Drew, Sydney Ainsworth and Thomas Commerford are in the cast. To make playthings of the hearts of men is Edna Fallon's one interest in life. She is a flirt, jilting one suitor as quickly as another shows up. Nellie, her sister, is different. Nellie likes to bake bread, sew and keep their home in order. She has never had a love affair until she meets James Delmore, Edna's current beau. James is the one man whom Edna believes she could countenance as a husband, but he falls in love with Nellie. Time passes and gradually Edna finds herself facing the dreaded spinsterhood. She has lost practically all of her admirers because of her reputation as a flirt. It is after Nellie's marriage to Jim that Edna finally agrees to marry Oliver Wood, the very man of all of her suitors whom she disliked most.

Selig-Tribune, No. 4—JANUARY 11.—Oakland, Cal.—As a part of the New Year celebration arranged by the Chamber of Commerce, the oldest dated Christian bell in the world rings out the old year. Red Bank, N. J.—Ice yachting marks the New Year celebration. Boston, Mass.—Young and old alike enjoy the toboggan slide. Amarillo, Tex.—Ranchmen participate in a three-day rabbit drive. San Francisco, Cal.—Twenty-five German prisoners from Australia arrive. Slidell, La.—The launching of the largest steamer ever constructed south of Newport News. San Diego, Cal.—The Exposition dies here with the dawning of the New Year. Seattle, Wash.—With Mrs. Guy E. Davis acting as sponsor, the new $500,000 U. S. submarine, N-1, is launched. Galveston, Texas—Grecian costumes present no terrors when worn in the mid-winter dance festival. Washington, D. C.—Thousands of persons enjoy the sport of skating. Philadelphia, Pa.—The "Mummers" parade this year is especially noticeable.

Selig-Tribune, No. 5—JANUARY 15.—Columbus, Ohio—James M. Cox is inaugurated Governor of Ohio. Paris, France—Prince Arthur of Connaught distributes decorations to French officers and soldiers. London, England—Following the re-opening of the Courts of Justice, the judges attend service at Westminster. San Francisco, Cal.—Two hundred Olympic Club members hike through Golden Gate Park to the beach. Pasadena, Cal.—The Annual Rose Tournament, a mid-winter feature of the Pacific Coast. Springfield, Ill.—With simple ceremonies, Frank O. Lowden is inaugurated Governor of the State of Illinois. Los Angeles, Cal.—The beaches furnish an excellent setting for artists of international fame. El Paso, Texas—The Eighth U. S. Cavalry hold their annual parade. Denver, Colo.—"Buffalo Bill," soldier, hunter and scout, dies here at the home of his sister. Picture shows him and members of the Showmen's League visiting the Selig Polyscope Studios, Chicago. Chicago, Ill.—Two youthful chimpanzees are photographed during a playful moment in their quarters at Lincoln Park.

Homesteaders' Feud—KALEM—TWO-REEL EPISODE OF "THE GIRL FROM FRISCO"—JANUARY 17.—Marin Sais, Frank Johnson, True Boardman, Ronald Bradbury and Edw. Clisbee in the cast. John Wallace, government land agent at Sourgrass, in the heart of the range country, is also the fiance of Barbara Brent, daughter of a cattle king. John Tisbury, seeking a homestead among the government lands hitherto used for grazing by the cattlemen, files upon land cut by Tarantula Creek, a watering hole for the stock of the Brents. Tisbury, taking the advice of Dukes, another homesteader, fences his ranch immediately, and trouble of the regular old Western days ensues. The settlers are armed, but Tisbury is captured by the cattlemen and flogged. The courageous Barbara rides into the mob and demands a council of war. Matters are satisfactorily adjusted and Wallace, who had been in disfavor for allowing the filings by the settlers, is forgiven.

The Black Circle—KALEM—"GRANT, POLICE REPORTER," SERIES—JANUARY 19.—George Larkin, Robert Ellis, Ollie Kirby, Harry Gordon and William McKey in the cast. When Tom Grant, police reporter on the Chronicle, is sent to an apartment building to get the story of a mysterious shooting that has resulted in the death of Royce Rolston, retired eye specialist, he remembers having assisted a blind man up the steps that morning. The blind visitor had carried a heavy cane. Grant discovers circular marks upon the floor that look like powder marks and determines that the fatal shot came from a shot gun. From the butler he learns that Dr. Standish had been blinded in a fight over Genevieve's mother. Grant gains admission to the apartment of Dr. Standish and comes to a scuffle with him upon the balcony. When the railing gives way he attempts to save Dr. Standish but fails, and later swings himself clear and proceeds to the ground via telephone wires and rain spout. The broken cane proves to be a cleverly devised weapon and the police reporter has solved another baffling case.

The Wrecked Station—KALEM—"HAZARDS OF HELEN" SERIES—JANUARY 20. Helen Gibson, supported by George Routh, George Williams, Babe Crisman and Richard Johnson. In this episode Helen is concerned in the affairs of the Graham Gravel Plant, whose superintendent, Stanley Wayne, receives a telegram informing him that the plant has changed ownership. Stanton Grey, accompanied by his daughter, Edith, is on his way to inspect the property. Wayne has gambled away some of the company's money and knows that his books will not balance. An automobile accident leaves Grey in an unconscious condition and he is brought to the station. Wayne extracts his wallet from his pocket, but Cole, a professional gambler, gets a photograph of the act. Helen and Edith follow Cole to the gravel plant, where they see a fight between the gambler and Wayne. They seize the photograph and Wayne gives chase. Helen, in order to elude Wayne, climbs to the top of a steam shovel and falls from there into a dump car. From there she falls into a car loaded with dynamite and releases the brakes. She leaps to another train just before the wild car crashes into the Lone Point station, blowing it to smithereens.

Mutual Pictures

Tailor's Trimmings—VOGUE—(TWO REELS)—JANUARY 21.—Featuring Rube Miller and Owen Evans. Entering a city, two tramps, Rube Miller and Owen Evans, ever alert for some easy money, find it convenient to hold up and rob a banker (Henry Huckins), and get away with his wallet. To avert suspicion, however, they deem it wise to seek some congenial employment, and are fortunate in this in finding uniforms waiting for them and a trolley car ready for a trip. With Rube as the conductor and Evans as the motorman, what leads to a veritable trolley car cyclone begins. Lillian Hamilton, on her way to her husband's tailor shop, boards the car and begins a flirtation with the crew. She leaves while the crew fight over her smiles. Another passenger gets on the car, Dorothy Armstrong, heart whole and fancy free. She is going to her tailor's, who happens to be the husband of Lillian. Lawrence Bowes, Lillian's husband, becomes enraptured and takes her out to dine. Enter Rube and Evans. During the absence of Bowes and wife, Lillian, the two crooks pose as tailors and measure the fair Dorothy for a suit. In a fight over another customer she is knocked down and complains to the police. After a sharp and exciting chase the crooks are caught and the money returned to the banker.

Shorty in the Tiger's Den—(TWO REELS)—JANUARY 22.—Featuring Shorty Hamilton. Shorty effects the capture of a supposed lunatic, who he afterward discovers is secretly supplying the Mexican Government with ammunition. Scraggs is put in jail, but is liberated by his friend, at whose ranch he is living. Shorty receives a letter from Anita asking him to come into Mexico to aid her. Anita is captured by bandits, while giving an old priest a lift, and the priest is left for dead. Shorty finds the priest and is told of the capture of the beautiful American girl. The priest dies and Shorty disguises himself in his robes. Carmen Monita, the sweetheart of the Mexican bandit, upon hearing that he intends to force Anita to marry him, goes to the "priest" for confession. She tells him all of her story and also that he will soon be summoned to marry the bandit and Anita. Shorty discloses his identity and with the Mexican girl's aid he manages to free Anita from the den of the bandits. Shorty is wounded and upon regaining consciousness finds himself in a hospital. Anita had gone off on the trail of Scraggs.

On the log is Mary Anderson in Vitagraph's "Billy Smoke," January 6; next she is seen in "One Good Turn," an episode of "The Dangers of Doris," coming January 12. At the right is "Jones Keeps House," which appeared January 8. All these are General Program Vitagraphs.

"Among Those Present," "The Girl God Made for Jones" and "When the Man Speaks"—early 1917 Essanays.

Jerry and the Outlaws—Cub Comedy—January 25.—Featuring George Ovey. Jerry, who has trouble in courting his girl, appropriates the clothes of a policeman prostrated by Jerry's fall from a tree. He arrests the girl's father, sends him to the police station and starts for an auto ride with the daughter. Out in the country they are discovered by Bad Bill and his bunch of outlaws. He and his sweetheart are taken prisoner and held captive in a cabin. Jerry is locked in the attic, but escapes down the wall and re-enters the cabin. Once inside, he crawls along the floor, secures the bandit's guns from their holsters and then makes them back against the door while he and the girl escape.

Friend policeman in the meantime has come to. With a brother officer he follows the trail of Jerry and arrives at the cabin as he is about to flee. The girl's father also appears in a big motor car, having been released. During the general melee Jerry and the girl jump into dad's car and persuade the chauffeur to leave hurriedly. The police and father follow in the police patrol, but try to take a short cut. The two machines meet at the cross roads and a terrific crash leaves both cars in splinters and debris. Jerry wakes up to find he had fallen off the park bench where he was asleep, picks himself up and settles down for another nap.

Double Revenge — (One Reel) — American — January 27.—Featuring J. Warren Kerrigan, supported by Pauline Bush and George Periolat. The young stage robber and his girl accomplice are dividing the loot from their recent hold-up when an older member of the gang comes upon them and demands part of the loot. They refuse to give it to him and the man tries to force the girl's share from her. He is set upon by the younger man and then leaves swearing revenge. He sees a sign offering a reward of $1,000 for the capture of the stage robbers and tells the sheriff of the whereabouts of the other two. The younger man is arrested and imprisoned. The older man gets the reward and is proclaimed the hero of the hour. The girl meets the older man and sees him hide his money. She hides a stolen mail sack in the same place and after liberating the younger man she leaves a note telling where the real robber can be found. The sheriff and his party come upon the other man in the act of digging up his money, and finding the mail sack, arrest him. The girl and the younger robber cross the boundary line and determine to lead a new life.

Universal Program

Ablaze in Mid-Air—(Two Reels)—Episode 5 of "The Purple Mask"—January 22.—With Grace Cunard and Francis Ford. This episode opens with the saving of Kelly from the precarious position he found himself in at the end of the last episode. Many exciting adventures take place during this number, things coming to a close as exciting as the last, the venturesome girl and detective and an Apache being nearly dashed to death in a plunge from the skies in an aeroplane.

Held by the Enemy—Victor—January 26.—Featuring Pat Rooney, this is a sort of a burlesque on the Villa situation in Mexico. Pat plays cards with Villa and wins everything that the latter possesses. Pat springs a proposition on the Mexican—that he take him to headquarters as dead, securing the enormous reward, divide fifty-fifty, and then release him, providing he will leave the border for good. The little game is almost spoiled by the curious American soldiers, but Pat finally succeeds.

The Daring Chance—Two Reels)—Bison—January 27.—With William V. Mong and Mina Cunard. This "Western" has for its characters a circuit barber, a bandit and the latter's daughter. Circumstances point to the barber's being guilty of robbing the stage coach, but finally the real robber is apprehended. He is about to be hung, when the barber agrees to pay up the stolen money himself.

Love Me, Love My Biscuits—Joker—January 27.—With William Franey and Gale Henry. Lillian, furious at her husband's comments on her cooking, ejects him from the house. Uncle sends word that he is coming to visit, intimating that if Bill's wife is of the right sort, he will write a fat check. Accordingly, Bill hires a cook—at least he thinks he does. In reality, he takes a girl who thinks he is to be her husband, since Bill by mistake got into a matrimonial bureau instead of an employment agency. When uncle arrives things happen right and left, but at the end of events all are happy, and Uncle gets the "cook" for a wife.

The Blood-Stained Hand—Laemmle—January 27.—This is a melodrama developing a mystery. As the story nears a close we see an innocent girl about to be convicted of a murder. Circumstantial evidence points to it, and there seems to be no evasion from the girl's terrible fate—but the cloud melts into nothingness when the real culprit is found. And the culprit is a monkey.

A Jungle Tragedy—(Two Reels)—Big U—January 28.—Clifford and Sherman arrive at the house of Sherman's friend. Sherman is supposed to marry Marie, his friend's daughter, but Marie prefers Clifford. On the day of her marriage, Marie runs away. Sherman, going in search of her, is killed by a lion. Clifford, also on the hunt, sees Marie lying on the ground and a lion approaching her. He shoots the lion, and the two, on their way home, find Sherman's body and bury it. The story closes with Marie's father giving his consent to the young people's marriage.

Boomer Bill's Awakening—(Split Reel)—Powers—January 28.—Boomer, asleep in an oasis, brought about by too much conviviality, dreams a dream which takes him to the far north, where there are reindeers, an elusive pole, bears and icicles dozens of feet long. Experiences aplenty fall to his lot until he is gently but firmly tapped on the shoulder by an unsympathetic bluecoat. On the same reel is:

Behind the Great Wall of China—A peep behind the Great Wall of China with Dr. Dorsey reveals countless fascinating and intimate glimpses of Peking, her streets, her customs and her people.

The Old Toymaker—Rex—January 28.—With Allen Holubar and Leah Baird. An old man, his loved ones lost at sea, hangs to a doll with deep sentiment. Henry, a miner, steals money from the old toymaker. Later the miner's little daughter, ill, cries for the doll. The old man, realizing the effect it might have on the child's life, finally takes the toy to her. His kindness is repaid by the thief, who returns the stolen money.

Feature Programs

Art Dramas

Infidelity—(Five Reels)—Art-Dramas—January 11.—Featuring Anna Q. Nilsson. The story tells of the reunion of a husband and wife, the jealousy of the former erecting a barrier between the two. After Wayne has served a long prison term he becomes a prominent artist under an assumed name. Although none of the parties concerned know of it, his own daughter becomes one of his pupils. After the father has saved the girl from the wiles of a hypnotist, fate arranges a meeting between the estranged husband and wife, and there is a reconciliation. Reviewed in this issue.

Blue Bird

God's Crucible—(Five Reels)—Bluebird—January 1.—There are George Hernandez, Myrtle Gonzales, Val Paul, Frederick Montague, Jack Curtis, Edward J. Brady and Frances Lee in the cast. Lorenzo Todd, having been buffeted by the world beyond the limit of his endurance, settles down to a wealthy but joyless old age. The only ties which bind him to humanity are his life-long friend, Phillips ,and his own son, Warren, the latter a spoiled youth engaged to Virginia, Phillips' daughter. After a particularly disgraceful prank on the part of the young man, Phillips forces Virginia to return the ring, a quarrel ensuing between the two fathers, as a conclusion to which Warren finds himself an outcast. The boy goes to the West, rejoins the Arizona Rangers, and is ousted for neglect of duty. He then joins the outlaws, and, a hunted man, takes refuge in the Grand Canyon. Here a meeting takes place between father and son. There is the usual reconciliation under unusual circumstances.

Christie Comedies

Her Friend, the Chauffeur—January 22—Christie Comedy.—Featuring Betty Compson, supported by Neal Burns, George French, Harry Rattenberry, Frank O'Neal. Two old cronies, George and Harry, are the fathers of a pretty girl and a manly boy. Both of the youngsters are at college and have not seen each other since childhood. The fathers wish to see their children wed, but the children, when consulted, don't care for the plan. Now the crafty fathers know the spirit of youth so they hatch a scheme that works out nicely. Neal is told to marry or leave the parental mansion. The butler tells him of a place where a chauffeur is needed. Neal dons the livery of George without knowing it and proceeds to fall in love with the pretty daughter of his employer. George, of course, opposes the young couple and the course of true love runs straight into an elopement, with the fathers a discreet distance behind, enjoying the joke.

Fox

The Price of Silence—(Five Reels)—William Fox.—Featuring William Farnum. This story, written by William Piggott, tells about a senator who helps to defeat a bill prohibiting child labor for the sake of his sweetheart's fortunes, although his life has been devoted to the cause of the children. Later, overcome with remorse at having sacrificed so many lives for the sake of one, he repairs the damage as best he can and receives a long imprisonment for accepting a bribe. A second committee passes the bill. Reviewed in this issue.

Bitter Truth—(Five Reels)—William Fox—January 15.—Featuring Virginia Pearson. Anne, a woman unjustly sentenced to prison, after her release, lives for nothing else but revenge on the judge who sentenced her. When she is about to strike at him her hate changes to love, and she abandons the idea of revenge, double-crossing her own associates in iniquity. Reviewed in this issue.

K. E. S. E.

The Master Passion—(Five Reels)—Edison—January 8.—Features Robert Conness and Mabel Trunelle. Reviewed in this issue.

Little Shoes—(Five Reels)—Essanay—January 15.—Henry B. Walthall starred, supported by Mary Charleson. Reviewed in this issue.

The Princess of Patches—(Five Reels)—Selig—January 22.—Features Vivian Reed. Will be reviewed in next issue.

Metro

Wife by Proxy—(FIVE REELS)—METRO—JANUARY 8:—Mabel Taliaferro is the star. The story opens with Jerry McNairn, winsome Irish girl, arriving in New York. She has been directed by her dying father to a wealthy American, young Norton Burbeck, whom he once befriended in time of trouble, and who has told him to call upon him when in need. She arrives at the mansion during the absence of the master, and upon his return he finds her curled up asleep in the hallway. She is to be "the guardian of his comfort" and keep his buttons sewed on.

Under the terms of his father's will Norton must marry by a certain date. If he does not, it reverts to Howard Curtis, Burbeck's cousin. Norton is infatuated with an unprincipled woman, Beatrice Gaden, whom he expects to marry, but who is already married. Jerry goes to Beatrice, bearing a gift from Norton. The supposedly simple Irish maid learns from a conversation between Beatrice and her husband of the trick they intend to play on Norton. When Burbeck discovers that Beatrice is encumbered with a husband he suggests and her husband consents to a divorce. To this Gaden apparently acquiesces, but the plan is to fail to carry out the promise. Jerry, on the eve of the date mentioned by the will, marries Norton, herself, assuring him that she will have the marriage annulled later. She holds to this determination even after he has discovered for himself the scoundrelly conspiracy against him, and realizing the beautiful nature of the "guardian of his comfort," falls in love with her. His problem is to make her change her decision, and that is the part of the fascinating story which will interest screen patrons most.

Mutual Star Production

The Butterfly Girl—(FIVE REELS)—POLLARD—JANUARY 15.—Starring Marguerita Fischer. Reviewed in this issue.

Paramount

The Evil Eye—(FIVE REELS)—LASKY—JANUARY 4.—Starring Blanche Sweet. Reviewed in this issue.

The Happiness of Three Women—(FIVE REELS)—MOROSCO-PARAMOUNT—JANUARY 11.—Featuring House Peters and Myrtle Stedman. This picture tells the story of a lawyer who, to save an innocent wife, the wife of a man sent up for robbery, and to keep his own sweetheart from leaving him because of an incident affecting all three, has to use his wits. Reviewed in this issue.

Betty to the Rescue—(FIVE REELS)—LASKY—JANUARY 15.—Featuring Fannie Ward. A fascinating offering with its locales in the orange growing and mining districts of California. It tells of the frustrated attempts of an unscrupulous individual who knows the value of an apparently worthless mine to marry the girl who owns it. The girl finally marries a man who has made many sacrifices for her, although the man is skittish about marrying a girl with so much money. Reviewed in this issue.

Red Feather

Heart Strings—(FIVE REELS)—UNIVERSAL—JANUARY 22.—Featuring Allan Holubar and Francelia Billington. Little Johanna, called Jo for short, is the ward of John McClean, the busy, hard-working doctor, who has attended her father on his deathbed, father being a poor musician. Ten years later Jo is engaged to Gerald, handsome, debonnair friend of the doctor's. When his consent is asked, the doctor questions Gerald in regard to a certain affair he has had with a widow of questionabel character. Gerald assures him that all that is over and done with, but the reappearanec of the widow and her evident power over Gerald puts a different light on the affair. The doctor goes to the house of the widow, who laughs at his solicitude for Jo. It transpires that Sue, one of Jo's friends, knows the character of the widow well, her sweetheart having been ruined and sent to prison because of her. About this time Gilbert returns and Sue takes him to the widow's house where she exposes her to Gerald. The widow now seeks revenge. She contrives to get Jo to her house by a fake phone message and intends to open her eyes to the horrible side of life, when she recognizes in the young girl her own daughter, deserted by her years ago when she left the poor musician she had married. Next day she tells John the truth and demands the girl, but a stormy scene between the two results in her departure without any disclosure to Johanna. Meanwhile Jo discovers that Doctor John loves her and that settles it.

Triangle Program

The Crab—(FIVE REELS)—TRIANGLE-KAY BEE—FEBRUARY 4.—Featuring Frank Keenan and Thelma Salter. The story tells of a child's winning over a rock-bound grouch and making a genuine man of him. Reviewed in this issue.

Vitagraph-V. L. S. E.

Her Right to Live—(FIVE REELS)—VITAGRAPH—JANUARY 22.—Featuring Peggy Hyland. This story deals with the struggle for mayorship in a town, the corrupt forces of the present mayor in combat with the reformers. The candidate of the latter finally wins out, his son is freed from a murder charge through the sacrifice of a girl, and the story closes with the marriage of the

World

The Bondage of Fear—(FIVE REELS)—WORLD—JANUARY 22.—Featuring Ethel Clayton. While alone in her country lodge at night an old lover comes to visit Mrs. Wheatley. Thinking her husband is returning, Mortimer hides. The intruder proves to be a crook. In a fight between Mortimer and the latter, Mortimer is killed—in the wife's bedroom. The crook throws the dead body into the river, and Mrs. Wheatley dares not notify the police, fearing scandal. After the wife has been blackmailed for a long time she finally shoots her tormentor, manufacturing her own evidence that the shooting was in physical self-defense, and so all ends well, with the husband's ignorance undisturbed. Reviewed in this issue.

Coming Universal Releases

Universal offers a varied program of releases for the week of January 22. "Heart Strings" heads the list. It will be released Monday, January 22, on which date will also appear the Nestor comedy, "A Macaroni Sleuth," with Lee Moran and Edith Roberts as the principal fun makers.

Four reels will be released Saturday, January 27. The leading release will be "The Daring Chance." The Joker comedy, "Love Me Love My Biscuits," and the Laemmle drama, "The Blood Stained Hand," with Matt Moore and Jane Gail are the other releases.

The Big U two act drama, "A Jungle Tragedy," is the release of Sunday, January 28. Other releases are "The Old Toymaker," with Leah Baird, and the Powers split reel, "Boomer Bill's Awakening," a comedy cartoon and a Dr. Dorsey educational.

The fifth episode of the Grace Cunard and Francis Ford serial, "The Purple Mask," entitled "Ablaze in Mid Air," will also be released during the week.

Beatriz Michelena, the prima donna and dramatic star featured in the California Motion Picture Company's "The Woman Who Dared," released January 20 by the Ultra Pictures Corporation.

New Pathe Manager

In accordance with the policy of building up the finest exchange organization in the industry, Pathe announces that in addition to the many excellent salesmen and managers who have been recruited since the beginning of the new administration of J. A. Berst as vice-president and general manager, the organization has been further strengthened by the addition of C. A. Meade, who assumed charge of the Detroit Pathe office on Christmas Day.

Mr. Meade is well known from coast to coast and needs no introduction to Detroit exhibitors. He has always enjoyed a reputation for ability, energy and fair dealings and he brings to Pathe a wealth of experience and the best wishes of a legion of men in all branches of the motion picture industry.

New Film Concerns

Certificates of incorporation for twelve new amusement enterprises having a total capital stock of $132,000 were filed with the secretary of state of New York during one week recently. Most all of the new concerns are located in New York City and will engage in the motion picture business.

The new firms are as follows:

Cinema Amusements, Inc., New York City—To conduct theaters and motion pictures houses. Capital, $1,000. Directors, Gerard T. Remsen, Joseph Schindler and S. G. Nissenson, 32 Liberty street, New York City.

Exploration and Research Film Company, New York City—To manufacture motion picture films, apparatus and devices; to give exhibitions and vaudeville performances. Capital, $10,000. Directors, Frederick M. Willis, J. B. Budworth and G. DeForrest Pryer, 1947 Broadway, New York City.

Apollo Pictures, Inc., New York City—A general motion picture business. Capital, $5,000. Directors, Harry R. Raver, H. H. Waller and V. B. Bogardus, 140 Nassau street, New York City.

Eugene Bytinski Company, New York

City. To engage in a general theatrical business, producing plays, acts and sketches, and maintain a theatrical booking agency. Capital $500. Directors, Max Grund, Eugene Bytinski and Hyman J. Rosenblum, 123 West Thirteenth street, New York City.

Mancini Grand Opera Company, New York City. To conduct a theatrical and operatic business in all branches. Capital $5,000. Directors, Americo Mancini, Herman F. Wessel and Guido J. Giudici, 124 West Forty-first street, New York City.

Effangee Films, New York City. Motion pictures. Capital, $1,000. Directors, William Meyer, William G. Miller, Jr., and Francis P. Buckhorn, 45 Dobbins street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Woodridge Operating Corporation, New York City. Theaters and motion picture houses. Capital, $2.000. Director, Nathan Frankel, Edward Larkin and John C. Hollembaek, 1847 Fifth avenue, New York City.

Kostukost Films, Inc., Eddyville, N. Y.—To manufacture motion picture films and equipment and operate a film exchange. Capital, $500. Directors, S. A. Anderson, H. Grossman and E. W. Hammons, 729 Seventh avenue, New York City.

Helen Moller Producing Company, New York City. Theatrical and motion picture business generally. Capital, $5,000. Directors, Horace L. Bennett, Mary D. Brogan and Rose O'Rourke, 31 Nassau street, New York City.

Koehler Optical Company, Queens County—Motion picture apparatus. Capital, $50,000. Directors, Alfred Koehler, Stephen J. Adelmann and Clayton H. Wilcox, Queens County, N. Y.

"Coupland Tours," New York City—Theater ticket brokers. Capital, $50,000. Directors, Carlisle Mason, William S. Fowler and Henry F. Storck, 30 Church street, New York City.

Ivan Film Prod. has added another star to its roster in the charming personage of Katherine Kaelred.

Her first picturization will be in the new special feature which Director General Ivan Abramson worked on for months, "Enlighten Thy Daughter," in which she will be co-star with Frank Sheridan and James Morrison. Miss Kaelred will be remembered as the original vampire with Robt. Hilliard in "A Fool There Was," first produced in 1909. She was born in London and her first appearance was with the Bram Stock in Milwaukee, the city of brew fame. She was identified with such attractions as "We Can't Be as Bad as All That," "Joseph and His Brethren," in Arnold Daly's "Beau Brummell."

She is one of the most renowned motion picture actresses.

The part assigned to her in the new production will tend to install her more solidly in the hearts of her countless friends.

H. P. Sappe of the Casino Feature Company of Detroit has been appointed special traveling representative of the Pittsburgh office of the Famous Players Film Company.

Bill Barry, former advertising manager with Nicholas Power and later general manager of Frank Powell Productions, Inc., is now at work on the Motion Picture News Studio Directory.

The Western Film Company of Sioux City, Iowa, is the most recent to contract for the output of the Christie Comedy Company, the first shipping to this exchange having been made a few days ago.

Fritz Wintermeier, who formerly directed such Chaplin releases as "His Night Out," "The Champion," "In the Park," "A Jitney Elopement," "The Tramp," and similar successes, has been engaged by the Unicorn Film Service Corporation to direct the "Billy West" comedies.

Harry L. Kerr, a well known executive in the motion picture field of Los Angeles, who has done much in systematizing the business management of the Keystone Film Company in the capacity of assistant business manager of the big plant, has been appointed studio manager of the Mabel Normand Feature Film Company.

The Melies Manufacturing Company desires to deny an article recently appearing in several trade papers reporting that Fred S. Peck, a Boston woolen man, had bought into the General Film Company through this company. Nor is it true that the Eastern Film Corporation of Providence, R. I., is in any way connected with the Melies company.

The Unity Sales Corporation has established its own exchange in Houston, Texas, to look after the distribution of "The Yellow Menace" and other features which are to be put out by this company. A. G. Behring, Jr., is to be manager of this exchange and will handle all of Texas and Oklahoma.

Besides "The Yellow Menace," Mr. Behring has at the present time to offer exhibitors in his territory "The Marriage Bond," in five reels, starring Nat C. Goodwin; "The Lottery Man," with Thurlow Bergen, in five parts; and the Tweedledum comedies with the famous Perez in a series of one and two-reel comedies.

New Unicorn Men

Following the recent tour of President Ike Schlank of the Unicorn Film Service Corporation throughout the country in the interests of the concern, it was announced that new managers had been appointed in the Unicorn branches at Cincinnati and Buffalo.

Film stocks remain inactive with rather free offerings of most issues and moderate buying demand confined to a few stocks.

American Film Company, Inc., remains at between 70 and 80. This company is about to put out a new edition of "Damaged Goods," the former production of which is said to have paid its backers over $15 for each $1 invested. "Kolb & Dill" films are proving very popular and large bookings are reported.

Famous Players Lasky Corporation—Rise in this stock to sales reported at 120, which seem to be based upon increase in capital to $20,000,000. Margaret Illington has recently signed with this company.

Lone Star Corporation—Good demand has advanced market on preferred to sales at 102 carrying dividend, and buyers are also picking up all of the common that can be secured around 37 to 38.

Mutual Film Corporation—Both common and preferred have ruled steady with small transactions in common and no activity in preferred. The company is said to be getting into a strong financial position by withholding dividends and the aggressive policy of securing best talent obtainable has resulted in the securing of Edna Goodrich, Kolb & Dill and the Monogram Film Company's two-reel featurettes of "Shorty Hamilton," etc.

North American Film Corporation—Absence of a demand for this stock is due to the fact that buyers are waiting for definite information in regard to the finances of the company. It is reported all debts have been paid, including cost of films for the "Diamond from the Sky" sequel, and stock will pay out between $50 and $60 per share.

Charles Chaplin—It is reorted that Charles Chaplin—after the contract expires, which necessitates his pictures being released through the Mutual—will sign a contract with the Keystone Company for the succeeding year. The Mutual Company claims this is a premature statement and that nothing has as yet been settled. It is a known fact that the Chaplin releases are not coming through on time, as it takes nearly two months to perfect productions that were scheduled for one month.

Triangle Film Corporation—Thomas H. Ince and Mack Sennett, according to the prevailing statements, both on the coast and in New York city, will, in future, release their productions through channels other than those connected with the Triangle company. Market on Triangle stock ruled a trifle weaker during the week.

ducting the Cincinnati branch and comes to his new post with a comprehensive experience based upon his services as manager for the General Film Service Corporation and the Mutual Film Corporation at Cincinnati. Mr. Smith enjoys great popularity with the exhibitors in his territory.

Frank H. Vine, the new conductor of the destinies of the Buffalo exchange, is also a film man of long experience and marked ability. He was formerly connected with the World Film Corporation at the Boston office of that concern, and was also manager of the General Film Service Corporation at its "Hub" exchange. Mr. Schlank feels that he has been very fortunate in securing the services of Messrs. Smith and Vine on account of their broad experience and past successful records in the territory in which they will operate.

Announcement has been made of the engagement of Miss Marian Evelyn Cox, the well-known young singer of Brooklyn, to Fred J. Bird, assistant sales manager of the Nicholas Power Company. Getting engaged and married seems to be the style at 90 Gold street. Everyone there appears to be affected with matrimonial fever except the export chief, who persists in his refusal to be captured.

Robert Carson has been placed under contract by Metro and assigned to one of the principal roles in support of Francis X. Bushman in the serial "The Great Secret." Carson hails from Carson City, Nevada, and for several years punched cattle on the famous Miller Brothers' "Ranch 101," at Bliss, Oklahoma.

Prior to facing the camera Carson toured the Orpheum Circuit at the head of his own company. His most recent film work was under the Fox banner in "The Darling of Paris." Under the pen name of Pritchard, Carson has contributed several novels and short stories to the literary world.

The Loyal Order of the Moose plans to erect a new combination theater and club building on the site of its present home, in St. Louis, at the southwest corner of Grand avenue and West Pine boulevard. The building will cost at least $500,000. The principal feature of the edifice will be an auditorium on the main floor, with a seating capacity of 3,200. It is proposed to lease and rent this theater for grand opera, musical and orchestral concerts and theatrical productions. Offers have been received from theatrical corporations for long engagements in the auditorium, but one of the chief objects is to utilize it practically as a grand opera house and palace of music.

Montana

Work on the many fine improvements started on the sites of shacks which were taken out of Butte's business district during the last summer is being rushed. The white walls of the Rialto Theater, with the green trimmings, are rising steadily, while other workmen are engaged in placing the stringers on which to lay the roof. Within a few days the walls and exterior will be completed and the big task of the interior finish, including plastering, painting and installation of fixtures, will be started.

Frank Needham has purchased the interest of his partner, Chas. Korener, in the Lyric Theater, at Havre, and will make improvements.

J. E. Willis, general manager American Bioscope, Chicago.

The American Bioscope Company, according to Mr. Willis' statement, has a fully equipped motion picture studio. For the present the management will confine its efforts to the manufacture of commercial films and a little later will probably manufacture and release the Everett True cartoons. The film rights for them have been reserved from the Newspaper Enterprize Association.

REEL FELLOWS HAVE NEW QUARTERS

The Reel Fellows Club now has new quarters on the fifth floor of the College Building. The new club rooms come as a result of the action of the Ways and Means Committee, of which Attorney David Alexander is chairman, whcih was appointed at the January 12 meeting of the club in its quarters in the Band Box Theater building. At the meeting Retiring President R. R. Nehls was presented with a solid gold fountain pen as a manifestation of the esteem in which the members of the club hold him. The incoming president, Ralph O. Proctor, presided and the other new officers, M. G. Watkins and R. C. Travers, vice-presidents, Harry C. Miller, treasurer, E. A. Hamburg, secretary, and A. E. Curtis, assistant secretary, were installed.

It was also decided at the meeting to incorporate the club, and to organize for the purpose of protecting the industry from detrimental license and censorship legislation which is now under way in the city and state.

Attorney F. M. Drucker has been appointed secretary of the Chicago F.I.L.M. Club to take the place of H. A. Spanuth, who was compelled by the press of business to resign from the office.

What the Great Critics Think of Goldwyn Stars and Plans

ANNOUNCEMENT of Maxine Elliott, Jane Cowl and Mae Marsh as Goldwyn stars resulted in an amount of newspaper praise unique in motion picture history.

THESE voluntary comments by the greatest critics on powerful newspapers should convince all exhibitors in advance of the tremendous drawing power our stars and productions will have:

CHICAGO JOURNAL: "In Maxine Elliott Goldwyn has discovered a Goldmine."

NEW YORK TIMES: "Mae Marsh is the Maude Adams of the screen."

NEW YORK TRIBUNE: "There is only one Mae Marsh."

CHICAGO AMERICAN: "Jane Cowl is our greatest dramatic actress."

NEW YORK TELEGRAPH: "We welcome Goldwyn to filmland. Samuel Goldfish, Edgar Selwyn and Arthur Hopkins will greatly advance motion pictures."

INDIANAPOLIS STAR: "Goldwyn Pictures Corporation . . . . the film Company with brains."

PHILADELPHIA LEDGER: "Goldwyn combines an exceptional group of stars and managers."

THE PITTSBURG DISPATCH: "Maxine Elliott, Jane Cowl and Mae Marsh . . . Evidently Goldwyn has 'gone out for bear.' "

THE SEATTLE TIMES: "Goldwyn's announcements seem to forecast the greatest stars ever assembled under one management."

The novelty of this announcement lies in the fact that many great authorities say about our organization and its stars the things that, otherwise, we might have to say about ourselves.

Producers Unite to Remedy Censorship

PLAN PERMITS PROSECUTIONS BY NATIONAL BODY

IN the firm belief that the solution of censorship ills lies within the power of the producers themselves, more than twenty-five of the principal film companies have undertaken the duty of policing their industry without the aid of self-appointed censors. Authority for attempting to apply this sort of preventative remedy is embodied in a resolution, permitting of prosecutions under criminal laws, which was adopted by vote of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, at its January meeting.

Men whose pictures are never cited in any censorship agitation realize that the censorship agitation aroused by irresponsible companies is threatening them as well as the public. These companies, seeking protection for themselves and for the public against the producers of objectionable films, therefore decided to assist in carrying on prosecutions authorized under the criminal laws of every state in the union.

D. W. Griffith, head of National Censorship movement.

In addition to arranging the details of the work of defending the films against censorship bills in about twenty states and in the national congress, the producers adopfed the resolution framed by the censorship committee of the National Association, which reads as follows:

Resolved: That the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry actively lend its aid in the prosecution of any person or corporation which produces and causes to be exhibited any indecent or obscene motion picture or any motion pictures which tend to debase or corrupt morals.

D. W. Griffith Presides

The meeting was presided over by David W. Griffith, chairman of the censorship committee. Acting with him were the other members of that committee, who are William A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, director general of the World Film Corporation; Walter W. Irwin, chairman of the executive committee and general manager of the Vitagraph V. L. S. E.; P. A. Powers, treasurer of the Universal Film Manufacturing Co.; Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; and Fletcher H. Mark of the Strand Theater.

A statement to the country was issued by David W. Griffith in the name of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, which reads in part as follows:

"We present thoughts and ideas through the means of the moving picture. In presenting these thoughts and ideas in story form, dealing with the lives, passions and conditions of the human soul, it is naturally true that things in this presentation may be sometimes shown, the moral effect of which upon the public mind must cause a divergence of opinions. This is necessarily true also of the stories of real life as told in the daily press, of romances and novels as conceived in the printed book and of various kinds of comedy and drama as portrayed upon the living stage. We are people the same as you. We come to you as brothers in humanity, asking only consideration and justice.

"The moving picture is new. We ask you in viewing the motion picture to remember this. We ask you, when you see an idea expressed in a moving picture, before you criticise it too severely, to consider the telling of this same story in the daily papers or on the printed page or in the form of drama on the stage. Before you censor in your mind this story of the moving picture, visualize the same story in book or stage form and consider its propriety.

"Over 300 years ago, exactly the same charges were made against the printing press, then a new institution, as are now made against the motion picture. It was charged that people were printing things in books, on every hand, in every direction, that were threatening the powers of the great government of that day and were absolutely defaming and destroying religion.

"However, we come to you asking your aid. We know that you, for your own sakes, jealous of your liberties, would demand that we have the same freedom of expression that is accorded the theater, the magazine, the newspaper and other mediums of expression in America.

"We ask the co-operation of the people of this country. We ask your co-operation to protect us from the evils of official censorship. We ask you to remember that censorship is the weapon that tyrants have used against the people to protect themselves and keep themselves in power since the beginning of time. A censorship in your state will enable the political power in that state to make itself absolutely invulnerable against attack."

Many Companies Join

Concurring in the action taken were the following producing companies: Arrow Film Corporation; Astra Film Corporation; Artcraft Pictures Corporation; California Motion Picture Company; Cosmofotofilm Company; Crystal Film Company; Erbograph Company; Consolidated Film Corporation; Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; Fox Film Corporation; Frank Powell Producing Company; Goldwyn Pictures Corporation; Thomas A. Edison, Inc.; Kalem Company; David W. Griffith; Mutual Film Corporation; Metro Pictures Corporation; General Film Company; Ivan Film Productions, Inc.; Pathe Exchanges, Inc.; Thanhouser Film Corporation; New York Motion Picture Company; B. S. Moss Picture Corporation; Vitagraph Company of America; Vitagraph V. L. S. E.; Universal Film Manufacturing Company; World Film Corporation; Unity Sales Corporation; Unicorn Film Service; United States Amusement Corporation; Williamson Brothers; Wharton, Inc.; and others.

Those present were: David W. Griffith, Walter W. Irwin, P. A. Powers, Jesse L. Lasky, Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, Carl H. Pierce, O. E. Goebel, S. L. Sladden, E. J. O'Donnell, A. Alperstein, I. E. BRONX THEATERS LEVY TAX

New York Exhibitors Contribute to Fund for Fight on Sunday Closing by 3-Cent Per Seat Assessment

It is cheaper and easier to pay a doctor's bill than to pay the undertaker, according to the conclusions arrived at by members of Local Number One of the New York City Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, after a thorough diagnosis of the Sunday closing fever with which their public is afflicted.

Hence there is a willingness shown by exhibitors, exchangemen and producers, to pool their interests and create a fund to be used in overcoming the ailment before it reaches the acute stage of law, or starts an epidemic in other states.

"Somebody must pay the doctor's bill." This was admitted all around.

President Sam Trigger, presiding at the meeting of January 10, when the discussion arose, called upon Lee Ochs to present a statement of the attitude taken by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry with regard to the question of "Who pays?" Mr. Ochs explained that the action of the legislative committee of the National Association, contrary to some reports, indicated a desire to have its members, the manufacturers, and the exhibitors, share what they consider a common obligation.

So far, he declared, the producers have contributed most liberally.

"Let's all help," the theater owners said.

Then the exhibitors' forum got real busy and passed a motion which calls for the payment of a three-cent per seat tax from all theaters in Manhattan, Brooklyn and Bronx. The presidents of the Leagues in the respective boroughs are instructed thereby to proceed with collecting the tax.

A protest against discriminatory Sunday closing laws was made by Rex Beach, in behalf of the Authors' League and himself. He was unable to be present in person but sent his message by a representative of the League. The exhibitors will have the support of authors generally, Mr. Beach stated.

Several new members were enlisted at the meeting. In an effort to increase the membership the initiation fee has been suspended.

There was renewed the discussion of advance deposits and members offered various suggestions for obtaining more latitude for exhibitors. Charles Steiner thought that a deposit of from one hundred to two hundred dollars, placed in a trust fund with a responsible agency, would give protection to the exchanges and afford relief from the existing burdens of the exhibitors.

Slides and petitions urging the public to help their local exhibitor raise sentiment on the side of the picture-going public were given to all present and much is being accomplished by this means.

REFUSE DEPOSIT CLAUSE

Montreal Exhibitors Join in Move to Put Stop to Advance Stipulation in Film Contracts —Association Acts

Montreal exhibitors have taken a more decided stand against the payment of advance deposits than have their neighbors in the States. The Canadian city now has an organization of exhibitors who are in open rebellion against the old system of deposits. The new association, immediately upon its formation in January, forwarded an ultimatum to the exchange managers of the city.

The exhibitors asserted that in future they would pay no deposits to any exchange, and that no member of the new association would so much as sign a contract for films, which was not first approved and signed by an authorized representative of the exchange.

Officers were chosen by the association as follows:

W. R. Herring, Mount Royal Theater, president; J. Sperdakos, Fairyland, treasurer; Mr. McMann, Independent Amusement Company, secretary. For the advisory committee, G. Barry of the Windsor Photoplays; Mr. Perry of the St. Dennis Theater and Mr. Robideau of the Theater Francais.

Veteran Selig Player Dead

William N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Company, has received news of the death of Matt B. Snyder, who appeared in several of the Selig features, namely, "The Crisis," and "The Garden of Allah." Mr. Snyder's death has cast a gloom over all members of the Selig staff both in Chicago and in Los Angeles as he was beloved by all who knew him. His portrayal of "Colonel Carvel," in "The Crisis," was proclaimed by all to be a gem of histrionic art. His untimely death prevented him from viewing his own work as "Count Anteoni," in the Selig production "The Garden of Allah," soon to be released. He was pasty eighty years of age.

Julia Arthur for Screen?

It is possible that Julia Arthur will go into pictures with her stage drama, "Seremonda." She has heretofore refused to consider the films as a means of interpretation, but upon being impressed with the screen possibilities of "Seremonda" she reconsidered.

Convention Turns Guns on Capitol

NEW YORK EXHIBITORS SEIZE CHANCE TO BE HEARD

PERHAPS the most important work of the convention of New York exhibitors, held at Albany, January 23, 24 and 25, under the auspices of the Exhibitors' League of America, was the solution proposed for settlement of the difficulties over the advance deposit requirements that have become a white elephant in the life of theater managers. President William A. Brady of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry sponsored the plan submitted to the convention which, it is believed, will have the effect of removing the white elephant from the box-office.

Together with other features which may be embodied in it, the tentative arrangement proposed by President Brady and analyzed by the speakers before the convention, seems likely to become the basis of a system which will replace the advance deposit. His proposal was that either the Exhibitors' League of America be incorporated, or a subsidiary corporate body formed, whose function would be to guarantee exhibitors' accounts and credits.

By the creation of such a body, it was pointed out that the exhibitor would find the relief he seeks, while distributors would be willing to accept the guarantee of such an association in lieu of the cash deposits now required.

The proposition was placed in the hands of a committee. The recommendations of the committee are expected to bring out a feasible plan which may in turn be submitted for the approval of the distributors' division of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. The officers of the National Association were guests of honor at the Albany meeting.

By holding their convention at Albany, the exhibitors were able to get close to the legislators, geographically, at least. The fact that the New York general assembly was considering taxation measures vitally affecting the moving picture business, simultaneously with the holding of the convention, made it possible for individuals to do some effective work in side-tracking malicious and harmful legislation.

The utter unfairness of increasing the tax burden of motion picture houses, when already they are paying seven different kinds of taxes and fees in many New York communities, was put squarely up to the legislative committee for investigating motion pictures. The attitude of Chairman Heber Wheeler, head of the committee, in showing his willingness to view all phases of the motion picture man's problems, won the appreciation of the exhibitors and witnesses who appeared before the committee.

Figures were placed in his hands prior to the convention, by Lee A. Ochs, president of the Exhibitors' League of America, giving the cold facts regarding the income from the moving picture theater business. That a state tax upon films or theaters would harm the theaters irreparably, was proved in more ways than one, and the individual exhibitors at the Albany gathering have been able to corroborate the statements already in the hands of the legislative committee.

Other legislation affecting the theater owners, which was pending in the legislature at the time, was the so-called home rule bill giving each city the right to vote on whether it should shut the playhouses on Sunday or whether it would allow exhibitors a respite from meddling until another election came around and the thing could be put to another vote, at the citizens' expense.

The convention served to draw enough attention to the justice of the exhibitors' claims that its effect will be lasting, declare many men in the industry.

Among the witnesses before the legislative committee were William M. Seabury and President Brady of the National Association; William L. Sherrill, president of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, and P. A. Powers, treasurer of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

Mr. Ochs, in his testimony, called attention to the fact that the exhibitor who a few years ago charged 5 cents admission, is now forced to demand 10 or 15 cents, and would in the near future raise it to 20 cents or go out of business. He stated that, according to the records in the license bureau, New York now had but 530 motion picture houses as against 1,089 three years ago, with a probable decrease to 400 within the next year.

The report of the legislative committee will probably be presented to the legislature about February 15. There is some rumor of the censorship craze being revived at that time, but the exhibitors believe that the big guns of the convention have effectively knocked out the misdirected legislation, for the present.

CHALLENGE ILLINOIS CENSORSHIP

Renewal of Efforts by Women Advocates of Restrictive Legislation Provokes Chicago Film Men to Quick Action

Exhibitors in Illinois have taken a determined stand against legislation aimed at the motion picture industry.

A committee of the Chicago local of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League is at work on plans to combat a proposed censorship law. Stringent steps to this end were urged at the January session, the committee being appointed at the conclusion of a spirited discussion.

The League is given some notion of the forces to be directed against it by the announcement that five members of the Illinois legislature, two of them in the Senate, have pledged their support for the bill. The state censorship law of Pennsylvania forms the model for the measure.

The Illinois situation presents a unique spectacle in the fact that a group of club women, the sponsors of the bill, find that one of their leading adversaries is also a woman. Mrs. Alfred Hamburger, wife of a prominent Chicago exhibitor, challenges the would-be law makers and is personally at work to organize the women of the city in the fight against harmful legislation.

Sharpshooting at Censorship

MR. EXHIBITOR:—If your theater is in a neighborhood where the censorship evil threatens, you can do much to offset the unjust agitation if you make a poster from the following terse remarks by Mary Gray Peck, of the Motion Picture Committee of the General Federation of Women's Clubs. Ask your local newspaper to reprint it. Show it on your screen.

"Moving pictures are going to save our civilization from the destruction which has successively overwhelmed every civilization of the past.

"They provide what every previous civilization has lacked—namely, a means of relief, happiness and mental inspiration for the people at the bottom.

"As long as a ticket stays around the price of a drink, the saloon has to reckon with the first rival that ever has been able to compete with it and beat it.

"Unless these unwise, ill-considered, and unjustified attacks of legislative bodies cease, motion pictures will be placed beyond the reach of the people of small means." —Mary Gray Peck.

governor, Frank O. Lowden, who may be placed in the same position as his predecessor, former Governor Dunne, who vetoed a censorship bill passed by the last general assembly.

President George Henry has announced himself a candidate for reëlection at the annual meeting, to be held February 2. A rival candidate is said to be Joseph Hopp. Secretary Sidney Smith will seek reëlection also.

A committee has been named to report on the present deposit system. It is comprised of Samuel Gold, Sam Katz, August T. Krug, Henry Schoenstadt and Robert R. Levy.

Fifteen new members were taken into the League: Nathan Joseph, 3132 State street; S. Abrams, 527 South Halsted street; M. S. Wells, 822 East Forty-seventh street; Nate Lindler, 1828 Montrose avenue; Basil Charukas, 436 East Sixty-first street; E. Christie, 2406 West Van Buren street; A. L. Christie, 2406 West Van Buren street; Charles G. Stuart, 1710 West Madison street; Al Blum, 2123 West Division street; Philip Banovitz, 2639 West Division street; Hilliard Campbell, 154 Grand Boulevard; H. E. Newell, 3947 North Crawford avenue; E. A. Beatty, Halsted and Sixty-third streets.

Theater Closes Big Contract

F. P. Woda, proprietor of the Orpheum Theater, 1882 Ninth street, Cleveland, one of the two big downtown theaters in that hustling city, has entered into a year's contract with Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. for the exclusive use of Greater Vitagraph productions. For one year, beginning January 22, nothing but Vitagraph pictures will be shown at the Orpheum.

The contract was closed by Walter W. Irwin, general manager of Vitagraph-V. L. S. E., after Mr. Woda and J. R. Johnson, manager of the Cleveland exchange of the Vitagraph company, had worked out a way by which this exclusive service could be supplied.

Blue Ribbon releases form the feature of the Orpheum's weekly bill hereafter, with "Big V" comedies, featuring Hughie Mack, and the "Captain Jinks" comedy series, starring Frank Daniels, as the additional short pictures on the program.

Though a whole week will be devoted to each Greater Vitagraph feature production, there will be one break in this program. The exception will be for "The Girl Philippa," the eight-reel Vitagraph special production by Robert W. Chambers in which Anita Stewart is starred.

The Orpheum will show "The Girl Philippa" for an extended run.

"The Secret Kingdom," the new Vitagraph adventure serial, also will be shown at the Orpheum, each episode running a full week.

NEW EXHIBITORS' AID

Simeon B. Greiver Heads Chicago Organization Intended to Increase Facilities Open to Distant Theaters

With the active support of twenty of the leading exhibitors dependent upon Chicago for service, Simeon B. Greiver, one of the best known exchange managers in Chicago, has inaugurated what is known as Chicago Agents for Mid-West Exhibitors.

It is formed for the purpose of giving out of town exhibitors Chicago representation and an opportunity to more effectively exploit pictures properly.

"We expect several hundred exhibitors to come under our banner and we desire to effect a working coöperation between exchanges and exhibitors which will benefit the industry as a whole," said Mr. Greiver.

In most cases, the Mid-West exhibitors will have the exclusive bookings of the theaters, will act in an advisory capacity, will prepare newspaper campaigns and weekly programs, and give the exhibitor advance information beneficial to him.

Such agencies are now being successfully operated in several large cities, and the results obtained are very satisfactory.

Mr. Greiver is one of the younger men of the film business in Chicago. In his seven years' experience he has successfully operated theaters, managed exchanges, directed road shows playing big pictures on percentage, and managed newspaper campaigns.

Mayor to Lead at Exhibitors' Ball

Of the many surprises in store for the patrons of the Film Ball at Krueger Auditorium, Newark, N. J., on Thursday evening, February first, will be that of the Honorable Thomas L. Raymond, mayor of Newark, leading the grand march with Anita Stewart.

This being the first time that any association has been able to induce Mayor Raymond to act in this capacity, only goes to show the rapid advancement that has been made in the picture industry and the standing it now has, not only with the general public, but with state and city officials.

Entries are coming in daily for the contest of young women, who are desirous of becoming stars and all the indications are that Miss Florence La Badie, and the other judges, will have considerable difficulty in picking out the winner.

The First Infantry band and orchestra of Newark will furnish the music for both the dancing and the entertainment and the members of the Exhibitors' League of New Jersey will all act as committee men to look after the comfort and welfare of their guests.

"The Flowers of Doom" is a five-reel Chinese drama being filmed at Universal City by Rex Ingram.

ACTUAL CRITICISM OF FILMS BY EXHIBITORS, FROM A BUSINESS STANDPOINT

(Editorial Note:—"The trade paper that can give the most accurate information about current features is the paper every exhibitor wants," said a prominent manager recently. In addition to its regular reviews, MOTOGRAPHY will each week hereafter print the actual unvarnished opinions of exhibitors on films they have run in their houses, with the idea of aiding other exhibitors in making up their programs. The theaters mentioned here are in Chicago, unless otherwise noted. Managers and bookers like to get various opinions concerning a feature before they run it. Upon request MOTOGRAPHY will gladly furnish the opinion of men who have run the feature in question. Give both titles and makers of pictures about which you inquire. SNOW WHITE, (Paramount) Marguerite Clark—"We ran this picture on Monday and Tuesday and did a fine business with it both days. It is especially fine for children."—De Luxe Theater.—Catering to the better classes.

THE MEASURE OF A MAN, (Universal) J. Warren Kerrigan—"This proved to be a very good box office magnet for us and it probably would be for any exhibitor, as Kerrigan is rather popular."—De Luxe Theater.—Catering to the better classes.

REDEEMING LOVE, (Paramount) Kathlyn Williams—"We had this feature on two days, Friday and Saturday. and it did a fine business. Kathlyn Williams is popular with our people and they seemed to like the picture."—De Luxe Theater.—Catering to the better classes.

WHOM THE GODS DESTROY, (Vitagraph) Alice Joyce—"This feature, the first one for Alice Joyce since she 'came back' to the screen, makes a good show and business was good with it. We ran it last Sunday. Of course, Alice Joyce's name alone brings in lots of people."—De Luxe Theater.—Catering to the better classes.

THREE OF MANY, (Triangle) Clara Williams—"This played to fine houses all the time we were open. Patrons were well pleased. It is probably the best picture Clara Williams has ever appeared in."—Charles E. Hagen, Kenmore Theater.—In a better class residence section.

VANITY, (Metro) Emmy Wehlen—"We had fairly good houses all the time Monday with this feature. It is very good indeed. The cast is excellent and you couldn't ask more of the photography and the production in general."—Charles E. Hagen, Kenmore Theater.—Drawing from a better class residence section.

THE MAN WHO FORGOT, (World) Robert Warwick and Doris Kenyon—"This picture was a big box office attraction. It certainly was a good money getter in every way."—Charles E. Hagen, Kenmore Theater.—Drawing from a better class residence section.

MISS GEORGE WASHINGTON, with Marguerite Clark, (Famous Players-Paramount)—"We generally show a picture in Lincoln two days. I booked this picture for a week but was afraid of it when I did it. We have 604 seats and never could accommodate the crowds. We show at the Magnet all those big stars with the enormous rents, but never in the history of our business did we receive so many compliments. Did not have any sore heads either, as we were not compelled to raise our admission as we have on these stars. If space would allow me, I could mention a dozen pictures on the Paramount such as 'Seventeen,' 'Parson of Panamint' and others which on any other program would be called specials. I like to give credit where due and I say three cheers for the Paramount, if they will continue their policy."—N. H. Cinberg, Manager The Magnet Theater, Lincoln, Nebr.

THE RAINBOW, (Art Dramas) with Dorothy Bernard—"This is a mighty good picture and it brought us full houses on Wednesday night. Art Dramas features are getting better all the time, and this one is all that any one could ask in acting, photography and general production. Dorothy Bernard is fine."—Charles E. Hagen, Kenmore Theater.—Drawing from a better class residence section.

THE PRICE OF SILENCE, (Fox) featuring William Farnum—"We ran this picture two days to very good business both days. It can't be beat for a box office attraction. There is no rough stuff in it and our patrons were very well pleased with it. I make it a point to ask them. William Farnum is a favorite with our people and this special production is an exceptional one."—Charles E. Hagen, Kenmore Theater.—Drawing from a better class residence section.

IS MARRIAGE SACRED? (Essanay series) No. 1—"The Burning Band"—"Featuring Marguerite Clayton and Edward Arnold and all star cast. Three and four reel material in two reels. In this first story, Miss Clayton does some very strong, intense dramatic work. She has strong support in Ainsworth and Arnold and the rest of the cast. Photography good. Direction and detail up to the usual Calvert standard. Undoubtedly a money getter."—George V. Booth, Bridgeport Theater.—Catering to working classes.

BLACK CAT FEATURES, (Essanay two reelers)—"More multiple reel stuff cut down. Featuring different stars in each. I think enough of them to feature them on Sundays. Nuf sed. Good box office attractions."—George V. Booth, Bridgeport Theater.—Catering to working classes.

THE ENEMY, with Peggy Hyland, (Vitagraph)—"A very good picture. It is a good temperance argument. The audience liked it."—Martin Saxe, Knickerbocker Theater.—High class audiences.

THE LITTLE YANK, with Dorothy Gish, (Triangle)—"About five years ago I saw a Biograph something like this picture, but the Biograph was better. The story is old and not worth putting into five reels. It is far below the Triangle standard, and Dorothy Gish is too good to be put into such a story. The man who played General Grant might better play in comedy. We know who he is supposed to be by his whiskers and the stub of a cigar. He is certainly a chivalrous gentleman though, for he stops the war to let the Little Yank, (Dorothy Gish) pass through the lines!"—Martin Saxe, Knickerbocker Theater.—Catering to high class audiences.

Rose of the South, with Peggy Hyland, (Vitagraph)—"Another war picture of '65. My audience does not take kindly to these subjects no matter how good the story. The picture is good but on account of the subject, war, did not draw."—Martin Saxe, Knickerbocker Theater.—Catering to high class audiences.

The Eagle's Mate, with Mary Pickford (Paramount)—"This is a revival of a picture made four years ago. It is interesting to see the differences in pictures then and now. There is certainly more energy used in present day directing. Also there is not enough plot to this story. But I am glad I ran it, for it went over well and was a good money getter. I ran it as a substitute for a 'pink permit' picture for I have made it a rule never to run a 'pink permit' picture in the Castle Theater." —M. J. Weil, Castle Theater.—Downtown house.

The Weaker Sex, (Triangle)—"A very good picture which brought very good business. It was liked by everyone."—E. Dlouhy, Vitagraph Theater.—Catering to middle class audiences.

The Bride of Hate, with Frank Keenan, (Triangle) —"A fair picture which brought fair business. It was not liked by women."—E. Dlouhy, Vitagraph Theater.— Catering to middle class audiences.

The Foolish Virgin, with Clara Kimball Young, (Selznick)—"A poor picture which was not well liked. Brought fair business."—E. Dlouhy, Vitagraph Theater. —Catering to middle class audiences.

The Bondage of Fear, with Ethel Clayton, (World) —"A very good picture, well acted and well produced. My patrons like it. It is the best World production I've seen for a long time."—E. Dlouhy, Vitagraph Theater.— Catering to middle class audiences.

The Iced Bullet, with William Desmond, (Triangle)—"Very novel in the way the story is put over. The story in itself is weak, but the way it starts, with Desmond, a playwright, trying to sell scenarios, and the finish of the story will win hearty laughs in almost any audience. A picture on this order is all right once in a while, but not too often."—Martin Saxe, Knickerbocker Theater.—Catering to high class audiences.

Peck O'Pickles, with Kolb and Dill, (Mutual)— "This is an excellent production. It broke my house record on the night I ran it."—W. B. Martin, Modesto, Cal.

Snow White, with Marguerite Clark, (Famous Players-Paramount)—"Judging this picture and the way it draws, it seems that Marguerite Clark is about ready to out-draw Mary Pickford. The acting is very clever. The picture is beautifully put together. The story, although a fairy tale, will make a big hit with any audience unless they are 'crabs' and don't know what they want. It is a great picture for the children. We did more business with it the second day than the first."— Martin Saxe, Knickerbocker Theater.—Catering to high class audiences.

Perils of Our Girl Reporters, with Helen Greene, (Mutual)—"We have been showing these on Sunday in our house. They are very interesting stories and the people like them."—M. M. Rubens, Crystal Theater, Joliet, Illinois.

Grant, Police Reporter, with George Larkin and Ollie Kirby, (Kalem single reel series)—"For highly sensational stuff with a punch, this series has no equal. Larkin pulls the biggest variety of dangerous stunts I have ever seen. A sure drawing power."—George V. Booth, Bridgeport Theater.—Catering to working classes.

The Evil Eye, with Blanche Sweet, (Lasky-Paramount)—"I reviewed this picture but did not run it because it is a 'pink permit' (no children allowed) for Chicago audiences. But I think it is a very fine picture and it should be a good money getter."—M. J. Weil, Castle Theater.—Downtown house.

Great Expectations, with Louise Huff, (Paramount) —"The 'Expectations' proved disappointing from the box office standpoint. It is a fairly good picture but did not draw well. Jack Pickford and Louise Huff do not seem very popular with my patrons."—M. J. Weil, Castle Theater.—Downtown house.

A Woman Alone, with Alice Brady, (World)—"A fair picture pretty well liked by the public. We did a fairly good business."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater. —Catering to high class patronage.

Vanity, with Emily Wehlen, (Metro)—"A very good production. Went over well with the people."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater.—Catering to high class patronage.

The Chaperon, with Edna Mayo and Eugene O'Brien, (Essanay-K. E. S. E.)—"A good comedy drama, which was well liked by patrons. We did pretty good business with this."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater.—Catering to high class patronage.

Her Soul's Inspiration, with Ella Hall, (Bluebird)—"Went over pretty well. Fair box office values." —M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater.—Catering to high class patronage.

The Bride of Hate, with Frank Keenan, (Triangle—"This is very good, one of Frank Keenan's strongest plays. Went over very well."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater.—Catering to high class patronage.

The Pipe of Discontent, (Triangle Comedy)— "This is very poor, worth about a dollar a reel! No wonder the Keystone name is not put on it. It is nowhere near the Keystone standard."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater.—Catering to high class patronage.

The Americano, (Triangle) Douglas Fairbanks— "This picture is positively a knock-out. The star's work is great. Picture played to big business despite the fact that the weather was very inclement. Douglas Fairbanks has become one of the biggest box office attractions."—S. Trinz, Covent Garden Theater.—Catering to the better classes.

The Phantom Buccaneer, with Richard Traverse, (Essanay-K. E. S. E.)—"A very good picture, on which we did good business."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater.—High class patronage.

Joy and the Dragon, with little Marie Osborne, (Pathe)—"This little star always appeals to my patrons and we did good business with this picture."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater.—High class patronage.

Honest Thieves, (Triangle Comedy)—"Very poor."—H. Miller, Boston Theater.—Downtown house.

The Image Maker, with Valkyrien, (Pathe)—"Star, photography and story all good."—H. Miller, Boston Theater.—Downtown house.

The Bondage of Fear, Ethel Clayton, (World)—"Very fine picture."—H. Miller, Boston Theater.—Downtown house.

Snow White, (Paramount) Marguerite Clark—"An exceptionally good picture which played to exceptionally good business on both days during which it was shown at this theater. People seemed satisfied."—S. Trinz, Covent Garden Theater.—Catering to the better classes.

Blind Man Sees "Intolerance"

Sergeant Major Middlemiss of the King's Own Scottish Borderers, who was blinded at the Dardanelles, and is in America to raise funds for his brother soldiers, attended "Intolerance," showing at the Colonial Theater, Chicago. And what is more, he enjoyed the performance. When interviewed at the Allied Bazaar he talked most enthusiastically upon it. Being a student of music, the orchestral and vocal interpretations of every incident, with the help of his wife's whispered description of events and sub-titles, made it all very real and as though his eyesight had been restored.

Major Middlemiss remarked that the fighting tanks and liquid fire used in the present war were anticipated by the ancient Babylonians.

FARMERS TRIM THE CITY FELLERS

LAST week about twenty-five exhibitors of Chicago and other film men and near film men from the haunts of the Mallers Building and other land marks on Wabash avenue, felt the call of the wild (and the wet) and went to Milwaukee to see the Ritchie Mitchell-Freddy Welch tussel.

Stewart Honech, of the Lager City Pathe office, acted as host.

The "after theater party" consisted of a few rounds of cards in which the eight exhibitors from Oshkosh, or some other foreign place, put the other film sharks under the ropes.

It is said that many a Chicago man resorted to his check book and some of them negotiated loans to finance their railroad fare back to Windy Town where it is quiet and safe and where there is no awful gambling.

LESSER ACQUIRES WORLD'S RIGHTS

Sol Lesser, otherwise known as the little Napoleon of the film field, has just acquired the world's rights to a new feature.

As a New Year's gift his wife presented him with an eight pound baby boy.

Jack O'Toole, who has been under the weather for a few days, revived considerably when he booked his Fox funny-stuff into J. L. and S.'s new Rialto.

A GALE OF SIGHS.

"Now if I don't make good after all the help I've had and after everybody has been so good to me, I'm going to go away and crawl in a big black hole somewhere!" said Gail Kane to us just before she left Chicago for California.

Wouldn't that be a holey fright?

THIS IS HARD TO BEER

There is a lot of talk about the waste in the film industry but how about the habit of the man in Maine who is a crank on taking his baths (external) in beer?

BIG FILM FIRE IN CHICAGO

Yesterday I stood in the offices of the Atlas Educational Film Company in the Mallers building in Chicago and gazed out over the ruins wrought by the fire which swept through their extensive establishment the day before. And my stony heart bled for the Rehms and the whole company.

Part of a whole reel of film had been destroyed. The damage to the can is difficult to estimate.

And that is not the worst.

On the green rug, by the side of the chair in which one of the good looking stenographers sits, there was a spot at least three feet in diameter caused by the ravages of the fire extinguisher.

While all this happened, down in the street below the fire gongs gonged and the engines belched forth mighty volumes of smoke. And the other exchangemen were wondering where they'd be doing business next day.

GUESTS, FAIR AND OTHERWISE.

Among those who have graced Chicago with their presence during the past few days are Dave Griffith, a motion picture director, Gail Kane, an actress who will attempt to live in Santa Barbara on 1,000 a week from American, Charlie Murray, the Keystone gringrower, vacationing to Indiana, and Herr Peace or something like that who is overlooking der music at "Intolerance."

HELPFUL HINT TO FILM COMPANIES.

In entertaining press people in honor of visiting stars always choose the Blackstone Hotel. It insures popularity. Reference: American lunch to Miss Kane. It was cause for Mutual rejoicing.

INSTALL BRONX OFFICERS

Cinema Exhibitors' Association of Bronx County Has Fun-Fest and Sees John J. Wittman Take President's Chair

The Cinema Exhibitors' Association of Bronx county held their fifth installation of officers, January 11, at Fleischman's, Bronx county.

Borough President Douglas Mathewson was the installing officer, and the following officers were installed for this year: President, John J. Wittman; vice-president, Nathan Vinegrad; secretary, Henry Cole; treasurer, Samuel Suchman; financial secretary, John Bolte; trustees, Matchet, Coleman and Bauernfreund; sergeant-at-arms, Dan Newman. President Mathewson made an ideal installing officer and told several amusing and truthful stories which made a great hit. District Attorney Francis Martin of Bronx county was toastmaster and dwelt at length on the great good that good, clean moving pictures could do for any community, and how the exhibitors of the Bronx always had that aim in view.

President Wittman was presented with a handsomely framed portrait of himself as a token of esteem from the members of the association. Secretary Henry Cole was presented with a silver fountain pen, the presentations being made by District Attorney Martin.

National President Lee A. Ochs, of the M. P. E. L. of A., made a splendid speech telling those present the great work that can be accomplished and what will be accomplished by the M. P. E. League with the help of the individual exhibitor working in harmony with the organization.

Seymour Mork, William Quigley and Peter Hatting, assistants to District Attorney Martin, made fine and telling speeches. President Sam Trigger of New York Local Number One made a timely speech and was roundly applauded.

A fine supper was served and a cabaret provided. All had a good time.

Exhibitors Booming Big Ball

Arrangements have been completed assuring the success of the Grand Carnival and Ball to be given under the auspices of the Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors of Brooklyn and Long Island, on February 21, at Stauch's Palace, Coney Island.

The B. R. T. has agreed to run special trains to Coney Island on the evening of the Carnival in order to facilitate the transport of the crowds expected to attend. These trains will be run on the Brighton Beach, and West End lines of the Elevated, and on the Fourth Avenue Subway. All preparations for the pending voting contest have been made by the Brooklyn Daily Eagle, the contest to commence on February 1, and to close on February 17.

During the contest the Daily Eagle will carefully supervise the counting of votes and also arrange matters in connection with the contest in such a way that papers will not be sold in bulk to any one person, in order to avoid the accidental election of an unknown actor, or actress, by well meaning friends who might for such a purpose purchase large quantities of papers and so defeat the election of truly popular artists. Of course, this will greatly stimulate the voting as the public will have the assurance that those elected as king and queen of the Carnival will actually be the most popular picture actor and actress.

The Carnival and Ball will be attended by the best known motion picture stars. Douglas Fairbanks has made positive promise to be one of the guests of honor. The entertainment committee is at present negotiating with the famous producer, R. H. Burnside, to stage the ceremonies of crowning the king and queen of the carnival which will be one of the numerous events of the festivity.

There are over 300 exhibitors in Brooklyn and Long Island working enthusiastically to make the affair the biggest in New York film history, and one to be remembered a long time.

Lunch to New American Star

Gail Kane, the "girl on our cover" this week, who is the latest addition to the American Film Company's list of stars, and another of the prominent screen artists whose pictures will be released through Mutual, paid Chicago a visit, January 22, on her way from the east to the Santa Barbara studios of the American company. Accompanied by her mother, she stayed in the city just long enough to be the guest of honor at a luncheon given for her at the Blackstone Hotel by S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American company. John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual corporation; Terry Ramseye, director of Mutual publicity; Richard Nehls, of the American company; other officials of the American and Mutual organizations and representatives of the daily and film press were present.

Miss Kane is well known among the picture public through her pictures on the World program. A certain Ethel Barrymore-like charm is one of her distinguishing characteristics, which accompanies her ability as an emotional actress. It is said she is to receive $1,000 a week for her services for American. Rollin S. Sturgeon, formerly of Vitagraph, has been engaged to direct Miss Kane.

New Universal Serial

The Universal Film Manufacturing Company announces that arrangements have been made for the release in fifteen episodes of a new serial, "The Voice on the Wire," founded on the novel of the same title by Eustace Hale Ball. The screen version was written by Grubb Alexander.

The book enjoyed a widespread popularity and the author is noted for his stories of mystery. "The Voice on the Wire" offers unusual situations for a film drama, which promises to make it the most successful ever presented by the Universal.

The leading roles are played by Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber and the picture was produced under the direction of Stuart Paton.

"Glory" in Poli Circuit

"Glory," the latest release of the Unity Sales Corporation, has been booked over the entire Poli circuit of theaters by Herman Rifkin of the Eastern Feature Film Co., of Boston, who handles all Unity releases for the New England States.

Herbert Rawlinson and Neva Gerber play the principal roles in "The Ten Cent Store Lady," a five-reeler under production at Universal City.

New Chicago House

THE Rialto, Chicago's newest downtown theater, located on State street just north of Van Buren, opened on January 22. The house is another of the Jones, Linick & Schaefer string. It will run continuous vaudeville from eleven to eleven. It has a seating capacity of about eighteen hundred and is the first theater outside of a picture house on State street in the loop. The cost of the house was six hundred thousand dollars.

The new theater will run pictures as well as vaudeville. One of the first films booked is the Fox film comedy, "Social Pirates," which was chosen by Aaron Jones himself.

The new playhouse is decorated in old rose and gold. The exterior is of granite and harmoniously colored terra cotta. The front is of exceptionally fine design, interesting and beautiful but not overdone.

The auditorium is ventilated by forced drafts of air, filtered and purified. A uniform temperature of seventy degrees will be maintained winter and summer. In addition to the Rialto, Jones, Linick & Schaefer controls McVickers, The Colonial, La Salle and Studebaker theaters, besides a number of others. The last three named are leading Chicago picture houses.

Palace Theater, Huntington, Opens in February

The Palace Theater in Huntington, Long Island, now under construction will open, according to present plans, on February 12, 1917.

The Palace is a new venture, instigated by business men of the town of Huntington, construction having been commenced last summer. The house is modern in every detail, spacious and with seats, exits, etc., well arranged. Huntington is one of the richest towns of its size in the United States and the theater is making a bid for the very best populace of the town. The house is owned by a corporation and will be managed by I. Whitestone, who heretofore has been engaged in another business in the town. The Palace will show three Paramount Features a week opening with Pauline Frederick in "Ashes of Embers."

A San Francisco Five Center

The Majestic Theater of San Francisco has been successfully managed by Henry F. Slater for seven years. This theater is popularly known as the "House of Universal Pictures," and above each entrance in the lobby appears the Universal trademark in colors.

Unlike the average theater, it has only one matinee a week, and that on Sunday; on weeks days it opens evenings at five o'clock. The price of admission is five cents except when serials are shown, then ten cents is charged, and the house is usually crowded.

After the great fire of 1906, in the vicinity of Third street around Rincon Hill quite a colony sprang up, and several motion picture houses opened, among these being the Majestic. At that time Mr. Slater showed the so-called "trust" pictures, until they were given to a competitor, when a larger and finer house, was opened in the neighborhood. After the opening of this new house, he cancelled his service, and commenced showing the independent releases handled by Mr. Markowitz, who is now manager of the California film exchange.

The Majestic has a seating capacity of about 400, and has two large exits on a side street, making it a safe house. Edison machines are used in the projection room, and music is furnished by Wurlitzer Player.

Unusual New Los Angeles House

Sid Grauman, a well-known San Francisco exhibitor and amusement promoter, consummated one of the largest theater deals in the west when he signed a ten-year lease with R. A. Rowman and Company for the Auditorium, in the twelve-story theater and studio building which is now being erected at Third and Broadway, by the Stability Building Company.

Mr. Grauman and those interested with him will spend over $100,000 in fitting up the theater, which will be one of the handsomest motion picture houses west of Chicago. The seating capacity of the theater is 2,400. It has a stage which will be of a size adaptable to the presentation of plays and spectacles of magnitude, but the management will confine the uses of the auditorium to motion pictures for at least a year or two.

Here's proof of the unusual ingenuity of some theater men. In drawing in crowds for "The Girl and the Game," the Helen Holmes railroad serial, Manager M. T. Panty, of the Idle Hour Theater of Michigan City, Indiana, built a miniature railroad and had a little train running on it. "Stops here every Wednesday," said the sign about the serial.

A $40,000 pipe organ will be installed and the orchestra pit will accommodate fifty pieces. Rest rooms, a day nursery, and a tea room will complete this new wonder house of the west.

The theater will occupy the ground floor of the great Spanish renaissance building now rising at Third and Broadway. Its lobby will open from the Broadway entrance through an old Spanish doorway which will rise to the height of several stories.

On the interior the novel feature is the absence of posts to obstruct the view. There is but one balcony to the theater.

A. C. Martin, the architect of the building, has just returned from an eastern trip where he studied various styles of architecture before perfecting the plans of the Grauman Theater.

The house will be ready, it is expected, about October 1, 1917.

Iowa Theater Burns

The Kerr Theater at Pisgah, Iowa, burned down on December 28 during the progress of the performance. The fire was discovered about 8:30 o'clock and before assistance could reach the theater the building was ablaze and beyond control. The theater and an adjoining property were totally destroyed.

The origin of the fire was from spontaneous combustion, aggravated from a hot stove near one of the side walls. The fire was contained within the walls for a number of hours before it was discovered and as soon as it started to break forth there was nothing that could stop the blaze. What made things worse was the fact that it was so bitter cold that the town fire apparatus froze up and was of no avail. Town officials, business men and farmers from the immediate communities formed a brigade and saved more buildings from damage.

H. W. Kerr, manager of the house, is also manager of the Kerr Theater at Little Sioux, Iowa, and editor of the Hustler and the Pisgah News. A new theater will soon be built where the one which was destroyed stood.

This Draws the Crowds

The success of Clune's Santa Ana Theater, on the coast of California, is due to the energy of Frank Lacy, manager, who is a splendid showman.

When the Triangle-Ince feature, "The Thoroughbred," was shown Mr. Lacy hired six horses and as many boys attired as jockeys, and staged an exact replica of one of the scenes.

At the showing of "Diane of the Follies," Fine Arts-Triangle picture, he engaged sixteen young ladies to pose as models, and two dancing girls, with which he reproduced a scene from the picture shown. He also had an augmented orchestra for these features.

An Old English Picture House

The new Piccadilly motion picture theater, of Rochester, New York, is now catering to pleased audiences every day.

It has one of the most comfortable seating arrangements of any theater in the country, the chairs being especially designed and constructed for this theater. In order to do this however the management was forced to sacrifice 500 seats.

The theater possesses a system of electrical equipment, and illumination, complete in every detail, and perfectly planned for the presentation of photo plays.

The decorations have been carefully planned and a color scheme of warmth and personality has been evolved, calculated to create an atmosphere of coziness in the largest theater in Rochester.

The projection room has three especially designed machines of the best construction, which show flickerless pictures upon a Minusa gold fiber screen.

The theater is equipped with a pipe organ, as well as an orchestra of sixteen pieces, under the direction of Miss Susan Tompkins, who will offer many features in musical accompaniment.

The Piccadilly derives its name, probably because of its interior decorations, which are old English style throughout. This is unusual in motion picture houses, and will present a pleasing contrast to the average theater.

The manager is W. H. Seely, an experienced theater man. The house has exclusive Paramount service, and is the only theater in the city playing the Paramount stars.

Black and White in Washington

Washington, D. C., is to have two new motion picture theaters, which will be commenced within the next few months. Tom Moore, who now controls three houses on Ninth street, is understood to be backing the larger of the two houses.

The larger of these two houses will be for white patrons and will have a seating capacity of 2,200. The other house will be for negroes and will have a seating capacity of approximately 1,500.

The capital required for the "colored house" is being furnished by white interests. The management of the theater will, however, be placed in the hands of a negro. This will be the second large house of its kind to be erected in the District of Columbia, and about the sixth house erected for the accommodation of the 100,000 negroes in Washington.

"Max Comes Across," scene from the first Max Linder-Essanay comedy. There will be 12 of these classy and rib-tickling fun films with the great little French artist.

"Split Reel" Notes for Theater Men

HOW OTHERS ARE STEERING THE SHIP

MAYOR DAVIS of Cleveland has issued a statement that all films showing nude figures, regardless of the moral they teach, will be barred from Cleveland. At the same time he overruled the state censor's approval of "Purity."

The Hillwood Theater, Kansas City, Missouri, was destroyed by fire a short time ago. The owners are already preparing to erect a new theater on the same spot.

Under the auspices of the Commercial Club the management of the Liberty Theater of Spokane gave a three-reel motion picture at the new community hall a short time ago.

C. S. Austin has taken over a Paramount Theater at Effingham, Illinois, opening it on January 9th with the Lasky-Paramount production of Geraldine Farrar in "Carmen."

The motion to pass the ordinance prohibiting Sunday picture shows at Pucyres, Ohio, has been defeated. The ordinance had been drafted and supported by the local federation of women's clubs.

The Clark Theater of Chicago, managed by Ben Grien, a short time ago inclosed with its program a coupon which, with five cents, was good for admission to the theater on two specified days.

The Strand Theater, Louisville, Kentucky, recently opened under its new management—B. F. Keith-Mary Anderson—with Pearl White in "Pearl of the Army" and William Farnum in "The Price of Love."

On the Strand Theater (New York) program for last week was Marie Doro in "Lost and Won," a newspaper drama, "The King of the Rail," and a new comedy, "The End of a Perfect Day," also the Strand Tropical Review.

Fleischmann and Goldreyer are to install a $15,000 organ in their Majestic Theater at 185th street and St. Nicholas avenue, New York City. The Majestic is one of the newest and most attractive theaters in the Washington Heights district.

The high cost of eggs has developed something new in motion picture matinees. The manager of a house at Muskogee, Oklahoma, recently advertised a Saturday afternoon matinee, the admission for which was one strictly fresh egg.

All lights in the Rialto of New York were lowered the evening of his death out of respect to the memory of the late Colonel William F. Cody, while the famous frontiersman is shown on the screen in the last motion picture taken of him prior to his death.

D. J. Kulaszewicz, manager of the Rex Theater at Bessemer, Michigan, will introduce vaudeville as part of his program. Additions have been built, including dressing room and stage and an attractive procenium. The seating capacity has been increased to 600.

"A Visit to Helena and Vicinity," a film taken last summer, was shown at Helena, Mont., recently for the inspection of the officials of the Helena Commercial Club. There is also a reel showing Montana's agricultural resources. These films will be sent round several circuits.

Those theaters in Escanaba and the Upper Peninsula of Michigan and which charge as high as fifty cents admission and choose meritable features as specialties, according to Manager Eugene Wilson of the Mutual office in that city, have met with a success exceeding their own predictions.

Attendants in full dress and the last word in courtesy and high-class pictures are the distinguishing characteristics of the Strand Theater, Salt Lake City, formerly the Rex, which opened recently with H. W. Pickering, former newspaper man, as manager. The Strand is one of the W. S. Swanson houses.

Whether Hastings, Michigan, will have moving pictures on Sunday will be decided at the next meeting of the city council or by popular vote in April. Announcements by the managers of the two picture theaters that they would put on Sunday shows resulted in protests from business men and several pastors.

More than fifty film exchange managers, salesmen and motion picture exhibitors of Cincinnati recently attended a dinner at the Cuvier Press Club, given in honor of Harry A. Bugie, manager of the Klein-Edison Film Company's exchange office, who left later for Philadelphia to take charge of the office of that company there.

With the addition of thirty names to the membership role of the Milwaukee Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, the organization now boasts that ninety per cent of Milwaukee exhibitors belong to the organization. The league's campaign to keep fraudulent and misleading advertisements out of print is being pushed with persistence.

The proprietor of the Webster Theater, St. Louis was held up while 200 persons were seated in the audience. The manager, David Graham, was counting the receipts when two men walked up to the box office window and demanded the cash. As they were escaping, he opened fire and a revolver duel followed. The robbers obtained $200.

The Rialto Theater of New York City gives "The Mysterious Mrs. M" the featured position on the pictorial program this week. The author, star, story, and producing company are unknown and no information of any kind has been given the public in advance of the presentation. The lobby display heralding the advent consists solely of paintings showing faint glimpses of "Mrs. M." with no other lettering save the title of the picture. Nothing has been said in advance as it is being held as a surprise for the patrons.

A grand jury of Baltimore, Maryland, has called attention to the danger in many picture houses in case of fire. It states that many theaters are not provided with proper exits. Its investigating committee states that in many cases exits are inaccessible or blocked by rubbish. The committee advises immediate action to remedy the conditions.

Twelve additional arrests have been made at Fort Worth, Texas, for violations by theater managers of the Sunday law. The cases will be tried in the county court at an early date. Over 100 other cases are pending in the courts at Fort Worth, for violations of the Texas State law which prohibits moving picture shows and theaters to open on Sunday.

Objecting to a moving picture showing the defeat of an Austrian army by an Italian army and declared to have torn posters depicting the same scenes, Joseph Connig, of No. 610 Ferry avenue, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, was arrested at the instance of the management of the Majestic Theater, Camden. The police court released with a reprimand.

In the lobby of the Studebaker Theater of Chicago, where "A Daughter of the Gods" is running, has been hung a life-sized painting of Annette Kellerman, which is to be used as the copy for an art contest. Prizes from one hundred dollars to free boxes to the show are given. A similar contest was conducted during the showing of the Fox spectacle in New York.

Mendon, Michigan, has resorted to newspaper advertising in order to get a motion picture house and a jewelry store. The commercial organization of the village that was struck by a disastrous fire a short time ago, has inserted the following advertisement in a Kalamazoo newspaper: "Wanted: a motion picture theater and a jewelry store. Inquire Commercial Club, Mendon, Michigan."

Some blind soldiers were taken to "see the film of the Scott Antarctic expedition in London, and they came away with a very good idea of what they had "seen." This is how it was managed. The pictures were accompanied with an admirable lecture about the life led by the explorers and the scenes on the screen were described. Some of the soldiers claimed that they could see the pictures vividly.

Cincinnati exhibitors do not believe the bill before Congress for the Federal control of films will come up for passage at the present session. The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the Chamber of Commerce went on record as favoring a Federal control which would be agreeable to the large producers and large exhibitors. Cincinnati exhibitors believe if such a law is enacted it will do away with State censorship.

An announcement of more than ordinary interest is the transfer of the "Fall of a Nation," by the Sheppard Brothers to Dave Reed and Al Russell of the Dallas, Texas, Metro office. It is reported that W. K. Sheppard paid $45,000 for the Oklahoma and Texas and Arkansas rights to this production and that it has been showing in Texas only on both percentage and flat rental.

W. S. Butterfield is general manager of the new State Film Company, which has been organized to handle big film features for Michigan on the state rights plan. The new concern has engaged commodious offices in the Broadway Market building in Detroit, where a complete sales organization will be maintained. Announcement of important films controlled and to be distributed by the State Film Company will be made at an early date.

A theater exclusively for Jewish people is planned for the Brownville section of Brooklyn. At first it will be devoted strictly to motion pictures. As planned, the house will seat 2,000 persons on the main floor and 1,400 in the balconies. The land has already been secured on Pitkin avenue, and work will begin in May. The new theater is expected to be complete next September. The proposition will represent an invested capital of over $300,000.

The exhibitors of Kansas are preparing to take some action against the new censorship law of the state. The main changes they are demanding are that the naming of the state censor be taken away from the state board of education, that the censor's office be moved to Kansas City and that the inspection fee be reduced from two dollars to one dollar a reel. They will then pray that the censors do not go over all the pictures with fine tooth combs.

It is to be hoped that your screen has never caused you so much trouble as this. A New York woman has left her husband, who is only five feet in height, because, she told the judge, that she had seen so many big and handsome "cave men" in pictures that she became dissatisfied with living with a little man. A decree of divorce was granted and the woman is now hunting for a live image of one of the handsome big men she has seen on the screen.

A Paris correspondent says that the order closing the picture theaters one day per week is hitting the film trade pretty hard. The proprietors of the "cinema halls" are asking the government to reduce their taxes, their landlords to reduce their rents and the Society of Authors to accept lower fees. Representations have been made to the Minister of the Interior that theaters and cinemas should close every night at 10:30, and thus realize the same reduction of light as the one-day closing.

As soon as arrangements can be made, the city of Fort Worth, Texas, will have moving pictures shown in the public schools. A portable moving picture machine will be transferred from one school to another for specified study of class periods. The pictures are planned to constitute a separate course in the schools, but will be used as a complement to a number of courses, such as geography and a study of the industries.

Mayor Joseph B. Elam, of Mansfield, La.; Arthur W. Cohn, of the Commercial Sales Company, Chicago, and Mayor Behrman have discussed details of a plan for exploiting the resources, wealth, physical and moral conditions of Louisiana and its industries and enterprises in moving pictures throughout the North and West. It is estimated the pictures will be shown to 40,000,000 persons. The making of the film was authorized at the meeting of the Louisiana League of American Municipalities in Baton Rouge.

A woman and two men were arrested for disorderly conduct following an attempt to stop the presentation of the picture entitled "Whom the Gods Destroy" in two Harlem theaters recently. The prisoners were accused by the managers of the houses with making stump speeches as the picture was being projected. In the station house the trio continued ranting against the picture, which was produced by the Vitagraph Company and is based on the recent Irish rebellion. The men were fined $5 each.

The Shriners at Wichita, Kansas, advertised "The Birth of a Nation" film picture to be shown at the Scottish Rite Cathedral at Wichita, and sold $2,000 worth of advance tickets for an entertainment to be given under the auspices of the Scottish Rite. The Attorney General, learning of the proposed entertainment and moving picture show, promptly gave notice that "The Birth of a Nation" was under the ban of the censors in the State of Kansas. So the entertainment and picture show was called off and money returned to the purchasers of the tickets.

Charles L. Witt, of Shellrock, Iowa, manager of the Orpheum Theater, was recently appointed secretary to Governor Harding of the State of Iowa. Mr. Witt has been one of the best known personages in the state for many years, and has been a newspaper man of exceptional ability, and some years ago became interested in pictures, having established the Orpheum Theater in Shellrock. Mr. Witt is also editor of the Shellrock News and during the term of his secretaryship to the governor, the managerial duties of his theater and also the editorial policies of his newspaper will be in charge of his father, Frank L. Witt.

The new Strand Theater in Grinnell, Iowa, opened recently to a large audience. The unanimous verdict of all who passed through the portals of Grinnell's newest amusement house, was that Mart & Son had provided a theater that would be a credit to Grinnell for years to come. In its modern equipment and in devices for securing the comfort of its audiences, the Strand is thoroughly up-to-date, having a seating capacity of 600, modern ventilation, and an effective system of indirect lighting. The walls are frescoed in Tiffany finish, very artistically done. The management have planned to make this new theater a high-class playhouse. The Paramount program is used.

Writing a picture scenario and acting it at the same time has landed Everett Buckley, who recently came to Parkersburg, W. Va., from Akron, Ohio, in jail, where he was sent by Magistrate Butcher for six months, and in addition was sentenced to pay a fine of $50—the minimum penalty for violating the State pistol-carrying law.

Buckley was arrested after firing several shots in the yard of Lorenzo Childs, his uncle. Buckley explained to the magistrate that he was writing a moving picture scenario, and that the shooting episode was to be one of the most thrilling parts of the play. Childs testified Buckley had fired three shots at him and had then mounted a horse and disappeared in the darkness.

The E. & H. Film Company is the name of a new concern with headquarters at Atlanta, Georgia. Several well known film men of Kansas City, Mo., are the promoters, including Charles W. Harden, who is president, P. A. Engler, vice president, and Spencer G. Sladin, general manager. The E. & H. Film Company will promote special feature pictures and have secured as their first offering "The Crimson Stain Mystery" for which they have obtained territory in South Carolina, Georgia, Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana and Florida. Mr. Engler has left for Atlanta to establish headquarters and will also establish a branch office at New Orleans.

A petition for a writ of mandamus to compel Fred S. McClure and the Kansas City Board of Censors to issue a certificate of approval of the "Protect Your Daughters" film, has been filed in the circuit court at Kansas City by Jacob I. Schlank and Philip Goldstone, operators of a local film exchange. The complainants assert that the censors were shown the film on November 24, last, and although it was moral and uplifting, refused their sanction. Bias and prejudice instead of appreciation of the possible good results of displaying the several reels of sex discussion, it is claimed, formed the basis of the censors' objection.

Wilfrid Ledoux, manager of the Empress Theater, Omaha, Neb., has filed patent claims for the "twinoscope" by which two pictures relating to the same subject may be shown on the screen simultaneously. Ordinarily with a single projection machine it is necessary, for example, when a person is shown telephoning, to take off the scene and flash another showing the person at the other end of the wire receiving the message. With the twinoscope the two pictures will be shown at the same time side by side on the same screen. On account of the scenes being practically doubled on the screen the ordinary five-reel feature will be shown in almost the same time as it now takes for three reels. Allowing for the scenes having to be some longer than ordinary it would still be possible to show the big ten or twelve reel feature in from six to seven reels.

Every film for exhibition in Kansas City, Mo., is to be reviewed by the censors before it can be released, is the order made by the Board of Public Welfare at Kansas City, December 13. The approval of the National Board of Censorship will no longer pass in Kansas City. The Board of Public Welfare has purchased another picture machine and appointed additional deputy censor, making four censors for Kansas City. No picture which has not been passed by the reviewers can be shown. This will stop the showing of a picture that arrives so that it gets to the city just half an hour before the show begins. This scheme prevented the censors seeing some films until they had been on public exhibition. The action taken by the welfare board will also stop the showing of pictures which have been ordered cut by the national board, but are exhibited before the local censors have received word of the national board's decision.

OPERATORS ASK INCREASE

St. Louis Exhibitors' Association Takes Up Question of Revised Wage Scale in Some Classes of Theaters

The Theater Managers' and Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of St. Louis, at its meeting January 19, took up the question of a wage increase which has been proposed for certain classes of theaters by the operators' union. The contemplated increase would mean $5.70 more per week for the operators affected.

The applications of ten more theaters for admission to the association were presented for acceptance. With these additions, the secretary states that the membership practically covers all the important theaters in St. Louis, making the organization one of the most representative of its kind in the United States.

At the previous meeting, one week earlier, it was voted to fix the initiation fee at $5.00. This will apply to active as well as associate members. The mailing list of the association bulletin will be increased from 110 to 130, by action taken at the same time.

The following new members were accepted:

Active members, L. K. Ansell, Variety Theater; C. A. Calbfell, Pauline Theater; Sterling & Tyfka, Fairy Theater. Associate members, J. S. Burhorn, K. E. S. E. service; C. S. Edwards, Pathe exchange; F. J. Fegan, L. C. F. Film exchange; G. E. McKeen, Paramount service; A. N. Webster, Vitagraph-V. L. S. E.; Chas. Warner, Metro Film service.

Film Scenes on New York Stage

Just when the merri-merri, having finished their nightly stunt in adorning the front and other rows of the musical comedy current at a big New York playhouse, were filing out and were wending their way down the dark, ice-coated, slippery alley that leads to Broadway, not long ago, they met coming in another band of workers quite a bit different in appearance and carrying in abundance cameras, portable lights, cable and other paraphernalia necessary to the making of the movies.

They were the camera men, technical staff, assistant directors and the like interested in transferring to the screen "The Greater Woman" in which Marjorie Rambeau will make her screen debut under the direction of Frank Powell in the first of the series of Marjorie Rambeau pictures to be distributed through the Mutual Film Corporation.

Staging a scene for the screen on the stage is not so easy as the uninitiated might imagine. Before the actual work of picture-making can begin there is much to be done with lights and other necessary equipment, and in this particular instance there were ladies and gentlemen all dressed up in their other clothes ready for a box party, to be released.

All this, of course, took time. Finally when all was ready and it was nearing the wee and small hours, Miss Rambeau, who had done nothing earlier in the evening except play a performance of "Cheating Cheaters" at the Eltinge Theater, made her appearance and the action of that part of "The Greater Woman" which is supposed to take place in a theater took place in a theater.

Carlyle Blackwell is starred in "A Square Deal," recently completed in the World-Peerless Studio in Fort Lee. The strongly featured players in this production are June Elvidge, Henry Hull and Muriel Ostriche. The story begins in the New York city bohemian studios, and its leading characters are literary persons, painters and an unscrupulous mother and daughter engaged in a desperate effort to float themselves into financial prosperity. The studio scenes are made up principally of the most jovial kind of comedy and the intensely dramatic episodes occur later when the two opposite elements come to the inevitable clash.

Northwest Exhibitors Postpone Fete

A lively gathering of Minnesota exhibitors took place January 16, at Minneapolis, on the occasion of the regular meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of the Northwest. Those attending included:

J. E. Boyle of Dubuque, Iowa, vice-president of the Iowa body; Mr. Howden of St. Paul; James Gilosky, D. W. Chamberlain, M. S. Nathan, G. B. Lebedoff, H. W. Deeth, Mr. True, David G. Rodgers, J. B. Reisman, C. E. Van Duzee, Fred Upham, Sprague Greene, C. H. Hitchcock, Geo. Granstrum, Mike Mitchell, Billy B. Watson, M. A. Hoppenrath, and H. P. Greene. Fred Meyers and Harry Rathner, exchangemen, were guests of the association.

Mr. Boyle told of business conditions in Iowa among the theaters. He emphasized the fact that his organization is always ready to co-operate with the Minnesota exhibitors.

The intention of the members to hold a public ball brought out the discovery that no ball room in the city is large enough to house the kind of affair they plan to stage. Since the West Hotel now is building a large new ball room, it was thought advisable to postpone the event, instead of holding it February 12, as planned. C. H. Hitchcock, chairman of the ball committee, will notify the members of the completion of the West ball room and arrangements then will be made for such a ball as Minneapolis will not forget.

The privileges of members in purchasing lamps under the contract with the Western Electric Company were explained. Attention was called to the lamp contract with the Bryan Marsh Company also.

"Patria" in Proctor Houses

Owing to the success of "Patria," the International's serial in which Mrs. Vernon Castle is the star, comes the news that the great patriotic play will be shown at all the Proctor theaters in New York City and vicinity. This arrangement is made possible because of the friendship existing between F. F. Proctor and Keith and Albee, whereby the latter will have the general supervision over the booking for the Proctor circuit.

"The arrangement is quite satisfactory," said F. F. Proctor yesterday, "and I am glad to be among the first to show the great picture play teaching patriotism and preparedness to the public. The subject itself is vitally interesting at this time, and when presented, as it is in 'Patria,' in connection with a gripping love story, and with scenes full of daring and dash, it is sure to be a great attraction and will hold the public interest undiminished until the final episode."

The Garden Theater, Grand Rapids, Michigan, of which A. J. Gilligham is the owner, recently booked the Thomas H. Ince spectacle "Civilization" and found that the picture was so much liked by the public that it took in over $1,000 a day at the ordinary prices.

Volume XVII CHICAGO, FEBRUARY 3, 1917 Number 5

The Daily Change of Program

ONE of the big Chicago houses ran but three changes a week up to a few years ago. Its competitors were running daily changes, and had been doing so for some time. The three-a-week was quite satisfactory. It kept the house full for all but the early shows, and paid a nice profit.

Eventually, however, the manager of the three-a-week house was converted to the daily change faith, and arranged for a new service schedule. He took the step with many confessed misgivings. He was letting himself in for a big rental increase (his stuff is all first run) and he had some doubts whether he would get it back.

Not to drag this story along, he got it back. With a daily change, even the early shows filled up. There was rarely an empty seat in the house; and the manager told us that he was able to check up over five hundred "fans" who came practically every day.

This theater is a downtown house. Its experience with the daily change, as compared with the three-a-week, proved a point that had been a bit uncertain. There was an impression that downtown audiences consisted wholly of "transients"; people who dropped in for the show because they happened to be passing. It has been proved that at least half the showgoers in a business district are workers in that district, who are there every day.

A theater whose business was all transient, whose patrons never repeated, theoretically never would need to change its program at all. It could get territorial rights to a feature and run it forever. But there is no such theater and no such district. A "transient" location is merely one where a considerable percentage of the patrons are transient. Shopping districts or street-car transfer points are good examples. But every transient location depends on fixed patronage for a majority of its business, and every neighborhood house with a fixed patronage has some transient trade. The fixed patronage is always the dominant influence in every location. It is merely more pronounced in some locations than in others. No theater can build a permanent success by appealing to transient trade only.

All this argument appears to be in favor of the daily change. It is, of course, the only way to make the same patrons come every day; and so long as they are willing to come every day the daily change will be good business.

There are, however, other things beside location that affect the daily attendance of the same people. The most important of these influences is admission price. Where the price is twenty-five cents, for example, very few patrons would come every day. Even at fifteen cents the average family cannot afford daily attendance. Forty-five cents a day—close to three dollars a week—is too much for entertainment taken out of the average income. There are enough who can stand that price to keep a few high class shows going; but even those few prefer to spend it all on one big show a week.

If our present sense of proportion is correct, a ten cent admission price is the highest that will encourage daily attendance by any worth while number of patrons. Beyond ten cents, the most ardent fans will confine their attendance to two or three visits a week.

We may express a general presumption, then, that the daily change of program is most profitable for the ten cent house in any location—with, of course, the exceptions that obtain in any trade; that a change three times a week is adequate for a fifteen cent house, and that twice or even once a week is sufficient for a twenty-five cent admission. Furthermore, any house running good features for more than one day to a program might as well get fifteen cents or more, since the same patrons will not repeat anyway until the next change.

From an art standpoint, and for the best development of this industry, we cannot favor the daily change. It has a great many bad features. It encourages quantity production, which discourages quality; and it arbitrarily cuts off the best kind of advertising there is—the word of mouth variety. The fan who sees a good picture tonight cannot logically recommend it to his friends, for tomorrow it will be gone, no layman knows whither.

Literally millions of dollars' worth of this priceless advertising, the recommendations of fans who have seen the show, are thrown away and lost forever by the daily change system.

Nevertheless, we must agree that the ten cent house will make more money with the daily change than with any other system. Making money is the business of the exhibitor, as it is of every other business man. It would be foolish to ask him to forego his profits for the sake of art or the future development of the industry. So long as the ten cent (and five cent) show persists, the daily change demand will persist, in spite of all argument, logic and appeal. And so long as the demand persists, the producers will fill it. The only way to get away from it will be to raise admission prices beyond the reach of the daily visit fan.

Some day the change will come. The producers will spend more time on a negative and it will be a better picture. They will make fewer negatives, which are expensive, and more prints, which are cheap. Their profits will be greater for that reason, and the exhibitors' profits will be greater because of the increased admission price, and the business will move with less violence and more grace.

But the time is not ripe quite yet.

Authority Without Responsibility

IN 1915 the National Board of Review examined 9,588 reels of film.

Had the state censorship bills passed in the thirteen states in which they were introduced, the cost to the producing companies in fees alone on the 9,588 reels would have amounted to $311,610 at the average rate of $2.50 per reel, the inspection fee indicated in the bills introduced.

In 1916 the National Board reviewed 9,180 reels. Had the state censorship bills passed in the eleven states in which they were introduced in the course of that year, the cost in fees alone to the producing companies would have amounted to $252,450 based on the same average fee.

The total cost to the industry, had the state bills introduced in these two years passed, therefore, would have been $564,060.

The actual cost in 1916, in the four states where censorship laws exist, for fees alone was $36,720.

In 1915 in the state of Pennsylvania the censorship—expressing the opinion of one individual—condemned 65 subjects and 169 reels. In 1916 the same board condemned 148 subjects and 407 reels. The earning capacity of the pictures condemned by this board in 1916, based on an estimate of $10 per day each for 60 days, amounted to $88,800.

This was the cost to the motion picture industry for the activities of one state board in one state for one year. Had the eleven bills introduced in 1916 become laws and the censors of these state boards taken the same action as in the state of Pennsylvania, condemning the 407 reels, the cost to the motion picture industry at the same rate of earning capacity for these pictures would have been, for the year, $976,800.

Obviously the potential cost of censorship is enormous, and the actual cost is too high for comfort. Those figures of missing money would look extremely well on the ledgers of some producers. And that is where it would be if it had not been dissipated by the censors.

If censors are necessary to the welfare of society—which impression still persists in some quarters—their authority should be accompanied by a proper responsibility. If the censor boards could be so bonded as to promise financial recompense to a wronged producer, they would be rather more chary of their destructive tendencies.

Authority without responsibility is as bad for a censor as for anyone else—or worse.

To Make Children's Shows Popular

SELECT STORIES THAT FIT INTO THE CHILDREN'S WORLD

By Genevieve Harris.

Here's a young lady—Miss Mary McAlister—who has some decided opinions about children's films. Read what she has to say in this enlightening article by Miss Harris.

So wide spread has become the interest in special children's shows during the past year and so real the need that the question with most exhibitors is now not "Shall I give special programs for children?" but rather, "How can I make my children's films so popular that they will most benefit me?"

Many things have influenced the managers to incorporate these special shows into their programs—to advertise his theater, to win friends among the parents of the children, among the women's clubs and teachers' associations, and to counteract the effect which some problem plays he has run may have on the local censor board.

But whatever his reason, once committed to the children's matinee plan, the exhibitor finds that, after the novelty has worn off, he is facing a group of new problems. He has a new audience to please, and a most fastidious one. If he doesn't please the youngsters, they won't come, and while he may through years of experience have learned to judge the taste of the general public, this is a new problem, "What do these eager, critical, enthusiastic young people like best to see?"

What Do the Youngsters Want?

A census of the picture likes and dislikes which Motography took some time ago among the Chicago school children showed, as might be expected, tastes as widely divergent as those of their elders. But there is one sort of picture which has always proved its ability to entertain the youngsters, and that is the picture in which children themselves play a part. For after all there is nothing any child is quite so much interested in as another child.

Two persons who should know much about plays for children have recently emphasized this opinion in remarks to Motography. One of these has a double right to speak, for she plays in pictures for children and she is a child herself. She is little Mary V. McAlister, a seven-year-old actress with the Essanay Company. This little girl is rapidly becoming known because she combines unusual talent with an unspoiled, childlike spirit. She typifies the unusually intelligent, imaginative child of her years. She is not precocious in the sense that she is "too old for her years." But her imagination and sense of beauty has been cultivated with care.

What One Child Thinks

And this little girl says:

"The pictures I like to play in and the pictures I like to see are those stories about real little girls. I like to see what they do and how they play and the dolls and things they have. When mother and I go walking and we pass a theater where there is a picture of a little girl, I always beg to go in.

"I love to read stories about other children, then I imagine I'm one of them. That's why I love to play in pictures. I've read lots of stories about little girls I'd like to play. I don't want to grow up. I'd like always to be a little girl and play with dolls."

If you know anything about children, you will recognize that, expressed with wonderful clearness, this is the feeling of many children, an absorbing interest in their own world which is not a censored version of the adult's world. It is independent and has its own affairs. And the picture which fits into this sphere is not an educational affair of the "school book" type. It is not merely a fairy tale. Above all, it is not a grown-up picture, with the dangerous phases removed by the censor. It is instead a real story dealing with things the youngsters like best to think about.

A Director's Opinion

The second expression of opinion comes from a director of a clever child player, Marie Osborne, better known as "Little Mary Sunshine," of the Balboa plays. Says Henry King:

There are two kinds of pictures which kiddies like more than others—clean, slap-stick comedy and those in which children and animals appear.

I do not believe that either children or grown-ups really like plays in which children only appear, such photoplays are not natural and, believe me, the youngsters are great judges of naturalness. Time and again I have heard some child say in a theater, 'I don't believe they would have done that.' They like to see a child or some children acting in a natural manner together with grown-ups, lots of wholesome fun, a little sadness, that is, just as long as the sadness turns to happiness. Children do not like to leave a theater with the idea that someone has been left unhappy—it worries them.

Children should not be taken to see sordid photoplays, the unhappiness hurts them and will make many children nervous, and goodness knows, they have time enough for that when they grow up and have to face the world.

It would astonish people if they could see the huge mail received by little Mary Sunshine, by the Messrs. Horkheimer and myself from children saying how they love the baby and the pictures and asking for more and more. Still more wonderful is the number of letters which arrive from all parts of the world from mothers and from fathers praising the cleanliness of the Sunshine pictures and telling what a boon they are to parents as well as to children.

We cannot have too many photoplays written and acted for children; it helps humanity, and for myself I can say it is a privilege and a joy to both direct and act in them for the feeling of being able to do a little good, if for nothing else.

In response to the demand for children's pictures of this kind, the manufacturers are giving the subject special attention and the number of pictures for children is constantly increasing. The exhibitor during 1917 should have little trouble providing his youthful clients

Motography Will Aid You

Motography is always glad to aid an exhibitor in selecting children's programs and to give him any information regarding the method of obtaining each picture. And in turn we shall be glad to incorporate into our department "What the Picture Did for Me" any exhibitor's opinions on the value of the children's pictures he has run.

with films which they will enjoy. The problem of selection will still rest, however, with him, since he usually must take his pictures from more than one program.

Pictures Solve Juvenile Problems

"How Motion Pictures Keep the Children Off the Street," was the subject discussed at the latest of the series of special meetings which are being held under the auspices of the Recreation Committee, in connection with the Civic Forum at the Washington Irving High School, New York City. The speakers were Miss Mary Gray Peck of the Motion Picture Committee of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, who spoke on the Better Film Movement; H. F. Sherwood, assistant secretary of the National Board of Review, who described the work of the Board, and George H. Bell, Commissioner of Licenses of New York City, who explained the work of his Bureau in relation to the licensing of motion picture theaters. A motion picture was shown during the evening showing the making of motion pictures.

Seek South American Trade

Contracts have just been closed between the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and the Sociedad General Cinematografica of Buenos Aires by the terms of which Famous Players, Lasky, Morosco and Pallas Pictures are to be handled exclusively by the Sociedad General in Argentine, Paraguay and Uruguay.

Following closely upon the engagement of J. C. Graham as a general representative of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and the enagement of Alec Lorimore and Ingvald C. Oes as foreign representatives, the new step is said to be only the first along the line of expanding the world-wide activities of the company.

When a Famous Players-Lasky representative went to South America, in 1915, he took with him several photoplays which he exhibited, frequently having as his guests the mayors of the municipalities and their staffs, together with many socially prominent persons who had never before visited a motion picture exhibition.

BROCK HEADS NEW FIRM

Enlightenment Photoplay Corporation Buys Ivan Abramson's Production, "Enlighten Thy Daughter," as Its First Feature

Fully launched and actually engaged in exploiting their first production, "Enlighten Thy Daughter," the Enlightenment Photoplay Corporation, headed by Henry J. Brock, has established headquarters at 220 West Forty-second street, New York.

The Enlightenment Photoplay Corporation, taking its name from "Enlighten Thy Daughter," the first big super-feature to come under the jurisdiction of the organization, has been established for the purpose of purchasing extraordinary screen productions, which in turn will be exploited in the United States on the state right basis, and throughout the world on the same substantial basis as the hundreds of other productions, the foreign rights of which have been controlled by the Brock organization during the past few years.

Through an error, an announcement was made recently that the Merit Company had purchased the New York and New England rights to "Enlighten Thy Daughter." This was erroneous. No territory has been disposed of as yet, and none will be until the picture has been exploited throughout the country, in a manner befitting the importance of the feature.

Harry Reichenbach has been engaged by Mr. Brock to conduct a wide-spread campaign for the picture and has already begun the dissemination of news matter in its behalf.

The first step in the exploitation of the feature will be its opening as a high-class attraction at the Park Theater, Columbus Circle, New York, on January 28, arrangements for which have been completed for a minimum showing of four weeks, with a continuous indefinite engagement to follow as long as business justifies.

Mr. Brock has not before gone in for the distribution of pictures in this country, but is emphatic in his ambitions to do so now on a comprehensive scale.

He is reported to have paid Ivan Abramson $125,000 for "Enlighten Thy Daughter," and this, within three hours after seeing it at the Broadway Theater.

Indiana Governor Favors Sunday Pictures

EXHIBITORS HOLD EFFECTIVE MEETING AT INDIANAPOLIS

THE legislative halls of the state capitol of Indiana will shortly know the presence of several Hoosier exhibitors, who go there bent on obtaining the enactment of a law to legalize Sunday moving pictures.

The Indiana Motion Picture Exhibitors' League in convention, January 18, at Indianapolis, named a committee to place the issue before the present session of the general assembly.

The action so taken indicates that Indiana exhibitors mean what they say in lending their influence to the movement started in New York, to organize a national campaign for bringing about the passage of laws permitting Sunday shows in all states. The Hoosier campaigners feel confident of success.

The six hundred members present were urged by President F. J. Rembusch, of the State Association, to exert pressure upon exchanges and producers to gain more liberty in their choice of programs, through revision of the existing deposit arrangements.

Governor Delivers Address

Governor Goodrich delivered the address of welcome. His clean-cut utterances regarding Sunday performances and "blue laws" were pleasing to his listeners. As to Sunday picture shows, he said:

> There is much talk about enforcing blue laws, which seems much out of reason because if these laws are to be enforced then we should have the same conditions of life and living that we had when the blue laws were passed. Modern conditions of life make it imperative that laws shall fit these conditions and the desires of the people of the present day and not the opinion of people of the past.

He called particular attention to the possibilities of the motion picture; it's great opportunity to uplift, and recommended that where pictures were shown on the Sabbath these pictures should be particularly suitable for Sabbath showing, and particularly uplifting, as pictures of travelogue, pictograph, or educational films. He placed the responsibility of the general betterment and uplift of the motion picture upon the exhibitor. If the industry fails to reach that high plane that is in the realm of its possibilities the fault will lie with the exhibitor who fails to appreciate his high responsibility, in the governor's belief.

There were no exhibits and no entertainment, no refreshments, and nothing but strictly business from start to finish.

The program was as follows:

Thursday—Address on the "Better Film Movement," by Dr. Cranston Brenton, chairman of the board of directors of the National Board of Review of New York. Dr. Brenton's address was of inestimable value for the exhibitor and for the general welfare of the motion picture throughout the state.

Present as guests of the League were several women who are interested in securing wider display of films suitable for juvenile audiences. They submitted a list of pictures for juvenile entertainment carrying the women's recommendation.

F. H. Richardson of the projection department of the Motion Picture World, made an address straight from the shoulder and to the point, in genuine Billy Sunday style. He encouraged the exhibitors to organize and made the point that an association organized for a selfish interest will succeed where other organizations, planned just for the purpose of being organized and nothing else, would fail. Mr. Richardson clearly demonstrated that there was as much, and more, in keeping the theater in good order, especially in presenting the program in proper form, than in being too anxious what the program shall be.

At 1:00 o'clock, Thursday, the convention went into secret session. An hour was devoted to a plan of organization and there were seventeen directors elected from the large cities of the state who will comprise a permanent and strong affiliation. The plan is to keep in action continually and another meeting will be held the middle of February. The Indiana organization is affiliated with the Stanley Company of Philadelphia, and the booking plan similar to that of the Stanley Company will be instituted.

When the advance deposit came under discussion President Rembusch read letters from manufacturers which showed that they are willing to eliminate the advance deposit providing the business be placed on a strictly cash basis. Telegrams were read from William A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry; Walter W. Irwin of the Greater Vitagraph Company; Adolph Zukor of the Famous Players Film Company. All recommended the closest cooperation between exhibitors and manufacturers in order that the industry may become more thoroughly organized.

The Motion Picture News wired its felicitations and gave an outline of the new movement headed by D. W. Griffith for censorship within the industry.

Rembusch Elected President

The convention elected officers as follows: President, Frank J. Rembusch, Shelbyville, Indiana; vice-president, V. U. Young, Gary, Ind.; second vice-president, A. C. Zaring, Indianapolis; secretary, Ray Andrews, Muncie; treasurer, Ben. D. Crose, Indianapolis.

The following directors were elected: H. Kornblum, Evansville; J. T. Keating, Terre Haute; C. S. Allardt, South Bend; Dr. J. M. Rhodes, Indianapolis; W. C. Quimby, Ft. Wayne; R. H. Harris, Bloomington; O. G. Murray, Richmond; H. H. Johnson, Lafayette; B. V. Barton, Indianapolis; L. H. O'Donnell, Washington; M. J. Wohl, Gary; and F. J. Mack, Indianapolis.

The convention is declared to be the most successful gathering of exhibitors ever held in Indiana. The splendid results are described as largely due to the fact that a preliminary meeting was held at which it was planned how to get the most good out of the convention.

"Tillie Wakes Up"

The current World-Brady release, "Tillie Wakes Up," with Marie Dressler in the principal role and Johnny Hines playing the leading opposite character, is the first comedy to be produced by this organization in a very long time. It tells the story of two husbands and two wives who wrangle at breakfast, with the result that one of the wives concludes to go to Coney Island for a day's outing, while the same idea flashes upon the mind of the other husband, who lives just across the hall.

The pair start off in a taxi-cab, which almost immediately has a collision, throwing its occupants out upon the road and smashing the machine. The pleasure-seeking wife and the other wife's husband escape in the confusion and make a dash to avoid the notoriety which would come to them if they remained to be identified in connection with the smash-up.

It is believed that this picture will have a special appeal for spectators unfamiliar with the always novel and entertaining Coney Island, while on the other hand it is calculated to arouse memories of experiences in those to whom the home of the hot dog is by no means a novelty.

REBECCA OF SUNNYBROOK FARM

New Pickford Play—Stage Hit and Novel Next Mary Pickford-Artcraft—to Follow "Poor Little Rich Girl"

"Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" will be the fourth Artcraft vehicle for "Little Mary." This well known novel and stage hit will be produced upon completion of "A Poor Little Rich Girl," now being staged under the direction of Maurice Tourneur at the Fort Lee studios, and will mark the fourth Mary Pickford release by Artcraft Pictures.

"Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" was adapted for stage presentation by Kate Douglas Wiggin and Charlotte Thompson from two of the former's books, "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" and "The Chronicles of Rebecca." Originally produced by Klaw and Erlanger at the Republic Theater, New York, it scored a hit with Edith Taliaferro in the title role. Following a long run at the Republic, the play was presented with notable success throughout the country and became popularly known among playgoers as a subject of unusual charm and human interest.

The story has to do with Rebecca Rowena Randell, a poor New England lass who is placed in the care of her wealthy aunt by her mother, inasmuch as the former is in better circumstances to give the girl an education. Rebecca at once starts to set things right around the neighborhood in her own sweet way. She sees that a wedding ring is placed on one woman's finger and makes her severe aunt almost human. Her aunt's treatment, however, causes her to run away to the kindly old stage driver, who finally induces her to return. A charming romance is woven into the story, presenting on the whole a subject of universal appeal and one that is particularly adapted to Mary Pickford's talents.

Harron in Fine Arts Plays

Robert Harron has completed his starring role in the Triangle Fine Arts drama, "The Bad Boy," directed by Chet Withey from a story by Frank E. Woods. This is the first play in which Harron has been featured, as in all other productions he has been co-starred with Mae Marsh. Mildred Harris, the fifteen-year-old leading lady, plays opposite Harron. Richard Cummings, Josephine Crowell, Wm. H. Brown, James Harrison, Colleen Moore, Elmo Lincoln and Harry Fisher play important parts in the production. David Ables has charge of the camera.

"A Young Gentleman of the Old School," is the working title of Harron's next play, also written by Frank E. Woods. Lloyd Ingraham is directing. The story deals with the advent of a boy who has been trained in the country, into political life in a large city. In his country home Harron is trained by his father until he is twenty-one. To always be polite is one of the principal rules laid down by the boy's father. Young Harron, when he reaches the city, creates a favorable impression because of his great courtesy, especially toward women. Threading the spectacular and political features of the production is a love story. Colleen Moore plays the leading feminine role. The other principals in the cast include Sam de Grasse, Loyola O'Connor, Alma Reubens, Charles Lee, Wilbur Higby and Bert Hadley.

Exhibitors Entertain Doug. Fairbanks

That Douglas Fairbanks is the most popular male star in films, was evidenced when the Brooklyn Exhibitors' League tendered him a reception at their club rooms, in the large Brooklyn Triangle Theater.

President John Manheimer introduced Fairbanks to the seventy or more assembled exhibitors. Doug., in his attractive speech, told the Brooklynites how he appreciated what they had already done for him in the way of exploitation. He advocated closer co-operation between the producer, the exchange man and the exhibitor, who represents the public.

Then dynamic Doug. related a few new humorous stories gathered recently at the Lambs Club, and concluded his address with a brilliant prophesy for film plays. Secretary William Brandt replied to Fairbanks and suggested that a rising vote of thanks be tendered him for his clean, wholesome plays. This vote was unanimous, all the exhibitors rising.

Fox to Picturize Novels

William Fox has just completed tentative plans for putting into the films several world-famous novels, in addition to those which will soon be issued in celluloid form by Fox Film Corporation.

Mr. Fox believes wholeheartedly in the oft-repeated axiom that no photoplay is stronger than the story which moves it. For more than a fortnight, he has been busy laying out the details for his new project.

At the present time, he has already selected, by a process of elimination, eleven books to be done into the cinema from a list which he himself drew up. The directors have all been chosen and, with two exceptions, the star and his or her chief supporting player, have been determined upon.

"Fatty" Arbuckle Goes East

"Good-bye, boys, I'm through," was the parting farewell that "Fatty" Arbuckle gave his hundreds of friends in Los Angeles the other day, when the train pulled away from the station bearing the "funniest fat man in motion pictures" eastward. His "through" did not mean through with pictures, but it did mean through with making comedies in California, for his future two-reel comedies, which will be released through Paramount Pictures Corporation, will be made in the east.

Dorothy Phillips is enacting the featured role in a five-reel mountain drama, "The Flashlight Girl," at Universal City.

Glimpses into the powerful Vitagraph feature, "Whom the Gods Destroy," the new Alice Joyce story, which is attracting a good deal of attention in theaters at New York and Chicago.

"Fanatics Incite Audiences"

"WHOM THE GODS DESTROY" TARGET OF ATTACKS

THE publication of stories in the New York newspapers to the effect that a Vitagraph production, "Whom the Gods Destroy," had been the cause of incipient riots in New York theaters, supposedly from rousing the ire of the Irish, has prompted the Vitagraph company to deny assertions that it was "hired" by the British government to make the picture.

The facts are as follows, according to explanations furnished by Vitagraph officials and by the author: "Whom the Gods Destroy" is a new five-reel production written by Cyrus Townsend Brady and Commodore J. Stuart Blackton and staged under Commodore Blackton's personal supervision.

The trouble was started in every case, according to the police, by representatives of an organization known to the police as "The Sons of Irish Freedom."

When the Orient Theater, 111 West One Hundred and Twenty-fifth street, New York, showed the picture a few nights ago, Manager Robert Wolff had to summon the police. Similar conditions existed at the Annex and Odeon Theaters, farther uptown. Among those the police arrested were Mrs. Agnes Bohan of 504 West One Hundred and Forty-first street, John Killeen of 147 West Tenth street and Thomas Stokes of 228 West Sixteenth street, New York.

Their manner of attacking "Whom the Gods Destroy" and annoying the audiences, according to the theater managers and police, was to make stump speeches during the showing of the picture and alleging that it was financed by the British government and was part of British propaganda to discredit the Irish rebels.

Mrs. Bohan, it developed, is an associate of Mrs. Sheehy Skeffington, who now is touring the United States in a crusade against the British government.

Just why "The Sons of Irish Freedom" should have taken such a stand against "Whom the Gods Destroy" is unknown to Vitagraph officials. Alice Joyce, Marc MacDermott and Harry Morey, co-starred in the production, are all of Irish birth or of Irish parentage. They all knew the whole story before production began and saw nothing anti-Irish in it.

Police Commissioner Arthur Woods and License Commissioner George H. Bell, who were appealed to to prevent public shows of "Whom the Gods Destroy," refused to interfere on the ground that the picture is "perfectly proper and in no wise unneutral."

In a way, "Whom the Gods Destroy" is a portrayal of the lamented Sir Roger Casement episode. Marc MacDermott, born in Ireland, plays the role in this picture of Sir Denis Esmond, the alleged counterpart of Sir Roger. Sir Roger was hanged. Sir Denis, in "Whom the Gods Destroy," is pardoned by King George, and is not hanged.

Officials of the Vitagraph company refused, at first, to dignify the attacks on "Whom the Gods Destroy" with an answer. They referred to the film itself as the best refutation of the idea of British subsidy or propaganda.

Walter W. Irwin, general manager of Vitagraph-V. L. S. E., was finally prevailed upon to make a statement of the attitude of his company toward "Whom the Gods Destroy" and the attacks on it. He said:

Our London office has just informed us that "Whom the Gods Destroy" cannot be released in England, where it is considered too pro-Irish to be shown to English audiences. So much for the foolish charge that the British government subsidized or caused its production.

The production reflects two points of view. It is neither Irish nor English. "Whom the Gods Destroy" portrays the viewpoint of the Irishman who considers himself downtrodden and his country under the yoke of England.

On the other hand, it also depicts the viewpoint of England in its present struggle and the view, reasonable or unreasonable, that all of its subjects should and must fight England. The drama brings out the best in both peoples.

Doctor Brady declared:

I want to point out that I am myself an Irish sympathizer. I bear an Irish name and have much affection for Ireland and her cause. I do not see one single item in "Whom the Gods Destroy" to which a genuine Irish sympathizer can take exception.

As an experiment I took a whole family named Raferty, Irish people, to see it. They thought it was a stunning play and had no criticism to offer or objections to urge. It is not the Irish sympathizers who, in my judgment, are creating the trouble, but fanatics who necessarily are few in number.

Commodore Blackburn said:

Nothing was farther from my mind or Doctor Brady's than to write or produce an anti-Irish drama. Further than that, we did not write and did not produce an anti-Irish or a pro-British play.

CORPORATION IN WISCONSIN

Milwaukee Gets New $350,000 Film Corporation—Nat Goodwin Company Formed—To Produce Soon in California

The first large film corporation ever organized under the blue sky laws of the state of Wisconsin, which practically prohibits "stock promotion" propositions, has been incorporated with a capital of $350,000.

The organization is known as the Nat Goodwin Film Company, and it has as one of its principal stockholders, the actor whose name it bears. The company will produce plays in which Mr. Goodwin is featured and is said to have him under a five year contract.

Nat Goodwin, now married to a big new film corporation.

According to the present plans, the first production will be under way within a month or so. Three to five-reel plays of established drawing power will be produced and marketed under the state right plan.

The organization of this new company is the result of negotiations which have been carried on for some time between Levi Pollard, one of the incorporators of the new company and a well known mining man, and Mr. Goodwin. The plan was first conceived when Mr. Goodwin expressed a desire to have a company of his own, to produce his plays, and which would give him an opportunity to put his very best into the productions. Mr. Goodwin needs no introduction to the film world. He was the first star to appear in a five-part drama, in which a star was featured—Nat C. Goodwin—as "Fagin" in "Oliver Twist."

The studio of the new company will be located on the Goodwin ranch at San Juanita, California, where the actor has an estate of 950 acres. The home offices of the company will be at 1109-1110 Wells building, Milwaukee. The Press Publicity Company of Milwaukee has taken charge of the publicity and the first announcements of the initial release will be made in the near future.

The incorporators are all well known Wisconsin men, with the exception of Mr. Goodwin. The board of directors and incorporators are, Henry E. Winkler, Frank Saxe and Levi Pollard of Milwaukee, and Mr. Goodwin. Former Governor Francis E. McGovern is also on the board of directors as well as acting as attorney for the corporation.

Triangle Studio in Florida

That the New York Motion Picture Corporation and Triangle Film Corporation are contemplating erecting a $200,000 studio and producing plant in Jacksonville is the statement of A. Kessel, president of these organizations, who is now in Jacksonville for the purpose of looking over the situation with this idea in view. Mr. Kessel when seen declared that his companies had come to the conclusion that a large studio nearer to New York than the Los Angeles plant was a necessity, and that if possible the matter would be decided on upon his return to New York.

Women's League Discusses Pictures

"The Development and Regulation of Motion Pictures" was the subject of the January meeting of the League for Business Opportunities for Women at the Russell Sage Foundation Building, New York City. Cranston Brenton addressed the league upon the philosophy, personnel and principles of the National Board of Review; also the method used with the producer or manufacturer, the exhibitor, city officials and the public. "Constructive Movement in the Use of the Motion Picture," was the subject of the second address, made by C. G. Cocks of the National Board of Review. This included the presentation of the matter to various organizations and individuals, the standards under which pictures are selected, the classification and selection of pictures, the publicity necessary to the enlightenment of the public, the methods which are used to encourage their general and effective use.

Miss Helen Duey spoke on "The Public and the Motion Picture." Her address included the attitude of the public toward motion pictures, their demand and their need, the increasing support of constructive plans, and the need of greater public enlightenment regarding the general use of the motion picture and its use for selected purposes.

She discussed the subject of censorship in a legal form and opposed it strongly and pointed out the value of the rapidly growing demand for films for selected purposes. All three of the speakers spoke of the work being done by the National Committee on Films for Young People (affiliated with the National Board of Review).

Exhibitor's Wife Aiding Peace

Mrs. Louise Loeb Hamburger, wife of a Chicago proprietor of several theaters, is conducting, single handed, propaganda work in behalf of world peace and disarmament. In her husband's theaters throughout the city she has caused the following slide motto to be displayed at intervals:

"Peace! Let us talk peace! Let us think peace! Let us sacrifice for peace!"

"I believe that through the medium of the motion picture entertainments we can create a peace attitude in this country that will keep us from the war hysteria," said Mrs. Hamburger. "Prof. Scott Nearing, head of the new municipal university of Toledo, has written me, speaking in highest terms of the proposed 'movie' campaign. He writes: 'The cost of one battle cruiser ($20,000,000) devoted to investigation, publicity and discussion would do more than a whole fleet to prevent war with Japan."

Robert W. Chambers to Write for Goldwyn

NEW PRODUCER BUILDS STRONG ORGANIZATION

GOLDWYN PICTURES CORPORATION ADVISORY BOARD

WITH a contract with Robert W. Chambers tucked away in the shining new vaults of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation this new producer in the big New York constellation of motion picture satellites begins its career with equally high value placed on talent in other directions.

Maxine Elliott has returned from abroad to join the Goldwyn players, and eight noted authors have been given seats on the Goldwyn advisory board, while supervision of artists and casts, involving the selection of players for Goldwyn features, has been placed in the hands of the former dramatic critic, Adolph Klauber.

Up in the new offices of the company, on the seventh floor of the Rogers Peet building, at 16 East Forty-second street, New York, there is much ado over the achievements foreseen in securing the services of Robert W. Chambers, as scenarioist. He has consented to produce a series of original scenarios annually for the company. By signing a contract of an exclusive character with Chambers, the firm has obtained his consent to produce a series of original scenarios annually for this newest of film organizations.

In addition, Goldwyn Pictures obtains the exclusive right of screening any or all of Mr. Chambers' famous novels not hitherto screened. This agreement does not apply, however, to certain serial stories which Mr. Chambers is writing for one of the big American magazines, but to all of his other works and the original scenarios covered in this new Goldwyn arrangement.

Achievements like the bringing of Mr. Chambers into screen authorship have caused a distinctive newspaper like the Pittsburgh Dispatch to say that the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation is "out for bear." This comment is apropos the entry into motion pictures under Goldwyn management of Maxine Elliott, Jane Cowl and Mae Marsh, the latter already one of the established heroines of the cinema; the signing of Ralph W. Ince and Allen Dwan as directors.

Authors on Advisory Board

Another new departure of the Goldwyn corporation is the forming of a special advisory board, composed of authors, and intended to perform what will be a new but long-needed function in the film industry.

This board consists of Samuel Goldfish, chairman; Edgar Selwyn, Margaret Mayo, Irvin S. Cobb, Arthur Hopkins, Roi Cooper Megrue, Archibald Selwyn and Crosby Gaige.

Thus for the first time on a picture corporation official board are found American playwrights and authors shoulder to shoulder with picture and dramatic producers and masters of stagecraft, working to instill quality and accuracy into a picture product before the physical work of making the picture is under way.

In this board Mr. Goldfish represents the skilled film executive familiar with both the problems of production and distribution; Edgar Selwyn, Margaret Mayo and Arthur Hopkins represent theatrical production and authorship in its best phases; Roi Cooper Megrue and Irvin S. Cobb are the representatives of literary and dramatic authorship at its peak of highest success, and Archibald Selwyn is a skilled business executive in the field of theatrical management.

The formation of this special board in which literature and authorship receive such recognition reveals a frank effort by the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation to avoid errors in completed pictures, never permitting the error to be committed at the outset.

Klauber to Select Players

Adolph Klauber is the newest personality to be enlisted for service in behalf of Goldwyn. Mr. Klauber will be the careful and critical authority to whom will be given the difficult task of engaging the multitude of players, principals and many of the lesser screen folk, who will make Goldwyn pictures distinctive.

For several years this task of selection has been performed by Mr. Klauber for Selwyn & Company.

Prior to identifying himself with the business of the theater Mr. Klauber had been for many years the dramatic critic of the New York Times and had established himself as one of the soundest factors in the critical fraternity.

Goldwyn in New Quarters

The Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, together with all its departments and with most of its operating executives, on January 15 transferred from its temporary offices at 1451 Broadway to the Rogers Peet building, 16 East Forty-second street. An empty floor was made over in its entirety, offices laid out, floors carpeted and filing systems, and auditing and business department equipment installed.

Provision is made in the new offices for the president, the general counsel, business and managerial offices, editorial department, the advertising and news service departments, the scenario department, with private offices for Edgar Selwyn, Margaret Mayo and Edith Ellis and their staffs of assistants.

For reference purposes, the telephone trunk line number of Goldwyn Pictures is "Vanderbilt Eleven."

Maxine Elliott Takes Vacation

Maxine Elliott, since returning from Europe to enter motion pictures with Goldwyn, has been at White Sulphur Springs, Virginia, enjoying the first vacation she has had since the outbreak of the European war in the summer of 1914.

Miss Elliott and a group of society friends from New York arrived there a fortnight ago and set out two days after her arrival on a horseback tour of the Virginia foothills.

Both at the Springs and in the towns and villages the noted beauty has visited with her party, she has been welcomed with great enthusiasm and several efforts have been made to get her to preside at Southern charities and benefits held to raise funds for war relief.

Miss Elliott appears in splendid health and the difficult work she has managed on a hospital relief barge in the canals of Flanders seems to have been of much benefit to her.

Vitagraph Managers on Tour

H. D. Naugle, western division manager of Vitagraph-V. L. S. E., and E. Auger, eastern division manager, left the home offices of that company last week for an extended tour of all Greater Vitagraph exchanges. Mr. Naugle had spent a week in New York to make a detailed report to Walter W. Irwin, general manager of Vitagraph-V. L. S. E., of conditions in the western territory. Mr. Auger reported on affairs in the east.

Mr. Naugle's trip will take him to the coast and back again to the Mississippi before the end of February. He has extended to all exhibitors in that far stretch of country an invitation to meet him at the Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. branch nearest them. His route is as follows:

Kansas City, January 20, 21 and 22; Dallas, January 23, 24 and 25; New Orleans, January 26, 27, 28, 29 and 30; Los Angeles, February 2, 3 and 4; San Francisco, February 5, 6 and 7; Seattle, February 9, 10, 11 and 12; Salt Lake City, February 14, 15 and 16; Denver, February 17, 18 and 19; Omaha, February 20, 21 and 22; St. Louis, February 23, 24, 25, 26 and 27, and Kansas City, February 28.

Mr. Auger's route is: Toronto, January 20, 21 and 22; Montreal, January 23 and 24; St. Johns, January 25, 26 and 27, and New York, January 28. Mr. Auger will spend a few days in New York and early in February will visit all the Vitagraph eastern offices.

Exhibitors desiring to see either Mr. Naugle or Mr. Auger are requested to note these dates and places, so that with the least trouble to themselves they can get in personal touch with these division managers of Vitagraph-V. L. S. E.

Metro Elects Officers

At the annual election of officers of the Metro Pictures Corporation, the following officials were chosen:

President, Richard A. Rowland, of New York; first vice president, Louis B. Mayer, of Boston; second vice president, James B. Clark, of Pittsburgh; treasurer, Joseph W. Engel, of New York; secretary and general counsel, J. Robert Rubin, of New York; executive committee, Richard A. Rowland, Joseph W. Engel and Louis B. Mayer.

Directors, Richard A. Rowland, Joseph W. Engel, Louis B. Mayer, John Kunsky, L. Lawrence Weber, A. S. Beymer, O. N. Davies, John D. Clark and James B. Clark.

Mr. Kunsky, whose home is in Detroit, is one of the most prominent motion picture men in the Middle West.

With the exception of Mr. Fitzgerald, who retires as first vice-president, and also from the directorate, President Rowland and the other officers were re-elected. Mr. Mayer succeeds Mr. Fitzgerald as first vice-president, and Mr. Kunsky succeeds him as director.

Reports which were submitted at the meeting showed that Metro has enjoyed an unusually prosperous year.

Distributes Mary Miles Calenders

Charles Pacini, proprietor of the New Majestic Theater, Kenosha, Wisconsin, distributed eight thousand calendars as souvenirs of his showing of "Faith," the Mutual Star production in which Mary Miles Minter is starred. The calendars were decorated with a head of the little star in colors. The sidewalk in front of the theater was impassable because of the crowds assembled.

The picture was so well liked that many requests were made for its re-showing but owing to the features already booked for the week's program it was impossible to hold it over. Other Mary Miles Minter pictures will be shown, however, at the New Majestic in the near future.

Arrangements have also been made whereby this feature will be shown at the new Butterfly Theater which will be opened soon.

Ruth Stonehouse is directing and playing the leading role in a two-reel character play, "Tacky Sue," at Universal City.

"The Plow Woman" is the title of a five-reel drama being filmed at Universal City. It features Mary MacLaren.

First Aid to Theater Men

PRACTICAL HELP ON THE PROBLEMS OF RUNNING A PICTURE HOUSE

EXHIBITORS in many sections of the country are becoming worried over the Sunday closing question. It has become a sort of epidemic. The people, preachers and clubs of one place hear about Sunday closing agitation in another locality and are led to think that perhaps Sabbath films are injuring their own community.

Then in their zeal for "doing good" they get busy.

Many exhibitors have asked us how best to offset such a movement. In sections where the show men have presented clean bills and have had the community in mind in choosing its films, the fight will be less serious, if there is any at all. Here is another proof of the value in co-operating in every way with the people. Make your house a community center, an institution like the post office or a school, with the good of the locality at heart, and you will have little trouble. Begin now to co-operate with the school people and ask the advice of mothers and preachers and business men on the sort of bills to run at their picture house, and you will cure the disease before you catch it, or before it catches you.

If your town is already afflicted, offer now to do the things suggested above. Also watch the motion picture trade papers for material to use in your fight. MOTOGRAPHY has carried several articles in every issue for the past month or two on the subject. Get some broad-minded minister to say that he will support Sunday pictures if you run educationals, or if he is allowed to choose the subjects. Make the people realize. through newspaper interviews or letters or ads, that there are many "amusements" such as saloons and pool rooms, cards and dancing, that are as harmful and less educational than motion pictures.

In short, use your brains, run clean pictures, cooperate with your public, make your house a respected and valued institution and you will have little trouble with Sunday closing or anything else. In some instances, of course, it is impossible to combat the set ideas of those who agitate the closing of houses on the first day of the week. But often when the truth is brought out, the majority of the people are in favor of films on Sunday. When the reformers get busy, you get busy and bring to the light the number of people who do not object to the fact that a picture house does business on the Sabbath the same as drug stores.

Here's good luck!

Can a Woman Be a Good Exhibitor?

127—My former experience has been limited to work in offices as private secretary to managers, etc., but I think I know enough about business to run a picture theater and make it pay. I was also a bookkeeper for years. I have been a constant film fan ever since they started and I think I can run a theater as well as the exhibitors in this city. The theater I have a chance to buy, as I said, is a bargain. It is in good condition and I think in a good location. Would you advise me to buy it?

There is no reason on earth why a woman cannot become a good exhibitor. There are a good many of them now. And a good many other women aid their husbands in the management of their houses. If you would care to have it, drop us a line for the names and addresses of some women who have made successes running theaters. They could undoubtedly give you some good advice. Also talk to the show men in your town about the proposition. Since your prospective theater is not in competing territory they will be frank with you.

With the information in your brief letter it is impossible for us to tell whether or not the house is a "bargain." The chances are it is not. First look carefully into the reasons for its sale. Then make a very careful study of the field, real estate values, etc. You must have a great deal more money saved than most office women to be able to take hold of such a proposition and be able to carry it along till you build up a business and make a go of it. Let us hear from you more in detail. Look before you take a jump.

The Use of Heralds

128—Do you think I should use heralds when I have a weekly program? Population about 1,800; change every day. I run Unicorn, Western and Comedies. Monday, "Shielding Shadow" and two reel drama and single reel comedy (Mutual); Tuesday, Paramount; Wednesday, "Gloria's Romance" and then fill-up reels Thursday. Paramount Friday; World Saturday.

The use of heralds depends some on what your program is like. If the latter is elaborate and complete, heralds are unnecessary.

The most efficient way to handle the matter has been found by most exhibitors to be to take some of the matter from the printed heralds furnished by the different film companies and use it in printing your own program. You can take some of the matter decribing the plays and stars and insert it in the proper places in your weekly bill.

You can, of course, also secure cuts from the producers and exchanges and use them to great advantage in your program, and in this way, if you have a good printer, make your program almost as attractive as are the heralds.

The question of a printer is very important. Be sure to go to the best one in your city. He will be cheapest in the end, for arrangement and taste in printing your program are very important. That bit of paper represents your house when it is in the hand of your prospective patron and your theater is unconsciously judged by it, just the same as customers judge a business house by its travelling men.

Use as good stock as you can afford in your program and use cuts to make it attractive. Avoid the use of too much text. And be very careful that everything is correct—grammar, spelling, names of plays and stars, etc. It is surprising but true that some theaters are still careless of these things.

The printed heralds you mention are, of course, valuable as an added gun in your campaign for some special picture, and as such are usually worth the money. Many exhibitors also find that they come in handy in case something delays the printing of their regular program. In that case, get a rubber stamp made and stamp the time and place on the herald, if it is impossible to have it printed on. The latter is by far the more satisfactory method, as a rubber stamp does only a very makeshift and cheap job at the best.

A few circumferences full of Triangle luminaries. As you read, Robert Harron, Fine Arts, Dale Fuller, Keystone, and her pet canary; Constance Talmadge, Fine Arts, star in "Intolerance"; Charles Ray, just re-signed with Ince, and 15-year-old Mildred Harris, a dawning Fine Arts star.

"The Spitfire" Features Bessie Love

The title of the Fine Arts comedy drama first announced as "The Doll Shop" has been changed to "The Spitfire." Bessie Love is the featured player in this, under the direction of Edward Dillon. The Fine Arts "kiddies" play their part in the production and contribute many humorous touches. One episode shows George Stone and Tina Rossi bringing the father's dinner to him at the factory. Not being able to get down the stairs quickly enough by the use of their feet, they use the bannisters. This, of course, results rather disastrously for the dinner pails.

In this production Miss Love does some excellent characterization in the role of the girl who is poor and has been trained to hate all people who are wealthy, regardless of social standing or anything else. She has been taught by her uncle to love nobody but poor people and her awakening when she realizes she has fallen in love with a millionaire instead of a chauffeur, gives rise to some excellent mirth-provoking situations.

Roy Stewart, who played opposite Miss Lillian Gish in "The House Built on Sand," has the leading masculine role in "The Spitfire." Carmel Myers, Max Davidson and Carl Stockdale have important parts in the production.

Metro February Releases

Four one-act comedies will be released by Metro Pictures Corporation during the month of February. Of these three will star Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, the fourth being a Metro-Rolma comedy starring Ralph Herz.

The Metro-Drew comedy, "Blackmail," by Epes Winthrop Sargent, will be released February 5. Henry is a successful lawyer. Mrs. Henry is insanely jealous of the women who come to him for legal advice. She becomes convinced that her husband has a "past," and is anxious concerning his present.

"Winning an Heiress," with Ralph Herz in the stellar role, is scheduled for February 12. Edward McWade wrote this comedy, which William A. Quirk directed. Warren Walton (Mr. Herz) is a successful actor who is in love with Ethel Campbell, an heiress, and wants to marry her. However, mother wants daughter to marry a title. Finding that Mrs. Campbell also admires bravery, Warren takes advantage of the shark scare at the beach to display his prowess, and thus wins Ethel and the mother's consent.

"Her Obsession," is the title of the Metro-Drew comedy to be released February 19. Sidney Drew himself is the author. The wife's obsession is that she is getting too fat. She weighs herself every day, until finally her husband "doctors" the scales, and she believes she is getting thin.

The final February comedy release is another "Henry" picture, "Reliable Henry," written by Mrs. Charles Corbaley. In this also Mr. and Mrs. Drew appear, "Reliable Henry" being a delightful story of everyday domestic life in a suburban home.

Anita Stewart's Next Picture

Having had a week's rest since she completed "The Glory of Yolanda," the Greater Vitagraph feature which will be released through Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. exchanges on January 29, Anita Stewart has begun work on a new production, "The More Excellent Way."

This is a picture version of Dr. Cyrus Townsend Brady's novel and Miss Stewart's part in it is that of Crissy Deselden. The leading male role will be played by Charles Richman, who will be co-starred with Miss Stewart in this production, following Mr. Richman's appearance in "The Secret Kingdom."

Rudolph Cameron, Charles A. Stevenson, Katherine Lewis and several other well-known Vitagraph players will be seen in the other roles. Perry M. Vekroff will direct the production of "The More Excellent Way."

Association Dinner Postponed

The dinner and entertainment planned for January 26 by the General Division of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry has been postponed until March on account of the absence of William A. Johnston, chairman of the division, and the present nature of legislative and other duties now developing on the officers of the association.

Definite announcement of the place and date of the dinner will be made shortly, as it is planned to give this entertainment the full advantage of careful planning for some weeks ahead.

Marie Dressler Deal Still Open

An impression that Marie Dressler is now under contract to appear in productions for Mutual distribution appears to have been gained from a misinterpretation of a statement made by President John R. Freuler of the Mutual, when he recently admitted that contracts with the star had been drawn. The project is still in the promotional stages, according to the Mutual Film Corporation, and at this time no information can be given of completed arrangements of final plans.

George M. Cohan, the original Yankee Doodle boy, in his first picture, "Broadway Jones," now being produced by Artcraft. The scene at the right is not a scene at all, but some preliminary instructions just before the filming began. Marguerite Snow, leading lady, is on the left, then come Crawford Kent, Joseph Kaufman, director, and Cohan. Seated are Jack Voshell, assistant director, Joseph Boyle, second assistant director, and Russell Bassett, character man. In the circle is George M. himself, and at the left a scene from the play.

New Color Process

Clarence W. Mable of Binghamton, New York, has been granted a patent on a process to color mechanically, motion picture films, and his invention is backed financially by the Ford Motor Car Company of Detroit where he has been at work on his idea in the laboratory connected with the Ford Animated Weekly. As compared with the present laborious and costly method of stenciling films by hand, five feet a day, the Mable process colors 36 pictures a minute, in the minutest detail, and a cost not to exceed one and one-half cents a foot.

When he was endeavoring to interest the large producers in New York they had little faith in his scheme but told him that if he could work out an idea that would color films at ten cents a foot it might be worth considering. He has been at work on his invention for several years, first conceiving the idea when he witnessed an imperfect picture display at the time when motion pictures were in their infancy.

He has always taken a keen interest in lithographical and photomechanical matters and has worked hard to perfect his idea. Within a short time a picture of the Grand Canyon of Colorado, nature's most wonderful color exhibit, will be reproduced in a Detroit theater with his device and he claims that every detail of nature in the canyon will be reproduced on the screen.

Cameron Opposite Anita Stewart

A promising newcomer in the ranks of juvenile leads at Greater Vitagraph's Brooklyn studios is Rudolph Cameron, who has been cast in a prominent part opposite Anita Stewart in "The More Excellent Way." Mr. Cameron is a recruit from the legitimate stage and will be remembered for the hit he recently made as David in "Rich Man, Poor Man." Prior to this, Mr. Cameron had done a great deal of work in vaudeville. He will play the part of Robert Leyland in "The More Excellent Way," which is a picture version of Dr. Cyrus Townsend Brady's novel.

Jack Pickford has gone west, transferring his activities from the Famous Players studio in New York to the Lasky studio in California, where his first production will be an adaptation of Gene Stratton Porter's celebrated novel, "Freckles," which will be released on the Paramount Program in the spring.

Fox Films "The Scarlet Letter"

On February 12, William Fox will present a picture version of Hawthorne's greatest story, "The Scarlet Letter." Three months were spent in making this picture, which is said to be as authentic and as appealing as the book itself. This picturization of "The Passion-play of New England" will be released on the regular Fox program.

Special care has been taken in selecting the cast of this feature. Stuart Holmes has the role of Dimmesdale, the repentant pastor. Mary Martin plays Hester Prynne, and Kittens Reichert, beaming with the elfish mischief of the Pearl she portrays, completes the pitiable trio.

Carl Harbaugh directed the subject and Georges Benoit, who was foremost in photographing "The Honor System," had charge of the camera. The lighting effects are particularly pleasing. What this master picture drama loses in words in the transformation, it more than gains in visualizing the pathos and tragedy which have made it one of the finest stories of love and passion ever told.

All the sub-titles have been taken from the book.

Beauty astride the beast. The astridess is Anne Luther, a Foxy little star.

Viola Dana on Art Dramas Program

Viola Dana, one of the most youthful of the screen stars, and certainly the youngest actress to have had her name spelled in electric lights in front of a legitimate theater on Broadway, is to appear on the Art Dramas program in "Rosie O'Grady," an Apollo Picture, which is to be released on February 1.

Viola Dana in "Rosie O'Grady," Apollo-Art Dramas play.

Miss Dana was practically born on the stage, and made her professional debut while still very young. She has appeared in support of Dorothy Donnelly, in Ibsen's "When We Dead Awake," with Thomas Jefferson in "Rip Van Winkle," in "The Squaw Man," with William Faversham, and in the title role of "The Littlest Rebel," with Dustin Farnum. Before her fifteenth birthday, she had attained stardom in her own right, playing the name part in "The Poor Little Rich Girl," which had such a remarkable run on Broadway.

From the legitimate stage, Miss Dana went into Edison productions, where her graceful charm and real dramatic ability soon made her one of the favorites of the photoplay world. Miss Dana has since appeared in several Metro plays.

In "Rosie O'Grady," Miss Dana's Art Dramas vehicle, she portrays a character that will immediately win for her the sympathy of the audience. It is the story of a little news girl of the slums, whose dream hero is a prize fighter. Although she has never met him, he is constantly in her thoughts, and when on one wonderful day he actually saves her from annoyance at the hands of some ruffians, her happiness knows no bounds.

The picture is replete with local color and human interest, as well as the most intense drama. In some of the scenes, several hundred people appear, in some very exciting situations.

No Credit Memo in Whole Week

J. A. Steinson, manager of the local exchange of Vitagraph-V. L. S. E., New Orleans, has succeeded in breaking one record. The feat is really unusual. For a whole week—ending January 13—Mr. Steinson did not have to issue a single credit memorandum. Often any film exchange will make a sufficient number of clerical errors in billing, shipping, booking, or what not to swell the number of credit memos issued to almost the same volume as the bills themselves.

Mr. Steinson's record is so remarkable that Walter W. Irwin, general manager of Vitagraph-V. L. S. E., wrote him:

> It is indeed a pleasure to read that for the entire week just closed you did not issue a single credit from your office and that there was no mis-shipment or delinquent shipment of any sort. We hope you can keep up this admirable record. It is an indication of the service you are rendering the exhibitor.

Brenton Talks Against Censorship

Cranston Brenton, chairman of the National Board of Review, addressed the Monday Club of Brooklyn, an organization of social workers, on the subject "The Social Significance of the Motion Picture" on January 15. He told the story of motion pictures and emphasized the fact that if the film is to have an opportunity to perform the maximum of social service it should not be hampered by the petty consrictions of a legalized censorship. Boards appointed by law, he pointed out, can perform only a negative service. They cannot make films better and there is always the danger that they will act adversely regarding the publication of social propaganda of which they might not approve for political or other reasons.

Book on Film Advertising

The latest book on films to come to our attention is a new volume by Ernest A. Dench called "Advertising by Motion Pictures." It is published by the Standard Publishing Company of Cincinnati, and can also be obtained through Motography.

The book is the first to treat the subject in a comprehensive manner and it is of a thoroughly practical nature. Among the subjects treated are, "Telling your ad story by motion pictures," "Movie advertising from the viewpoint of the fan," "Slide and film advertising contrasted." The treatment of the advertising of various products by films is also discussed.

Mr. Dench is also author of "Making the Movies" and a book on scenario writing.

English Firm Wants U. S. Films

Commerce Reports of current date states that an English motion picture firm is desirous of leasing American feature films. A guarantee of cash against delivery at destination is offered. Direct inquiries in care of Commerce Reports, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Washington, D. C.

After a six weeks' trip through the South, the June Caprice company has returned to the William Fox studios in Fort Lee, N. J., to finish work on the photoplay whose outdoor scenes were snapped in North Carolina, Georgia, Florida and Tennessee.

The Man Inside the Booth

PROJECTION DEPARTMENT, CONDUCTED BY E. C. SCOBEY

THIS department is now a permanent feature of MOTOGRAPHY. Its editor, Mr. Scobey, is a former secretary and treasurer of the Motion Picture Machine Operators' Local No. 194, I. A. T. S. E., and was formerly associated with the Central Film Service Company of Indianapolis. He was recently elected vice-president of the Central Labor Union of Indianapolis, the first operator to be so honored. The idea is to make this department just as helpful as possible to operators and exhibitors. Send your questions and problems to Mr. Scobey. He is sure to give you some valuable information. Address, MOTOGRAPHY, Chicago.

Will you kindly tell me through your department the best way to remove the intermittent shaft so as to replace a worn intermittent sprocket on a Power's 6 A?— Novelty Theater, Anthony, Kansas.

First remove the apron (Part No. 669) by taking out two small screws; next remove the lower sprocket and shaft by loosening screw in sprocket, slip sprocket off shaft and pull shaft out to the left; next remove the large idler gear (No. 640) by loosening screw in set collar (No. 642) on the idler gear shaft. To get to this collar you will have to lay the machine on the work bench with the left side of the machine down, and notice the set collar on the idler shaft set close to the frame of the machine. By turning the flywheel you will see the small set screw that holds the collar.

Loosen this screw and you can remove the idler gear and set collar. Next remove the oil casing cover (No. 674) by taking out the three small screws in the cover and tap the cover lightly on the hub to break the shellac joint.

Next remove the flywheel (No. 672) by removing the screw (No. 709), the flywheel can then be removed by tapping lightly on the opposite side of the wheel. Next loosen screw in the set collar on the cam shaft (No. 676) and the cam and shaft can be removed. Next loosen the set screw in the frame of the machine that holds the large intermittent bushing (No. 670) and the intermittent sprocket, shaft, and bushing can be removed by pulling them out to the left through the oil well.

In removing the pins in the old sprocket and putting the new pins in, be very careful that you do not spring the intermittent shaft. Place the sprocket between two blocks of brass or wood in a vice and then drive out the pins. Remove the old sprocket and put the new one back on the shaft and then place it back in the vice and put in the new pins. Before you replace the oil case cover, be sure and clean the edges of the cover and the case, removing the old shellac; then coat the edge of the cover with shellac and put it back in place on case with the three small screws. Do not put any oil in the oil well until the shellac has had plenty of time to set.

In replacing the flywheel be sure that the thin steel washer is in position on the cam shaft and that the two slots in the pinion gear (No. 677) fits over the two dogs on the cam shaft.

After replacing and adjusting the intermittent movement, be sure to time the shutter.

We run two Simplex machines, Ft. Wayne Compensarcs, A. C. current, 60 cycles 110 line voltage. At times our light is very poor, giving a dim picture. Our electrician says we are getting 110 volts at the compensarcs. Can you tell us what is the trouble and suggest a remedy?— Levy and Suddath, Natchitoches, Louisiana.

From the way your letter reads, I take it that you are having trouble with the light on both machines, and if that is the case I have every reason to believe that your voltage at the compensarcs varies. I would have your electrician install a volt meter on the line just ahead of the compensarcs and take readings from it at regular intervals for a few days and then you will be sure whether you are getting 110 volts at the compensarcs at all times. If you find that the voltage does not vary, then examine all connection from the main switch to the compensarcs and from the compensarcs to the lamps. A loose connection will cause a variation of current at the lamp.

Be sure that the jaws on the lamps are kept good and clean. The jaws should be taken out once a week and the part of the jaw making the contact with the carbon should be cleaned thoroughly. A good contact between the jaw and the carbon is essential to a good light.

I am thinking of joining the Operators' Union, and if it is not asking too much I should like to have you give me some idea of what I would have to know to get in the local. I have followed the Operators' trade for the last five years and have always wanted to be a Union operator. I think that a Union of any kind is a good thing to any man that has a trade. I am a fairly good mechanic but not so much at electrical work. I can repair a machine for almost any trouble. If you can give me any idea in this it will be highly appreciated by me. Inclosed find stamps as I prefer that you write me direct. If you write this letter up please do not mention my name or town.

In all Locals of the I. A. T. S. E. and M. P. M. O. of U. S. and Canada you are required to make application for membership, stating the length of time you have worked at the craft and the length of time you have been a resident of the city and state in which you make the application. Your application is then turned over to an investigation committee and if they bring in a favorable report on the application, then you are notified to appear before the examination board for examination. Every Local has its own list of questions, written, oral and practical. I, as a member of the I. A., could not tell you or anyone else just what might be asked of you but I can assure you that if you are, as you state in your letter, an operator with five years' experience, you ought to be able to pass the examination that will be given you.

The I. A. is just like any labor organization, they want all good, clean men, following the various crafts that their charter has jurisdiction over, to be members of the I. A. and I am sure that you will never regret it if you join. I heartily agree with you in saying that every person who has to toil for a living should be affiliated with some Trade Union. I would advise you to write to the Secretary of the nearest I. A. Local and request him to mail you an application blank, with such other information that he can give you, such as the amount of initiation and dues. If you do not know where an I. A. Local is located then write to F. G. Lemaster, general organizer, 107 West Forty-sixth Street, New York, and he can give you the desired information.

With reference to the condition experienced by two road men, as outlined in the January 13 issue of MOTOGRAPHY, the editor suggests the following solution.

Inasmuch as it is stated that all connections on the board, field rheostat, fields and armature (assuming that the brush contacts are included) were made and found in perfect order, the generator of the motor generator set in question has undoubtedly failed to give the desired results for the reason that it had failed to "build up"—that is, for some reason, depending upon local conditions, the residual magnetism remaining in the field poles of the generator when it was last stopped was reduced to such an extent that upon restarting the generator there was not enough residual magnetism to enable the machine to build up its voltage under ordinary starting conditions. Under these conditions a momentary short circuit of the terminals of the generator applied at short intervals will enable the generator to gradually build up its voltage and re-establish the residual magnetism which it should have. In conditions of this kind, where the polarity of the generator effects the outside circuit, it is best to make a test to see that the polarity of the generator has not reversed.

I have been reading "The Man Inside the Booth" department of MOTOGRAPHY since it has been created and find that it has more questions that are answered so that the readers can get some benefit from them than any other trade paper projection department.

Now, here is my question: The booth that I am working in is painted a beautiful sky blue and I have asked the manager to have it changed but he doesn't seem to think that it is necessary. It is very hard on my eyes and I can not see the screen well enough to focus the picture properly. To make matters worse—the lights in the orchestra pit reflect on the screen and when I complain to the manager he says that the orchestra gets him the money so it comes first. Do you think that he is right?

The booth (not this particular one but every booth) should be painted either a very dark green or a flat black. This gives the operator in the booth a chance to see the results that he is getting on the screen and at the same time saves his eyes, and any one who has ever been in a booth five minutes knows that there is a terrible strain on their eyes if they watch the spot on the cooling plate of the machine for a second or two at a time.

As to the lights in the orchestra pit reflecting on the screen, it does not seem possible that a man that carries the title of a manager attached to his name, would be so blind that he would refuse to remedy a fault like that. The best way to convince him would be to project a picture with the lights on and then have the lights cut off while running and let him see for himself the difference in the picture and it will not take him long after that to have the lights changed. As I have said before, a little good common sense used in an argument like yours will go a long ways.

Exhibitors Praise Paramount

Hundreds of letters and telegrams have been received from exhibitors throughout the country by Paramount Pictures Corporation, as the result of the establishment of the Exhibitors Aids Departments in their exchanges and the distribution to Paramount exhibitors of over $200,000 worth of exhibitors helps and accessories.

Paramount's exhibitors aids campaign was inaugurated about three months ago, and the success of it is unprecedented in the history of the industry. The plan was to help the exhibitor in every possible manner. Every means towards this end was covered in its entirety and in each exchange there was established advertising and publicity departments and exhibitors aids departments.

In planning the campaign Paramount went to its every exhibitor and asked them what they wanted, and what would best help them to bring money into their box offices. A thousand and one replies were compiled, and when the plans were made for the $200,000 worth of accessories, not one exhibitor's wants were overlooked. The principal aids came under the head of advertising and publicity aids and the distribution of them represented the greatest distribution of free accessories ever planned by a motion picture concern.

The fundamental purpose of the campaign inaugurated by Paramount was to help the exhibitor to build his business for permanency with a program of pictures of the highest quality. Exhibitors in their communications to Paramount expressed their desire to make more money, and it is that desire that Paramount is endeavoring to satisfy.

Among a few of the comments that have been made on these Advertising and Publicity exhibitors' aids are the following:

F. C. Smoot, Camden Theater, Parkersburg, West Virginia; Sam Jones Smith, Dallas, Texas; J. V. Lynn, Seattle, Washington; J. Maurice Ridge, Cincinnati, Ohio; J. F. Crossley, Sorg Opera House, Middletown, Ohio; Gerber and Hass, Majestic Theater, Dayton, Ohio; Mr. Hennegen, Lubin Theater, Cincinnati, Ohio; Wallace Decker, Piccadilly Theater, Rochester, New York; H. F. Wilkes, New Orleans; Paul E. Glase, Reading, Pennsylvania; Grace Wyndon Vail, Atlanta, Georgia; Carr and Schad, theaters in Pennsylvania, and H. O. Strom, Strand Theater, St. Helena, Oregon.

Mary Miles at Work on New One

Mary Miles Minter will appear as the companion to an elderly woman in the newest of the Mutual Mary Miles Minter features being produced at the American studio under the direction of James Kirkwood. "The Gentle Intruder" is the title of the picture.

The story tells of a young girl who has been defrauded of an inheritance by her uncle's lawyer posing as a protecting friend. Into the house of the man who has taken what rightfully belongs to her, she comes as a companion to an elderly woman, and through this association finally brings the lawyer's self-seeking, society-crazed family into a realization of their shortcomings.

D. W. Griffith was the guest of honor at a luncheon given in the William Penn Hotel, Pittsburgh, on January 3 by William Moore Patch, managing director of the Pitt Theater. A large number of officials and theatrical men of Pittsburgh attended.

Art Dramas Announces Unusual Plays

CASTS INCLUDE ANNA NILSSON, JEAN SOTHERN, VIOLA DANA, DOROTHY BERNARD

ART DRAMAS, INC., announces its releases for the next two months, beginning with the middle of January, and extending into March. Most of these productions have already been completed, insuring the exhibitor of a feature every week on the release date. This, it has been pointed out by an official of the company, is a record that no other new releasing organization has ever been able to make.

The releases are: January 11, "Infidelity?" with Anna Q. Nilsson and Eugene Strong; January 18, "God of Little Children," with Alma Hanlon; January 25, "Her Good Name," with Jean Sothern; February 1, "Rosie O'Grady," with Viola Dana; February 8, "The Accomplice," with Dorothy Bernard and Jack Sherrill; February 15, "The Adventurer," featuring Marion Swayne; February 21, "The Moral Code," featuring Anna Q. Nilsson and Walter Hitchcock; February 28, "Pride and the Devil," with Alma Hanlon.

"Infidelity?" is an Erbograph production, concerning the lives of two generations—a man and his wife and their daughter and her fiance. The picture gets its peculiar interrogatory title from the fact that it does not tell definitely of any particular unfaithfulness, but concerns the subject only generally. Ashley Miller both wrote and directed the production.

"God of Little Children," produced by Apollo Pictures, Inc., is a powerfully dramatic story that gives Alma Hanlon, the star, ample opportunity to display her histrionic ability. Richard Ridgely, who produced for the McClure company, directed "God of Little Children."

Jean Sothern is the first of the Art Drama stars to make her second appearance on that program. Following the success of her first picture, which seems to have added greatly to her popularity, considerable care was exercised in the choice of a vehicle for her second Art Drama, "Her Good Name," aptly described as a "photoplay of sunshine and heart throbs." George Terwilliger, who directed "The Lash of Destiny," the first Art Drama, is also producing "Her Good Name," at the Van Dyke Studio.

"Rosie O'Grady," the next Art Drama, marks Viola Dana's first appearance on the program. She is presented in an Apollo picture. A strong cast supports her in the picture, and the atmosphere of the East Side, the locale of the story, is carried out with utmost fidelity.

"The Accomplice," a William L. Sherrill Feature, co-stars Dorothy Bernard and Jack Sherrill. This production will mark Mr. Sherrill's arrival into the state of stardom, a rank which he has won through persistent effort, backed by unusual native ability. The story tells of the night life of New York's smart set. Jean Sturt, whose work as Betty in the last Sherrill production, "The Rainbow," attracted so much favorable comment, is also seen in this production.

The second United States Amusement Corporation release on the program will be a picturization of Upton Sinclair's famous novel "The Adventurer." This book was one of the best sellers of a few years ago. Marion Swayne will be the star of this production.

"Pride and the Devil," starring Alma Hanlon, will be released next under the Apollo Pictures brand. Richard Ridgely, who directed Miss Hanlon's first picture, "God of Little Children," will also produce "Pride and the Devil."

"DOT" KELLY TO THE FRONT

She Succeeds Lillian Walker in Vitagraph's Blue Ribbon Features—Story of Career Good Food for "Fans"

Dorothy Kelly will be the successor to Lillian Walker in taking the leads in the Vitagraph Blue Ribbon pictures, whose departure from the Vitagraph organization has been announced.

This necessitates a slight change in Vitagraph-V. L.

"Dot" Kelly, vivacious and popular star, who succeeds Lillian Walker in the Vitagraph constellation.

S. E. releases as scheduled under the rotary plan, by virtue of which exhibitors are assured of the return of each star or group of stars every six weeks. Miss Walker's next release will be on February 19, in "Kitty Mackay." On April 2, with the release of "The Star Gazer," the last of the Lillian Walker features will be released through Vitagraph-V. L. S. E.

Miss Kelly and Evart Overton are co-starred in "The Money Mill," which will be released as a Blue Ribbon feature on May 14, the date on which Miss Walker's next feature would have been ready.

Thereafter, every sixth week, there will be a Vitagraph feature in which Miss Kelly and Mr. Overton will be co-starred as one of the six groups in the Vitagraph rotary system.

"Dot" Kelly, who thus takes a high place in stardom, really has earned it. Starting in the motion picture business without any experience she has worked her way steadily up, as the real stars always do. A Philadelphian by birth and rearing, she was an artist in charcoal and pen and ink. She branched out and took up water colors and did well at this, too. Then she decided that painting pictures would never be as lucrative as acting in pictures. So off to New York she went and straight to Vitagraph.

When the casting director there asked her what her stage experience was, she told him blandly, "None."

"What have you done in pictures?"

"Nothing—yet!" was the equally bland answer.

"What do you mean by applying for a job for which you have no qualifications?"

"Qualifications?" quizzically retorted Miss Kelly. "Why I have brains and I can use them."

William Russell in Southern Role

William Russell in "My Fighting Gentleman," production of which has been completed this week at the studios of the American Film Company, is the latest offering of American-Mutual features in line with the policy of "Only Big Stars for Mutual." Release date of "My Fighting Gentleman" will be announced soon.

According to those at the studio who saw the photoplay in its completed form, "My Fighting Gentleman" should be among the most attractive of the popular William Russell series. The story, which is written around the inhabitants of a Southern town in the Reconstruction period following the Civil War is a novel one. Starting with the shattered finances of a family at the war's end, it presents Frank Carlisle, the hero, played by William Russell, in the effort to rebuild his estate.

Edward Sloman, who directed the picture, has succeeded in obtaining unusual striking night effects, all of which actually were taken at night to obtain the proper illusion of artificial lighting. A chase through a swamp with bloodhounds on the trail of a fugitive and a glimpse at the main street of a Southern village on election night remain in the memory.

Playing opposite William Russell in the character of Virginia Leighton is Francelia Billington, Russell's new leading woman. Jack Vosburgh has the important heavy role, while Lucille Ward, Clarence Burton, Harry von Meter, William Carroll and Sid Algier furnish strong support.

Transcontinental Screen Comedy

Plans for the first trans-continental photoplay featuring an individual star are being perfected at the Triangle-Fine Arts studios in Los Angeles. Robert Harron has been selected to appear in this novelty production, which will be under the direction of Lloyd Ingraham.

A definite date has not yet been decided upon, but Harron and Ingraham, together with a small supporting cast and mechanical crew, will probably start from Los Angeles as soon as work has been completed upon "The Bad Boy," Harron's present starring vehicle.

A story has been prepared by the Triangle-Fine Arts scenario department which calls for many contrasting scenes, and episodes will be filmed in all of the big cities visited, including El Paso, San Antonio, New Orleans, Atlanta, Washington, Philadelphia and New York. Many interesting bits of open country will also be utilized for settings, and if any striking adventures befall the pilgrims en route, they will be incorporated in the story whenever possible.

Bert Hadley, Ingraham's assistant director, will make the trip in advance of the Harron company, to arrange for accommodations and look over the various locations.

Director Allen J. Holubar is nearing the completion of a five-reel photodrama, "The Reward of His Government," at Universal City.

"Beauty is truth; truth beauty," said Keats. And he was right. Here's a bit of the beauty and the truth is that you will probably book this newly blossomed Mack Sennett-Keystone, "Her Nature Dance"—that is, unless you're a blind man or your wife sees it first.

HAMPTON TALKS ON PROFITS

Head of General Film Company Believes Tax Laws Are Natural Outcome of Public's Ignorance of the Facts

Benjamin B. Hampton, president of the General Film Company, wants the public to know that the moving picture business has been too well "press-agented." He means that stories of immense salaries paid to some players has created the impression that correspondingly generous profits are realized all along the line; a mistake, he says, which is one of the strong influences in causing state legislatures to be deceived by this appearance of prosperity and to regard moving picture theaters as a legitimate subject for taxation.

Investments in moving picture securities have proven unsatisfactory and unprofitable in about fifty instances to every one of the other kind, he asserts. He thinks that if the public knew how narrow a margin of profit exists for most companies, there would be less inclination to legislate against the films.

"The only swollen profits of the picture business today," he declares, "are the profits received by some of the stars."

And these would not measure up to the published amounts, says Mr. Hampton. A statement issued by him reads in part as follows:

The hard cold facts relative to the motion picture industry at the present time are that the business is going through a reorganization—becausc the profits are not satisfactory to the men engaged in it. If you will make inquiry in Wall Street you will be surprised to find how many bankers have lost money, or have had unsatisfactory experiences with motion picture ventures.

The popular opinion seems to be that Wall Street has not invested extensively in picture securities. While this is probably true, the facts are that many Wall Street bankers and banking houses have in one way or another put moncy into various forms of picture propositions. Nearly all resulted unsatisfactorily. A few of the great picture concerns have pleasant, satisfactory Wall Street connections, but for everyone of these I venture the assertion that you can fine fifty deals that have been unsatisfactory.

I have some knowledge of the conditions that surround about perhaps twenty or twenty-five of the leading producers of the country, and I must say frankly that these men are not making profits justified by their investment of money, time, energy and responsibility.

On the distributing side some of the houses are making fair profits, and others are not. So that any way you look into thc industry, exhibitor, distributor, and producer, you will find that the day of swollen profits is a thing of the past.

PARAMOUNT PORTRAYS ORIENT

Japanese Actor, Sessue Hayakawa, Is Star in Lasky Feature, "Each to His Kind"—Lenore Ulrich in Indian Play

Sessue Hayakawa, in the Lasky production, "Each to His Kind," and Lenore Ulrich, in the Pallas production of "Her Own People," will be the program features on the Paramount program for the week of February 5.

It is doubtful if any foreigner since Lafayette has ever become as popular in America as the noted Japanese actor, Sessue Hayakawa. His unusual histrionic ability has made him a capital favorite of the screen. In "The Victoria Cross" he displayed rare ability in the interpretation of the Indian character. Acting upon the promises held forth in this characterization, the Lasky company presents him in the role of an Indian rajah, who comes in contact with occidental environment and traits, only to return to his orientalism with stronger faith in it and its kind. Tsuri Aoki who has altogether overthrown the truth of "East is east and west is west" by obtaining a tremendous hold on the affections of Americans, plays opposite Sessue Hayakawa in "Each to His Kind," forming the second base of the triangle composed of that brilliant star, herself and Vola Vale, who as the English girl creates the conflict in the drama.

The story was written by Paul West for Hayakawa and prepared for the screen by George Dubois Proctor. In the cast playing opposite the stars and Vola Vale, are Earnest Joy, Walter Long, Eugene Pallette, Paul Weigel and others.

Lenore Ulrich, who won such a great personal triumph on the stage recently as an Indian girl, in the Belasco production of "The Heart of Wetona," will be shown in "Her Own People" in an Indian characterization, a thrilling modern drama of racial conflict. For the Indian scenes of this production, the Pallas Company went to an Indian reservation in the west.

Surrounding the two features for this week, Paramount will release the fifty-second edition of the Paramount Pictographs, the fifty-third of the series of "Weekly Trips Around the World," personally conducted by Burton Holmes, in which he takes his travelers from "Regina to the Rockies," and a Black Diamond Comedy entitled "All at Sea."

TAKING PRODUCER'S ADVICE

Letter to William A. Brady from Theater Owner Reveals His Hesitancy to Try Three-Day Runs in His Theater

William A. Brady, director general of the World Film Corporation, has received a personal letter from an exhibitor in a prosperous city of the Middle West, from which the following is an extract:

I have noted your published remarks at various times concerning longer runs for pictures and what you consider the folly of changing the program every day, relying entirely upon regular patrons and those who happen to be attracted when passing the lobby. Every exhibitor should at least pause and weigh anything you say about running a theater, for you are first of all a showman, as your record proves, and if you don't know the public, nobody does.

So I concluded to experiment. I put on a certain World Brady-made for three days, and advertised it in advance as I would have advertised a coming stage show when I was running a regular combination theater here. The experiment was entirely successful. The first day's business was a little better than normal for that day of the week, the second jumped up $65 and the third was capacity.

This certainly looked as if I had solved my problem on your advice—but only for a minute. The particular play I had picked out made a big hit with the first day's patrons, and they did the rest by telling their friends about it. But how can I be sure of always being able to find other plays that will do the same?

At the profit margin prevailing in most picture houses a photoplay that fell down on its opening and played to little or nothing the next two days would make quite a hole. The daily change plan may not enable us to get all there is in a good picture, but it gives us a chance to dodge being hurt very much by a bad one.

Mr. Brady jocularly replied that his correspondent could find a way out by using World pictures exclusively, and then took up the more serious end of the matter.

Your theater, he wrote, is in a city that was known in the days of traveling shows as a three-night stand. You need not have waited for me to point out that a city which formerly supported expensive theatrical combinations for half a week at a time cannot take ample care of a comparatively trifling cost picture for the same period.

You have been simply making a one-night stand out of a perfectly good three-day city, and you had to be told about it before you woke up.

All that is required to get a bigger profit out of extending motion picture runs is reasonable discrimination in the selection of material and intelligent energy in telling your public in advace all about the attractive features of your entertainment.

"Secret Kingdom" Hit in Texas

"The Secret Kingdom" bookings seem to be developing into a fervor for this new Greater Vitagraph adventure serial. From farthest Texas, Walter W. Irwin, general manager of Vitagraph-V. L. S. E., has just received a report on "The Secret Kingdom" for San Antonio and El Paso, from J. B. Dugger, manager of the Dallas exchange of that company.

"Contracts landed in San Antonio on 'The Secret Kingdom'," wires Mr. Dugger to Mr. Irwin, "represent the largest value ever received for serials in any single town in Texas territory. Long runs and high prices prevail here on 'The Secret Kingdom,' El Paso going equally strong."

W. C. Berger, proprietor of the Pearl Theater, San Antonio, has contracted for "The Secret Kingdom" and will run all fifteen episodes for a week each at what is said to be the highest single price ever paid for a continued photoplay. The Wigwam and Zaragosa Theaters in San Antonio also have booked "The Secret Kingdom" as an early run attraction.

H. B. Warner in "Wrath"

McClure Pictures announces that H. B. Warner in "Wrath" will be the fifth release in the series of five-reel features grouped under the title Seven Deadly Sins. The first of this group will be Ann Murdock in

H. B. Warner invades a harem in "Wrath," one of the stories in the McClure series, "Seven Deadly Sins."

"Envy," which will be released on January 29. The others will follow at weekly intervals.

"Wrath" tells a timely story of Russian intrigue, of Russian heroes and Russian villains—just the sort of a play in which H. B. Warner appears at his best, a tale of love and battle.

In "Wrath," Shirley Mason and George Le Guere —who appear in all of the Seven Deadly Sins—become entangled in munitions plots. Miss Mason finds that she owns an ammunition factory that has been furnishing supplies to Russia. Not believing in war, she holds up the output, which Russia needs immediately. Out of the efforts to make her release the ammunition, the wiles of the Grand Duke and the honesty of his son, is developed an exciting drama, crowded with human interest, touches of comedy and thrills.

The supporting cast is excellent and the settings are splendid. The action takes Mr. Warner into a Turkish harem, into Russia and New York and out upon a desert.

Mr. Warner is supported by Shirley Mason, George Le Guere, Edith Hallar, Charles Wellesley, Thea Talbott, George Arvine and John Nicholson.

Theodore Marston directed "Wrath" and Charles Gilson was the photographer.

Following "Pots-and-Pans-Peggie," next of the Thanhouser "lovely girl" series of photoplays starring Gladys Hulette and released through Pathe exchanges in March, Miss Hulette will be seen in "The Candy Girl," written by Philip Lonergan and directed by W. Eugene Moore.

COMING MUTUALS

Charlotte Walker in Powerful Rex Beach Story Heads Unusual Mutual Schedule for Week of January 29

The headliner on the schedule of the Mutual Film Corporation for the week of January 29 is "Pardners," a five-reel adaptation of Rex Beach's story, in which Charlotte Walker is featured. It is a drama of Alaska, from the pen of the author of "The Spoilers," "The Ne'er Do Well," "The Barrier."

Miss Walker plays the role of an aristocratic southern woman, for whose sake her husband, "the kid," goes out in search for gold. Rex Beach has filled this story with the mad scramble for gold, and the freeness and the wickedness of the north country. He has colored it with the odd characters which went to the land, and made it appealing by the spirit and love of a woman.

On the same day Mutual releases the third of "Adventures of Shorty Hamilton," the Mutual "Featurettes" under the title of "Shorty Goes to College."

In the regular weekly travel film "Mutual Tours Around the World," with release date of January 30, a trip is made to Teheran, the capital of Persia. Then the travelers are taken to France, Normandy, and the Vosges Mountains.

In Mutual Weekly No. 109, under date of January 31, with its collection of interesting incidents, and also "See America First," scenes are shown of San Diego, Cal. The reel is completed by Harry Palmer's clever Kartoon Komic.

The Cub one-reel comedy in which George Ovey makes his regular weekly appearance, February 1, shows the adventures of "Jerry and His Pal."

The fifth of the "Uncle Sam's Defenders" series showing the "Scouts of the Sea and Sky" comes next in order, on February 2. Some very interesting views of the guiding and propelling mechanism of the twenty-two inch torpedoes are pictured, together with scenes showing the aviation corps at Pensacola, Fla., the latest type of bi-planes, and a trip over Pensacola in a Curtiss "Flying Fish."

The American Film Corporation contributes a one-reel drama, "Nature's Calling," featuring J. Warren Kerrigan supported by Pauline Bush and Louise Lester. This production is for release February 3. Mr. Kerrigan enacts the role of a typical big man of the big west who marries a girl of the east and tries to make her love this "God's country" as he does.

Paddy McQuire and Billy Mason have the principal roles in the Mutual-Vogue two-reel comedy of February 4, entitled "Sticky Fingers." Lillian Hamilton, Larry Bowes, Harry Huckins, George Monberg and Glenn Gano, also appear in the supporting cast. Paddy McQuire and Smiling Billy Mason are seen as college boys.

The Mutual-Gaumont release of the same day, "Reel Life," is made up of four subjects; "Making Lace by Machinery," "Toddles, New York's Latest Dance," "Raising Fresh Water Fish," and "Design Your Own Gown."

The week's program is rounded out by the fifteenth and last chapter of the Mutual-Signal photo-novel "A Lass of the Lumberlands," featuring Helen Holmes, and the sixth of the series, "The Perils of Our Girl Reporters," entitled "A Long Lane," featuring Helen Greene and Earl Metcalfe.

Talmadge Picture Hit in New York

Norma Talmadge, one of the most popular of the younger motion picture stars, made her Selznick-Pictures debut in New York last week in a film version of the celebrated drama, "Panthea." At the Rialto Theater, on Broadway, and Marcus Loew houses this picture was received with great enthusiasm. Attendance records tottered and the daily press and trade publications praised the star, the story and the director very highly.

The fact that it was the young star's first appearance in a role of great emotional intensity added to the interest in the production. Heretofore Miss Talmadge has been seen almost entirely in parts of a lighter character and the superb manner in which she handled the title role in this stirring drama surpassed all expectations.

Miss Talmadge appeared in person before several of her audiences at the close of the picture. At each appearance Miss Talmadge made a brief speech in which she promised that "Panthea" would be only the first of a series of equally important productions in which she would appear as the star under the Selznick banner, and announced that her second offering would be an adaptation of the immensely popular novel of South African life, "Poppy."

In the photoplay version of "Panthea" the director, Allan Dwan, adhered closely to the story of the original drama in which Mme. Olga Petrova starred on the American stage several seasons ago.

Heavy Bookings on "The Girl Philippa"

Bookings on "The Girl Philippa," the eight-reel special Vitagraph production based on Robert W. Chambers' literary masterpiece and starring Anita Stewart, are destined to create new totals for any one picture, if contracts already closed by George Balsdon, manager of the New York exchange of Vitagraph-V. L. S. E., may be used as a basis.

Following its record-breaking box-office run at the Rialto Theater, New York, "The Girl Philippa" seems bound to start after new records in length of run, rental figures, and box office returns. The advance demands for "The Girl Philippa" have been found in all Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. exchanges to be so heavy as to cause slight postponement of the release of the picture so as to equalize the ability to answer this demand.

Here's a sight for sore eyes and slim bank account. It's the Academy Theater of Buffalo on the night when Manager Jules Michaels opened "The Perils of Our Girl Reporters," Mutual's newspaper series. It speaks for itself, John.

One effect of this demand, which has passed all expectations, is that the different Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. branches are setting their own release dates in accordance with the arrangements best suited to supplying their exhibitor demand.

Mr. Balsdon's report to Mr. Irwin shows that, in the first twenty-four hours after the definite release date of "The Girl Philippa" had been fixed, the New York exchange closed the following bookings:

Goodwin Theater, Newark, 7 days; Cumberland Theater, Brooklyn, 3 days; Manor Theater, Richmond Hill, 3 days; Auditorium Theater, Brooklyn, 3 days; Sunset Theater, Brooklyn, 3 days; Rialto Theater, Brooklyn, 3 days; Apollo Theater, West 125th street, New York, 3 days; Burland Theater, Brooklyn, 5 days; Adelphi Theater, Eighty-ninth street and Broadway, New York, 3 days; 77th Street Theater, Broadway, New York, 2 days; Monticello Theater, Jersey City, 3 days; Picture Playhouse, Forty-second street and Eighth avenue, New York, 3 days; National Theater, Jersey City, 3 days; U. S. Gardens, Elizabeth, N. J., 3 days, and Colonial Theater, Orange, N. J., 3 days.

The total rentals on "The Girl Philippa" for four prints for the first week of its release in the New York exchange of Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. are said by Mr. Balsdon, a veteran exchange manager, to be the largest in all his experience on any one picture.

Dorothy Gish in "Stage Struck"

"Stage Struck" is the final title of the latest Fine Arts comedy drama featuring Dorothy Gish. In this, Miss Gish has the part of a poor orphan who thinks she has a great future on the stage. She attends a fake dramatic school in which she is led to believe she is winning success as an actress. A burlesque on a raw and red melodrama is shown in minute detail. The hero is shown as an unintelligent person who would never make an actor in a thousand years. The heroine is even worse, but the proprietors of the school tell each of these players that it is only a question of time until they will be the wonders of the speaking stage, and the scholars believe it and continue to pay out their good money to their teachers.

The story was written by Roy Somerville and directed by Edward Morrissey. Frank Bennett, who played opposite Miss Gish in "The Little Yank," has the role of the son of a multi-millionaire.

Jennie Lee, who more than a quarter of a century ago was one of the best known Shakespearean actresses on the stage, plays the part of a boarding house landlady with a clientele of actors and actresses, long on conceit but short on ready cash. The other principals in the cast include Kate Toncray, Spottiswoode Aitken and Fred A. Warren. Carl Brown is turning the camera for "Stage Struck."

G. F. Lenehan, manager of the Washington branch of Vitagraph-V. L. S. E., has had to add two new men to his staff. William Ballenger, formerly of the International Film Service branch in Washington, has been added to the Vitagraph sales force, with Virginia and North Carolina as his territory. J. C. Huppman, also a former member of the International force, is now the shipper in the Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. exchange there.

Sixty Dollars Reward

Universal Film Company of Oklahoma Will Pay for the Return of Six Reels of Film Stolen from Exhibitor

The Universal Film and Supply Company of Oklahoma City was robbed on Sunday, December 31, and again on the following Sunday, January 7, under circumstances so mysterious that they are offering a reward of ten dollars a reel for the six reels stolen. Universal has sent out a notice to exhibitors asking them to be on the lookout for this film.

The exhibitor from whom it was stolen has offered to pay for the re-issues, but the exchange doesn't for a moment entertain any suspicion of him, and is anxious to locate the film without replacing it by new.

A can of films was delivered by the express company to the Idion Theater at Shawnee, Okla., addressed to A. B. Momand, manager. Before the theater was opened on Sunday a similar theft was committed in exactly the same manner. The first can contained Universal Animated Weekly No. 50, and a two-reel Bison entitled "The Taint of Fear," military drama. These were stolen on December 31. The other can contained the Universal Animated Weekly No. 51, and a two-reel Rex society drama entitled "Mr. Vampire." These were stolen from the lobby of the same theater, January 7.

The thefts were conducted so mysteriously that no clue has as yet developed, although the exchange has engaged detectives. The police are working on the case.

In order to get the films themselves back, as well as to relieve Mr. Momand of responsibility, the Universal Film and Supply Company has offered a reward for the recovery of the films. They offer $10 per reel for the return of the entire amount of film, or any part of it intact.

Mutual Gets Stage Director

Frank Powell has engaged Frank McCormack, who has to his credit the staging of many Broadway successes, to assist him in the direction of the series of feature pictures in which Marjorie Rambeau will be starred, now being made by the Frank Powell Producing Corporation, to be distributed by Mutual.

Mr. McCormack has long been known as one of the most successful men producing for the legitimate stage. To his credit are many of the substantial hits of recent seasons. For seven years he was associated with Mrs. Fiske, and it was with her that he won an enviable reputation through his work in the staging of several of the Ibsen plays. He also produced the musical comedy, "Very Good Eddie," an extremely successful production.

Mr. McCormack is now assisting Mr. Powell in the production of "Motherhood," the second of the series of Marjorie Rambeau pictures now in production at the Powell studios at College Point, Long Island.

Director William Worthington is filming a five-reel drama, "The Clock," featuring Franklyn Farnum.

When "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea" played in San Diego, at the Cabrillo Theater, Allen J. Holubar, who played "Captain Nemo," personally appeared before the audience.

MASTBAUM EXTENDS CHAIN

Stanley Company, of South Philadelphia, Takes Over Control of One More Large Photo-play House

The Stanley Company and its associates, controlling the principal theaters in South Philadelphia, have taken over the Broadway Theater, at Broad street and Snyder avenue. With the Stanley Company will be affiliated Messrs. Sablosky and McQuirk in the management of the Broadway.

This addition to the Stanley chain of show houses makes their organization the principal picture show enterprise of South Philadelphia. The Alhambra Theater also is among the larger houses now under the control of the Stanley Company. The policies of the company have proven popular with the public. The resources of the Mastbaum interests and Sablosky and McQuirk being united as they are, further strengthens the prestige of the exhibiting syndicate. Their programs include vaudeville acts.

Stanley V. Mastbaum, managing director of the Stanley Company and its allied organizations, is living up to the name applied to him by Philadelphia theatrical men, who call him "the man of surprises," and in Philadelphia, his fame is spreading.

Coming Essanay Releases

So popular has Essanay found its "Is Marriage Sacred?" series that President George K. Spoor has decided to respond to the request of exhibitors that it be extended. Therefore, he herewith announces that the original twelve units will be followed by an additional five. The titles of the later productions will shortly be announced. General Film Service is handling these offerings, which are released each Saturday. The plays are all separate. The cast is composed of Marguerite Clayton, Edward Arnold, Sydney Ainsworth, Lillian Drew and Thomas Commerford.

The General Film Service subjects from Essanay for February, besides including four units of the popular "Is Marriage Sacred?" series, include four strong Black Cats.

On February 3, "Shifting Shadows" is the "Is Marriage Sacred?" release.

"The Hoodooed Story" is the Black Cat feature for February 6. Richard C. Travers and Gertrude Glover appear in the leading roles. Canimated Nooz No. 24 with Alaskan scenic is the release on the following day. On the Saturday of the week, February 10, "Desertion and Non-Support" is the topic for "Is Marriage Sacred?"

"The Lighted Lamp" with Edward Arnold and Anna Mae Walthall, is the February 13 Black Cat. "All in a Day" splits the reel with Alaskan scenic on February 14. On February 17, "Ashes on the Hearthstone" is the "Is Marriage Sacred?" offering.

Bryant Washburn, who has just finished "Skinner's Dress Suit," a feature taken from The Saturday Evening Post, will appear in "The Four Cent Courtship" the Black Cat for February 20. Canimated Nooz No. 25 and Alaskan scenic follow on February 21. "The Extravagant Bride" on February 24 is the title of the "Is Marriage Sacred?" offering.

Russian Ballet in World Picture

"The Dancer's Peril" is the name of a new World Picture Brady-made, in which Alice Brady is the star. This play was formerly called "The Snow Bird," and the title was changed to avoid conflict, another photo-play having worn the same name.

The story of "The Dancer's Peril" is Russian, and the heroine is the premiere in the Royal Opera ballet. Her mother also was a dancer who became involved with a Grand Duke and was hustled out of the Czar's domain. In Paris she became a mother, and the role played by Miss Brady is the offspring whose life is closely watched by the Emperor's spies.

In the picture play the entire ballet "Scheherazade" is introduced, with Miss Brady and Alexis Kosloff as the principals, supported by 100 others.

This bizarre and fascinating dance is only one of the few high lights in World's "The Dancer's Peril." Miss Brady took a course of lessons in Russian dancing to prepare herself for this difficult role.

You can see with half an eye or less that World's "The Dancer's Peril" is a very unusual production.

This proverbial sea of faces was at the fourth annual dinner party and dance given by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company to its employes on January 13 at Reisenweber's in New York. The hosts were Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, R. H. Cochrane, vice-president, P. A. Powers, treasurer, Joe Brandt, general manager, and the directors of the company.

UNIVERSAL'S ANNUAL BALL

One Thousand Employes of New York Office Dine and Dance, with Laemmle and Officers as Hosts

"When good fellows get together," they enjoy themselves in the same spirit as the thousand Universal employes who attended a supper and dance in New York, January 13, as Reisenweber's, but it is quite doubtful if good fellows ever enjoy themselves more. With President Carl Laemmle doing his best as host—which is uncommonly good—and the other big men and officers of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company supporting him as personal hosts, the entertainment went ahead without one moment of slow action.

It was the fourth annual ball given by Universal for its New York staff. The large ballroom was decorated in the Universal colors. The merry-making had a flavor all its own, like the three annual occasions of other years. Universal employes know this flavor, because it is a sort of enthusiasm that grips them, like the screen folk in the company's films.

Vice-president R. H. Cochrane, Treasurer P. A. Powers, General Manager Joe Brandt, and the company's directors were "right on the job" as hosts.

A cabaret feature, an orchestra, and dancing were the entertainment features.

Special Edisons on Market

Exhibitors who wish to take advantage of the advertising value of the name and reputation of Edison productions, by showing a series of five-reel pictures from the Edison studios, now are in a position to do so. During the past few months, five superb dramas have been placed on the market by Edison through the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service and a sixth will be released in February. Productions of unusual merit, they offer exhibitors a notable opportunity to win patronage by booking them in a series and showing one Edison feature a week for six weeks or two pictures a week for a term of three weeks.

The five Edison productions now available are as follows: "The Heart of the Hills," with Conway Tearle and Mabel Trunnelle; "A Message to Garcia," with Mabel Trunnelle and Robert Conness; "The Cossack Whip," with Viola Dana; "The Master Passion," with Mabel Trunnelle and Robert Conness, and "The Last Sentence," with Marc McDermott and Miriam Nesbitt. The coming release is "The Royal Pauper," featuring Francine Larrimore, the petite Broadway star. All of these pictures are being released through the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service and the success of those already placed on the market affords the best kind of guarantee of their merit.

Selig Selling "Garden of Allah"

Although two other motion picture trade journals published stories to the contrary, William L. Selig is himself marketing his last big feature, "The Garden of Allah." MOTOGRAPHY is the only magazine that did not print the erroneous stories first circulated about the sale of the feature by Selig.

"The Garden of Allah," from the famous story by Robert Hichens, is being marketed on the state rights plan by Selig. "The Garden of Allah" features the distinguished actress, Helen Ware, who is supported by an exceptional company of players including Thomas Santschi, Eugenie Besserer, James Bradbury, Al W. Filson, Will Machin and others. Colin Campbell, the well known director, who directed the successful Selig productions, "The Spoilers," "The Ne'er-Do-Well," "The Crisis," etc., claims that "The Garden of Allah" is his best effort.

The story of "The Garden of Allah" in brief, carries passionate love interest and final sacrifice and renunciation. Helen Ware, it is claimed, has one of the greatest emotional roles in her wonderful career as an actress while Thomas Santschi is exceptionally good in the role of "Boris Androvsky."

Those who have seen "The Garden of Allah" pronounce the production the most wonderful that Selig has presented to date. This is saying a great deal when the Selig special features of the past, such as "The Spoilers" and "The Crisis," are taken into consideration.

State rights buyers should communicate with William N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Company, 58 East Washington street, Chicago, with regard to this wonderful picture.

ELSIE FERGUSON IN FILM

Producer of Geraldine Farrar Feature Pictures Secures Signature of Stage Favorite for Studio Engagement

As it has happened before to reluctant stage favorites, it has happened to Elsie Ferguson. She is to act before the camera for the Cardinal Film Corporation, which is the company that has Geraldine Farrar under contract for exclusive film productions.

Miss Ferguson is appearing in "Shirley Kaye," now playing at the Hudson Theater, in New York. At the conclusion of her present engagement she will begin her contract at the Cardinal studios, probably next July.

Possessing as she does that charm which ever earns the public's admiration in a star, she has long been sought by moving picture producers, who, until now, have been unable to persuade her to leave the stage for the studio. The salary offered her by the Cardinal Film Corporation is said to be between $300,000 and $350,000 a year for three years.

In private life Miss Ferguson is Mrs. Thomas B. Clarke. She was married last June and is well known in society as well as on the stage.

Walthall Company in the South

Henry B. Walthall and his company are now in Baton Rouge, Louisiana, being filmed in the preliminary scenes of his next Essanay feature, "Burning the Candle."

It is, perhaps, the first time that this locality has ever been chosen for film work. Director Harry Beaumont, who is producing the feature, reports that the little city furnishes excellent material for typically southern exteriors. Incidentally the town, mayor, police chief and leading citizens, turned out en masse to welcome the noted actor and his photoplayers.

"Burning the Candle" will present a powerful lesson on the liquor traffic. The story offers an unlimited field for Mr. Walthall's emotional talent. Mary Charleson, who won high praise in support of Mr. Walthall in former productions, is again being filmed as his leading woman in "Burning the Candle."

This feature will be released through the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service on March 18.

"Little Shoes" was the last Walthall release through the Keys service. The date was January 15. In this feature—a drama of child love, written by Eleanor M. Ingram—Mr. Walthall is declared by critics and exhibitors to have rendered an excellent portrayal of the great lover. Reports from Keys headquarters are that "Little Shoes" is making a record run.

Henry B. Walthall, the powerful Essanay actor, in his latest play, "Little Shoes."

Third "Shorty Adventure" Ready

Shorty Hamilton in the third of the Mutual "Featurettes" released under the general title of "Adventures of Shorty Hamilton," is the central figure in a real western, bucking broncho cattle branding "round-up" and later appears as the best all-around athlete in college who can make the football team and gain all kinds of honors on the gridiron but wins nothing but dishonor in the class room.

There's some good "college stuff" in "Shorty Goes to College."

To celebrate the end of the "round-up" a big dance is given at the Arrowhead Ranch and various and intricate are the dances executed by the cowboys and their sweethearts, the scenes giving a most realistic idea of the life of the plainsmen.

New Alice Brady Play

The next Brady-Made World picture is "The Hungry Heart," with Alice Brady as its star. The name of this piece has been changed from "Frou Frou," and one of the motion picture columns in the daily papers desires to know why. The explanation is very simple. When "Frou Frou" was first produced upon the speaking stage in New York, a very large proportion of spectators always referred to it as "Frow Frow," as in how. In spite of this, the play, during its many years of life, has been an unfailing and exceedingly large success and its transfer to the screen is expected to arouse quite uncommon interest.

League Meets in Rialto Theater

The Photoplay League, a national organization formed by influential people for the purpose of the betterment of film plays, held its last meeting at the Rialto Theater in New York, upon the invitation of Managing Director S. L. Rothapfel.

The meeting was in the nature of an exhibition showing the "development and psychology of motion pictures," with a description by Mr. Rothapfel.

Local branches of the League are to be formed in every important city. These are to recommend to its members the best film plays that are available.

Ethel Clayton's next World picture Brady-Made bears the title "The House Cat," which is one way of describing a married woman of extremely complaisant demeanor when the other corners of the eternal triangle make their attitude palpable to every observer.

Newspaper Series Unusual

"The White Trail," fourth of the Edith Sessions Tupper newspaper dramas produced by the Niagara Film Studios and issued by the Mutual Film Corporation under the general title "Perils of Our Girl Reporters," is one of the most exciting of the fifteen contained in the series.

In this play "Rhea Fernel," who is the clever young actress Helen Greene, is assigned to secure by any means in her power, the secret key to a Mexican revolutionary code through the medium of which ammunition and supplies are being sent into Mexico for the use of certain revolutionary bands.

They often sit up on the edge of their seats during "The Perils of Our Girl Reporters."

In a reception at which the chief of the revolutionary propaganda was host, Miss Fernel manages to secure possession of the much sought key by the simple device of setting fire to a wastebasket full of discarded papers and thus directing attention in another way until she had rifled the drawer containing the much desired document.

The principal recommendation of Miss Greene's acting in this cleverly constructed play is its naturalness. The young woman has studied newspaper methods and the behavior of newspaper women to excellent effect and in her representation of the girl reporter she is convincing.

In the opening of the drama when Miss Fernel receives her assignment from the managing editor of the great metropolitan daily which has employed her, the newspaper office is absolutely true to type for the simple reason that it is actually a metropolitan newspaper office, that the big fellow on the main desk is a famous newspaper editor and that the reporters seen about the office at their work are really and truly newspaper men engaged in their tasks.

O'Donnell Joins Arrow

W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, has retained E. J. O'Donnell, formerly with Sherman-Elliott, to handle the sales exploitation of "The Deemster," by Hall Caine, and other superlative productions which will be state righted.

Mr. O'Donnell is very well known in the state rights field, and comes thoroughly equipped to launch an intensive sales campaign on "The Deemster."

In an interview Mr. O'Donnell said:

In all my experience in the picture business I have never seen a production which held me so, or contained more punches than the Arrow Film Corporation's publication of "The Deemster," by Hall Caine. I was permitted to view this picture with several prominent state rights buyers, and after the screening I came to the conclusion that Dr. Shallenberger certainly had a winner. I was so enthused that when an offer was made to me by Dr. Shallenberger I promptly accepted it.

I consider "The Deemster" the only picture produced within the last year which does not depend upon the slaughter of millions, battle scenes or the salacious. In fact the Caine story abounds with situations and holds its audiences from beginning to end on its dramatic appeal alone.

Films Create World-Sympathy

By William Fox

President Fox Film Corporation.

Man-made strips of celluloid will be as much as iron rails and peace congresses ever can be, a potent medium for spreading the gospel of an international spirit. To me, the film always remains a wonderful thing. It is at once the most open and yet the most subtle force of which I know, working to create a great world-sympathy—to teach the one-half how the other lives. Take the productions of Fox Film Corporation, for example. The pictureplay which you see in the Academy of Music in New York City, is shown in a large share of the 1,200 photoplay houses in the metropolis and the 13,000 silent drama theaters in this country, from Gulf to Great Lakes, from Portland, Maine, to Portland, Oregon.

It is projected in all climes, in places from Nome, Alaska, to islands below the equator, where the sky is always violet and there are more parrots and monkeys than human beings. The film's "audience," if you will permit the word, is a cosmopolitan clientele of millions. This is not a rhetorical flourish. It is literally true.

The feature most worth remarking about the cinema is its universality. Baseball has been dethroned as the king of American pastimes. Picture-going is the world amusement. It is the dominant international recreation. The appeal of the motion picture is the appeal transcendent, because it overleaps all conditions and rides down the barrier of language, almost insuperable to the art of the stage. Pantomimic genius in the photoplay speaks to the mind through the eye, not the tongue.

The film is the real Esperanto.

"Adventures of Buffalo Bill"

That the "Adventures of Buffalo Bill," Essanay's feature picturizing the life of the late Col. William F. Cody, is one of real adventure films on the market, was the verdict of the Adventure Club of Chicago following a private showing of the picture.

The Adventure Club is an organization composed of prominent Chicagoans who have gained fame through thrilling experiences in various parts of the world.

"Adventures of Buffalo Bill" was released as a special on January 29 through the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service. Col. Cody is seen as the hero of the photodrama, having posed for the camera only a short time before his death.

Two representatives of the Harper Film Corporation have left New York for the purpose of exploiting the Thomas H. Ince spectacle, "Civilization," in Japan, China and the adjacent countries.

FOX ANNUAL FEATURE

"The Honor System," Release of February 6, Depicting American Contemporary Life, Is 10-Reeler of 1917

William Fox will inaugurate an annual motion picture event patterned on the lines of the Drury Lane productions in London. These famous productions, it will be remembered, enlisted the most popular playwrights, directors and actors before the London public and were produced regardless of expense. They were looked forward to by all theater-goers as red letter events. In brief, one big spectacular picture of tremendous cost and great dramatic wealth will be produced annually by Mr. Fox, on a theme close to the American people. For 1917 the production will be "The Honor System." It will be shown at the Lyric Theater, New York, beginning February 6.

The twenty-five big sensational scenes in this film include:

A Villista raid on an American border town.
The mining engineer's tragic death in the raid.
The children's lucky escape from the Mexican bandits.
The fight in the Arizona dance hall.
The unpremediated killing of "Three-fingered Louis" by Joe Stanton, the hero.
The court room scene of Joe's trial for murder.
The scene in the great eating hall at Yuma.
The self inflicted death of Frank.
The rebellion of Joe's colleagues and the hold-up of the old warden.
Joe's self surrender after the rebellion.
The snake den or black hole into which he was thrown.
The meeting of Governor Hunt and Joe Stanton.
This historic session of the Arizona legislature when conditions were reformed.
The scenes in the new state institution.
Joe Stanton's successful establishment of the first wireless service to Japan.
The fight in a Los Angeles underworld resort when two bands of criminals met.
The raid by the police.
The killing of the old warden by one of his ex-convicts.
Joe Stanton's battle on the roof of a moving freight train with a member of the old gang.
Joe's fall from the train.
Joe Stanton's return, by means of which the honor system was saved.
Joe's pardon by the state authorities.
The final surprises and the triumph of Joe and his sweetheart, Edith.

The sextet of principals who are seen in this Fox picture include George Walsh, the brother of R. A. Walsh, who staged the multiple reeler, and a well known star on the regular Fox program; Miriam Cooper, who wins chief feminine laurels as "The Little Lady of the Flowers"; Gladys Brockwell, the woman of the mobile features, another Fox luminary, who plays the dance-hall girl; James Marcus, whose impersonation of Governor Hunt of Arizona is a remarkable bit of character work, and William Fox, the producer, himself.

R. A. Walsh, the director, won nation-wide recognition for his "Carmen." His last production preceding "The Honor System" was "Blue Blood and Red," and "The Serpent," in which his brother starred.

New Selznick-Young Picture

With "The Common Law" and "The Foolish Virgin" already showing to capacity audiences in all the important motion picture theaters of the country, the interest of Clara Kimball Young's millions of admirers now centers in her third Selznick-Pictures production, soon to be released. This is an adaptation of "The Price She Paid," by the late David Graham Phillips, who ranks among the greatest of American authors.

In "The Price She Paid" Miss Young will be seen in a role that will delight her followers. She plays a society girl who marries for millions and learns to repent at leisure. This role in the story affords Miss Young an opportunity to wear a wonderful assortment of gowns and other feminine trappings of the latest mode and the luxurious settings reign from Fifth avenue to Palm Beach.

The story of "The Price She Paid" revolves around the mental and spiritual development of Mildred Gower, who, through the impractical methods of her parents, is forced to face life armed with only one weapon—her sex.

Showing of "Patria"

Intense interest in "Patria," the International serial romance of society and preparedness starring Mrs. Vernon Castle and released by Pathe, was shown at the special projection given at the Palace Theater, last week, for all the employes of the Keith Theaters and many prominent representatives of the United Booking Offices.

Among those who attended the performance were A. Paul Keith, president and half owner of the Keith Circuit; Martin Beck, head of the Orpheum Circuit; E. F. Albee, general manager and half owner of the Keith Circuit, and Michael Shea, owner of the Shea theaters in Buffalo and Toronto. The full Palace orchestra, under the direction of Fred Daab, furnished the incidental music.

Cataract Theater Gets Vitagraph

A. C. Hayman, manager of the Cataract Theater, Niagara Falls, N. Y., has signed a contract for Vitagraph service with F. F. Hartich, branch manager of the Syracuse exchange of Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. To quote, briefly, from Mr. Hayman's letter to Walter W. Irwin, general manager of Vitagraph-V. L. S. E.:

"I have just entered into an extensive contract with your company for a three-day service on your Greater Vitagraph releases; also for a three-day service on your serial, 'The Secret Kingdom'."

The Cataract Theater has a seating capacity of 1,850 and is reported the largest house in Niagara Falls. Its stage is vast enough for a huge operatic production. Mr. Hayman laughingly points to the fact that there are twenty splendidly equipped dressing-rooms back-stage in the Cataract, "but I never yet have used one for our picture people."

With the contract for Vitagraph pictures Mr. Hayman will devote his house entirely to the exhibition of motion pictures.

SHERRILL RETURNS EAST

President of Art Dramas Reports Their Exchanges Are Doing Excellent Business in Middle West

William L. Sherrill, president of Art Dramas, Inc., returned east lately from a business trip to Chicago and other points of the middle west. During the trip he investigated film conditions generally, and more particularly the business of the Art Dramas exchanges. He reports a gratifying volume of bookings on Art Dramas throughout the territory and states that the industry seemed to be flourishing, from the exhibiting viewpoint.

Speaking of his trip, Mr. Sherrill said:

The industy seems to be in a healthy state throughout the middle West. Exhibitors are making money and the exchanges are, of course, doing the same. Our own branch in Chicago, the Art Dramas Service, is doing a surprisingly large amount of business. In fact, considering that we have only released five or six pictures, the bookings that Mr. Proctor, the general manager of that office, has secured is little less than remarkable. I am more than ever convinced that the basic principles underlying our method of production and distribution are correct. Exhibitors all over the country are booking Art Dramas, and invariably report good business with them.

Our productions are being shown in the larger circuits in the West, and throughout the country. In New York City, the William Fox, Marcus Loew, B. S. Moss, and B. F. Keith circuits are all showing Art Dramas. In Chicago, the Alfred Hamburger Theater Enterprises, Lubliner and Trinz, Amalgamated Theater Corporation, Balaban and Katz, Hopkinson Amusement Company, and exhibiting organizations of like caliber are showing Art Dramas. When critical exhibitors like these, whose chains of theaters control extended bookings, and who, having first choice of all the films produced, unanimously choose Art Dramas for their houses, there is only one inference to be drawn—our pictures fill a real want in the industry.

Moss Feature to Travel

Encouraged by the success of the first presentation of "The Girl Who Doesn't Know," a recent release by B. S. Moss, Walter Greene, head of the Artcraft Company, who bought the territory adjacent to New York, is planning to route the picture as a traveling organization, like D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," and several other feature spectacles that have traveled in competition with regular legitimate attractions.

This is the first time so far as recorded that a feature intended for regular booking has warranted exploitation as that expended on pictures of greater pre-created interest, and the experiment is based on the tremendous appeal of the picture when first shown in the metropolitan district.

With few exceptions the state rights for "The Girl Who Doesn't Know" have been sold for every state in the union, and with this picture out of the way, Moss is already at work on what he expects to be the biggest picture he has so far made.

Notable Fox Productions on Way

Two announcements of unusual interest are made by William Fox this week: The first is the presentation of his big ten-reel "cinemelodrama," "The Honor System," at the Lyric Theater, New York City, on February 6; the second is the release of "The Scarlet Letter," a great picturization of the greatest of all American novels, on February 12.

"The Honor System" incidentally gave Mr. Fox another opportunity to coin a new word. "Photoplay" was also his contribution to the dictionary. Mr. Fox hit upon "cinemelodrama" as an exact descriptive term for his special moving picture melodrama.

"The Scarlet Letter" and "The Darling of Paris" (which is based on Hugo's "The Hunchback of Notre Dame") are merely the first two of a series of eleven famous novels which William Fox will do in the cinemas during the coming months.

The directors for these book-photodramatizations have all been chosen and, with two exceptions, the star and his or her supporting player have been determined upon.

A few of the novels screened by Fox Film Corporation are: "The Nigger," "The Bondman," "Wormwood," "Kreutzer Sonata," "Under Two Flags," "East Lynne," "Children of the Ghetto," and "The Clemenceau Case."

Another feat being performed in the Fox studios is the formation of a baseball team among the actresses in the Pacific Coast plant by Gladys Brockwell. A challenge will be issued by Miss Brockwell's nine to the male aggregation under the direction of George Walsh.

In Mr. Fox's eastern studios, Virginia Pearson has completed another subject under the direction of James Vincent. Walter Law, Irving Cummings, Calla Dillatorre, and Jane and Katherine Lee.

Valeska Suratt's recently finished feature, "The New York Peacock," will be the next Fox release. Harry Hilliard plays opposite the Empress of Fashion.

Exhibitor-Exchange Organization

The Montreal motion picture exhibitors and exchange managers held a meeting a short time ago in the green room of the Hotel Bouillon.

M. R. Nutting, by the request of several prominent business men of Montreal and vicinity, called this meeting with the object of organizing a closer understanding and be in a better position to fight any unfair legislative measures that might be directed against the business in the future.

Mr. Nutting opened the meeting with a short address, in which he pointed out the necessity of organization to combat with the several outstanding evils of business. Among other things he mentioned that his judgment had been questioned for bringing exhibitors and exchange managers both to the meeting. However, Mr. Nutting felt that a much stronger organization could be formed by co-operation.

Mae Marsh, the Goldwyn Pictures star, has gone to Palm Beach for a short vacation.

PICKFORD SUBJECT GOES BIG

Reports on "The Pride of the Clan" Disclose Record Crowds—Scottish Societies Co-operate with Exhibitors

Reports received at the headquarters of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation in New York indicate that the new Mary Pickford picture, "The Pride of the Clan," is establishing new records for box-office receipts and attendance throughout the country. Letters and telegrams from exhibitors in most of the large cities where this production is just concluding its first-run bookings readily corroborate the general feeling that it is undoubtedly the best Mary Pickford production ever presented to the public.

In Boston "The Pride of the Clan" scored the greatest hit ever witnessed in connection with the presentation of a motion picture there. At the Modern Theater, even between the hours of four and seven when other houses were only half filled, the picture played to capacity and during the evening performances as many people were turned away each night as were admitted. It is reported that never in the history of motion pictures in Boston has a screen subject attracted such a steady line of automobiles as has been evident during the showing of the second Mary Pickford-Artcraft offering at the Modern.

Great success in the presentation of "Scot Nights," as suggested in "The Pride of the Clan" press books distributed to exhibitors by the Artcraft Publicity Department is also being reported throughout the country. In the press books for this production there appears a list of every Scottish society in the country and as a result of a circularization of these societies from the Artcraft publicity headquarters many exhibitors have gotten together with the various secretaries of these clubs on special nights in their honor. A letter from M. J. C. Kornblum of the Rowland and Clark Theaters, Pittsburgh, to Pete Schmid, the Artcraft publicity representative, reads in part: "Mr. Reid, whose name you gave me, was very cordial, he gave me a mailing list of about 300 names of one clan and put me in touch with several others who announced the production at the regular clan meetings. We have engaged three bag pipers for this special occasion and the writer intends having a one jitney parade consisting of himself with the pipers and one much suffering Henry. We have every reason to believe that this will probably be the largest night in the history of the theater and desire to thank you sincerely for the idea and the name of Mr. Reid." Other theaters have reported similar co-operation on the part of Scottish societies.

Louise Glaum in Ince Play

Louise Glaum will soon be presented upon the Triangle program by Thomas H. Ince in a vivid drama of French life. Ever since the pronounced hits she registered in "The Wolf Woman" and "Somewhere in France," requests for more Glaum features have poured into the studios at Inceville from many exhibitors.

Miss Glaum plays the part of a beautiful Parisian who has been the victim of an unfortunate love affair. Embittered against mankind in general, and the male element in particular, she has given up all hope of real happiness, when an unexpected chain of events suddenly involves her in the one big genuine romance of her life. Her whole viewpoint is changed, and the blase and cynical "woman of experience" finds herself very much in love with a young Frenchman of character and position.

Moss Company in Florida

B. S. Moss has dispatched a film company to St. Augustine, Florida, where it will enact the first scenes of a forthcoming Moss release, entitled "In the Hands of the Law," the theme of which is based on circumstantial evidence. The troupe was in charge of Ben Goetz.

Heading the company which comprised twenty-seven players, is Lois Meredith, former star of Metro, Mutual and Pathe films. Miss Meredith, who is a graduate of the legitimate stage, now occupies a first rank among film favorites. Eugene Strong will play the role opposite to Miss Meredith.

It has been announced that it will require about three or four weeks to complete the scenes for which Mr. Moss' company journeyed southward. The balance of the picture will be made in the Erbograph Studio in New York.

Bushman and Bayne at Buffalo Ball

Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne accepted an invitation to be guests of honor at the annual ball of the Buffalo Screen Club to be given in that city on the evening of January 29. The annual ball of this club is always regarded as an event of importance in the motion picture world, and C. A. Taylor, of the Metro exchange in Buffalo, who is general chairman this year, plans to make the affair a banner one.

Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne have been asked to lead the grand march. Elmwood Music Hall, where the ball will be held, is to be transformed into a Japanese garden with beautifully decorated boxes. One of the features will be the staging of a motion picture play. A director, cameraman, special lights, settings and other paraphernalia will be supplied, and a number of stars will take part.

Lesser Gets "Garden of Allah"

Sol L. Lesser, president of the All Star Features Distributors, Inc., of San Francisco, has just purchased the California, Arizona, and Nevada rights to Selig's latest big production, "The Garden of Allah," featuring Tom Santchi and Helen Ware.

Mr. Lesser intends exploiting "The Garden of Allah" in a high class manner and it will be given an extended first run engagement in San Francisco at advanced prices, and then handled as a road attraction throughout the territory.

Mr. Lesser is now handling "Civilization" and "War Brides," also all of the Selznick releases for the same territory.

Forman Re-Engaged by Lasky

Tom Forman, popular juvenile and leading man, has renewed his contract with the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company in the productions of which he has been appearing for some time. Mr. Forman's new contract will insure his appearance in Paramount Pictures for a long time to come.

of unraveling it, the story ends with the explanation that this is the plot a young writer has evolved for her first story and that she is undecided about the conclusion. "What would you do?"

This sort of an ending is usually rather dangerous because some patrons will be disappointed that the interest which is aroused is not satisfied, but the large number will appreciate the humor of the situation. The story is well presented technically and well acted. Richard Travers, Ernest Maupain and Frances Benedict are well selected for the leading roles. Two excellent character interpretations which add to the story are those of the boarding-house keeper and of Ruth's chum, the stenographer, of which the players' names are not given on the synopsis sheet.

The Story: Ruth Walton goes to the city to work. She loses her position and considers returning to her small-town home to marry the young man who is in love with her. A friend of hers, another stenographer, gets her a position in the office of Roger Blakely. Blakely wins the girl's confidence, in spite of the warnings of the other girl, and leads her astray. Then Blakely runs away and Ruth goes back to her home and marries her former suitor. Some time later her husband brings home a man formerly his good friend. The man is Roger Blakely. At the meeting of Ruth and Blakely, the plot ends. The young writer is shown reading her manuscript to her friends. The film ends with the question which forms the title.

"Tillie Wakes Up"

World Film Five-Reel Slapstick Features Marie Dressler. Reviewed by George W. Graves

MARIE DRESSLER, the inimitable comedienne, is at the vortex of this whirlpool of fun and frolic. She is ably supported by Johnny Hines. Most of the action transpires at Coney Island, the various fun-making devices being all that is needed to provide a base for some highly humorous stunts, acrobatic and otherwise. "Tillie" samples 'em all, from "The Human Pool Table" to the "Witching Waves." Her excruciatingly funny expressions and mannerisms, together with her reckless daring, fill the five reels with the best kind of slap-stick—it is really modified slapstick—and will be sure to get the laughs out of your audience.

The story is only the barest kind of framework—it just provides us with Tillie's excuse for going to Coney with a neighbor and arranges for the arrival of the neighbor's wife and Tillie's henpecked husband at the psychological moment in the day's doings—but it is all of sufficient in this case. It gives "Tillie" a chance to get started on her hilarious spree and a reason for the wild celebration's coming to an end. Harry Davenport's intelligent direction deserves especial praise.

"Tillie Wakes Up" ought to go well anywhere. It will please the old folks and the young people of all classes. It will either remind them all of their trip to Coney Island or put them in keen anticipation of it.

"The Happiness of Three Women"

Morosco-Paramount Photoplay Features Myrtle Stedman. Reviewed by Geo. W. Graves

IN this production of Oliver Morosco's we have House Peters cast as a lawyer who saves three women from a hard predicament. The story, by Albert Payson Terhune, works up some situations of pretty good power and serves to keep one quite interested at different turns in this evolution, although it does not grip all through. As actually unfolded on the celluloid it makes a picture of only lukewarm interest and conviction. The acting of House Peters, a thoroughly polished star, Myrtle Stedman, and the cast, including L. W. Steers, Daisy Robinson, Wm. Hutchinson, Lucille Ward and Milton Brown, does much to give impetus to the spectator's emotions, and the piece is directed very ably, many novel scenic effects being introduced. Among them is a thunder storm at night, with lightning striking a tree and felling it. The mechanical direction and artistic choice of exteriors, puts a veneer of "class" over the whole.

"The Happiness of Three Women" does not measure up at all with the few House Peters pictures we have seen, and we think it does not mark a very auspicious return of Mr. Peters to the Paramount Program. To the three-nights-a-week, or more, patron, who has grown perhaps unduly fastidious in his tastes, this will not appeal very strongly. It doesn't contain very much to lift it out of the "just ordinary" production. House Peters, however, as the exhibitor needs to remember, is a very big drawing card, as is Myrtle Stedman.

Constance Barr has a very jealous husband. One day she and Billy Craig, a former sweetheart, now in love with Myrtle Gale, take an auto ride. The new car behaves very unseemly, and the two, lost, are obliged to stay out most of the night. They finally stop at an inn for something warm, afterward learning that the place is a notorious road house. They are seen coming from this place by Fletcher, a bank cashier who is later accused of a robbery on this very night. The night watchman is guilty, but his fabrications about being overpowered by Fletcher seem to take with the police, who do not consider the fact that the cashier is a puny man, while he is a giant in proportion.

Craig is appealed to by Mrs. Fletcher, and he finally gives her his word that he will do all in his power to save her husband. He realizes that if he proves an alibi for the cashier, he must expose Constance, and stand a fine chance of losing his own sweetheart. Constance notices an inconsistency in the night watchman's story, and this leads to an examination of him by Craig, who obtains a confession. So the lives of the three women are left unchanged in spite of the proximity of danger.

"The Ghost Ship"

Episode Seven of Vitagraph's "The Secret Kingdom" Released February 5. Reviewed by Geo. W. Graves

IN the seventh episode of this serial by Louis Joseph Vance, the story's locale shifts to the high seas. Count Ramon, seeing the face of Phillip (whom he thought he killed) in the porthole of his cabin is seized with terror, and Phillip, because of the delight it gives him, allows the Count to think he is a ghost. Finally conditions become too strained aboard ship, and as a climax to the exciting developments of this episode there is a double escape—Phillip and Princess Julia making their get-away by lifeboat and the almost crazy Ramon, whom the sailors regard with superstitious fear, being set adrift with Mme. Savatz to prevent a serious mutiny. So at the end of this chapter there are two sets of refugees afloat on the billows, and what member of the audience will not be all agog to see the next episode and find out what fate awaits the two parties.

The people who have followed the serial as far as this will probably be wishing 'way down deep in their hearts that a sword-fish will try to carve his initials on the bottom of the conspirators' dory and get a little reckless in doing so, but then, on second thought, if the villains are to become fish food in this episode where will the excitement come from in the subsequent chapters? And there are eight yet to come. And then, on another second thought, Dorothy Kelly, the winsome star who plays the part of Mme. Savatz, cannot be plucked from the cast in any such unceremonious way without a great protest from all over the land.

"The Ghost Ship" is sufficiently suspenseful and has the proper serial ingredients generally to make it satisfy. The stars, Dorothy Kelly and Charles Richman (and the names of these players, by the way, are invaluable in advertising) preserve a uniform good quality of portrayal, and the direction, though it could be better, will satisfy what the people demand.

"Betty to the Rescue"

Lasky Five-Part Drama Features Fannie Ward. Reiewed by George W. Graves

FANNIE WARD'S charming personality is set off to advantage in this film, the story for which comes from the pens of Beatrice C. DeMille and Leighton Osmun. She is seen in moments of exuberant girlish lightheartedness and moments of girlish despair; exhibiting beautiful creations of the dressmaker with all the style of a queen, and splashing about barefooted in the muddy irrigation ducts of California orange groves with all the abandon of childhood. In that the picture provides for keeping the star's fascinations in prominence it will meet fully the demands of a great host of people, but by reason of a story slightly removed from conviction it will present a limited entertainment value to the minds of others who require their moving-pictorial repast well seasoned with the salt of probability. The discovery of a rich vein of gold practically on the wall surface of an abandoned mine, where it must have been right under the noses of the discouraged workers, is one of the unsalted bits.

But this picture has more conviction by far than many which have gone forth to success, and since its acting and production are of a good standard and the star is so utterly alluring, we foresee a general satisfaction with the offering. In support of Miss Ward are Jack Dean, Lillian Leighton, James Neill, Charles West and Ted Duncan.

The story tells of a mine believed to be barren of the precious metal by all but a certain mining expert, James Fleming. He tries to force the love of Betty, who owns the mine, but the latter's value is revealed before Fleming's matrimonial plans are consummated, and is pecuniary motives laid bare, he is spurned by the girl, who marries the man that has constantly sacrificed himself for her happiness.

The approach to the final "clutch" scene of this picture is very amusing, and sets forth all of Fannie Ward's witcheries. Her lover, when she tells him she wants him for a husband, stolidly refuses to assent because of the great gulf her money has created between them. She tells him that if he doesn't she will go to the dogs, and other things equally convincing, and as the scene fades out John is still shaking his head, but his lips, unable to disobey "that impulse," and having gradually come closer and closer, are touching hers, leaving both of their heads shaking in a ludicrous manner.

"The government is sending out frost warnings!"

"The Princess of Patches"

Five-Reel Feature Released Through K. E. S. E. on January 22. Reviewed by L. J. Neiss

THIS production is exceptionally good. The efficient manner in which Director Al Green handled the story is to be commended. The plot is quite probable, and the action runs smoothly with possibly one exception. This single exception, however, is irrelevant and does not depreciate the value of the picture. The picture, I believe, will appeal to almost anyone. Its strongest appeal, however, will be to romantic young women, and the children will undoubtedly enjoy the entirely original capers in which the Princess of Patches indulges. Violet De Biccari and Vivian Reed who both appear as Princess Patches, the former appearing in the earlier scenes, and the latter appearing in the later ones, are so strikingly alike that it is hardly possible to tell them apart. Charles Le Moyne renders an excellent impersonation of Judas. Jack Merry, which role is played by Burke Wilbur, who is slight and not very tall, is not quite the type of hero generally found popular. Fortunately his part in the picture is not important, nor does he appear very often.

The Story: Princess Patches lives with her foster mother, Lisa Biggs, into whose care she was placed by Judas, a former overseer of her father's plantation, after mysteriously disappearing from her parents while still a baby. Her mother dies from grief and her father is found murdered in a lonely house boat. His will mentions his daughter Selma as his sole heir to his estate, provided she is found within twenty years after his death. If, at the expiration of this period she has not been found, the entire estate is to be turned over to Lee and Juliet Silverton, his nephew and niece.

At the time of her abduction, Selma Silverton wore a gold chain and locket, the latter containing a photograph of her mother.

A few years later, Patches sees Judas give Liza Biggs a necklace for safe keeping and hears him tell Liza that it contains a picture of Patches' mother. At the first opportunity she attains possession of it and carries it around with her.

One day, while in swimming, Patches leaves her clothes on the shore. Waggles, an exalted member of the "Sons of Rest" happens along and sees the girl's clothes, but does not see her in bathing. After going through the clothes, he finds the necklace and puts it into his own pocket, and evidently assuming that the owner of the clothes went in bathing and drowned, gathers them together and starts toward the nearest plantation. Enroute, he meets Jack Merry, the son of a northern cotton buyer who is looking over the plantation with Colonel Robert Silverton and Juliet. Jack Merry is the only one who seems to take any stock in Waggles' story about finding the clothes on the shore of the river. Right at this point is one of the most amusing scenes of the entire picture. Patches is seen coming down the road circumferenced by a barrel. The clothes are returned to her.

Patches and Waggles become quite particular friends as well as do Patches and Colonel Silverton. As time passes the Colonel decides to take Patches into his home and educate her. One day after she has returned from college, Judas, hard pressed for funds, informs Lee Silverton that he has positive proof of the identity of Selma Silverton and tells that Selma Silverton is none other than the Princess of Patches. Lee gives Judas the money he demands, exacting a promise of continued secrecy as to the identity of Selma Silverton.

Twenty years have now passed since the death of Selma Silverton's father. Unless she is located by noon of the next day the estate will be turned over to Lee and Juliet. A series of incidents lead up to Selma's identity being revealed, through the allied efforts of Waggles who reappears to return the locket to the Princess of Patches. A delicate love scene has been woven into the story and it closes finding the Princess of Patches snugly enclosed in the fond embrace of Jack Merry.

"Her Right to Live"

Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature in Five Reels Released January 22. Reviewed by George W. Graves

ONE hardly knows where to start in commenting on this picture, for it doesn't leave one with a superabundance of good impressions. Whether or not the spectator is able to discern what is at the bottom of the trouble, he will agree with the man sitting next him that this offering is lacking an essential—perhaps two or three. Some wise people will say that the story has not been developed with a view to bringing out dramatic situations, and others just as wise will aver that the story in the first place was not screenable material. But it will be evident to everyone that the picture lacks class and conviction.

Peggy Hyland's name, for she has appeared to advantage in some splendid productions, is practically the only reliable advertising point the picture has. The star, and the three kiddies working with her (Bobby and Helen Connelly and Mildred Platz) form the center of attraction, the kids enacting some cute bits. Peggy Hyland does some interesting work, some emotional scenes coming her way, but the story doesn't make us feel it. Antonio Moreno is good, considering the possibilities of his part. Jack Ellis makes the regulation political boss, a type which nowadays is quite extinct. Others in the cast are John Robertson and Julia Swayne Gordon, the latter always giving a good performance.

Polly Biggs, a girl in her teens, is left an orphan, with two little sisters and a brother. For the sake of appearance Mayor Hoadley, the uncle, takes the children into his home, but he and his wife treat them so wretchedly that the children leave en masse on their own account for the poor house. Hoadley gets into a fight with Hawkins, a political boss who "has something on him," and kills him. The walking-stick belonging to John Oxmore, son of Hoadley's political adversary, has dealt the fatal blow, so John is arrested, not being able to prove, or even to say where he was at the time of the murder, since this will ruin Polly's reputation—the poorhouse having burned, Polly and the children had come to John's country cabin for refuge over night. The political adversaries of Oxmore, Sr., know that if his son is found guilty at trial he will lose the election, so they, having learned of the country lodge episode, lock the children up, so they cannot prove an alibi for John. But Polly escapes, arrives in court and frees young Oxmore. Strange to say, she cannot understand why he has hesitated to tell the truth. The story ends with the unscrupulous Hoadley's defeat and the marriage of Polly to Oxmore.

Two New Triangles

Two Triangles, "The Girl of the Timber Claims" and "Chicken Casey." Reviewed by George W. Graves

IN "The Girl of the Timber Claims" Constance Talmadge is seen in a role which creates only a fair amount of interest or sympathy. It is a kind of role very well known to pictureplay-goers, one in which a spunky, spirited girl fights against conditions that might strain a normally stout heart. It is not a part which delineates subtle character, and therefore the star has only a limited field for her talents, but it is certain that Miss Talmadge handles the part with a delightful zest and that her personality radiates to the audience.

The story, by Mary H. O'Connor, is scattered in its interest and is minus the elements of a strongly-knit, powerful plot. There are some little sub-developments which have power of themselves, but the whole is lacking in unity of plot. However, in that the picture is laid in most entrancing surroundings and has the outward veneer of "class," the weakness of the story may not so seriously affect its reception by audiences. For this exquisite deep-forest atmosphere, Paul Powell, the director, deserves credit. Artists will highly approve of some of the photographic effects in lights and shadows.

None of the members of the cast stand out with any particular brilliance. The best part of the picture is Constance Talmadge's portrayal, and it is true to a large extent that people who come to see a star are curiously oblivious to the shortcomings of the other features of the picture—unless, of course, they are glaringly prominent. The exhibitor can advertise the star, the people will come to see her, and a large percent of them, at least in this case, will come away satisfied.

"CHICKEN CASEY."

This story, by J. G. Hawks, deals with a deception practiced on an author by an actress, who finally convinces him that she is perfectly able to play the part of the heroine of his story—an interpretation he is convinced she is incapable of. He picks a girl from the slums—just the type he is looking for—and finally gives her a chance to play the part of "Rags," his heroine. Right after the curtain has gone down and the play has been pronounced a success, the author discovers that "Chicken Casey," his girl of the slums, is none other than the real actress. In the interval before the story comes to this climax, "Chicken Casey" and the author have had a strange episode at the latter's home. Some of the incidents transpiring during the night that circumstance forces the actress to spend at Hale's home take on a decided comedy lustre.

The best that we can say of the story is that it is pleasant to follow and that it makes good light entertainment. It smacks strongly of the improbable, has little suspense and real feeling, but the acting of Dorothy Dalton and Charles Gunn (although his part is slightly overdrawn) goes a great distance in giving the piece some color. Raymond B. West's direction is adequate. It is hard to state just what class this picture falls under. It is neither comedy nor serious drama, so we can perhaps consider it as a weak solution of both, with some true-to-human-nature scenes enacted by the stars.

"Bitter Truth"

Five-Reel William Fox Drama Features Virginia Pearson. Reviewed by George W. Graves

MARY MURILLO, the author of this piece, being a woman, has more right than a "mere man" to understand a woman's soul. At any rate she conceives of Anne, the heroine, a girl unjustly sentenced to prison, who, upon release, devotes her entire energy to wrecking vengeance on the judge that sentenced her. Having all her plans laid for the final blow, after a long term of gaining the confidence of Judge Marcus and those near him, Anne pauses long enough in her mad rush to analyze her thoughts —an analysis which reveals the fact that she loves the judge. She then double-crosses those who are in league with her, the judge's political adversaries, declares her love for the man, and returns to the slums from which she sprung, leaving the judge, about to be governor, alone with his wife.

From this story it would appear that love sometimes springs from the ashes of burnt-out hate, the latter quality swelling to a point of self-destruction. The action of this picture is very good and it also has a fair amount of suspense. Virginia Pearson appears to greater advantage in this film than she has in any we can recall, playing her part for all the dramatic substance there is in it. William H. Tooker is chief in her support. He has some very good scenes, but there are too many close-ups of Tooker, the method of their employment at times striking one in a funny way. Jack Hopkins and Alice May are good in their roles, the latter's being characteristic of many a woman of like position in actual life.

Kenean Buel directed in an intelligent way, not resorting to the "firework" spectacle, for effect. The biggest mere physical thrill that we can remember is a jump from a Hudson River steamboat into the water. He has filmed the picture in suitable surroundings.

"Bitter Truth" can be counted upon to please those who like a film with melodramatic appeal.

"The Crab"

Triangle-Kay Bee Drama in Five Parts. Reviewed by George W. Graves

THELMA SALTER, the tot who plays opposite Frank Keenan in this picture is a splendid little actress.

She is decidedly unaffected and most of the time is oblivious to the camera's presence. In the same degree that people like children, they like child players, provided they are natural, and this is what will go a great way in "putting over" this offering.

"The Crab" is a prolonged study in psychology; as for a plot, it is practically bereft of any. It shows how a little girl is sent to the country town in search of a relative who has long before disappeared.

She is about to be sent back by the poor townspeople when old Foster Borrum, an embittered cynic and "crab" in every sense of the name, takes her to his home out of sheer spite and contempt for his neighbors' wishes. The story finally shows how Borrum is defended by little Ivy when he is on trial because of a false accusation of brutality, and how the tiny spark of love generated from this show of childish affection gradually grows into a mighty flame in his heart, making the man over anew.

"Now, young lady, you're going to catch it."

There are many pleasing touches in the long depiction of the child's pure affection leavening this lump of ill-will towards men, but there is nothing to hold one for the space of five reels. It is unnecessary to say how this role fits Frank Keenan, since any one who has seen his previous characterizations can form a concept of it at once. Mr. Keenan looks so austere and formidable all through the piece that one is glad to see him smile at the finish. His portrayal attains to nothing more than it does conviction, and people will be very well satisfied with his end of the picture. To the director, Walter Edwards, goes a large share of credit for little Thelma Salter's success. Mr. Edwards provided very suitable atmosphere; in fact the whole picture has more surface attraction than it has dramatic intensity or sustained plot-interest.

"The Glory of Yolanda"

Five-Part Vitagraph Drama Features Anita Stewart. Reviewed by George W. Graves

THE "Yolanda" part of this is quite satisfying—Anita Stewart is never less than charming—but as much cannot be said of the "Glory" end of this production. The story is quite dramatic if one can force one's self to believe that a Russian peasant woman and her daughter could be as simple and totally unsophisticated as are Olga and her ambitious daughter, Yolanda, but not everyone will be ready to do this. Both of the latter are taken into the palatial residence of the Grand Duke Boris at Petrograd, this person having offered to put Yolanda through the school which trains for the Royal Ballet. Mother and daughter think that all the luxuries they enjoy are part of the training and it finally takes the arrival of Serge, the son, to awaken them to even suspect the real intentions of Boris.

True to suspicions, the Grand Duke, after Yolanda has made a successful dancer, demands his payment. Some dramatic scenes follow, coming to a climax when Alexander, the girl's artist lover, is sentenced to Siberia by the Duke and when the latter is murdered by Yolanda's brother. As the story closes, Yolanda and Alexander go into exile together.

A very good cast supports Miss Stewart in rendering her part. John Ardizonia makes an excellent Boris. His expression is one of such crafty villainy that one wonders why it does not stimulate the action of some womanly intuition on the part of his victim. Evart Overton is a very acceptable lover. The other members of the cast are Denton Vale, Mr. Turin, Bernard Seigel and Madame Rofimoda. Maibelle Heikes Justice wrote the story, and the direction of Marguerite Bertsch is a feature of the picture. One never loses sight of the fact that the story is truly Russian.

Judging this release by what it presents in its entirety, it does not at all exceed the standard of just ordinary feature pictures. The people will like the star; they will be impressed by the work of the director and the cast; but as far as their being gripped is concerned, there is room for much doubt.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

General Program

Lost and Found—SELIG—(TWO REELS)—JANUARY 29.—With George Foss and Vivian Reed. Reviewed in next issue.

Three Ways Out—ESSANAY—(27 MINUTES SCREEN TIME)—BLACK CAT FEATURE—JANUARY 30.—Gertrude Glover, Harry Dunkinson and John Cossar in the cast. Samuel Garlock is a banker who speculates in the usual way with the depositors' money, and loses. Gladys, his daughter, is in love with the son of old Tim Grogan, rich, but shanty Irish. Rather than permit Gladys to marry into such a family and save his fortunes, Garlock is about to commit suicide, when in rushes daughter Gladys, Tim's son and Tim. The young couple have eloped and Tim is ready and willing to lend the money to cover up the speculations of Garlock. The banker is persuaded that suicide is unnecessary and the sunshine shines again.

Mr. Wright in Wrong—COMEDY—ESSANAY—(15 MINUTES SCREEN TIME)—JANUARY 31.—A pretty maid is employed by Mr. and Mrs. Wright and the trouble begins. Mrs. Wright thinks Mr. Wright a bit too gallant towards the maid. She is sent out to the park with the baby about the same time that Mr. Wright goes to a clambake. During the afternoon the maid loses the baby's milk bottle. Mr. Wright meanwhile has won the booby prize at the clambake—a milk bottle. He and the maid get in at the same time—she without the milk bottle and he with one. There is no peace in the Wright household that night, but the morning papers carry the announcement that Mr. Wright won the booby prize at the clambake. Thus is peace restored and the rest of the film depicts enchanting western scenic.

Shifting Shadows—IS MARRIAGE SACRED SERIES—ESSANAY—(29 MINUTES SCREEN TIME)—FEBRUARY 3.—Marguerite Clayton, Lillian Drew, Edward Arnold, Sydney Ainsworth and Thomas Commerford make up the cast. When John Sanderson perfects an invention and receives $100,000 for it, it goes to his head. He marries Julia Casey, of poor but honest parents and they begin to live on an elaborate scale. Their friends, Angus McDonald and Nettie Arliss, and even Patrick Casey, Julia's father, are not good enough for them. John begins to speculate and in a short time must go back to the shops to work for a living. They are cheerful about it and the old friends forgive them for their snobbery. Angus and Nettie are soon to be married and invite them to "stand up" with them at their marriage.

Delayed in Transit—SELIG—WESTERN DRAMA—(TWO REELS)—JANUARY 15.—In the cast are Frank Campeau, Tom Mix, William Hutchison and Victoria Forde. At the wedding of Eddie Hawkins and Hortense McGish relatives and friends have gathered from far and near. While the fun is at its height, Dell Hawkins, one of the three Hawkins brothers, offers to bet $50 that he will have the beautiful Spanish maiden, Loretta, married to his brother Bill, the miner, who fruitlessly searches for gold. In the rivalry for her smiles a shooting affray occurs and Sheriff Smith vows that someone will have to pay for the death of one of the men. Loretta fears that she will be implicated in the shooting and Dell puts her on his horse and sends her to Bill's cabin in the mountains. Later he arrives at the cabin with the parson and Bill and Loretta are married. After celebrating the marriage of his brother, Dell returns to the cabin, followed by the parson, who announces an undelivered message which had arrived on Eddie's wedding night. That telegram states that an inheritance of a half-million dollars awaits the Hawkins brother that remains unmarried. "That's me," says Dell, and prepares to collect.

Selig-Tribune, No. 7—JANUARY 22.—New York, N. Y.—The battleship Pennsylvania sails to Southern maneuvers. Golden, Colo.—Students of the School of Mines are given practical mine rescue work. Philadelphia, Pa.—Lawrence Huntington breaks the world's piano record. San Francisco, Cal.—The San Francisco Model Yacht Club hold the annual mid-winter races. Frankfort, Ky.—The State's prison is damaged by fire. Pensacola, Fla.—Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Wellman, of Chicago, have an ambition to speed around the world in a forty-foot motor boat. Jacksonville, Fla.—"Alligator Joe" looks after the molars of his alligators. Marblehead, Mass.—The U. S. Government will conduct experiments to test John Hays Hammond, Jr.'s, radio-controlled torpedo. Denver, Colo.—Despite snowdrifts, State Representative Frank W. Murphy hikes forty miles to the State's Capitol Washington, D. C.—Thomas D. Schall, blind Congressman from Minnesota, is guided about the Capitol City by his son Thomas.

The Luck That Jealousy Brought—(ONE REEL)—SELIG—WESTERN DRAMA—JANUARY 27.—Tom Mix, Louella Maxam, Sid Jordan and Pat Chrisman playing. There is a rich lode on John Dent's mining claim, but he doesn't know it. Carey, the dudish bookkeeper, employed by a large mining company, does. For that reason he is attentive to the pretty daughter of the poor miner, Rose. He offers Dent a thousand dollars for the claim. Joe Barr, a young miner, has long loved Rose, and his jealousy is aroused by the attentions of the bookkeeper. He follows the young couple and finds the pocket of gold. He tells Dent of his good fortune and then it is that Rose wakes up to the fact that Carey is not true blue. She sends him away and honest Joe is rewarded with her smiles.

Mutual Pictures

A Circus Cyclone—VOGUE COMEDY—(TWO REELS)—JANUARY 28.—In the cast are Ben Turpin, Arthur Moon, Gypsy Abbott, Margaret Templeton and Paddy McQuire. Ben, a struggling artist, is in love with the daughter of a wealthy widow. He is thrown out by the girl's mother, and Baron Moon, a fake baron, is received royally. Ben discovers that Moon is a janitor in a side show next to the concession where Paddy, as "Jasbo," the dog-faced boy, works. Paddy quits his job, however, and gets one as a model with the living models. Ben puts in a one-man circus and his show is a keen rival to the one that Paddy is working in. Ben breaks up Paddy's show by letting loose a bunch of rats, and then Paddy turns around and breaks up Ben's show by squirting water all over them. The baron steals a necklace from Gypsy's mother and is finally caught. Then the mother gives Gypsy to the deserving Ben.

Shorty Goes to College—(TWO REELS)—ADVENTURES OF SHORTY HAMILTON SERIES—JANUARY 29.—Ralph, the son of the boss of the ranch, home on a vacation, sees in "Shorty" the makings of a fine addition to the college football team. He offers the fellow a free education if he will go to college and try for the team. Shorty, anxious to do everything in his power to get on an even footing with Anita, consents, and so leaves for college. He makes the team and is the hero of the hour. Ruth Estey, the daughter of the Dean of the university, sees in Shorty an idol and manages to meet him. One of the college professors is in love with the girl and is jealous of Shorty. Ruth is a somnambulist and is seen by Shorty hiding some diamonds. Shorty, to avert suspicion, takes them and is seen by the professor. Anita Keller is called in to track the thief and finally is forced to arrest Shorty. Ruth confesses her somnambulistic tendencies, however, and Shorty is cleared. Anita, thinking Shorty is in love with Ruth, congratulates him, but when he tells her it is she that he loves she laughs at him.

Jerry and His Pal—CUB COMEDY—(ONE REEL)—FEBRUARY 1.—Jerry is fond of animals and wins the friendship of the zoo elephant by the copious use of peanuts. He is discovered feeding his pet, and the keeper runs him off of the lot. In the hall of his tenement, Jerry hears a girl crying. He enters the room and finds that the girl's father is a drunkard, and spends all of his money in the saloon. Jerry asks the girl to accompany him to the saloon to get her father, but she has no one to leave with the baby. Jerry remembers his pachyderm pal, and brings him from the zoo. The elephant tends the baby while Jerry and the girl try to persuade her father to come home. They have no success, for Jerry is thrown out. Jerry then goes to the house, gets the elephant, and proceeds to wreck the saloon. The sight is too much for Mary's father, who reforms, and all ends happily.

Scouts of the Sea and Sky—(ONE REEL)—U. S. DEFENDER SERIES—FEBRUARY 2.—This chapter contains many details in connection with torpedo boats and torpedo boat destroyers. Some very interesting views of the guiding and propelling mechanism of the twenty-two inch torpedoes are also pictured. Amongst the intensely interesting scenes in this chapter are those of the aviation corps at Pensacola, Florida, showing the latest type of biplane and a trip over Pensacola in a Curtiss "Flying Fish." There are also scenes of U. S. submarines in maneuvers.

"The Little Missionary," "The Sinful Marriage" and "What Would You Do?"—newly blossomed Essanays.

New Universal dramas. From the left, "Love Aflame," January 29, "June Madness," January 30, and "Devil's Pay Day," also appearing the twenty-ninth of January.

Nature's Calling—(One Reel)—American Drama—February 3.—Featuring J. Warren Kerrigan, with Louise Lester and Pauline Bush. Jack, a young easterner, goes west for his health. Here he and his mother get to love the country and the boy sends for his sweetheart to come out and visit them. At first the girl is wrapped up in the country and has great times exploring the surrounding mountains with Jack. He proposes to her and she accepts him. The west begins to pall on the girl and she longs for society and New York. Finally unable to stand it any longer she tells Jack that she must go home and begs him to return to civilization with her. Jack refuses, however, and feeling the call of nature, sends the girl home and remains with his mother to enjoy the western country.

Sticky Fingers—Vogue Comedy—(Two Reels)—February 4.—Paddy McQuire, Billy Mason, Lillian Hamilton, Larry Bowes, Harry Huckins, George Monberg and Glenn Gano are in the cast. Two college boys, finding their funds low, meet a young lady and manage to "borrow" fifty dollars from her purse, without her knowing it. The theft is reported and the next day the boys write their fathers, asking them for money. The boys borrow fifty dollars from a pawnbroker and manage to slip it back into the girl's purse. The boys' fathers arrive and are arrested as the thieves. The girl, however, gets the real thieves and they all meet at the police station. Here the girl finds her money is all intact and the matter is thought to be cleared up when the pawnbroker comes on the scene and demands his fifty. A most exciting chase follows and the boys are finally caught.

Shorty Goes Insane—(Two Reels)—Adventures of Shorty Hamilton Series—February 5.—Shorty and Anita start out to run down a gang of mail thieves in New York. Shorty arrives in New York and cannot locate Anita. He joins the mail thieves in hope of finding Anita and discovers that she has been kidnaped and placed in an insane asylum. Shorty immediately becomes one of the inmates, and after a wholesale fight he succeeds in rescuing Anita and bringing the thieves to justice.

Universal Program

The Silent Feud—Sixth Episode of The Purple Mask.—In this episode Pat obtains the combination to the safe where the jewels are stored and disposes of them as the queen wished. It ends with Pat confronted by the king, who has discovered the robbery. Once more Kelly realizes that he has been baffled by the girl.

The Boonton Affair—(Two Reels)—Bison.—Featuring Irene Hunt and King Baggot. Jack Walton, a revenue officer, proves a friend to Mary Hatfield, a moonshiner's daughter, in a time of need. Taking Jack for an officer, the moonshiners gag and bind him and lock Mary in an adjoining room. Finally through the help of Doby, a friend of his, Jack makes his escape. Because of his love for Mary, he determines to forget his duty for once and save Mary's father, whom he knows to be guilty.

Why, Uncle—Nestor—January 29.—With Eddie Lyon and Fred Gamble. Harry and his uncle have wonderful heads "the morning after." Uncle receives word his nephew, Milton, whom he believes to be an angel, is going to visit them. In fact, Milton is far from being an angel, and dolls up to meet his uncle and cousin, whom he imagines are of the angelic type. Complications arise—each keeps up his acting role—a climax being reached when "uncle" is discovered at supper with three blonde beauties.

June Madness—(Three Reels)—Gold Seal—January 30.—With Roy Stewart and Gypsy Hart. Through circumstances, at the time unexplainable, June, an innocent girl, is accused of being a female bandit. Her accuser, Sax, sees that she is wearing a ring on her finger which was stolen from him. She is unable to explain where it came from, because this would implicate a man whom she thinks she loves. At last things develop to a climax; it is discovered that the "female" robber is none other than Tom, the man who is compelling June to marry him, and the girl finds that Sax is the man she really loves.

Some Baby—(Split Reel)—Victor—January 30.—Gertrude, a very young hopeful, practically demonstrates her love for flowers by chewing up half a dozen roses—or attempting to. Then she proceeds, after the same dare, to smoke a pipe, smears herself with jam and, to do the job up brown, indulges in a mud bath, followewd by a conventional one.

Nellie, the Fireman's Daughter—(Split Reel)—Victor—January 30.—Eddie, a brave fire laddie, is in love with the fire captain's daughter. Lee, a cowardly villain, having designs upon Nellie, abducts her. After running through fire and blood, Eddie, with the help of the fire department, rescues the girl just as she is about to marry the villain, Lee. Lee, finding himself outwitted, blows himself up with dynamite.

The Gold Lust—Big U—January 31.—In this drama of the gold fields a man, overcome by the ravenous desire for gold, attempts to poison his partner. Luckily, his plan does not work, and the man, having learned his lesson, decides to work "fifty-fifty" in the future.

Faking Fakirs—(Two Reels)—L-Ko—January 31.—With Phil Dunham and Lucille Hutton. In this comedy, Springboard Sally, the champion diver of a traveling show, falls heir to a large fortune. One of her lovers, wishing to get his rival out of the way, makes it appear that Mabel Carryflesh, a heavyweight, is the fortunate one. The plan works finely, with the rival making straight for the minister with Mabel. Complications of all kinds set in and the play ends in a way well suggested by the title.

The Diamond Thieves—Imp—February 1.—Featuring Robert Leonard and Margarita Fischer. Detective Westerly, in search of the origin of some diamonds of remarkable brilliancy which are flooding the American market, hits upon a clue, leading him finally to the secret laboratory of an alchemist. The latter evades the detective again and again, but is ultimately run to earth, at which time he kills himself, taking with him the secret formula for making the fake diamonds.

It's Cheaper to Be Married—Victor—February 1.—Bill visits "Hash House Kate's" for a square meal and there meets Lizz. He reads that a heavy tax has been levied on the New York bachelors. Determining not to pay such a tax, he regards Lizz with interest and they are finally married. Fritz gets word that he and Bill have been left a fortune by their uncle and decides not to tell Bill about it. Lizz helps Bill out and Fritz lights the money with his pipe, just as the tax collector arrives and levies an awful fine because he is a bachelor. Bill at last is the wedded winner.

The Forbidden Game—(Two Reels)—Imp—Underwood—February 2.—With Ed Hearn and Fronzie Gunn. Supposed by society to be a wealthy jeweler, Forsythe is in reality a thief working with a gang of crooks. He forbids his sister Grace to visit the slums, fearing she will learn something about him. However, she does so, and there meets Larry, a reporter. In the meantime Clax, the gang leader, and Forsythe disagree and he plots to kidnap Grace. Larry with the police and Forsythe with his gang attempt to rescue the girl. A desperate fight ensues in which Clax ad Forsythe are mortally wounded. Larry promises he will keep Forsythe's secret from Grace. Inconsolable for a time, Grace later finds happiness with Larry.

The Hero of Bunko Hill—Victor—February 2.—With Billy Musgrove and Liane Carrera. Bertie, leading man of a stranded theatrical troupe, for the sake of getting some money, tries to palm himself off on a rich old woman as her long lost son. All the pains he takes to fool her only result in a flat failure; in his complete exposal as a fraud.

His Coming-Out Party—Joker—February 3.—With Gale Henry and William Franey. Gale strenuously objects to her husband's playing cards, but he continually slips out to the club and other places in spite of her. Finally Gale joins forces with the wife of her husband's friend and the two women administer an effective punishment to their spouses.

Diamonds of Destiny—Imp—February 4.—With Louise Lovely and Alfred Allen. Jane Lowe, a crook through circumstances, learns of her brother's arrest on a murder charge, just as she determines to "go straight." She decides to help Willis turn one more deal on his promise to free Paul. The deal consists of stealing diamonds from Corey Houston, a well known diamond importer. Feature Programs

Blue Bird

The Mysterious Mrs. M.—(FIVE REELS)—Featuring Mary McLaren, with Harrison Ford, Evelyn Selbie, Willis Marks, Frank Brownlee, Bertram Grassby and Charles Mailes. This is the story of a very bored young man who is aroused from his ennui through the efforts of his friends. They interest him in the mysterious Mrs. M., a fortune teller. She predicts for him his death inside of three months. He retires to his country estate to spend the last few weeks of his life, and there, surrounded by the lively country flowers and foliage, he meets Phyllis Woodman. Phyllis is a sweet, pretty-mannered girl, and soon the young couple are in love. Sentenced to die, Van Seer discovers that he is just beginning to live. Of course, it is all a joke, planned and executed by his friends to give Harrison something to live for, and the affair ends happily for them all.

Christie Comedies

A Gay Deceiver—CHRISTIE COMEDY—(TWO REELS—JANUARY 29.—Billie Rhodes, with Harry Ham, Ethel Lynne, Harry Rattenberry, Stella Adams, and Jane Waller. Billie, the maid, proceeds to play lady when her mistress goes away, and dresses up in some of Ethel's finery. Just then arrives Harry, a friend of Ethel's. He thinks Billie is a girl chum of Ethel's, and Billie carries out the little joke. He is won completely before the folks arrive home. Billie jumps into cap and apron again and when Harry is invited to dinner that evening she almost faints. She runs through the kitchen into the yard, pursued by Harry, who leaves no doubt that her position makes no difference to him. Even Ethel joins in best wishes for them.

Small Change—CHRISTIE COMEDY—(TWO REELS)—FEBRUARY 5.—Betty Compson and Neal Burns, with Eddie Barry, George French, Stella Adams and Ethel Lynne. Neal wakes up "on the morning after" with just $2.80 and an engagement to take his fiancee to the flower show and to luncheon. He isn't a bit hungry, but Betty's appetite is good and so are those of the girl friends she picks up. Two of Neal's friends drop in and Neal thinks they may be of some use to him, but their combined finances total $1.79. One of them takes the fund and goes in a taxi for more. He is arrested for speeding. In the meantime the two friends of Betty leave, thanking them for the luncheon, and Neal is no longer able to conceal the true state of things from Betty. She promptly pulls out a roll of bills and settles for the luncheon. Just as they start for the show the two boys return with money lent them by the friendly judge, and finding them gone, order another bottle and make good resolutions.

Fox

The Primitive Call—(FIVE REELS)—FOX—JANUARY 22.—Featuring Gladys Coburn. The story narrates how a girl without any feelings makes love to an Indian and gets him to sign away the land of his fathers. The Indians finally manage to come to terms with the whites, while the girl, abducted by the man she betrayed, is made to pay the full price. Reviewed in this issue.

The Glory of Yolanda—(FIVE REELS)—VITAGRAPH—FEBRUARY 5.—Featuring Anita Stewart. The story concerns affairs in the life of a pretty Russian girl, who comes to Petrograd to be educated into the Royal Ballet at the expense of the Grand Duke, Boris. She does not realize the price that must be paid until too late. Reviewed in this issue.

Metro

Bridges Burned—(FIVE REELS)—METRO—JANUARY 29.—A story by Mme. Petrova, who plays the part of Mary O'Brien. Also in the cast are Mahlon Hamilton, Arthur Hoops, Maury Steuart, Robert Broderick, Mrs. Mathilde Brundage, Louis Stern and Thomas Cameron.

In rural Ireland lives Mary O'Brien and her father, a gentleman of depleted fortunes. Here she meets and loves Ernest Randal, younger son of an English baronet. The young man is wounded while hunting and becomes the house guest of the O'Briens. When recovered, he tears himself away with difficulty, but duty, in the guise of a college course, calls him. Norah, the old family servant, discovers the truth about Mary, who goes to her father and confesses. Her father is enraged and when Randal, his college course ended, comes to see her, he orders the lad to marry her. During the stormy scene that follows, Mary defends Randal and her generosity prompts him to ask her to marry him at once. She does this for her child's sake, but leaves immediately after the ceremony.

In the years that follow, she is the ministering angel of the mills where she has found employment, becoming famous for her uplift work among the workers. Then enters O'Farrel, the mill owner, who seeks her hand in marriage. The war comes on in time to bring out some feeling of brotherhood between Randal and O'Farrel and after several false reports of his death, Mary nurses Randal back to health and eyesight, after which she consents to return to him and to the rank of Lady Randal.

Red Feather

Love Aflame—(FIVE REELS)—JANUARY 29.—Ruth Stonehouse is featured, with Jack Mulhall, Jean Hersholt, Nita White, Raymond Whitaker, Fronzie Gunn and Noble Johnson. Betty Mason's Aunt Martha and her father think it would be nice for Betty to marry Cousin Reginald. When Aunt Martha and Cousin Reginald come to visit Betty is disappointed and doesn't fall into their plans very readily. She raves and storms and finally runs away. Reginald finds a note from his charming cousin stating that she has gone west in her brother's clothes and that if he can catch her she will marry him.

Meanwhile in a city club the young men are getting up a wager, the bet being the outcome of a women's rights discussion. Jack Calvert, cynic and worldly wise man, wagers, that he will be in Constantinople by the sixth of November. They take him up. Betty, in her masculine attire, and Jack Calvert, in that of a tramp, soon meet, and their adventures, "riding the rods" and eating tramp fare, beating their way on ships and eluding Cousin Reginald, are thrilling. In the course of their travels they are shipwrecked on a cannibal island and Jack fights and kills the king. Reginald even follows them here, but they are too swift for him and reach Constantinople by the sixth. A banquet is in progress for Jack and the boys of his club, when Mr. Mason introduces his daughter. Jack gets the surprise of his life and is glad to change his views of all women, and his little pal in particular, who promises to tramp by his side to the end of the road.

Chicago News

NOBODY knows yet just how Universal and Carl Laemmle are related. A divorce has not as yet been officially announced.

Lubliner and Trinz have booked "The Seven Deadly Sins," the McClure series of features, in all their houses.

Harry Leonhardt, western Fox representative, was called to New York City last week on account of the death of his mother.

W. H. Lawrence, former Fox road man for Illinois and Iowa, has been promoted to assistant manager of the local Fox office.

About twenty-five exhibitors and film men journeyed to Milwaukee January 16 to see the Ritchie Mitchell-Freddie Welch fight.

Al Green, George Fawcett and Vivian Reed are keeping the cameras clicking up at the Selig studies. A number of short subjects are being made.

The Harding Theater at Elston and Harding avenues, has been closed a week, preceding its opening by Manager Debold, the former owner of the house.

Someone has had the courage to grab the Easterly Theater on Lincoln avenue again. The new speculators are Bowen and Fischer. Here's hoping the jinx has croaked.

Manager Bradford of the Minnesota Triangle Exchange was in Chicago last week and picked out R. S. McCullum, formerly of the Chicago Universal office, as his assistant manager.

W. Van Gelder, the genial Dutchman, has left the Pathe office to become a salesman for Superpictures. Mr. Van Gelder is personally acquainted with most of the exhibitors of the Chicago territory.

Rob Reel, that energetic m.p. editor on the Chicago American who also inaugurated "Go-to-Movie Week," is now promulgating "automovies," with the idea of boosting both the Chicago automobile show and motion pictures at one fell swoop.

John D. Laurie opened the new Devon Theater at Clark and Devon on January 22. Mr. Laurie is an experienced show man, having been in the business eight years. He knows the business from usher to manager, and will undoubtedly put the Devon into a class by itself.

The Chicago Greater Vitagraph office now has a branch in Milwaukee. It is in charge of Frank W. Redfield, formerly assistant manager here, under the general supervision of Manager Sidney E. Abel. W. E. Banford, traveling auditor, succeeds Mr. Redfield, under Mr. Abel.

Western Representative Price of Superpictures went to St. Louis, January 19, where he conferred with H. R. Slocum, the McClure representative there. Mr. Price will leave in a couple of weeks for a Pacific coast trip, during which we will work out the details of campaigns with the various representatives of McClure Pictures.

Watterson R. Rothacker, president of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, recently addressed the Cleveland Advertising Club. He told them that motion picture advertising can never supplant printed advertising but that the two must be employed together to attain the best results.

C. A. Rehm of the Atlas Educational Film Company, will begin shortly the making of a five-reel feature, "Chicago, the Wonder City of the World." This will show all the various phases of Chicago life and the workings of the municipality, and will be run in about two hundred and fifty schools and churches.

It is reported that the Reel Fellows will stage an "open house" at the Essanay studio on the evening of February 10. There'll be dancing and the Essanay stars will be working on some real scenes before the eyes of the awe-struck spectators. Anyway, it will be a unique and enjoyable "party."

Samuel S. Hutchinson has purchased from Edward Hines the vacant plot of land in Sheridan road, fronting 75 feet, with a depth of 198 feet, 146 feet south of Rosemont avenue, for a lawn. The price is not disclosed, but it is said that land in this neighborhood is held at $300 a front foot. This adjoins the beautiful residence and lawn fronting 75 feet, belonging to Mr. Hutchinson. features in connection with the Hutchinson home is a fine little private projection room.

The educational department of the National Motion Picture Service gave a showing at the E. E. Fulton projection rooms on Lake street on January 15 of "Protect Your Daughters," a white slave film. The presentation was especially for the clergy of the city and about 25 were present. Their comments at the conclusion of the unreeling were varied. The film was made in New York. It has been endorsed by the Illinois Vigilance Society.

Another well known Chicago newspaper man has developed into a scenario writer. Walter Howe, city editor of the Tribune, conceived the idea for the scenario entitled "Beware of Strangers," and collaborated with Gilson Willets, scenario editor for Selig, in the writing of the story. Colin Campbell produced the story with a notable cast, featuring Thomas Santchi and Bessie Eyton. The story includes many of Mr. Howe's experiences as a newspaper man.

ST. LOUIS EXHIBITORS IN CHICAGO

Fourteen live and energetic exhibitors from St. Louis, all members of the powerful St. Louis Theater Managers, and Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association, were in Chicago last week on business affecting all the showmen of their city.

They came as guests of the Seaburg Organ Company and heard a number of demonstrations of the Seaburg instruments. Before departing for home a group of the showmen made a call on MOTOGRAPHY and some interesting discussions were had between the organizers of probably the strongest showmen's association in the middle west and the magazine that is for the showman first, last and all the time.

The following made the Chicago trip: Fred Wehrmberg, Best Theater, vice-president of the association; D. T. Williams, Ashland Theater; Oscar H. Damon, Bremen Theater, secretary; Harry Blosston, Virginia Theater; Eugene Freund, Cinderella Theater; Louis Herman, organizer; Wm. Slinger, Excello Theater; Joe Mogler, Mogler Theater, president; Al. Wittmann, McKinley Theater; G. E. Loeffler, Arsenal Theater; Bill Savage, Hippodrome, Alton, Ill.; Ed. Pohlman, Mutoscope Theater, chairman executive board; Tom Meyer, Show Theater; John J. Kleekamp, Arsenal Theater.

TOOMEY ASSISTANT TO FREULER

William C. Toomey has been appointed assistant to the president of the Mutual Film Corporation. The announcement is made by John R. Freuler, Mutual president.

This fills the vacancy left by the resignation of John Cecil Graham, who has gone abroad for another film concern. Mr. Toomey this week took up his work with the Mutual Film Corporation, establishing his offices at 71 West Twenty-third street, New York Mutual headquarters.

Mr. Toomey thus becomes Mutual's new "ambassador to Broadway," with the special mission of concerning himself with the Mutual's interest in productions and stars. Mr. Toomey has for something more than a year past held the post of vice president of Mirror Films. He is particularly well known in film and dramatic circles in New York.

One of the features of George M. Cohan's first photoplay, to be released by Artcraft Pictures, will be the remarkable wardrobe worn by Ida Darling, who has just been engaged to portray the role of the wealthy Mrs. Gerard. Through the courtesy of C. C. Shayne and Company, the well known New York furriers, Miss Darling will disclose to feminine followers of the screen many interesting displays in the way of the very latest and costly furs, including a $5,000 cloak just imported from Russia.

Manager Abeles of Pathe's New York booking office and his assistant, Mr. Hammel, were tendered a surprise party by the employees of that office the other day.

Seats had been secured at the Palace Theater and after the show the party adjourned to a well known restaurant where an excellent supper was enjoyed. At the supper table Mr. Abeles was presented with a gold pen knife.

Ellen Gierum, leading lady with the Warburton Stock Company in Yonkers, who is to play the leading role in Benjamin Christie's film adaptation of "The Wandering Jew" in Denmark next summer, is writing a comedy in Danish which she will present at the Peoples Theater in Copenhagen during her stay in that city. The comedy will also be written in English and Miss Gierum will submit the manuscript to some American producer when completed.

BUCK LEAVES WHARTON

J. Whitworth Buck, for the past two years general manager, secretary and treasurer of Wharton, Inc., and associated with the firm since its beginning, has disposed of his stock in the company to the Wharton Brothers and has left for New York, where he will engage in business.

In "A Corner in Colleens" Bessie Barriscale wore a skirt made of Irish newspapers. She says they increased her circulation.

The market in film stocks is broadening somewhat and there has been some demand during the past week for Frank Powell Producing Corporation, Lone Star common and preferred; Mutual Film common; New York Motion Picture and Triangle.

Empire All Star Corporation is a producing company recently organized by John R. Freuler of the Mutual Film Corporation and A. Hayman of Charles Frohman Company, to produce for the screen, under direction of Augustus Thomas, the past, present and future successes of the Frohman organization.

Lone Star Corporation: Official announcement has been given out calling 20% of outstanding preferred and all fractional shares at 110 and accrued dividends February 26. Bookings for "Easy Street" are reported to be about the largest of any Chaplin comedy.

Mutual Film Corporation: While the deal with the Charles Frohman Company has not as yet been reflected in the price of Mutual securities, this is expected to put Mutual pictures into the very highest grade of theaters, and should eventually result in increased carnings and higher prices for both common and preferred. Marie Cahill has joined the Mutual's array of stars.

Triangle Film Corporation: In spite of the loss of David W. Griffith and Douglas Fairbanks (who is rapidly becoming the most popular actor in film) there has been trading to the extent of upwards of 2,000 share per day and market has recovered from below 2 to 2½.

World Film Corporation: On small volume of business this stock has dropped below $1.00 per share.

Censorship Bills in Twenty States

WM. A. BRADY, PRESIDENT NATIONAL ASSOCIATION, URGES ACTION

CENSORSHIP bills are actually being considered in twenty State legislatures, and are in immediate danger of enactment within days or weeks in at least half of them. This is borne out by the reports now in the hands of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. This is probably by no means all, as new bills will be introduced daily until well into February.

The censorship committee of the National Association, headed by David W. Griffith, has been laying down its plans, and is ready to take up the fight in every state, provided only that the support of the producers, distributors and exhibitors of the country is forthcoming.

So far, many of the most representative concerns in the business have put their shoulders to the wheel, but William A. Brady, president of the National Association, stated last week that without the united support of the whole industry it might develop that it would be hopeless to even start to fight. He said:

The situation is away beyond anything that a small group of men can handle. A dozen of us cannot cover the whole country, and, moreover, a dozen of us cannot assure the legislators of the country that the industry is capable of controlling itself. The state superintendent of education of Oklahoma is pushing a censorship bill this year, because at the last session a few reputable exchange men promised him something and then the outsiders did not live up to the promises. We have got to go to the country united, both in our ideas and in our pocketbooks, or there is no use of going at all. It is up to every one of us, individuality, and the least of us who stays out can gum the whole plan. It is up to the states rights producer and to the maker of one-reel comedies just as much, if not more, than to the biggest concern in the industry. Do they want to avoid censorship, or pay a dollar a reel for examinations in twenty states? It's up to them and I hope you will tell them so.

The Pending Bills

Here is the list of bills already introduced:

Washington, D. C.—Congress is considering a revised edition of the Smith-Hughes bill of last year.

Arkansas—Censorship bill is pending in the legislature, although there is no public demand for it and the newspapers are giving it practically no attention. It is stated that exhibitors are passive and that unless action is taken by the national body the bill will be passed by default. Examination fee provided in the bill is $2.00 per reel.

Colorado—Censorship bill modeled on Kansas law has been introduced. Parent Teachers' Association having secured recognition by Denver exchanges of the Association's reviewing staff, is opposing legal censorship. The Rocky Mountain Screen Club, however, is much exercised over the situation and is asking help.

Illinois—Two bills are pending giving censorship under another name. One provides that "any place of amusement in which public entertainment of a lewd or indecent character, or tending to corrupt public morals, is given, is declared a public nuisance." Provision for its abatement as a nuisance is given. The other bill makes it a felony punishable by a fine of $25 to $500 and imprisonment for one year, or both, for any manager to present such an entertainment. Sunday closing is provided for in another bill unless half of the receipts go to charity. The exhibitors are organizing, but ask for aid from the National Association. The complete story of the Illinois and Chicago situation will be found on another page in this issue of MOTOGRAPHY.

Iowa—A bill for censorship in the state of Iowa is being actively pushed and aid is asked.

Kansas—The Kansas Branch of the Exhibitors' League reports that it seems impossible to eliminate censorship altogether as had been hoped. The following is the plan upon which the Kansas League is working. A bill has been introduced reducing the censorship fee from $2.00 to 50 cents per reel and to have the censoring done by the Welfare Board. The Welfare Board is reported to be friendly to the motion picture people.

Massachusetts—A bill providing for the Board of Censorship with salaries of $2,000 per year and charging $1 for single and $2 for multiple reel pictures was introduced on January 12th.

Michigan—A censorship bill similar to the law of Ohio has been introduced, the charge to producers to be $1 for single reels and $2 for multiple reels, etc. Local exchange men and exhibitors are calling for help.

Missouri—Censorship bill has just been introduced providing for a Board of Censors to pass upon both the films and advertising matter.

Nebraska—It is reported that a bill will be introduced into the Nebraska Legislature providing for censorship by a paid state board.

New York—Sunday closing legislation must be fought through. Proposal to tax the industry has resulted in the formation of a committee to investigate. This committee is now holding session.

North Carolina—Censorship bills are pending and there is opportunity to lower the tax in the insurance rate now legalized in that state, if action is taken at once.

Oklahoma—Censorship bill is pending, recommended by the state superintendent of the public instruction, who has made an active campaign in favor of this bill. In a letter to the National Board of Review, this official says: "If the moving picture men who talked to me a year ago had kept their promise and assisted me as they agreed to do, it is very doubtful if I would have made my recommendation this time. I am not in favor of local censorship such as they have in Kansas, but I do believe, in fact know, that this business ought to be regulated in a way not to show some of the pictures to children which are now being shown."

Oregon—A bill making it a felony to manufacture, import, distribute or exhibit any indecent or obscene article, picture, etc., including motion pictures, was introduced on January 15th.

Tennessee—Censorship bill has been introduced at the request of the Council of Women of the State and is being backed by them in the legislature.

Texas—A bill is pending in the legislature closing all motion picture theaters on Sunday.

Utah—Hearing on the censorship bill pending before the Utah legislature is to be deferred until February 1st only. The situation is very serious. The fee is to be $2.00 for each reel.

Vermont—Two bills are pending, one prohibiting theater owners from admitting children under 15 years not accompanied by parent or guardian, and the other making it a felony for anyone to exhibit "moving pictures of a vulgar or immoral character, or which depict burglaries, train robberies or acts which constitute a felony."

Washington—A bill providing for the censorship of motion pictures in the State of Washington will be introduced this week.

West Virginia—Bill modeled on Pennsylvania law has been introduced. Exhibitors of the State are trying to get together and have been asked for contributions by local lawyers.

Wisconsin—Censorship bill is pending, with considerable feeling against motion pictures back of it. Exchange men and exhibitors are looking to the National Association for help.

TRIANGLE TELLS POLICY

President Hodkinson Says Producing Companies and Distributing Organization Are Locked Together and Inseparable

IN response to inquiries concerning the possible release of Thomas H. Ince-Kay Bee features and Mack-Sennett-Keystone comedies in any way other than through the Triangle branch exchanges, the following statement was issued by President William W. Hodkinson, of the Triangle distributing organization:

Up to this time the announcements we have made have been conservative, and have perhaps said less than we would have liked them to say, simply because we do not wish to make any statement without the fullest possible foundation of fact. It has been my invariable custom, ever since I have been in the motion picture business, to make no promise to exhibitors that I was not in position to fulfill to the letter. It is for this reason that seemingly conflicting reports regarding the release of Ince-Kay Bee, and Mack Sennett-Keystone pictures have not until now been fully answered.

I am now in position to say to exhibitors that Triangle and its producing companies are locked together positively and definitely. Up to this time our final and complete plans have not been announced in detail because we have waited till we could be certain of fulfilling every detail of every promise. We are now certain of our ability to do so, and I will say this—that the Triangle program, consisting of one five-reel Ince-Kay Bee feature, one five-reel Fine Arts feature, and two one-reel Triangle comedies, will be supplied to exhibitors each week through Triangle exchanges, and in no other way.

The special weekly release of a two-reel Mack Sennett-Keystone comedy will also be available solely through Triangle exchanges. We shall have other announcements to make that will be of interest, but this, I believe, answers the questions that have been most asked.

In confirmation of President Hodkinson's statement regarding the seemingly conflicting reports that have been abroad as to the relations of the Triangle Distributing Corporation and the Ince-Kay Bee and Mack Sennett-Keystone producing companies, the following was given out by President A. Kessel, of the New York Motion Picture Corporation:

The Thomas H. Ince-Kay Bee five-reel features and the Mack Sennett-Keystone comedies are to be released only through the exchanges of the Triangle Distributing Corporation.

Nymphs Ousted from Chicago

Litigation between two distributors over the rights to "The Garden of Knowledge" in Chicago and adjacent territory upset the expectations of both parties to the controversy. Federal Judge Landis took a look at the picture and straightway registered judicial anxiety as to the propriety of some of the scenes in which the female form was shown undisguised. The court granted the restraining order as sought by the plaintiff, and made it effective against both distributors, thus preventing Chicago from seeing the veiled nymphs who disport themselves in innocent ignorance of their unconventional garb.

Although released last October, Edison's "The Heart of the Hills" still is enjoying a strong run.

WOMEN'S CRITICISMS

What will exhibitors and exchangemen say to this? Their best patrons at the picture shows, the women, have put their business precedents to test and returned a verdict against them.

The club women of Detroit, after eight weeks' careful study of the picture theaters of the city and the film plays shown there, have concluded that because of the "merry-go-round" system of film exchanges, the pictures are neither entertaining, amusing, nor instructive, in many cases.

Proper ventilation of motion picture theaters is a great, crying need, according to the recommendations of these 600 Detroit club women, representing the Photo Play club of the Detroit Federation of Women's clubs.

"Managers of theaters ought to open their places all morning, if they can't do anything else," said Mrs. A. H. Finn, chairman of the civic department of the Detroit Federation of Women's clubs, which fostered the movement for a voluntary censorship.

"One of the other outrageous things is the fact that young parents are permitted to go to theaters in the evenings with babes in arms and small children. It ought to be stopped by law. Those babies ought to be in bed by 8 o'clock. One manager charges full tickets for children in the evening, regardless of age.

"We found only six theaters to which we could give honorable mention."

A summary of the points of interest in connection with the situation has been prepared. The club women wish to close five-cent theaters, because they believe that they are too cheap to enable the manager to run first class pictures.

They object to serial pictures, and desire all vampire, sex and crime pictures eliminated. Mixed programs, where one good picture and one or two racy ones are shown, are also under the ban, because they feel that managers should not force bad pictures on the public under cover of decent ones.

Saturday matinees for children are urged in the residential districts. Proper programs could be arranged, and in connection with this, the exchange of questionable films among cities, towns and villages is frowned upon.

The club women propose to continue their work and there is a hint of active legislation. The idea, however, with which the work began, was to arouse public opinion and gain the co-operation of the managers in such a way that instead of censorship being forced, the desire of the people would change so that managers would have to supply a better class of picture.

G. W. Trendle, of the Kunsky enterprise, has already replied to an attack on this voluntary censorship by a letter in a recent issue of the Michigan Film Review, in which he urges co-operation with the women instead of antagonism. Mr. Trendle states that the surest way to get censorship in Michigan is to oppose the action of the club women.

Edgar Lewis, who directed Rex Beach's "The Barrier," has left New York for the South to make a picture which he claims will surpass anything he has ever attempted.

Illinois Bombarded with Laws

THREATENING TAX AND CENSORSHIP MEASURES STIR FILM MEN

ALL the fads of legislative fashion, all the whims of the sharp-eyed censor and all the notions of well-meaning women's committees on moving pictures, are disturbing the peace in Illinois.

It is the swarming season for censorship crusaders and tax gatherers. From many sources at once come the buzzings of the species.

The restrictive scheme of censorship which has been forced on the state of Kansas, requiring the payment of a fee to the state board of censors upon every picture released in the state, is proposed for Illinois. Two bills are waiting now to be put in the hands of representatives in the legislature who have promised to take the throttle and drive the censorship machine through the house and senate, and obtain the passage of a law under which they may afterward man the state with a body of salaried censors, who will forever purge the commonwealth of plays not pleasing to themselves.

To Revive Law Once Vetoed

One of these measures will be offered by a member of the Illinois house. Moving picture men who have investigated its provisions and purposes state that it is the same law which was passed by the legislature at its last session and afterward vetoed by former Governor Dunne. This bill presented such obstacles in the way of its practical operation, after it should become a law, that even those who desire some form of state censorship were convinced of its failure and concurred with the governor in his decision to veto it.

Its outstanding defect was the prohibitive expense it would entail upon the state. A police official of Chicago cites the fact that state censorship failed at that time, and, upon the strength of this fact, takes the stand that local boards of censorship, like that which has been created in Chicago largely through his own efforts, must be grafted upon the industry. And the reason why he admits the failure of the law passed two years ago is simply the fact that an appropriation sufficient to support a board of censors with a sufficiently large staff of assistants to view the films for distribution to the four corners of the state would be at all times so absurdly exorbitant that no legislature would pass it.

Consequently the Chicago official advocates local boards of review.

"Let every city and town censor its own films and tax them to pay for the expense," he remarked recently.

It is plain that his "home rule" censorship principles mean just another method of strangling the theater business with parasitic taxation, no different from the other plan of censorship under a state board with its corps of assistants, except that the cost will not look as big when split up into fractional parts. But unquestionably the total expense in the state would be greatly in excess of the expense to be incurred under the proposed state law.

It should be noticed who are the persons back of the present movement. The measure modeled after the Kansas law originates with a group of club women, whose activities are carried on by a committee which apparently possesses executive power to do as it sees fit without submitting their plans to referendum vote of the club to which they belong. Mrs. Guy Blanchard is the chairman of a committee of Chicago women which recently obtained the assistance of individual club women throughout Illinois and prevailed upon them to picket the theaters of their respective localities.

Women Pickets Find Pictures Immoral

The findings of the committee, based upon the reports received from the pickets, is not surprising—it is astounding. Various women looked at 1,765 pictures in hundreds of theaters. They found only 420 films which were passed upon favorably. Of the whole number, 1,045 were declared immoral and on 300 more they reported that there was no excuse for making the pictures.

The Chicago Woman's Club has a committee upon motion pictures, but as an organization, no action has been approved or recommended, except through committee work. It might be pointed out that women's clubs in all the larger cities are affiliated with the General Federation of Women's Clubs and that the motion picture committee of the Federation takes a liberal view of the censorship question. In all probability the Federation will eventually influence its affiliated clubs to adopt some uniform attitude in the matter; a fact which exhibitors need to remember when their local women's club threatens opposition.

Taxation Mania Threatens Chicago

Again, in Chicago, the taxation fad has become acute. Two ordinances are on the desk of an assistant in the city counselor's office and will be submitted to the city council. The ordinances contain the increased scale of theater licenses which the officials of the police department concerned with theater regulation and censorship, desire to have passed. The ordinances were framed upon the recommendations of a city official.

A theater with a seating capacity of 300 or less would be forced to pay a tax of $200. A house seating not less than 300 and not more than 600 would be taxed $350. Any seating capacity between 600 and 1,000 is taxable to the extent of $500. A theater with not less than 1,000 seats and not more than 1,500 would pay a license of $700. Any motion picture theater with more than 1,500 seats would be forced to pay a fee of $1,000.

The second ordinance would extend the powers of the Chicago board of censors by taxing the manufacturer and requiring him to pay one dollar a reel or one dollar a picture as a censorship fee.

Attorney Devises Remedial Plan

The exhibitors of Illinois are awake to the situation and steps have been taken to organize them solidly against state censorship.

Quietly enough, but none the less certain, a constructive plan for defeating the harmful attacks on the business, in all states, has begun to grow in Chicago. In the next issue of MOTOGRAPHY, the details of an organized effort to meet the censorship problem without legislation, which will have public approval as well, will be presented to exhibitors. MOTOGRAPHY will publish the opinions and suggestions of exhibitors themselves as to the merits of the new plan.

The proposition is the idea of David T. Alexander, an attorney who is intimately familiar with the moving picture business. He has explained his plan to several Chicago exhibitors and film men, who unite in declaring it a workable, practical method of putting an end to censorship agitation.

Exhibitors to Select Reviewers

He proposes that the Exhibitors' Leagues in all states hold a state convention and nominate a state board of review, which will have powers similar to the national board of review. The state censors thus chosen will then gather at a national convention and adopt a uniform standard to guide them in reviewing the films in their respective states.

Having approved some uniform standard, they will empower a national group of reviewers chosen from the various states to inspect the manufacturers' releases, instead of conducting separate inspections in each state. The films will then be forwarded to the representative of the state board of review and given the official approval of the exhibitors' state body. By obtaining general recognition of the state board, it is believed that the public will favor this plan of a uniform censorship.

The entire membership of the Chicago Branch of the M. P. E. L., the Reel Fellows Club and the F. I. L. M. Club, a Chicago exchange managers' organization, are actively engaged in perfecting plans to combat the measures threatening the business in Illinois.

LEGALIZE SUNDAY PICTURES

New York Exhibitors Offer Bill Which They Believe Will Avert Sabbath-Closing in Affected Localities

The effort to foist Sunday closing upon theaters in various sections of New York has not gained the headway which the supporters of the movement have predicted. Due to the missionary work of delegates to the convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' State League, recently held at Albany, it is considered likely that a law legalizing Sunday performances may be passed at this session. Many members of the legislature have shown a willingness to listen to the pleas of exhibitors from their respective districts who came in person to confer with them.

The convention recommended the passage of a bill which follows the present law regarding amusements, except that it exempts picture theaters from the necessity of closing on Sunday. It was arranged to introduce the bill in the house or senate.

Strong support has been given the exhibitors by public men who believe Sunday pictures are desirable and beneficial. Mayor Mitchell of New York has declared himself strongly in favor of Sunday pictures. He authorized a statement as follows:

> I am in favor of the Sunday exhibition of clean, instructive motion pictures since Sunday is the one day when the great majority can enjoy relaxation and diversion.
> If you, as a New Yorker, agree with him, sign the petition at the Box Office.

Synod Favors Censorship

Federal regulation of motion pictures in interstate commerce, as provided in the Smith-Hughes bill before congress, was favored in a resolution adopted at the final session of the annual Synod of the Protestant Episcopal Province of New York and New Jersey, at the meeting recently held in Atlanta, Georgia. The resolution was offered by the Rev. Dr. Robert Rogers, of Brooklyn. Bishop Edwin S. Lines, chairman of the Synod, asked to be recorded as not voting, but with this exception the vote was unanimous.

To Make Bible Plays Only

With a purpose of producing Bible stories for the screen and a million dollars capitalization to carry out its plans, there has been organized in the New Mexico City of Las Vegas the Bible Film Company. This unique picture company is an outgrowth of the National Bible Play Society first planned for this city. This early organization has been taken over by the new Bible Film Company, which has purchased the magnificent Montezuma Hot Springs, a thousand-acre estate, which includes many buildings and the 300 room Montezuma hotel, and will use this resort as a studio site.

The new company will produce motion pictures of stories from the Bible. An interdenominational board composed of the most eminent clergymen and laymen of the country will censor the output of the company, a plan to insure their acceptance in churches, Y. M. C. A.'s, etc. The company also plans to stage a stupendous religious spectacle fashioned after the Passion Play of Oberammergau.

Harry C. Grigsby of Los Angeles, who is associated with the Singletary Brothers, well known Pacific coast bankers, is financially backing the project. The officers are: Dr. A. L. Andrews, of Fort Worth, Texas, president; Harry C. Grigsby, vice-president and general manager. Roger Topp, also a prominent Los Angeles business man, is secretary and treasurer, while Phil H. LeNoir, formerly secretary of the Las Vegas and later the Albuquerque Chamber of Commerce, and also secretary of the New Mexico State Fair, author of a number of photoplays, is director of publicity and scenario editor.

Merging International Branches

Earl Gulick, of the International, has just returned from Washington, Atlanta, and Boston, where he performed a notable work in transferring the business of the International branch offices to that of Pathe.

While in Boston, Mr. Gulick took personal charge of the International interests in the suit brought by Boston exhibitors for the privilege of showing the famous photoplay serial "Patria," in which Mrs. Vernon Castle is the star. A prominent figure in the court room at Boston during the trial was Miss Dorothy Green, famous vampire, who plays the part of Fanny Adair in "Patria." After the court proceedings had been concluded, Miss Green appeared at the Keith theaters in Boston where despite a heavy cold, she made speeches and was given a wonderfully cordial reception by enormous audiences.

J. K. Burger, assistant general manager of the International, is in the West and Southwest, attending to the merging of the International branches in a number of cities.

William Fox will release June Caprice's new feature, most of which was taken below the Mason-Dixon line, on February 19, under title of "A Child of the Wild."

The winsome Fox star will be seen in the role of a girl of the mountains. Her smile has lost none of its charm and sweetness through transportation over Southern rails.

"What the Picture Did for Me"

ACTUAL CRITICISM OF FILMS BY EXHIBITORS, FROM A BUSINESS STANDPOINT

(Editorial Note:—"The trade paper that can give the most accurate information about current features is the paper every exhibitor wants," said a prominent manager recently. In addition to its regular reviews, Motography will each week hereafter print the actual unvarnished opinions of exhibitors on films they have run in their houses, with the idea of aiding other exhibitors in making up their programs. The theaters mentioned here are in Chicago, unless otherwise noted. Managers and bookers like to get various opinions concerning a feature before they run it. Upon request Motography will gladly furnish the opinion of men who have run the feature in question. Give both titles and makers of pictures about which you inquire. Simply address, Motography, Chicago.)

The Rise of Susan, with Clara Kimball Young, (Vitagraph)—"Clara Kimball Young never fails to draw good crowds. We ran the picture two days and had good houses on both days. The picture is very good."—Dan Lubliner, South Park Theater.—Catering to discriminating audiences.

The Enemy, with Peggy Hyland, (Vitagraph)—"This picture was the best on the week's program. It is an excellent feature. We showed 'The Enemy' for two days, during very cold weather. It brought better crowds than many pictures would have done under the same weather conditions."—Dan Lubliner, South Park Theater.—Catering to discriminating audiences.

The House Built Upon the Sand, with Lillian Gish, (Triangle)—"An interesting picture. It seems to please well."—Dan Lubliner, South Park Theater.—Catering to discriminating audiences.

The Twinkler, with William Russell, (Mutual)—"It did fairly well and is a good picture of its kind."—Dan Lubliner, South Park Theater.—Catering to discriminating audiences.

The White Raven, with Ethel Barrymore, (Metro)—"This is by far the best picture I have had in the house for a long time. It brought out big audiences on days when very cold weather prevailed. Ethel Barrymore is popular."—W. P. Clement, Jackson Park Theater.—Catering to high class patronage.

Redeeming Love, with Kathlyn Williams, (Paramount)—"This was our Sunday feature. It is a good picture and filled the house early."—W. P. Clement, Jackson Park Theater.—Catering to high class patronage.

The Piper's Price, with Dorothy Phillips, (Bluebird)—"A light comedy. Very good. My audiences like this kind of pictures."—W. P. Clement, Jackson Park Theater.—Catering to high class patronage.

Fighting for Love, with Ruth Stonehouse, (Red Feather)—"This did well against strong competition, although bad weather made the audiences smaller."—W. P. Clement, Jackson Park Theater.—Catering to high class patronage.

Her New York, with Gladys Hulette, (Pathe)—"I would put it on the program again if doing it over again. It is good."—W. P. Clement, Jackson Park Theater.—Catering to high class patronage.

The Iced Bullet, with William Desmond, (Triangle)—"A very good picture—better than ordinary, I think. It is a novelty in pictures. William Desmond is a coming star. Bad weather kept some away, but the attendance was fair under the conditions."—Edward Trinz, West End Theater.—Catering to middle class audiences.

The Bondage of Fear, with Ethel Clayton, (World)—"A fair picture which brought out a good-sized Saturday night audience. Ethel Clayton is a good drawing card."—Edward Trinz, West End Theater.—Catering to middle class audiences.

Nanette of the Wilds, with Pauline Frederick, (Paramount)—"Extremely bad weather interfered with business on the night we ran this picture. We had a poor audience. However, the picture is quite good and ought to do well under better weather conditions."—Edward Trinz, West End Theater.—Catering to middle class audiences.

Nina, the Flower Girl, with Bessie Love, (Triangle)—"I would put in on the program if doing it over again."—Edward Trinz, West End Theater.—Catering to middle class audiences.

The Man Who Forgot, with Robert Warwick and Doris Kenyon, (World)—"Surely a good picture—one I would say is good enough to put on any program."—Dan Lubliner, South Park Theater.—Catering to discriminating audiences.

Miss Jackie of the Navy, with Margarita Fischer, (Mutual)—"This is without doubt the best picture which I have been able to present to my patrons in years. It has packed my house at each performance. Personally I have watched it through five runs and have enjoyed the fifth just as much as the first."—Manager Hicks, Cabrillo Theater, San Diego, Calif.

Betty to the Rescue, with Fanny Ward, (Lasky-Paramount)—"A very good picture, brought good business. The patrons liked it."—M. J. Weil, Castle Theater.—Downtown house.

Threads of Fate, with Viola Dana, (Metro)—"This star is always a drawing card. The picture as a whole is good."—H. Miller, Boston Theater.—Downtown house.

Faith, with Mary Miles Minter, (Mutual)—"This is one of the best pictures I ever saw. It is a pleasure to have a picture of the kind in your house, and it is more of a pleasure to have your patrons come out by the dozens to tell you that you have shown them such a sweet little story on the screen. I will want to play 'Faith' again before long and I will be glad to book some of the other Minter pictures."—John B. Rich, manager Myrtle Theater, Lewistown, Montana.

One Touch of Sin, with Gladys Brockwell, (Fox)—"A good picture, well acted."—H. Miller, Boston Theater.—Downtown house.

Nina, the Flower Girl, with Bessie Love, (Triangle)—"This is very good for neighborhood houses."—H. Miller, Boston Theater.—Downtown house.

The Little Yank, with Dorothy Gish, (Triangle)—"Went very well. This star is always well received."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater.—Neigborhood house with high class patronage.

Love Under Cover, (Keystone)—"Fair comedy."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater.—High class patronage.

Her New York, with Gladys Hulette, (Pathe)—"A very good picture which brought good business. The star is always well received and is becoming very popular."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater.—High class patronage.

Joy and the Dragon, with Baby Marie Osborne, (Pathe)—"A very good picture which delighted my patrons."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater.—High class patronage.

The Ninety and Nine, with Lucille Lee Stewart and William Courtney, (Vitagraph)—"This is a poor production. Below the Vitagraph standard."—M. J. Saxe, Knickerbocker Theater.—High class patronage.

On Dangerous Ground, with Gail Kane, (World)—"A pretty good picture. The star is a drawing card."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater.—High class patronage.

The Foolish Virgin, with Clara Kimball Young, (Selznick)—"The star's work is good. The title is great. The picture itself is poorly directed. Business was very poor and we have decided that Miss Young is not popular in this neighborhood and will discontinue running her pictures."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater.—High class patronage.

God's Crucible, with Myrtle Gonzales, (Bluebird)—"A very good picture, with pretty fair box office value."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater.—High class patronage.

Pidgin Island, with Harold Lockwood and May Allison, (Metro)—"A very successful attraction. The stars are well liked and we did a good business."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater.—High class patronage.

The Iced Bullet, with William Desmond, (Triangle)—"Pretty good picture. Went over very well."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater.—High class patronage.

The Bondage of Fear, with Ethel Clayton, (World)—"A very poor production. World should do better than this. There is no sense putting Ethel Clayton in such a picture. It did not please the audience."—M. J. Saxe. Knickerbocker Theater.—High class patronage.

Honest Thieves, (Triangle Comedy)—"It made them laugh, and is better than the last Triangle comedy."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater.—High class patronage.

Nina, the Flower Girl, with Bessie Love, (Triangle)—"A very good picture which will please any audience. The story, however, does not require five reels for the telling and is a bit drawn out. Bessie Love does some very good work."—M. J. Saxe, Knickerbocker Theater.—High class patronage.

Neptune's Daughter, with Annette Kellermann, (Universal)—"A beautiful picture. There is very little story, really none at all. Miss Kellermann is a good attraction and the production gets the business."—M. J. Saxe, Knickerbocker Theater.—High class patronage.

The Americano, with Douglas Fairbanks, (Triangle)—"Great. The best picture Fairbanks has appeared in so far."—M. J. Saxe, Knickerbocker Theater.—High class patronage.

Chicken Casey, with Dorothy Dalton, (Triangle)—"This picture is very good. Miss Dalton is coming to the front very fast and I expect to see her one of the leading stars in pictures soon. In this production her acting cannot be criticized. Kay-Bee has put some fine work into the picture. The only drawback is the title, which is bad. The title will not bring the box office much money. Certainly some other name could have been found for the picture which would have been more appropriate and have helped the drawing powers of the play."—M. J. Saxe, Knickerbocker Theater.—High class patronage.

The Darling of Paris, with Theda Bara, (Fox)—"This picture is all any audience could ask for. This is the acme of Miss Bara's career. The direction is very good, photography and story good. As a whole, it is a fine picture."—Harry Miller, Rose Theater.—Downtown house.

The Great Secret, with Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, (Metro serial)—"We have played five episodes, and the most interesting part of the story is to come. About sixty per cent of the audience complain that Bushman poses and 'stalls' too much, which detracts from the interest in the story. The story is similar to other serials. Personally I feel that serials are great enemies of the picture game and that the best way to kill a star is to put him or her into a serial."—Harry Miller, Boston Theater.—Downtown house.

The Happiness of Three Women, with House Peters and Myrtle Stedman, (Morosco-Paramount)—"A very good picture, one of the best Morosco has put out, but with poor photography in certain places. With this picture I proved that the Chicago downtown public likes a woman star best. On Thursday and Friday I featured the name of House Peters and did only fair business. So I switched my electric sign and featured Myrtle Stedman and business picked up at once."—M. J. Weil, Castle Theater.—Downtown house.

A Son of Erin, (Paramount)—Dustin Farnum. "This as a whole is a very consistently uniform and excellent production. A very good box office attraction."—S. Trinz, Covent Garden Theater.—Catering to the better classes.

Chicken Casey, (Triangle)—Dorothy Dalton. "This picture, with the possible exception of the title, is very good. The title in my opinion is very weak, and undoubtedly is the poorest Triangle might have conceived."—S. Trinz, Covent Garden Theater.—Catering to the better classes.

Miss George Washington, (Paramount)—Marguerite Clarke. "That's a real picture. More pictures like this one and we will have more people coming to theaters regularly. Pictures like this are bound to have a lasting good influence and in a measure will offset the harmful effect a great many of the recent releases from practically all the programs have affected."—S. Trinz, Covent Garden Theater.—Catering to the better classes.

The Enemy, (Vitagraph)—Charles Kent. "This is an excellent production and should go great in states and territories where prohibition is in effect. Its appeal, however, is not confined to residents of such states and territories. It will appeal and satisfy almost any clientele of patrons."—S. Trinz, Covent Garden Theater.—Catering to the better classes.

The Americano, (Triangle)—Douglas Fairbanks. "I played this picture to a repeat and to size it up briefly, would say that it is some picture with some actor, in some story, produced by some director, which altogether makes some box office attraction. It is a pleasure to recommend it."—S. Trinz, Covent Garden Theater.—Catering to the better classes.

The Slave Market, (Paramount)—Pauline Frederick. "This is a very good picture which played to entirely satisfactory business. Pauline Frederick performs very well and in addition is considerable of a box office attraction."—S. Trinz, Covent Garden Theater.—Catering to the better classes.

Neptune's Daughter, (Universal)—Annette Kellermann. "This makes a very unusual attraction. The picture as a whole is very good and played to very good business. Patrons seemed entirely satisfied."—S. Trinz, Covent Garden Theater.—Catering to the better classes.

The Foolish Virgin, (Selznick)—Clara Kimball Young. "This picture was not so good as the other Clara Kimball Young-Selznick pictures, and it did not pull quite so well for us."—Lawrence Cuneo, De Luxe Theater.—Catering to an educated class of people.

The Evil Eye, (Paramount)—Blanche Sweet. "This was a pink permit picture and while it was good, the pink stuff is a bad thing for our neighborhood."—Lawrence Cuneo, De Luxe Theater.—Catering to an educated class of people.

The Romantic Journey, (Pathe)—William Courtney. "This feature did pretty well for us. It ought to be a good thing for any house."—Lawrence Cuneo, De Luxe Theater.—Catering to an educated class of people.

The Slave Market, (Paramount)—Pauline Frederick. "Pauline Frederick is a favorite in this neighborhood and this picture is very good—much better than her 'Nannette of the Wilds.'"—Lawrence Cuneo, De Luxe Theater.—Catering to an educated class of people.

Whom the Gods Destroy, (Vitagraph)—Alice Joyce. "This is a mighty good feature and will pull anywhere."—Lawrence Cuneo, De Luxe Theater.—Catering to an educated class of people.

The Ninety and Nine, (Vitagraph)—Lucille Lee Stewart. "This picture is very good and was very well liked by our patrons. It should be a good box office tonic for any house. As we do every Sunday, we charged fifteen cents for this feature and there were no whines."—Lawrence Cuneo, De Luxe Theater.—Catering to an educated class of people.

VENUS' DIGNITY INJURED

THERE is one "Venus" less in this world than there was a week ago. This particular one came to pose for some scenes in George Beban's next Morosco-Paramount picture. It was a very cold day and when "Venus" was called she stuck her nose out of her dressing room, gasped, and retreated with a shiver. She refused to appear unless the studio was heated in some manner. That was impossible on such short notice, but Beban conceived the brilliant idea of substituting a small stove for the pedestal on which Venus was to pose. The arrangement was completed without consulting the lady herself and when she sat on the concealed stove a look of bewildered indignation suffused her lovely features. Then she emitted a shriek and bounded off the pedestal, disappearing into her dressing room with a wail of injured dignity. As a result of the experiment Beban lost his Venus, for she refused to risk encountering any more of the star's ingenious inventions.

If you live anywhere near Chicago, better put on your makeup and come to that Reel Fellows party at the Essanay studios February 10. There's going to be pictures taken of the stars and they might want you to be a butler or something.

Frank E. Nemic is president of a theater company at St. Cloud, Minnesota.

We know a lot of box offices afflicted with enemia but we never before heard of a case where it spread to the showman himself.

REVERSION TO TYPE

Luther Burbank one day spent years of labor breeding black berry plants to grow without thorns. Through a gradual process of elimination, he finally succeeded. But every once in a while one of his new plants would grow up as horny as its barbarous forebears. This is what is called in botany, "reversion to type."

All of which is the overture to the news that the Park Theater of Battle Creek, Michigan, which has had a road in life similar to the proverbial path of love, is to be converted into a store room.

And there are some other picture houses we know of that as theaters would make darn good store rooms.

THAT'S THE WAY TO TALK.

Ann Pennington, erstwhile of Famous Players and always of Ziegfeld's Follies, is now weakening Chicago's masculine eyes at the Illinois.

"Say something against the movies," we said to Ann.

"Against them! Why should I? No siree, they've been good to me and they're all right!"

Testifying before the New York state legislature during the investigation regarding the proposed film tax, Pat Powers of Universal stated that the stars get all the money.

And now Tom Bedding writes us to enquire why Pat stays in the business then.

How about it, Pat?

Exhibitors' Protective Association

The exhibitors of Indiana are always on the job when it comes to progressive measures that mean better organization and hence better business.

Indianapolis Local No. 1, of the Exhibitors' Protective Association of Indiana, has just elected the following officers: B. V. Barton, president; A. C. Zaring, secretary; Harry Koch, treasurer.

Benjamin Barton, president Indianapolis Local No. 1, Exhibitors' Protective Association of Indiana.

Celebrating the general good will and good feeling among the Indianapolis exhibitors in a Dutch Lunch the other evening, a general good time was had in the Exhibitors' Headquarters, Third floor Lyric Theater building. The new president, B. V. Barton, was inaugurated with a very impressive ceremony. The installation was conducted by Brother August Schmidt and State President, Brother F. J. Rembusch, who invested him with a large brass star (which hung around his neck by a chain), and a gavel so large that it took two hands to lift it.

Mr. Barton is one of the oldest exhibitors in the state; is the present owner of the Alhambra, Isis and Lyric Theaters; is very progressive and practices the sound business principles that make for success.

Vermont Threatens Pictures

The legislature of Vermont is considering two bills bearing upon the regulation of motion pictures.

The first of these has to do with the attendance of children unaccompanied by parent, guardian or some one over 21 years of age. The second has to do with what have been called "unfit pictures." This one says that no vulgar or immoral pictures or those which depict burglary, train robbery and other acts which constitute felony shall be shown in the state. A hearing was held on Tuesday at Montpelier, the capital, at which appeared Orrin G. Cocks advisory secretary of the National Board of Review, and Hiram E. Miller, representing the New England exhibitors, who came from Boston. Mr. Cocks discussed the whole situation regarding motion pictures and the question of censorship.

Following the discussion it appeared to be settled that in the first bill, the minimum age limit would be cut from 15 to 13, and to allow pictures to be shown in educational and philanthropic institutions for children if they were exhibited free of charge. The second bill was modified decidedly by striking out the clauses having to do with burglary, robbery and those crimes which constitute a felony. It was generally felt that the bill was not as satisfactory as a drastic regulatory measure now on the statute books passed in 1892, and having to do with pictures, plays, etc. It has been suggested that if anything is to be enacted in connection with motion pictures, it would be better to have the present law made definite in its application to pictures and picture houses rather than to pass any new resolution. Many persons felt that it was questionable as to whether the bills would be reported out of committee.

THEATERMEN OUST VICE

Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of the Northwest Condemns Showing of Objectionable Films and Asks Co-Operation of Exchanges

In line with the movement seen in various parts of the country, the exhibitors of Minneapolis have taken a praiseworthy stand against objectionable films. Secretary William Koenig of the Exhibitors' Corporation of the Northwest has sent the following letter to the exchanges of that territory.

After a conference with Mayor Van Lear concerning certain pictures being exhibited in the city, the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association went on record as being opposed to any and all vice pictures, or pictures with objectionable titles.

We are certain that every exchange will feel that this organization is working in the right direction to eliminate censorship by going on record as being opposed to such pictures as have been shown in four or five theaters of this city during the past month. It seems strange to us that the exchanges cannot realize that the time for putting out pictures of that sort has passed and that the public is disapproving of picture theaters more and more as the result of that class of pictures being exhibited. We hope that the exchanges will realize that we are trying to bring back the picture patrons by giving them good, clean and wholesome films and we are almost certain that the exchanges handling such subjects will be more than pleased to co-operate with the association in this effort to regain the confidence of the public.

While practically every exhibitor in the Twin Cities is a member of this organization, still there are a few that have not united with us, and some of them think that they can put on pictures of questionable merit and get away with it. This Association has gone on record as being opposed in a body to every picture which has received the least bit of criticism, and our reason for writing you at this time is that the legislature is now in session and unless we all work together we are liable to be put out of business, the innocent suffering for the guilty. You know as well as we do that there are already two bills in the legislature concerning motion pictures and when you get state censorship you will find that you will pay for all the laxness you are now displaying.

As a last appeal this Association requests you to work with us toward eliminating that class of pictures which have caused such articles as have appeared in the daily papers during the last few weeks, and to prevent such articles appearing again.

We will make no more appeals to the exchanges. We are trying to do our part and feel sure the exchanges do not desire a state censor board.

Marie Doro in New York

Marie Doro, who has been starring in Lasky Pictures on the Paramount Program for several months, has arrived in New York and will immediately begin work at the Famous Players studio on "Forget-Me-Nots."

"The Cossack Whip," Edison's five-reel production of James Oppenheim's novel, is a Muscovite tale.

David Horsley has sold his Bostock animals. Of the one hundred and fifty animals Mr. Horsley retains only those which are especially trained for motion picture work. The remainder go to the United States Circus Corporation of which Frank P. Spellman is the head.

National Association Tells Its Aims

BOOKLET PLEDGES ORGANIZATION TO AID EXHIBITOR

"The Duty to Your Business"—A Personal Message

"A PLAIN DUTY: If you are in any way connected with the industry and are not a member [of the National Association], you have neglected an essential duty—The Duty to Your Business, the duty to yourself. If you are a member, it is your duty to get the other fellow geared up to this national pull-together idea."—From new booklet of the NATIONAL ASSOCIATION of the MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY.

One of the handsomest pieces of campaign literature which has ever been gotten out by any commercial organization has just been issued by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. This is a six-page folder in three colors setting forth the "Purpose, Structure and Possibilities" of the Association in good, crisp language calculated to let the motion picture magnate know just what the National Association is doing and expects him to do. Under the general heading, "Plans, Aims and Organization," the following summary of the organization in set forth:

Comprehensive Plan: In the planning of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, advice and direction were furnished by some of the keenest minds in the business, the highest legal authority in such matters and acknowledged experts in organization work. The problem was a large and complex one, for the factors concerned in it were varied and often widely diverse; the network a vast continent. How they have been shaped into a harmonious, constructive and efficient whole—The United States of the Screen—has been demonstrated by the early rapid growth of the National Association and the rate at which memberships are now being received.

Carried to the full extent of its purpose, it will be the largest and most potent organization of its kind in the world.

Power of Membership: Scan the activities and interests of the fifty odd classes eligible to membership. Note the powerful concerns and groups that have membership. Send for the by-laws and read how the operation of the great machine has been planned, not with the design to benefit any particular group, but for the welfare and help of all.

Tell the non-member these six strong points in the purpose of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry as expressed in its charter—that its objects are:

To foster trade and commerce among members, and to promote their business interests.

To reform trade abuses in behalf of members.

To secure freedom from unjust and unlawful exactions.

To diffuse among members accurate and reliable information as to the character and standing of those engaged in any or all branches of the industry.

To settle differences between members and to promote an enlarged and friendly intercourse between those engaged in the industry.

The scope of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry may be learned from a reading of the classes of memberships embraced in its five great divisions, which include more than a million persons actively engaged:

Producer Class No. 1. Features released through distributing companies; those who produce for state right sales and serials; those producing for a program of one, two and three reels; producers of industrial pictures, and film developers and printers.

Exhibitor Class No. 2. The by-laws provide that "membership in good standing in the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America shall carry with it membership in this Association."

Supply and Equipment Class No. 3. Banner and Photograph Manufacturers; Camera, Studio and Laboratory Equipment Dealers, Camera, Studio and Laboratory Equipment Manufacturers and Importers; Carbon Manufacturers and Importers; Exclusive Dealers in Chairs; Chair Manufacturers and Importers; Chemical Manufacturers, Importers and Dealers (Class A. Manufacturers and Importers; Class B. Dealers); Costumers, Prop and Furnishing Manufacturers; Electric Sign Dealers; Electric Sign Manufacturers; Electric Light, Heat and Power Companies; Electric Light Plant Manufacturers; Film Renovators; Film Cleaning Machine Manufacturers; Manufacturers and Importers of Lenses for Cameras and Projectors; Lithograph and Poster Manufacturers; Lobby Display Manufacturers; Motion Picture Machine Dealers; Motion Picture Machine Distributors, Motor Generator, Rotary Converter, Rectifier, Transformer, Arc Controller and Rheostat Manufacturers; Musical Instrument Manufacturers; Operating Booth Manufacturers (asbestos or metal); Printers of Tickets, Folders, Heralds, Small Work; Projection Machine Manufacturers and Importers (Class A. Standard Machine; Class B. Home Machines Including Importers); Raw Film Manufacturers, Importers and Agents; Screen Manufacturers; Ticket Selling machine and device manufacturers; Ventilating Equipment Manufacturers.

Distributor and Exchange Class No. 4. Motion Picture Film Distributors and Exchanges.

General Division Class No. 5. Advertising Agents; Architects and Builders and Sub-Contractors; Bill Posting Companies; Banks and Trust Companies; Camera Men; Employes of Establishments and Plants in any way connected with the Motion Picture Industry; Employment Agents; Exhibition Halls; Insurance Companies; Motion Picture Actors and Actresses other than stars; Motion Picture Stars; Newspapers (daily and Sunday); Program Publishers; Projection Engineers; Publications Devoted Exclusively to Motion Pictures; Studio Directors; Studio Managers; Transportation and Express Companies.

CENSORS TIGHTEN ON PERMITS

Chicago Police Official Tells Exhibitors That "Pink Permit" Law May Be Changed to Forbid Performance

Chicago exhibitors face an open threat of the city censors to attempt the withdrawal of the "pink permit" and prohibit the showing of any film which, otherwise, would be exhibited under the permits which at present require the use of the sign, "No children admitted."

Major M. L. C. Funkhouser, superintendent of police, replies to an exhibitor's letter to the trade with the open challenge that efforts will be made to revise the censorship ordinance to eliminate the "pink permits" if the law on admitting children is not more closely observed. Previously he recommended that the license of the Colonial Theater, at 1350 South Halsted street, owned by Messrs. Marks and Goodman, be revoked for disregard of the "pink permit" law.

A circular letter sent to other exhibitors by the proprietors of the Colonial brought enough pressure upon the police department, that lawyers for the theater owners were able to switch the matter into court. The case is now pending before the municipal court and instead of revoking the license, Major Funkhauser will seek to have the court assess a fine.

The Colonial Theater, controlled by Messrs. Marks and Goodman, is not the Colonial at which D. W. Griffith's productions are being shown. The investigators of the police superintendent's office submitted a list of the names of children from four to seventeen years old whom they said were admitted to a performance of a "pink permit" picture.

Major Funkhauser is the Supreme Censor of Chicago. A representative of Motography asked him if the "pink permits" are not an excellent advertisement for the theaters exhibiting the pictures, thereby defeating the purposes of the censorship body. Many of the films tagged with the colored paper pass other censorship boards unquestioned. He replied to the query:

"If the theaters persist in their disregard for the law and continue to admit children to see these pictures, there will be a public movement started to bring about a change in the ordinance which will entirely prevent the showing of films that our censors do not consider fit for juvenile audiences. There are about twelve theaters that I know of which admit children to see pictures shown under 'pink permits.'"

MORE "BLUE LAWS"

Indiana Legislature Is Asked to Pass Rigid and Costly Censorship Laws—Give Receipts to Charity if Bills Go Through

The Indiana legislature must act upon a proposed censorship law which would in all certainty prove as arduous and costly as the censorship experiment now being tried by reformers in the state of Kansas. The Indiana measure is similar to the Kansas law. It provides for a commission of three censors.

A second bill inimical to the business, though making provision for Sunday performances of picture theaters and circuses, contains features almost as objectionable. Both measures were introduced by Representative Elkenberry. He wants half of the gross receipts from Sunday entertainments to be set aside for charity uses.

Under the provisions of the first bill every film shown in the state would be censored by the commission and, if passed, would be licensed, the license fee to be $2 and the money thus obtained to be used in defraying the expenses of the commission. The bill provides penalties. Two commissioners are to receive $2,000 a year and the chairman $2,500 a year.

The other bill provides for performances on Sunday, and besides provides for the censorship of shows and picture films. The censoring body is to be composed of three persons appointed by the mayor of a city, or the trustees of a town. The bill stipulates that all such shows shall be prohibited unless half of the gross receipts are given to charitable purposes.

The legislative committee of the Indiana Exhibitors' League is preparing a bill covering Sunday performances.

Films to the value of $262,500 were imported from the United States into Great Britain during November, making a total value of $4,147,500 for the eleven months from January 1 last.

Mary Garden with Goldwyn

MARY GARDEN, celebrated internationally as a star of grand opera, has just put her signature to a contract with the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation calling for her appearance in a series of screen productions. She will sail soon for Paris to arrange for the making of the gowns and costumes she will wear in her first picture.

In accepting a commission as a Goldwyn star, Miss Garden claims recognition among the producers as one of the most widely known women in the world. Her notably successful career with the Metropolitan opera in New York, the Hammerstein opera ventures in New York and Philadelphia, and with the Boston and Chicago opera companies, tempts the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation to employ an over-large vocabulary of superlatives in the perliminary announcements of its master stroke.

In a critical sense Mary Garden ranks as one of the foremost dramatic artists which America ever contributed to grand opera. Abroad and at home her vogue has steadily increased. Later announcements will provide exhibitors with information regarding the forthcoming features.

National Reviewers Pass Sex Play

Following out the procedure adopted by the Executive Committee in September, that the National Board of Review should hold a series of private reviews in order to discuss with representative citizens unconnected with the board and whose opinion on public questions is recognized as valuable, the board held a review at Wurlitzer Hall, No. 120 West Forty-first street, New York City, January 24. The picture used for illustrative purposes was the Ivan Films Production "Enlighten Thy Daughter." The discussion centered around the question as to how far the motion picture screen may suitably be used to present for general exhibition questions of fundamental social significance. The Ivan film, presenting, as it does, an argument for sex education, was discussed at length. Several speakers expressed themselves as having brought to the meeting a firm conviction that the motion picture screen could be legitimately limited in the subjects which it might present. After reviewing the picture and taking part in the discussion they had, however, become convinced that the screen should be allowed the same latitude—presupposing, however, delicacy of treatment—as is now accorded to the press and the stage.

Corona Gets Enid Markey

Enid Markey, who has been appearing in Triangle pictures produced by the New York Motion Picture Company, has terminated her contract with that producer and will become a member of the Corona Cinema Company's organization, which is filming a Biblical feature built round the story of Adam and Eve.

Mabel Trunnelle, in "The Master Passion," an Edison feature, accomplishes a strong dramatic characterization.

If possible send in photographs of yourself and your house. Address, The Forum MOTOGRAPHY, Chicago.

A Gold and White Iowa House

A $74,000 picture theater is the gift of F. H. Graaf, to the motion picture patrons of Estherville, Iowa. The new Grand Theater has a population of only 4,123 people to cater to, but it stands to reason it will be a success with a program of the best pictures in the market.

The seating capacity is 1,050, there being 600 seats on the first floor, and 550 in the balcony. In addition to these there are eight sets of boxes, four on each side of the house.

The color scheme is gold and white. The ceiling is plain, and is in marked contrast to the decorations on the wall. Exceptionally attractive is the plaster work on the front of the boxes and the balcony.

The lighting system is of indirect type. Attractive bowls which harmonize with the color scheme of gold and white send out a soft glow. Also there are four large clusters on the ceiling. The exits are all properly lighted, which completes this perfect lighting system.

The projection room is really "different," inasmuch as it possesses the very latest equipment, as well as running hot and cold water, and other conveniences, that have been installed for the convenience of the operator. The room itself is twelve feet long, by sixteen feet wide, and fireproof in every detail.

The stage of the Grand, being sufficiently large, is available for legitimate productions, being fifty feet by thirty feet in length and width, with a seventy-two-foot loft, which holds a gold fibre screen. A $12,000 pipe organ furnishes the music, and a vacuum cleaner completes the advantages. By means of the latter one man can clean the house thoroughly in about sixty minutes.

Detroit's New Regent

The New Regent Theater at Woodward and Harton Avenues in Detroit, owned by William F. Klatt, is now entertaining about 3,000 guests every evening. The Regent is the fifth in a chain of houses owned by William F. Klatt and is the largest, having a seating capacity of about 3,100. Charles W. Porter is house manager, and C. A. McVickers is general director.

The official opening for the public took place the day following the private one, at which there were 3,500 invited guests, and the theater was crowded at all performances. The policy of the Regent is performances 2, 7 and 9 p. m., with prices at 15, 20, 25 and 50 cents downstairs, and 10 to 35 cents upstairs. Matinee prices are from 10 to 25 cents. A Metro program opened the theater, the attractions being, "God's Half Acre," and a Sidney Drew comedy. The Hearst weekly was also run, besides orchestra and organ selections and vocal solos.

The color scheme of this beautiful playhouse is ivory gray with gold and blue carried out in the wall and ceiling decoration, while the dark, warm green of the chair upholstery, makes a background completely harmonizing with the dainty combination. The chairs are placed far enough apart for real comfort. Washed air, modern fire exits and other devices add to the comfort and safety of the patrons.

The large orchestra is in the capable hands of Ivan Rudisill. The theater is also equipped with a Kimball pipe organ. On opening night many beautiful floral pieces were on exhibition in the foyer, being personal gifts from exchange managers, theater owners and friends of Mr. Klatt.

The Apollo of Kansas City

The career of the Apollo Theater of Kansas City, Missouri, is an interesting one, as it pictures the development of a fourth-rate house to one of the highest class.

The house was thrown into the hands of the receiver while under the name of the Fisher in 1911. In April, 1912, a quit claim was purchased and arrangements made to operate the place by Joseph Steibel and F. I. Buckingham. The receiver was discharged and Mr. Steibel changed the name to the Apollo and went to work as its manager.

Mr. Steibel resigned on account of ill health in December, 1915, and relinquished his interest to J. W. Oldham and Fred T. Scott, formerly owner of the Glory, a nearby house.

The Apollo Theater of today is one of the show places of Kansas City. The lobby is beautiful, has four double exit doors; large mirrors, each two feet apart, form part of the wall running the entire length

This House—the Apollo of Kansas City—has had an interesting history.

Exhibitor Strong for Motography

One of the live exhibitors who came into Chicago on business during the past week was B. H. Cooper, who presides over the Park Theater in the college town of Champaign, Illinois.

"Do you know one of the reasons why I like Motography?" he said. "It's on account of those pages telling what business the different films did for various exhibitors. By golly, I read those—every one of them—and they help a deuce of a lot in making bookings."

of the lobby. The color scheme of the theater is gold merging into ivory. The walls are hung in festoons with the names of many of the great artists overhung in panels.

A ventilating system has been installed that completely changes the air every minute and a half.

A small orchestra furnishes unusually good music for the house.

Tell the Truth in Advertising

Even though trade papers are almost unavoidably guilty at times, we say "Amen" to the following splendid editorial to patrons from the program of the Stillman Theater of Cleveland. We know of no better way than through such an argument to gain the confidence of patrons, then to follow out the idea in the pictures presented:

SUPERLATIVES

The Stillman Theater has not yet announced to its patrons that it offers "the biggest film of the year" or "a masterpiece of photoplay" or any other undeserved or ridiculous superlatives. Neither has it proclaimed itself "the most beautiful theater in America"—or in Cleveland, even; nor talked about how much it cost, nor spoken of its programs as the best that can be bought, or the best in the city.

We believe that the picture-play will never be at its best till it discards the superlatives. We believe that even in cases where superlatives are justified by the facts they will not be believed, and are therefore injurious.

From the current issue of a trade paper we cull a few descriptive phrases from the advertisements of different productions by different producers:

"The greatest cinema spectacle in the world."

"The most magnificent spectacle drama in the history of the screen." (Also it "eclipses the possibilities of the spoken drama.")

"The year's most novel and daring achievement in filmdom."

"The greatest super-feature of the year."

"The greatest detective drama ever produced on the stage or screen."

"A feature . . . play that stands out pre-eminently in the film field."

Can it be possible that some of these statements are inaccurate—for it is certainly impossible that they all be true. And if that is the case will we not be cautious about believing that one program offers "the greatest stars on earth in the greatest plays yet filmed"—particularly as none of these stars or plays are among the attractions described by the group of superlatives just quoted? Further, it is still another producer who offers an actor described as the "crowned king of the screen," starring with the "queen of motion pictures"—and we'll register a guess right here that the lady so described is not the lady you thought of when you read that phrase. And please bear in mind that all these laudatory statements are published over the signature of the company fathering them; they aren't mere obiter dicta; they're evidently published—and intended to be taken—as serious statements.

One more little group: You may be interested to know that though one offering is "the greatest box-office success in the history of the screen" it is quite another that is "the biggest and safest proposition ever offered in the motion picture business," while another "protects, secures, guards against any influence that tends to deprive your box office of even a single ticket." And all the time (but elsewhere) "the sweeping on-rush of bookings for the mighty (we won't name it here) program stands unparalleled."

And we give you our word that we're leaving out what we consider the gem of them all—because it's too long to reprint.

We mention all this because we want you to know that we're "agin it." When we can offer you a play that we think is a good play—and we don't expect to offer any other kind—we won't tell you it's the greatest production the screen has ever seen. Even if we thought it a correct statement we wouldn't say it; what would be the use—you wouldn't believe it! We'll try to make our offerings sound attractive, of course; but we'll stick to what we honestly believe to be the truth about them, and if that doesn't bring you to see them we'll at least have the big satisfaction of knowing that we didn't lure you here under false pretenses—and send you away dissatisfied. We're going to be mighty cautious with superlatives.

Why? Because we want your confidence in our advertising statements. We want you to believe what we say about Stillman offerings. And the only way we know to get your confidence, and your belief, is to be truthful in our promises.

New House Out of an Old

At an expenditure of several thousand dollars, the Grand motion picture theater at Beaver, Pennsylvania, recently purchased by Samuel Goodman, has been completely remodeled.

Within one week, this miraculous change from an undesirable surrounding to one of the most harmonious and safe theaters in the western part of the state was effected. It is a Grand that bears no more resemblance to the old theater than does Christmas to the Fourth of July.

Ease of entrance is the most noticeable change. A flight of six steps that formerly led to the house has been cut away and the patron of the theater will walk directly from the pavement into the main body of the house. The floor has a drop of four and a half feet from the lobby in the rear to the orchestra pit, enabling every person in a seat to have a full view of the screen. Special attention has been paid to the line of vision and it has been pronounced perfect by experts.

Business Out-grows Theater

F. K. Wilk, former manager of the Palace Theater in Syracuse, Nebraska, reports that his patronage has out-grown the seating capacity of the Palace. In order to cater to the comfort of his patrons, he is now equiping a new theater, which will be the leading picture house of the town. This new theater will have the best of service, and will be opened to the general public March 5.

Robert Harron is being featured in the Triangle Fine Arts drama, "The Bad Boy." Mildred Harris, one of the fifteen year old Fine Arts leading ladies, plays opposite to Harron.

Reproduction in miniature of a newspaper ad recently run in the Buffalo papers by Manager Edward L. Hyman of the Victoria Theater of that city. This ad, being hand drawn, will stand out on the page much better than the regular type set ad. It might, however, be made so as to be more easily read.

"Split Reel" Notes for Theater Men

HOW OTHERS ARE STEERING THE SHIP

MARCUS LOEW opened his twenty-ninth theater in Greater New York when he threw open the doors of the Forty-second Street Theater to the public a short time ago.

Beginning February 1, the Motion Picture Journal, of Dallas, Texas, will be issued weekly instead of monthly.

More than 15,000 feet of motion picture films showing special operations have been prepared by a Baltimore medical college for use in teaching surgery.

"Gloria's Romance," the Kleine serial starring Billie Burke, was released at the end of November in Australian states. Billie Burke is a popular favorite with Australian picture folk.

Douglas Fairbanks in "Manhattan Madness" has taken Australian fans by storm. This popular comedian is looked upon as first to any motion picture comedian shown in Australia.

The government's war tax on amusements in Australia is now effective. No appeals are to be heard by the federal treasurer for a period of six months, and no doubt in that time many shows will be closed.

A special matinee for children every Saturday, consisting of two performances an afternoon, is a feature of the Walbrook Theater, one of the largest and most attractive motion picture houses in Baltimore.

The exhibitors of Waco, Houston and San Antonio, Texas, recently organized, at San Antonio. F. Raymond was elected president; Jack Burk, vice president; C. R. Wyler, secretary, and W. J. Lytle, treasurer.

A moving picture syndicate, headed by Jacob Fabian, of Paterson, is negotiating for property on Broad street, opposite the city hall, Newark, New Jersey, on which to build a theater. The transaction will involve $500,000.

Harry Colf, manager of a theater at McAlester, Oklahoma, was fined $50 in the city court at Dallas, Texas, on a charge of exhibiting a film that had been condemned by the censor board. Mr. Colf's attorney appealed the case to the county court.

The Hobart Opera House was burned at Hobart, Okla., January 15, with loss of $20,000. The amount of insurance carried on the structure is not known. The building was being conducted by F. C. Thompson, showing pictures and vaudeville. No one was in the building.

Exhibitors of Fort Worth, Texas, have formed an organization with P. C. Levy, president; H. C. Cotter, vice president; Jos. Phillips, treasurer; W. S. Cresty, secretary; O. F. Gould, chairman executive board. They are affiliated with the Texas Amusement Managers' Association.

The Hippodrome Film Theater, at Seventh and Washington streets, Covington, Kentucky, was destroyed recently by fire, in addition to the Nordmeyer and Berding Flour Mill, adjoining. The loss is estimated at $45,000, with $18,000 insurance. Defective wiring is believed to have been responsible.

Legal proceedings have been instituted at Galveston, Texas, by Ernest E. Gagnon, owner of the Texas state rights for the production of "The Garden of Knowledge," against a Waco, Texas, exchangeman. Mr. Cagnon charges that the defendant has been usurping his rights to this film.

Charles Steiner, controlling the New Fourteenth Street Theater, New York, and who is building the new photo-play house on the East Side, has obtained first run service on Anita Stewart's latest production, "The Girl Philippa," paying a record sum for a four-day showing. He will show the film on February 10, 11, 12 and 13.

Mildred Champagne, known as a playwright and newspaper woman, has become manager of a string of motion picture and vaudeville theaters through New England. Her Boston house, which will be known as the Mildred Champagne Theater, was formerly the Scenic Temple. In connection with her theaters she will conduct a dramatic school.

The management of the Strand Theater of New York has increased the salary of every uniformed employe in the theater, and at the same time has given orders that no employe must receive any gratuity. The increase of salary, which is quite liberal, is calculated to alleviate any temptation on the part of the employe to receive tips from the patrons.

A contest film in which the cast has been chosen from among its readers is being made at the Essanay studios for the Chicago Herald. The stars, staresses and others appearing in the picture are the winners of a voting contest conducted by the newspaper. The use of the Essanay cameras and studio was obtained through the courtesy of George K. Spoor, president of the company.

Nat Stone has notified Building Inspector Harper of Milwaukee that he intends to erect a $100,000 building in the downtown district for the housing of motion picture films. A number of firms were ordered out of the Merrill building last week by the inspector on the ground that the building was not suitable for the housing of inflammable articles. Mr. Stone said he had not determined upon the location of the building.

The program of the Rialto of New York will be handled in a different manner in the future. Beginning at 4:45 o'clock in the afternoon no pictorial feature will be duplicated until the 7:30 o'clock show in the evening. This necessitates the introduction of three added films, which are run at this performance only. A two-reel Essanay feature, a Paramount Pictograph and an extra topical digest form the added subjects on this week's bill.

Isidore Feibleman, legal representative, and Meyer Efroymson, treasurer of the Circle Theater, Indianapolis, last week visited the home offices of Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. and were piloted through the studios of Greater Vitagraph. Mr. Efroymson said that the new theater which his company is erecting in Dayton, Ohio, to be called "The Dayton," will be one of the finest homes of motion pictures in the world.

Ascher Brothers, whose chain of theaters includes expensive houses in all parts of Chicago, have introduced vaudeville at their President Theater. It was in this house that Ascher Brothers achieved the distinction of being the first exhibitors to establish a ten-cent admission policy. The competition has been greatly increased by the erection of other theaters in the vicinity, resulting in the change to mixed vaudeville and picture offerings.

Very few people have ever seen the inside of an organ, showing the different sized wooden and metal pipes. The management of the Stanley Theater of Philadelphia originated an idea, a musical idea, that was indeed very clever and pleasant. In the intermission, the organist played a Scotch Fantasy, and the stage drops were pulled up, showing the big Stanley organ back stage. The border lights were thrown on, and the stage remained this way until the finish of the number. The audience applauded vigorously.

At the Strand Theater, New York, George Beban was seen last week in "His Sweetheart," a new drama written by himself and Lawrence McCloskey. Another German military picture was also presented, showing German detention camps where Mohammedan prisoners are kept. Victor Moore appeared in his new comedy entitled "A Honeyless Honeymoon." Other pictures of interest were "Butterflies and Bees in Colors" and "The Strand Topical Review."

In the opening of the Vassar Theater, Poughkeepsie, New York, has its first theater managed by a woman. Mrs. A. M. Davis, wife of the well known manager of the Morgan House, one of the city's leading hotels, has charge of the theater. The new house is decorated in green and old rose. It is said that International, Mutual, Bluebird, Pathe and Popular films will be shown. The opening photoplay was "Ocean Waif" and the house was crowded for the three performances, which is the policy of the house. The seating capacity is 800.

As a fitting opening for their Strand Theater, recently erected in Westfield, Mass., at a cost of $125,000, Goldstein Brothers arranged a double bill and gave the receipts of the night to the Noble hospital. Governor Samuel W. McCall, many of the local officials, senators and members of the State Legislature attended the formal opening as guests of the management. Arrangements have been made for the new theater for vaudeville bookings from the Loew circuit in addition to motion pictures, with a change of bill every Monday and Thursday.

The Maine Theaters, Inc., controlling nine theaters in the New England field north of Boston, will increase its circuit to eleven houses this spring. A new theater, seating 1,400, will be erected at Waterville, Maine, on a site belonging to former Governor Haines. The structure will be of brick and cement. A second theater, the Playhouse, at Lowell, Mass., has been leased. The lessee is the Lowell Theater Company, which is owned by the Maine Theater, Inc. The Merrimack Square Theater, at Lowell, is also operated by the Lowell Theater Company.

John A. Bell, manager of the Bijou Theater, Akeley, Minnesota, believes in letting the public know what is going on at his theater, and conceives many clever business-getting schemes. To introduce "The Secret of the Submarine" he employed the not original but always effective form of handbill printed on wallpaper with the inscription "We are tearing paper off the walls to make room for the crowds that will be at the Bijou Theater to see 'The Secret of the Submarine,' which will mark the beginning of the greatest serial ever run in the village of Akeley."

In many of the country districts of Sydney, N. S. W., Australia, floods have been very frequent and at Forbes in Central New South Wales, the whole town was under water recently. R. V. Brookes, an exhibitor of that town, has been congratulated for the way in which he assisted in rescue work. During one part of the great storm many lives were in danger. Mr. Brookes reached his show, started the dynamo going, and coupled up two of the powerful searchlights. He mounted the searchlights on the top of the show and displayed them down the main street of the town throughout the night, assisting greatly in the rescue of a number of citizens.

"The Cherokee," a five-part picture filmed at Muskogee, Oklahoma, was released at Muskogee last week and proved a popular success. Among the future productions Mr. Davis now has in mind are "No Man's Land," in which Pawnee Bill (Major Lilly) will be starred; also "The Love Chance," a five-part society drama, and "Prowlers of the Night," a four-reel relation of Davis' experience as a newspaper reporter in New York City. Mr. Davis has announced that within a short time a new studio will be opened up in Muskogee. Several of those who took part in the production of the Cherokee will become members of the regular producing staff, and to these will be added artists of national reputation, he says.

Mayor Woodman of Los Angeles has been approached by civic workers who wish him to recommend that all picture theaters of the city be placed under police control. The immediate purpose sought by the advocates of regulation is the elimination of suggestive posters from in front of certain downtown theaters, against which protests have been directed. The ultimate effects of police censorship and control are overlooked in the desire to improve the tone of the advertising displays of a certain class of theaters. The disregard of some exhibitors for the general welfare of the business threatens even to bring out a crop of state censorship measures.

The very latest metropolitan step is about to be taken in Kansas. Wichita will have an all night picture theater providing a suitable location can be found. The venture will be taken by Arthur Ford, proprietor of the Marple Theater. Other cities have perpetual picture shows and Mr. Ford believes Wichita is large enough to support a similar amusement venture. Plans have not yet been perfected but Mr. Ford's idea is to open a picture house and run continual performances from noon until 4 o'clock each morning. The venture is in the nature of a gamble, and he will not take the chance with the Marple, a well established house with large patronage.

The value of the children's interest in the picture theater is appreciated and taken advantage of by Manager Pittmon of the Rosebud Theater, Portland, Oregon. To attract their interest, recently, he advised them, in an advertisement, to watch the direction of the wind on a certain Saturday. On that day he sent up a number of balloons, each with a ticket attached. Groups of excited children followed them to earth. When this manager ran the first episode of "The Shielding Shadow," he announced that he would admit free any child under fifteen who whispered to him "the pass-word," which, as could be guessed by the advertisement, was the title of the serial. As a result of the interest thus won, many followed the story throughout its entire length.

The stage employes and motion picture operators of Sheboygan, Wisconsin, have organized a union, Local 476, International Alliance Theatrical Stage Employes and Motion Picture Machine Operators of the United States and Canada. Paul Spoerke and Charles Keating of Local 235, Fond du Lac, gave the obligation. The officers elected were as follows: President, Herbert Fredericks; vice-president, Art Breuchel; recording secretary, Otis Gierke; secretary and treasurer, Al. Schieble; business agent, Tom Kernen; sergeant-at-arms, Al. Bindler. Executive Board: F. Kraemer, W. Baartz and W. Matson. Delegates to Labor Central Body: Julian Silverthorne, Tom Kernen and W. Knocke. All of the downtown theaters are represented in the organization.

Alice Joyce returned to the Rialto Theater, New York, last week, in "The Courage of Silence," a new Blue Ribbon Feature from the Vitagraph studios. The story is one which has one of the scenes at the climax of the picture directed by Mr. Rothapfel, of the Rialto, who went down to the Vitagraph studios the previous week for that special purpose. Though it was his first effort in that line, the scene as he staged it turned out to be most effective.

"The Diary of a Pup," a laughable novelty in which a real puppy is the chief performer, furnished the comedy of the bill.

Amazing views of Mt. Kilauea, Hawaii, in eruption constituted the educational feature. The topical digest contained good news features.

The management of the Rialto Theater of New York City have made arrangements with Alexander Powell, war correspondent, author whose articles in Scribner's magazine, the Saturday Evening Post, the London Daily Mail and other publications of like standing have given him an international reputation as a writer, to appear in person for a week. Mr. Powell is to give a series of talks accompanied by pictures taken in the war zone. Mr. Powell made a tour of the trenches and will tell his hearers of the things he saw. Mr. Powell is the only correspondent who has been granted the facilities to make a tour of that sort and his description of conditions in the front line trenches will give an idea of actual battle that no photograph could convey.

Monogram Films Enlarge Forces

Monogram Films which is producing the Mutual "Featurettes," a series of fifteen two-reel dramas under the general title "Adventures of Shorty Hamilton," has found it necessary to add materially to its working forces.

One of the principal additions is a second operating company with William (Billy) Parsons as director, Wilbur McGaugh as assistant director and Herbert Glennon in charge of the camera. Mr. Parsons, who is well known in the film business, has had a wide experience in a directorial capacity, having been formerly connected with the New York Motion Picture Company, Kalem, Monrovia, Graftons and Fine Arts.

Company No. 1 has also been augmented by engagement of J. Edwin Robbins to assist Director "Bob" Gray. Robert V. Doran is another new member in the ranks. He will be cinematographer for company No. 1.

Prize for Exhibitors' Ads

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., makes an offer of cash prizes to the exhibitors of Bluebird photoplays who prove that they possess "advertising brains." Two prizes will be awarded to the two exhibitors now having books of Bluebird productions, who do the best advertising on these features during February. The company will present $60 to the manager who conducts the most effective general advertising campaign, and $40 to the exhibitor who devises the best lobby displays of Bluebird pictures.

Horsley Engages Crompton

David Horsley, producer of the Cub Comedies for the Mutual Film Corporation, as a first move in surrounding himself with capable people to put on more pictures after the present plans, has arranged for the re-engagement of Frank Crompton as technical director of all David Horsley productions.

Frank Crompton is accepted as an authority on technical construction in the motion picture business, in which he has been engaged for the past nine years.

Burger Leaves International

The work of consolidation of business of International with Pathe having been completed, J. K. Burger no longer remains with the International Film Service at the head of their exchange organization. Just what his future movements will be, Mr. Burger, who is known as "Simon Legree" Burger to exchangemen and exhibitors alike, refuses to state definitely, but he says this much: "I am going to remain in the film business and in a position bigger than ever."

FREE MODEL MATINEES

Six Theaters in District of Columbia Try Plan of Woman's Club in Staging Successful Juvenile Programs

When a committee of women in Washington, D. C., interested themselves in pictures for juvenile audiences and started a series of free model movie matinees, they did much to get the children interested in the pictures also.

The third model matinee was held in January and the six theaters that co-operated with the women played to capacity houses. Estimating the worth of the matinees from the standpoint of its advertising advantages, entirely aside from the merits or drawbacks of the undertaking, the value in future admissions—"comebacks" they call it merchandising—might be variously calculated.

The matinees were staged under the auspices of the Federation of Women's Clubs, in its campaign for cleaner pictures for children in the District of Columbia. The theaters participating and the films shown were: Avenue Grand, "The Bugle Call"; Apollo, "The Three Godfathers"; Lyric, "Little Mary Sunshine"; Olympic, "Let Katy Do It"; Victoria, "Rumpelstiltskin," and Howard (colored), "Dawn of Freedom."

Mrs. Locher, chairman of the committee, Mrs. Court F. Wood and Miss Julia Lathrop made tours of inspection. High school cadets and Boy Scouts assisted in the handling of the children.

MUTUAL RELEASES

Ann Murdock, Now with Empire, Plays in "Where Love Is"—Kerrigan Appears in "The Old Sheriff"

Ann Murdock appears for the first time on the program of the Mutual Film Corporation. The vehicle chosen for Miss Murdock's Mutual debut is entitled "Where Love Is," an adaptation of William J. Locke's novel of the same name, released February 5.

The story of "Where Love Is," revolves around the English aristocracy and deals with the struggles of a young artist to attain fame and a rising politician to secure a seat in Parliament. Henry Stanford plays the leading male role and Shirley Mason and Bigelow Cooper have important roles. Others in the cast include Edith Wright, Helen Strickland, Mabel Trunelle, William Warsworth and Raymond McKee.

The fourth of the Mutual "Featurettes," the two-reel "Adventures of Shorty Hamilton" stories, is another release of February 5.

In "Shorty Goes Insane" Shorty returns from college and starts to work again on Arrowhead Ranch.

Two Short Comedies

Two one-reel comedies instilled fun into the week's program. George Ovey is the comic man in the one-reel Cub comedy, "Jerry's Big Raid." Goldie Colwell and George George assist. The Vogue comedy, February 11, bears the name "The Musical Marvel," with Ben Turpin figuring as a piano-player in a western "honky-tonk" or dance hall.

J. Warren Kerrigan, George Periolat, Pauline Bush and Jack Richardson appear in the American contribution scheduled for February 10, entitled "The Old Sheriff." This one-reel drama teems with the life of the west in the days of outlaws.

The seventh chapter of the Mutual photo-novel "The Perils of Our Girl Reporters" is added to the program this week. "The Smite of Conscience" is the title of this two-reel story which tells of a special writer on a New York newspaper who chooses this means of being away from her dissolute husband.

Tours in the Land of War

Number 14 of the Mutual "Tours Around the World," showing "Picturesque Landscapes of Holland," "The Temples of Luxor, Egypt," and "The Rocky Coast of Dalmatia," was on the program for February 6. Now that the allies have promised Dalmatia to Italy, this dependency of Austria comes into prominence in the world's news.

The Mutual Weekly with its collection of interesting news notes came out February 7, and also No. 74 of "See America First," which is devoted to "The Mississippi Coast." On the same reel is a Gaumont Kartoon Komic animated for the screen by Harry Palmer, called "Old Roue Visualizes."

Uncle Sam's Defenders No. 6, issued on February 9, opens with scenes aboard the mine layer, the San Francisco, and a floating machine shop which accompanies the ship and makes repairs.

Reel Life number 41, February 11, rounds out the program. The four subjects making up this reel include "Queer Fish With Shells," "The Diary of an Egg," "Everyday Life Savers" and "Hypnotizing an Alligator."

Unicorn Reorganized

A reorganization of the Unicorn Film Company of New York is to be effected. A petition of bankruptcy has been filed and the receivers, I. Schlank, president of the company, and John L. Little, have been appointed. A disputed attachment by the American Film Laboratory is said to be the cause of the case.

Unicorn will continue to do business as usual. It owns twenty-nine exchanges throughout the country and these will be maintained as before.

The Unicorn Company was incorporated in February, 1916, in the State of Delaware with a capitalization of $1,250,000. Its officers are I. Schlank, president; Fred D. Murphy, vice-president; Harry Palmer, secretary, and E. A. Chase, treasurer. Mr. Schlank is understood to be the principal stockholder.

Fairbanks Cheers 'Em Up

Douglas Fairbanks made his initial bow to an absolutely new audience a few nights ago. None of them had ever seen "Old Doc Cheerful" hurdle tables or smilingly vault high fences. Manager Von Herberg, treasurer of the Greater Theaters Corporation, who operates four of the largest picture theaters in the northwest, secured a copy of "The Habit of Happiness" which he exhibited in the Firlands Seattle Sanitarium, hoping to cheer up the residents, many of whom are awaiting the call of Potter's Field. The Fairbanks psychological comedy had a remarkable effect on its audience.

The feature film "Where Are My Children" has established a record for attendance in Sydney, Australia. For the first twelve days, with four shows a day, there were 65,000 paid admissions.

Consult Your Captains

THE exhibitors are the men on the firing line. They are the ones in touch with the public and they know the public demand, at least so far as anyone can know it.

Therefore, from the exhibitors should come the information which moulds the character of the products of the various makers of films.

But there is at present no complete and direct means of contact between the exhibitor and the producer. The only point at which the showman is in contact with the manufacturing phases of the industry is the exchange. On the face of the situation, it would seem that the channel between the exhibitor and the exchange functions for the transference of the consumer demand to the producer. But under present conditions it is not, because of the inadequate and little-used channel between the exchange and producer.

A couple of weeks ago the manager of a Chicago exchange, representing one of the biggest producers in the industry, said to a representative of MOTOGRAPHY: "It's getting so that I have to ask you if I want to know when any of our stars are coming through here. They don't let us know anything much that's going on, for that matter."

Then he proceeded to emphasize in vigorous language the fact that there is much lost motion, and much waste and inefficiency, because the producers do not co-operate more closely with the exchanges.

And he was not the only distribution manager who has expressed those sentiments to MOTOGRAPHY. The feeling is general.

The only exceptions are one or two important corporations who have been wise enough to work out and install complete connecting gears between the machinery of the producing end and that of the local distributors. The recent business conventions held by these two large concerns, at which all the exchangemen were present and given free voice of their experiences and convictions, is a move in the right direction.

Exchange managers know what sells and what doesn't. And, so far as any human being can know, they know why. Because they are in close touch with the exhibitors, the exchange men know of conditions in their sections of the country which are of continual value to the producer.

Often the principal factors and elements found to be working in one territory will also be found to exist in other sections. Provision for the quick and complete transfer of the details of the exchange's information and convictions to the producer would, in the opinion of the majority of exchangemen, do more right now than any other one action to eliminate waste and misunderstanding and to increase the earnings of every film, for the producer, the distributor and the man who runs the picture in his house.

One exchange manager, for instance, says that he can book plays on title alone and suggests that the producer submit a list of titles for each coming production to the exchanges and use the name that gets the largest vote. There are any number of other ways in which the exchangeman can be of real and constant service to the "factory" headquarters.

Organization, in every department, is what makes an effective army—of either workers or warriors. The generals and ammunition makers have got to know the conditions on the firing lines.

Why not look to your lines of communication? Your distribution captains can tell you something about whether or not the projectiles you are furnishing for the projectors are bringing home the bacon.

Who Pays the Freight?

STUDENTS of commercial economics, as well as ordinary business men, are pretty well aware that the ultimate consumer always pays the freight. The word "freight," of course, in this connection signifies delivery by any means — express, mail, messenger or motor car. But whatever the means and whatever the merchandise, the final buyer pays the charges.

Evidently a good many exhibitors are not aware of this simple principle of business. The number of theater managers who write us in an indignant vein because they are expected to pay the express charges on their film service is quite astonishing.

This failure to analyze the costs of doing business, as related to the charges, is by no means uncommon. Both men and women, educated and illiterate, refuse every day to recognize the fact that they must pay for all the activities of those who sell them goods.

Take the ordinary grocery store as an example. It is perfectly obvious, on the least application of reasoning, that the customers of that store must pay the salary of the bookkeeper who figures their running accounts; the wages of the order taker and of the delivery boys; the expense of maintaining a horse and wagon or a motor truck or a fleet of them. The store which makes its customers pay cash and carry home their purchases can always undersell the store that will execute orders of the lady who calls up for a cake of yeast and wants it right away—charged to her account.

The man who gets a grocer's bill of fifty dollars the first of the month pays it without a thought. If the bill was itemized to indicate forty-four dollars for groceries and six dollars for delivery charges, a mighty wail of protest would sound. The charge is there, all right; but if it is invisible it gets by.

It is like the new traveling man who put his laundry bill on his expense account. "Here!" exclaimed his boss as he scratched it off. "Don't let me see that kind of a charge on there next week." And the following week the boss said with a grin, "Well, I don't see that fool laundry item on here this time." "No," admitted the traveling man, "you don't see it; but it's there just the same!"

Exhibitors, in common with other mortals, seem to like the narcotic effect of having unpleasant facts concealed from them, or at least sugar coated. Every thinking man who meditates at all upon the subject realizes that he is doing his invisible share in supporting all the traffic on the streets and on the rails. The only thing he objects to is having the figures itemized on his bills.

The exhibitors of this country must pay not only the production costs of all films, but they must pay for the transportation of negatives to headquarters, the distribution of positive prints to the exchanges, and the delivery and return of prints between the exchanges and the theaters. All but the latter are included in the price of service. Whether the rental price includes the cost of delivery from the exchange to the theater, and then from the theater to the exchange, is a mere detail. Somebody has got to pay it. If the exchange man pays it, it increases his cost of doing business; and the only way he can get it back is through the price of film rental. In the end the exhibitor pays it always, of course.

It may be more soothing to the nerves to have the carriage charges concealed in the rental price; but it does not eliminate them or even diminish them. Indeed, there is always the chance that the distributor can make a little profit even on the transportation charges when he is allowed to conceal them.

The exhibitor who, by aggressive protests, can get his cartage paid without increasing his rental price, is really to be congratulated. In that case, of course, the other less fortunate and less pugnacious exhibitors pay his transportation bills. Far be it from us to discourage the kicker who can actually cash in on his kicks. But as a general principle, the exhibitor who pays his own express bills and then insists on a service rate on that basis is just as well off and maybe a little better.

How the Producer Can Aid the Exhibitor

BY H. C. HOLAH, MANAGER CHICAGO HERALD MOTION PICTURE DEPARTMENT
Former Manager Chicago Pathe Exchange

THE manufacturers and the exchanges are awakening to the vital need for co-operation in satisfying the public demand for good features. The exhibitor, who is at the point of contact between the the film manufacturer and the motion picture public, is appealing for aid in his endeavor to meet the new conditions that have arisen within the industry.

New policies are being inaugurated by the manufacturer and exchanges in their endeavor to aid the exhibitor and help him over one of the most serious pitfalls in his business. The exhibitor has been, it is true, the object of solicitude on the part of the exchanges, but so far little has been done to really aid him.

The manufacturer and exchanges must now recognize the necessity for educating the public to an appreciation of the better class of films. The new movement, one of the most progressive steps for the betterment of the motion picture industry, has been the utilizing of newspaper campaigns for the creation of public interest in film productions. When a picture has been advertised well and the public has been sufficiently interested to respond once, the picture, if it has been up to standard, has been a success from the exhibitor's standpoint.

H. C. Holah, who suggests co-operative advertising plan.

The exhibitor is the one to whom it is left to overcome the apathy and indifference of the picture public towards the expensive feature that he has secured for their gratification. To do this, he can only use a limited sum of money. The amount he can spend in attracting people to his theater is all too frequently insufficient to serve his purpose. But this same sum which he expends if hooked up with the larger sums spent by the manufacturer would have stirred public interest to a point beyond the lukewarm stage.

Producers Should Advertise to Public

If the manufacturer would advertise directly to the public through the medium of the newspapers, he would by this means secure the interest of the people to whom eventually the film appeal must be made. In other words, the great bulk of the picture going public must be educated to a point where they will go to their neighborhood theater and ask for the particular picture in which they have been interested by a comprehensive newspaper campaign. When a manufacturer has introduced a picture to the picture public in this fashion, all that remains for the individual exhibitor to do is to hook up his individual newspaper advertising with the manufacturers.

Perhaps you think that the average manufacturer would be foolish to spend a lot of money in advertising his film productions to the general public. But as a matter of fact, I know of one instance at least where this policy was successful. An ordinary feature was placed on exhibition in a downtown theater in Chicago—an extensive newspaper campaign introduced the picture to the general public and the coming of the film obtained almost as much publicity as the average circus. The 25c admission charge, where 10c had been the rule, did not dampen the enthusiasm of the fans.

The crowds waiting for admission daily were enormous, and the picture remained for practically two months. This demand was created solely among the picture public by the newspapers' publicity given the production. The cultivation and development of the motion picture market means that the branch manager and the exhibitor must be more closely united. Each branch manager should be allowed a certain percentage of the rental price of features for newspaper advertising. He could more effectively distribute this money, because he is better acquainted with exhibitors' individual bookings and local conditions—the exhibitor being expected, of course, to spend an equivalent amount. This, I believe, would be the ideal incentive for closer co-operation between producer and exhibitor, and in turn would prove of benefit to both, because it would hold the older patrons as well as creating new.

Volume of business is what the exchange needs and they will get it if a more liberal policy is pursued in the matter of granting power to the branch managers. Governed by local conditions and intimate touch with the various factors that influence the individual exhibitor, the branch manager can best aid in solving the exhibitors' problems. He alone can help the exhibitors in their endeavors to meet the bigger rental charges that the manufacturers find necessary to charge. Fewer changes means lower rental charges—longer runs means better business for the exhibitor—better business for the exhibitor means that he will pay a better price for the films he does book—and the picture going public will in turn patronize the individual exhibitor who gives them the best the market affords. Every branch of the industry is affected by the prosperity of the exhibitor—producer or manufacturer—exchanges and branch houses; all these are vitally concerned in solving the exhibitors' problems.

A Good Example

Here is an example of the extraordinary power wielded by the newspaper advertising directed toward the picture public. One neighborhood theater decided to book a recent big release for a three day run. It was his first experience in booking for more than one day. He gave the exchange booker his dates and was advised that his competitor who controlled three houses wanted the picture for four days, splitting the time between all three of their theaters. This would have given a one day showing in the first mentioned house's neighborhood. Undismayed, he took a chance, and booked for four consecutive days. He was paying a hundred dollars a day and in a neighborhood theater at that. His partner thought that the manager had lost his mind, but the problem was solved by the use of one hundred dollars in newspaper advertising on this picture. The picture showed to capacity house every day. Now there are never more than three changes in this house every week and the film rental is never less than $500 a week. This manager is a consistent newspaper advertiser—he is getting the business—he is using but three changes a week—and he credits the newspapers' advertising which he uses with the success he has obtained.

When the film manufacturer and exchange man thoroughly realize the necessity for adequately aiding the exhibitor and are willing to do so, they will seek the most effective medium for reaching and interesting their market and his. They will find it necessary to help him when helping themselves—and the fact that he enjoys prosperity because the increased patronage will mean increased prosperity all the way down the line.

They seek additional business. They are going after it. They will get it, but the medium they will use will not be poster displays nor hand bills nor any of the commonly considered mediums, but will be the medium which has proved the most effective.

"TOO MANY EXCHANGES"

W. A. Brady Testifies That Eight or Ten Firms Exist in Many Localities Where One Should be Enough.

"The distribution of films in this country is a joke," declared William A. Brady of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, while testifying before a committee of the New York legislature recently. P. A. Powers of the Universal related facts and figures pertaining to the production of films by his company, and asserted that legislative attacks will result harmfully to the industry. Interesting extracts from their testimony are printed below. Mr. Brady testified as follows:

I have observed that during the past year and a half the public interest in pictures has decreased, but the demand for class has increased. All branches of the industry are losing money, except the players, yet the companies are being better managed. The distribution of the product in the country is a joke. There are often eight or ten exchanges where one or two could do the work. And I do not see that these ills are being cured very fast.

I tell you, gentlemen, the amusement business is the only one for whom the cost has doubled, trebled and even been increased twenty times without the ability to raise the price in proportion.

As to the motion picture business, it is being overdone in every town and city.

Outsiders are unwilling to put cash into the business at this time because of its unstable condition.

Mr. Powers testified in part as follows:

The problem of the amusement provider is the expense of getting the money out. At present the expense of getting our portion is greater than that portion. I know, for instance, of three stars who will this year make more money than will be split up by the entire moving picture industry.

Edison's "A Message to Garcia," in five reels, is based on Elbert Hubbard's famous preachment on patriotism.

Enid Bennett Is Hostess

Enid Bennett, the little Australian beauty, recently "discovered" by Thomas H. Ince, and soon to be presented by him on the Triangle program as a full-fledged star, has just returned to the Ince studios in California after a ten days' vacation in New York. Miss Bennett was accompanied by her younger sister, Margery, who traveled alone from Sydney, Australia, to San Francisco, just before Christmas.

Prior to their departure from New York they acted as hostesses to a number of trade and newspaper writers at a luncheon at the Hotel Astor, January 19. One writer made known his ambition to write a scenario in which the Bennett sisters could appear together.

Among those present at the luncheon were Harriette Underhill of the New York Tribune, Agnes Smith of the Morning Telegraph, Frederick James Smith of the Motion Picture Mail, Adam Hull Shirk of the Dramatic Mirror, George D. Gould of the Motion Picture News, Charles Condon of MOTOGRAPHY, Benn Grimm of the Moving Picture World and C. W. Barrell of the Triangle publicity department.

In Chicago Miss Bennett and her sister also entertained a number of newspaper people of the Windy Village.

Anne Sutherland with Powell

Frank Powell has engaged Anne Sutherland, the noted character actress, to appear in a prominent part in the support of Marjorie Rambeau in "Motherhood," the second of the series of Marjorie Rambeau feature pictures now being made by the Frank Powell Producing Corporation, to be distributed through the Mutual Film Corporation. Miss Sutherland's association with Miss Rambeau would seem to be in the nature of a continuous performance, for all season long she has been appearing with that star as Nell Brockton in "Cheating Cheaters," at the Eltinge Theater, New York. Once their day's work before the camera at the Powell studios is finished, Miss Rambeau and Miss Sutherland make straight for the Eltinge Theater, there to don the habiliments of the polished crooks in Max Marcin's play.

Clergyman O. K.'S Film

B. S. Moss, of the B. S. Moss Motion Picture Corporation, submitted his latest release, "The Girl Who Doesn't Know," to the Rev. F. W. Adams, at the same time expressing his desire to co-operate in elevating the standards of film plays. After viewing the picture the Rev. Mr. Adams said: "'The Girl Who Doesn't Know' is a story of life that carries conviction in an earnest, chaste and straightforward way. It is better a girl should learn some things from a moving picture than to learn them in the peril of society."

Contest at Exhibitors' Ball

One of the principal features of the New Jersey exhibitors' ball, held at Krueger auditorium, February 1, was the contest of young women to join the ranks of the famous movie star beauties. The contest was conducted under the direction of the Thanhouser Film Corporation. The winner of the contest, a New Jersey girl, will be given a course of instructions by the directors of the Thanhouser company, and if she shows ability and attention, will be given a position.

"Acceptances" Offer Substitute for Deposits

GEORGE KLEINE TELLS HOW TO ELIMINATE ADVANCE SYSTEM

By George Kleine
President George Kleine, Inc.

THE EXHIBITOR raises three principal objections to the current system of exacting a cash deposit to guarantee the fulfillment of a film rental contract.

1. He resists placing a sum of money in the hands of a rental exchange without a guarantee as to its safety, and sees the danger of some of them being unable to refund his cash in case they are unable to deliver the films guaranteed under the contract, because of accident, fire, failure in business, etc.

2. He objects to the deposit of his cash without receiving interest therefor.

3. He suspects that his deposit is being used before it is earned by the distributor in the conduct of his business, or by the manufacturer in paying his operating expenses, salaries of stars, etc.

I agree entirely with the exhibitor who holds these views. On the other hand some exhibitors hold their signatures to contracts in slight regard, violating sometimes on impulse, sometimes with reason, without consideration of the damage to the distributing agency or manufacturer.

George Kleine, member Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service

Deceptions Practiced by Exhibitors

Sometimes he signs a contract for service to prevent his competitor from getting the films, with the deliberate intention not to meet his obligation to the exchange, and cancelling without regard to the rights of the distributor when his purpose is accomplished.

Agreeing on the one hand with the exhibitor who raises the objections enumerated above, while on the other finding it necessary to safeguard our business by giving stability to the contracts made by our distributing branches with their customers, I have worked out the following system for the K.-E.-S.-E. service.

Our releases are grouped arbitrarily in lots of ten features. Exhibitors contracting to use a group are asked to pay in advance twenty per cent of the contract price, to cover the rental price of the last two subjects. The ten may be picked from our entire stock of regular releases or the group of any one quarter.

There is a class of exhibitors that has but little regard for its agreements.

This serves to tie up comparatively little money, as the advance covers only two features, instead of four to eight; and the obligation, not more than one release weekly for ten weeks. All funds so collected are placed in a special account in my name, as trustee either in the Harriman National Bank of New York City or the Continental & Commercial National Bank of Chicago. This account is kept entire apart from all other monies. We draw upon the account after the exhibitor has played the dates that his deposit covers.

Having in this manner assured the safety of these funds, the question of reimbursement to the exhibitor for the sequestration of his cash received serious consideration. As our advance collections run on a maximum of ninety days, I decided to refund to the exhibitor a flat trade discount of six per cent on the amount he deposited, amounting in effect to twenty-four per cent per year.

"Acceptances" Might be a Remedy

I have considered various substitutes for the advance deposit system and suggest the following for consideration without having yet reached a conclusion that they are satisfactory to either or both parties:

The use of "acceptances"; an "acceptance" is an acknowledgment of an obligation to pay a certain amount of money at some future date and is in common use on the Continent of Europe. I am most familiar with this practice, as it obtains in Italy, where it is generally employed as follows:

A manufacturer or wholesaler having received an order for certain merchandise, makes a shipment; when he mails his bill he attaches an "acceptance," usually in printed form, which shows the amount of the bill and states that the shipper has a claim against the customer for the stated sum, which is to be paid upon a certain date, which may be thirty, sixty, or ninety days, more or less. The customer signs the "acceptance" and returns it to the seller.

This is not a note but is a written acknowledgment of the debt and the buyer expects to pay the obligation when it is due. This method of handling business accounts is being exploited in some of our periodicals and is recommended by the National Reserve Bank of Atlanta, Ga. If we apply the system of "acceptances" to the film business, substituting it in place of advance payments, the distributor upon receiving a contract for the future delivery of certain films will offer at the same time a number of "acceptances" covering all of the films that are to be shipped under the contract, stating the amount due upon each shipment, and the date when it is to be paid; or all of the films could be grouped in one "acceptance," which would specify the various dates and amounts to be paid. "Acceptances" should be marked "non-negotiable."

Other Methods Are Possible

Another method of meeting the difficulty would be the getting together of groups of exhibitors, the group party to collectively guarantee the payment of the obligations of its component members. Such an arrangement would offer the combined credit and good faith of the entire group to guarantee the payment of the obligations thus incurred.

The following method also occurs to me:

A board of trustee could be selected consisting of three representatives of manufacturers and distributors and three exhibitors of high standing, as for instance, Marcus Loew of New York City, Aaron Jones of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, Chicago, and Mr. Roth of the Portola Theater, San Francisco. All moneys collected as advance deposits to be placed in the hands of these trustees who might be bonded at the expense of the fund, serve without pay, and deposit these funds in various banks selected with a view to their responsibility.

Vivian Rich with Redlands

The Redlands Beauty Films, Julius Frankenberg, managing director, Redlands, California, which concern is releasing a series of twenty-six one-reel comedies, the "Adventures of Pietro" series, through the American Standard Motion Picture Corporation, a release being made every other week, announces that it has secured Miss Vivian Rich on a two-year contract to appear in its productions.

Miss Rich is well known through her excellent work in the American and Fox productions, her latest appearance having been with Lillian Farnham in "The Price of Silence."

For the Redlands company Miss Rich will first appear in a series of single-reel releases, although it is expected that she will be starred in several features adapted from late novels, within the course of a few weeks.

The general manager of the American Standard, M. G. Watkins, states that this announcement is only a forerunner of many that are to come in the near future.

Edward Ellis in Pictures

One of the last of the prominent theatrical stars to take up picture acting is Edward Ellis, famous for his wonderful "crook" characterization in "The Dummy," which enjoyed a year's run at the Hudson Theater in New York, and for his acting with Holbrook Blinn in the Princess Theater productions. Mr. Ellis is also author of "Any Night," a play which exposed "The Raines Law Hotels."

In "The Law That Failed," by Louis Reeves Harrison, Mr. Ellis will portray a character which fits him like a glove. Apollo Pictures, Incorporated, will produce the picture for the Art-Dramas Program.

"PERILS" PLEASE PUBLIC

Mutual Serial Brought Out a Record House at Academy Theater, of Buffalo, N. Y. Writes Manager Michaels.

The "box office test" is satisfying the exhibitors booking "The Perils of Our Girl Reporters," Mutual release, according to the expressions coming from several theaters particularly representative of the market.

M. M. Rubens, manager of the Crystal Theater, Joliet, Illinois, says he was very glad to recommend it as a box office attraction judging from his own experience.

Basil Charuhas, manager of the Lion Theater, Chicago, started the "Perils" in this theater and found that they were liked so well that he also booked them for his second house, the Eighteenth Street Theater.

Joseph Hopp and William Rohe, managers of the Ideal and Liberty Theaters, Chicago, are also running "The Perils of Our Girl Reporters" in both their houses, and say the people are very much interested.

A letter received from Jules Michaels, general manager of the Academy Theater, Buffalo, New York, says: "The Perils of Our Girl Reporters" brought out a record crowd for the house, showing to a total of over 7,000 paid admissions.

Other exhibitors who declare the picture is a business-getter include Felix Greenburg, Lyceum Theater, Peoria, Illinois; and E. J. Striewing, Crystal Theater, Decatur, Illinois.

Metro Feature in Demand

Exhibitors everywhere are showing a lively interest in "One of Many," the moral pantomime to be released on the Metro program February 12, Lincoln's birthday, according to Arthur James, head of the scenario, publicity and advertising departments of Metro Pictures Corporation. This five-act drama was written and directed by William Christy Cabanne. The censors of Ohio and Pennsylvania already have passed the picture with praise.

Metro receives scores of letters daily from motion picture exhibitors all over the country inquiring for the feature. Mr. James believes that "One of Many" bids fair to be one of the most widely discussed pictures seen in recent years. One theater manager in St. Louis writes, "This picture seems to be just what I want, combining a great moral and a strong story, with a beautiful star to present it. I look for record business during the run of 'One of Many.'" Another writes, "If feature is as represented, it certainly is a winner. Put me down for it."

"One of Many," described by the National Board of Censors as "a delicately handled and dramatic story," has for its leading character Shirley Bryson, a manicure girl who, to give her invalid mother the luxuries her condition requires, makes a bargain with a man of wealth. Frances Nelson plays the part of Shirley. Released from her obligations by the death of her mother, Shirley goes out into the world once more, regaining her self-respect and finding true love—love with a wedding-ring to sanctify it.

"The Royal Pauper," a five-reeler, will be released by Edison, through K. E. S. E., on February 12.

Goldwyn Captures Madge Kennedy

WHY EDGAR SELWYN BECAME A FILM PRODUCER

MADGE KENNEDY, the greatest farce comedienne on the American stage, has signed with Goldwyn Pictures and will be exploited in a series of notable productions by that organization.

Announcement of Miss Kennedy's engagement follows close on the heels of the Goldwyn acquisition of Mae Marsh, Jane Cowl and Maxine Elliott, in the order named. Miss Kennedy has never before appeared in pictures and her entry into the films brings one of the youngest and freshest of stage favorites to the cinema.

Hundreds of thousands of persons have seen her on the stage in "Over Night," "Little Miss Brown," "Twin Beds" and "Fair and Warmer." She was the "discovery" of Grace George. Under the management of Selwyn & Company she has become a nation-wide favorite at an age when most girls are away in boarding school.

Madge Kennedy, one of the latest Goldwyn acquisitions.

Photographically Madge Kennedy will be a welcome arrival in screenland. She is young and lovely and has ideal features for parts in comedies—in other words, a screen face capable of every possible range of camera exploitation. She will begin work in a few weeks in the Goldwyn studios, at Fort Lee, New York.

Miss Kennedy's film tests made by Goldwyn have aroused the enthusiasm of all of the officers of that company. When one of the greatest exhibitors in America saw these tests a few days ago, his exclamation was: "Madge Kennedy is the surest fire screen comedienne in America. She will be the absolute leader inside of six months."

Her greatest success was in Margaret Mayo's farce "Twin Beds" that played a solid year on Broadway, to be followed by an equally great triumph in "Fair and Warmer," by Avery Hopwood. She is still playing in this farce, which is running in New York.

Mae Marsh Among Litteratuers

Mae Marsh, now a Goldwyn player, has "broken into" The New Republic. This is a history-making achievement.

If Doctor Eliot had become a comic cartoonist for the New York Journal or Jane Addams had been booked for a dancing act in the two-a-day vaudeville houses, these unusual departures from the regularity of their lives would give no more legitimate reason for surprise than does The New Republic's recognition of Mae Marsh of the silent art.

It goes without saying that motion pictures are known to the intellectuals of such magazines as "the movies," but that does not prevent the poet-playwright, Vachel Lindsay, from going into analytical consideration of the Goldwyn star and her work.

Having thus become a topic of conversation in this hallowed circle, Miss Marsh feels deeply appreciative.

"Having penetrated where picture stars never before have been welcomed," says Miss Marsh, "I now nurse hopes of some day finding that I am discussed by the grave and mature editors of such journals as 'The Living Church,' 'The Atlantic Monthly,' the Editor's Chair department of 'Harper's Magazine,' 'The Fortnightly Review,' or 'The Spectator' and other chatty journals of the elect."

Selwyn Sees Future Surpassing Present

With the formation of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation a few weeks ago Edgar Selwyn became first vice-president and one of the chief partners in this organization.

Receiving invitations to enter the motion picture industry was no novelty for Edgar Selwyn. He, Archibald Selwyn and Margaret Mayo (Mrs. Edgar Selwyn) had been invited to become producers by many of the big picture magnates of the country. But Selwyn & Company years ago had looked into picture production. Edgar Selwyn himself acted in two pictures and, while doing so, studied the industry in all of its production and technical phases. The things he discovered then were disappointing.

"I saw men without experience or mental equipment given the important task of producing pictures," he said, in discussing his advent into production, "and I watched arrogant and ignorant directors behave as veritable sultans in the studios, revealing their contempt for every one of the fixed principles of dramatic construction and an even greater contempt for the authors of the plays they were screening. This chilled my interest in pictures, for I believed then and I believe now, stronger than ever before, that the story is the fundamental basis of the good motion picture. I realized then that, in the main, the industry from the inside had no wish for refined, thorough and capably-made productions and that the story was deemed of no consequence.

"If the producers had persisted in that viewpoint there would be no picture industry today worthy of a moment's consideration.

"We have now passed through the stages of the non-thought-provoking pictures into what I called the 'flapper' stage when light and toneless girls who only screened well seemed to appeal to the moment to the tastes of the picture public. Pictures have now entered a third and more serious stage.

"I think the dramatic stage and perhaps even the field of literature have been fairly well cleaned of available screen material of the better type. At best, that material was not the ideal type for the production of motion pictures. There have been many fine novels made into interesting pictures and the same is true of a number of plays, but personally I feel that the biggest things that are to be done on the screen will be original stories written for the screen—not adaptations or conversions of old material.

"I have entered motion pictures because of this belief and all of the resources of Selwyn & Company come along with me. I believe that the biggest and best of our American authors and playwrights are ready to write directly for screen audiences. They will do a better and finer work than any ever before photographed; of this I am certain. My prediction is that the actual big achievements of the motion picture art still lie ahead in the future."

"Money Magic" New Vitagraph

Following the release of "The Glory of Yolanda," featuring Anita Stewart, as a Blue Ribbon release on January 29, Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. will place "Money Magic" at the disposal of the exhibitors. "Money Magic" is released on February 5.

"Money Magic" features Edith Storey, Antonio Moreno, and William Duncan. It was produced as the first of Miss Storey's western studio pictures under the direction of William Wolbert. Since its production, Mr. Duncan has been made a Vitagraph director; but he also will be seen in his pictures in some strong role.

The scenes in "Money Magic" showing Miss Storey as a mountain girl with big hopes and ambitions of getting somewhere in life; of her rescue from this existence only to have another role, even more difficult, forced upon her; of her brave efforts to make duty as sweet a word as desire—those scenes will live long in the memory of those who see "Money Magic."

And Mr. Duncan's work as a whimsical Irish miner, rich but illiterate, brave but unfortunate, will help to determine for him a very high plane in motion picture acting. The final scenes—dedicated to his death high in the mountains and as the lion dies, alone—are very powerful.

"Money Magic" seems to be all that the title implies, not only a powerful play for the screen but equally powerful as to the box office.

Receiver Sells Studio

Bids were received this week by the receiver of the Barker-Swan Film Service for the purchase of the offices and studio of the company at Peoria, Illinois. The studio is equipped ready for operation and the properties are offered in entirety. An indebtedness of $17,900 is outstanding against the real estate owned by the company. Besides the studio and properties, the successful bidder will acquire a number of scenarios, one four-reel mystery story of which there is the negative and one positive print; and two single-reel comedies, together with positive print of each and some miscellaneous negative. Bids were received at the office of Receiver Charles H. Dixon, of Peoria. He will announce the successful bidder shortly. Representing the receiver as attorney is Merrick A. Whipple, 105 West Monroe street, Chicago.

Exchange Managers Organize

The Indiana Film Managers' Association has been organized at Indianapolis with a membership which includes all the exchange managers of the city. H. F. Druckey of the F-I-L-M Club of Chicago assisted in the formation of the new body. The purpose of the club is to co-operate with exchanges in other cities, to eliminate abuses in the renting of films. Those present included W. A. Ratz, of the Indianapolis K-E-S-E Company; D. W. Van De Walker, General Film Company; W. H. Engleman, Mutual Film exchange; Sam Sax, Blue Bird Company; K. O. Landis, World service; and J. I. Schnitzer, of the Central Film Service Company, representing Universal.

In Chinese theaters the insistence for realism is so keen that if a hanging scene is necessary to a picture they have to procure a man from the prison who is under sentence of death to take the part. When a Chinese actor is required to exhibit fear or grief he has to be whipped, but when desired to show cheerfulness he is presented with a new hat or other suitable present.

Cohan and Pickford Share Honors

"BROADWAY JONES" AND "POOR LITTLE RICH GIRL" SOON READY

Once a childhood friend of hers told Motography that Little Mary was quite a scrapper as a kid. In "The Poor Little Rich Girl" she gets a chance to renew her youth—in a million dollar mud puddle.

As its March and April releases the Artcraft Pictures Corporation announces two big subjects with Mary Pickford and George M. Cohan as the stellar attractions.

The Pickford production, following her recent Artcraft offering, "The Pride of the Clan," will be "A Poor Little Rich Girl." It is now being filmed under the direction of Maurice Tourneur.

As an appropriate vehicle for the popular screen star, her directors feel that this story affords Miss Pickford one of the best motion picture subjects ever secured for her. The novel by Eleanor Gates became widely popular as did the play which scored a big hit at the Hudson Theater in New York several years ago and duplicated this success on the road. The production of this new Pickford picture at the Fort Lee studio is now well advanced and will be completed well ahead of the release date, March 5.

G. M. C. Himself in Films

The George M. Cohan subject, "Broadway Jones," which is now also well under way at the New York studios on West Fifty-sixth street, will follow the Pickford release and will present the famous George M. for the first time as a screen actor, April 2. This play has been presented both on the stage and in book form and is popularly known throughout the country.

Originally written, produced and starred in by Mr. Cohan, the play proved the hit of the season in New York after which it met with similar success on the road. Upon the termination of the road show the play was put on in stock in many cities and became established as one of Mr. Cohan's greatest successes. Contrary to the general rule of adapting a play from a book, the novel of "Broadway Jones" by Edward Marshall was taken from the play and greatly added to the prestige of the subject. In addition to the play and the book, "Broadway Jones" appeared in many of the largest newspapers in serial form.

Bookings Indicate Popularity

With two such celebrities as Mary Pickford and George M. Cohan in subjects that have gained great national popularity, as its March and April offerings, the importance of Artcraft Pictures to the film world is readily apparent.

One of the first theaters to close for the Cohan photoplay was the Strand in New York, where it will be presented for the first time in that city. Among the early bookings are the Strand, Syracuse, New York; the Strand, Buffalo, New York; the Strand, Hartford, Connecticut; the Stillman, Cleveland, Ohio; the Knickerbocker, Cleveland, Ohio; the Circle, Indianapolis, Indiana; the Pastime, Columbus, Ohio; the Walnut, Cincinnati, Ohio; the Majestic, Detroit, Michigan; the Temple, Toledo, Ohio; the Broadway, Portland, Oregon, and the new Globe Theater in New Orleans, where it will appear for four weeks. The Modern Theater in Boston will run the picture two weeks.

Cohan Company to Florida

George M. Cohan, accompanied by Joe Kaufman, his director, Marguerite Snow, his leading lady and other members of the "Broadway Jones" Company, are now in Florida, where the exteriors for the initial Cohan-Artcraft picture are being taken.

A large factory has been taken over for a week at Jacksonville, for the purpose of photographing the scenes in a chewing gum plant.

With the object of finding out what Mary Pickford's practice is, now that she had her own producing organization, a visit was paid to a nearby "location" where she was being screened in her latest subject for Artcraft Pictures, "A Poor Little Rich Girl."

The director, Maurice Tourneur, presumably had worked out the scene details with Miss Pickford in conference. There was no hesitation in his placing of a score or more extras in positions that best served the pictorial effect. She remained out of the group, near her mother, watching the scene being built up, while a girl of her height rehearsed in her place.

Nine new Michigan theaters have signed for Paramount Pictures. Among these are the Myrtle, Acre and Frontinac Theater, Detroit; Family Theater of New Baltimore, the Opera House of Ypsilanti, Rae Theater of Ann Arbor, Grand of St. Ignace, Classic of Algonac, and Strand of Sturgis.

Mutual Gets Murdock

Miss Ann Murdock is announced for a series of Empire-Mutual pictures.

President John R. Freuler of the Mutual Film Corporation and the Empire All Star Corporation has closed a contract with Miss Murdock and this contract has been transferred to the Empire concern, the newly formed corporation for the presentation of Charles Frohman successes in motion pictures for Mutual distribution.

Ann Murdock, now with Mutual.

Work on the first of the Empire's Murdock productions is being done at New York studios now being fitted up for the making of the Charles Frohman pictures.

Miss Murdock is one of the best known of the younger American actresses. She made her first professional appearance on the speaking stage as Ardminter Nesbitt in "The Lion and the Mouse," a scoring and important success at the Grand Opera house in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, in September, 1908.

Miss Murdock was born in New York on November 10, 1900, and was educated at Darlington Seminary, Westchester, Pa. She is the daughter of John J. Coleman, a well-known theatrical manager, and Teresa Deagle a dramatic star of prominence in the United States and abroad.

Miss Murdock's intitial picture venture was "The Royal Family," a five-reel drama in which she had previously appeared successfully. Other photoplays in which she has been starred are "Captain Jenks" and "Where Love Is."

Sunshine Gets Busy

The Sunshine Film Corporation, 1524 Dearborn Bank Building, Chicago, announces the personnel of its staff as being as follows: Joseph Straus, president, and S. S. Straus, secretary-treasurer, the financial backers of this new company. General Manager K. M. Scoville was formerly connected with the Waite Tractor and Drexel Motor Car Company in the capacity of general manager. Business Manager W. S. Flenner was formerly insurance manager for Swift and Company. William M. Buckley, formerly with D. W. Griffith and Famous Players, has been appointed director general. The company is incorporated under the laws of the state of Illinois and has no stock for sale.

The company will manufacture two one-reel comedies each week, for which purpose the American Bioscope studio has been leased for one year. The Rothacker Film Company has been contracted to do the developing and printing and the American Standard Motion Picture Company has contracted to release these one-reel comedies through its thirty or more widely scattered United States exchanges.

Full details regarding the first releases will appear in the advertising columns of Motography some time during the month of February. General Manager Scoville in discussing the proposed venture, very frankly admitted that they had no wonderful stars to offer exhibitor, but that he might rest assured the comedies coming from the Sunshine factories would be just plain, good comedies.

"ARGYLE CASE" READY

Robert Warwick Completes His First Selznick-Picture—William J. Burns Assists with Detective Tale

Robert Warwick's first Selznick-Picture, "The Argyle Case," is ready for release. Director Ralph W. Ince lately finished the work of cutting and assembling the film and a private showing was held for Lewis J. Selznick and his associates.

This play was the joint work of Harvey J. O'Higgins and Harriet Ford, the noted American dramatists, who, in order to reach the heights of realism, called in as third collaborator the celebrated detective, William J. Burns. Robert Hillard was the star of the original production, which enjoyed a year's run on Broadway and toured all the principal cities of the country with immense success.

Elaine Hammmerstein Opposite Warwick

A charming addition to the list of leading women of the screen is Elaine Hammerstein, granddaughter of the famous Oscar Hammerstein, the operatic impressario, who is making her first important appearance as a film actress in the role opposite Robert Warwick in the Selznick-Picture detective drama.

Miss Hammerstein's father is Arthur Hammerstein, the theatrical producer. She is only twenty years old; tips the scales at about a hundred and twenty pounds, possesses a plentitude of wavy brown hair, a pair of big gray eyes and a wonderful smile. In the vernacular of the studio she "'screens' like a million dollars."

Oppenheim's Story in Making

The first of E. Oppenheim's novels of adventure to be adapted to the screen is "The Court of St. Simon" now being filmed at the Selznick studios.

Clara Kimball Young is making rapid headway with her fourth Selznick-Picture production, a film version of Eugene Walter's drama, "The Easiest Way." Rockcliffe Fellows will play opposite Miss Young.

Norma Talmadge, who has just scored her greatest film success in an adaptation of the drama, "Panthea," has begun work under the direction of Julius Steger in her second Selznick-Picture, the title of which is temporarily withheld.

Raver Discovers New Siren

Pamela Vale makes her debut as Isabella Alvarez in the Apollo production "Pride and the Devil." Also, a new and unusual type of "vampire" is introduced to pictures.

Pamela is of Spanish-French extraction and is blessed with eyes that talk and lips that curl when she wants them to. From all reports on her first picture, Pamela Vale is destined to shine brilliantly.

New Art Dramas Productions

SEVERAL NOTABLE STARS APPEAR IN UNUSUAL STORIES

JACK SHERRILL is to be co-starred with Dorothy Bernard in the forthcoming Art Drama, "The Accomplice." The picture is for release February 8.

Although Mr. Sherrill has been featured in the support of numerous popular stars, and has also been featured alone in several productions, "The Accomplice" will mark his debut into the stellar ranks.

His work in several recent productions, notably "Jaffery," "The Conquest of Canaan" and "The Witching Hour," has been of such uniform excellence that his popularity has been growing rapidly. Consequently, he will hereafter be starred, either alone or with some other player of equal note, on the Art Dramas program.

"The Accomplice" Shows Social Gayeties

In this case he will share the stellar honors with Dorothy Bernard, whose characterization of "Cynthia" in the Sherrill Art Drama "The Rainbow," received so much praise from the critics.

"The Accomplice" has been called a picturization of the New York smart set's night life. It tells the story of a young man and his sister, who have too much time and money, and too little parental attention. The girl drifts into the tango tea crowd, who spend their time in Broadway cabarets and becomes entangled in an affair with a professional dancer. The young man, however, is brought to a realization of the error of his ways by his father's secretary, with whom he is in love. His father, however, will not consent to the marriage of his son to a working girl.

Play That Reveals "Submerged Tenth"

"Rosie O'Grady," a five-part drama, starring Viola Dana in the name part, was released by Apollo Pictures, Inc., on the Art Dramas program February 1. The author, John H. Collins, also directed the production.

Romance in a tenement forms the theme of this unusual story. Sunshiny little Rosie O'Grady, the heroine, is a dreamer by nature, and an East Side "newsy" by accident. Romance was an unknown quantity in her life, but she had an imagination, and a tender heart, so she dreamed herself into all sorts of wonderful adventures which were denied to her in real life. Her brother, "Chimmie" is the owner of a newsstand which proclaims to the passers-by that "Chimmie O'Grady Keeps This Stand and This Stand Keeps Chimmie O'Grady."

Rosie was the first assistant and general manager of the business. A series of incidents makes it necessary for Rosie to call upon a pugilist for assistance.

Madam Blache to Produce Art Dramas

Madam Blaché, one of the pioneer producers of motion pictures both in Europe and in this country, has been engaged by the United States Amusement Corporation. She will direct that company's pictures, which are released on the Art Dramas program.

Madam Blaché is said to be the first woman to direct a photoplay, and indeed, one of the first of the directors of either sex to produce quality pictures.

She has produced a number of features for the Popular Plays and Players Company, which have been released on the Metro and Pathe programs. Her best known recent pictures are those she made with Madam Petrova in the stellar parts. These include "The Heart of a Painted Woman," "My Madonna," "What Will People Say," and several other successes. Madam Blaché also directed "The Ocean Waif," featuring Carlisle Blackwell and Doris Kenyon, which was released on the International Film Corporation's program.

Jean Sothern Trains Animals

Jean Sothern, the pretty little lady who is starred in the Art Drama feature, "Her Good Name," from the Van Dyke Company's studios, appeared in a new role recently. Part of the "atmosphere" in the story consisted of a kitten and a puppy. At the proper moment Miss Sothern appeared on the scene.

With a cry of "Oh! how darling," she ran forward and gathered the two struggling animals in her arms.

In a few seconds the kitten was purring away in the crook of one arm, while from the other the puppy was making frantic efforts to reach Miss Sothern's face with his tongue.

Ella Hall is playing the lead in a five-act drama, "Pawned," at Universal City.

Some of the striking scenes from Art Drama's "The Accomplice," which appears February 8. Jack Sherrill and Dorothy Bernard are starred.

"THE BLACK STORK"

Film in Which Noted Surgeon and Eugenic Leader Takes Lead in Physician's Role Ready for Release by New Distributor

A new distributing corporation, the Sheriott Pictures Corporations, has purchased and is ready to release its first production, "The Black Stork," which already has been advertised in advance notices to the trade.

The Sheriott Pictures Corporation has opened offices in New York City and in Chicago. The New

Dr. Harry J. Haiselden and a defective baby in "The Black Stork."

York office is at 220 West Forty-second street and is in charge of M. E. Mazur, general managers of the corporation. The Chicago office is at 203 Schiller building and is being conducted by Nat S. Stronge, until recently business manager of the corporation that publishes MOTOGRAPHY. Mr. Stronge is advertising and publicity manager for the corporation.

Dr. Harry J. Haiselden, chief of staff of the German-American Hospital of Chicago, who is eminent as a surgeon, and perhaps the most prominent man in his profession to become the star in a photoplay, takes the role of physician. The picture is a eugenic portrayal in which "The Black Stork" means that bird of ill omen which leaves crippled, deformed babies at homes all over the world in place of the good healthy babies left by the white stork when he makes his visits.

It is the story of the famous Bollinger baby, the case so widely written about in the newspapers in November, 1916, owing to Dr. Haiselden's refusal to operate upon the child at birth, on the grounds that it was malformed and would probably become mentally unbalanced if it lived.

The scenario for "The Black Stork" was written by Jack Lait, a newspaper man and short story writer who followed the Bollinger case closely. Dr. Haiselden is supported by a cast consisting of Hamilton Revelle, Elsie Esmond, Jane Fearnly, Henry Bergman, Allan Murnane, Edgar Davenport and George Moss. The film is in five parts.

"I have but one ambition regarding this photoplay," said Dr. Haiselden. "I desire to hammer home to the authorities of the United States that human lives are of more value than the lives of animals. A death rate of ten per cent among Uncle Sam's pigs would call for an appropriation of one million dollars. Last year Uncle Sam appropriated $300,000 to stop citrus canker on fruit trees and at the same time Uncle Sam gave $65,000 to better the babies.

"I believe with W. E. D. Stokes, of New York City, that we should breed the best of humans but I would eliminate, as fast as possible, the malformed undesirable babies and in this way grow into a nation of healthy giants. I tell you the hope of the nation is perfect babies.

"I know that I will be condemned by a large part of the medical profession for taking the leading part in this play but I care nothing for the condemnation so long as I drive home the truth. This photoplay will, no doubt, cause many broken engagements and many aching hearts but even so every parent, every young man contemplating matrimony, every young woman anticipating marriage, should see it. They will go home and dream of it and will return to see it again."

FEBRUARY FOX FILMS

Quartet of Stars—Valeska Suratt, Stuart Holmes, Theda Bara and June Caprice Play the Leads

The best that William Fox has to offer exhibitors—four of the chief luminaries of the Fox productions, Valeska Suratt, Stuart Holmes, Theda Bara and June Caprice, starred in plays well suited to each—make up the February program of Fox releases.

This is the order of the four films with the titles:

Feb. 5—Valeska Suratt in "The New York Peacock."

Feb. 12—Stuart Holmes in "The Scarlet Letter."

Feb. 19—Theda Bara in "The Tiger Woman"; June Caprice in "A Child of the Wild."

Miss Suratt's picture has many startling effects in scenic settings. Harry Hilliard is chief in support of the sirenic star.

As Zena, the siren, Miss Suratt wears a marvelous character hat which is nothing more than a web. The gown accompanying this strange piece of headgear is of necessity more substantial.

"The Scarlet Letter," from Hawthorne's novel, gives Stuart Holmes an opportunity to do a most vivid piece of acting.

Theda Bara's characterization of the Princess Petrovitch in "The Tiger Woman" outdoes even the sensational role the fascinating vampire had in "A Fool There Was."

"A Child of the Wild," which is released simultaneously with "The Tiger Woman," tells the story of a girl of the mountains who will not go to school—until the right schoolmaster happens along, and he does, in the person of Frank Morgan. Many of the exteriors for this subject were taken in the Lookout mountain district around Chattanooga, Tennessee.

The A. Frieder Film Company, having offices in Chicago, will produce plays for children exclusively in its new studio at Lankershim, California.

The title of Ethel Barrymore's forthcoming seven-part special Metro-Columbia release is "The Call of Her People" instead of "The Voice of Her People."

The Man Inside the Booth

PROJECTION DEPARTMENT, CONDUCTED BY E. C. SCOBEY

THIS department is a permanent feature of Motography. Its editor, Mr. Scobey, is a former secretary and treasurer of the Motion Picture Machine Operators' Local No. 194, I. A. T. S. E., and was formerly associated with the Central Film Service Company of Indianapolis. He was recently elected vice-president of the Central Labor Union of Indianapolis, the first operator to be so honored. The idea is to make this department just as helpful as possible to operators and exhibitors. Send your questions and problems to Mr. Scobey. He is sure to give you some valuable information. Address, Motography, Chicago.

The 23rd International Convention of the I. A. T. S. E. and M. P. M. O. of the U. S. and Canada, will be held at Cleveland, Ohio, the week of February 26, 1917. This convention will be one of great importance to all members of the I. A. and every local is urged to send delegates to it.

Kindly put this in your next issue of MOTOGRAPHY. I am running a Powers 6 A machine. My light is perfect. I am using a Mercury Arc Rectifier. The only trouble is that the film jumps off the intermittent sprocket once in a while, about four times during the showing of a picture, rather during the showing of one reel. On the right hand side of the screen you can see the sprocket holes (four of them). My sprockets are in line. The film jumps off on the left hand side of the intermittent sprocket and then tears the edges of the film.

My next trouble is that I can't push my frame up to the top. If I set the frame of the film even with the aperture frame it is all right, but if I don't get it just right the picture is out of frame on the screen. There is not anything stopping it that I can see. The roller on the sprocket is as close as I can get it. I will thank you greatly if you answer these questions, but please don't mention name or town. I have been reading your magazine for a long while and find it very interesting. I hope you don't get discouraged for the questoins I want answered. This is the first time I ever asked for any information from you.

Your first trouble is caused from not having the intermittent sprocket in line with the top and lower sprockets or not having the aperture in line with the intermittent sprocket. I think it is the intermittent sprocket being out of line. In remedying this be sure that the intermittent sprocket is in alignment with the cam shaft, then take a new piece of film and place it in the machine, leaving the gate open, place sprocket holes on intermittent sprocket and close the idler.

Then place sprocket holes on the top sprocket and close the top sprocket idler, then turn the fly wheel backward until the film is drawn tight, being careful that the teeth of both sprockets are in the center of the sprocket holes of the film. If the sprockets and aperture are in line you will see that the film is in line with the aperture and that edges of film line up with edge of aperture plate. If they do not line up true with each other, then adjust the aperture plate by loosening the four screws and lining the aperture with the film. If you will use the above directions and test your machine I think that you will find that either the intermittent sprocket or the aperture is out of line.

You say that the roller on the sprocket is as close as you can get it. Possibly you have it set too close. In setting a roller to a sprocket use two strips of film to measure with. Place both pieces on the sprocket and set the roller just close enough to touch the film. Twice the thickness of a piece of film is the proper distance to set the roller from the sprocket. The trouble you are having in framing the picture may be caused by the small washers on the two upright rods that support the framing carriage. If the framing carriage has been taken out of the machine and the washers removed the chances are that when they were put back in they were not put back in the same position as they were originally.

The width of these washers vary and are put on the rods, sometimes at the top and sometimes at the base and very often at the top and base, to regulate the framing carriage. Possibly they are what is holding the carriage from framing the proper distance.

I will be very glad to hear further from you after you adjust the intermittent sprocket as to whether you were right or not when you say that the intermittent sprocket is in line. I believe that you will find that you were mistaken.

Do not hesitate to ask questions of this department and I can assure you that I will be only too glad to offer any suggestions I can to the operator or manager who is in trouble.

I have been reading the MOTOGRAPHY for some time and am very much interested in the Projection Department. I have never written you before, so here goes for my first question. I am working on two Pathe machines and a Westinghouse rectifier. My machines need some new parts and as I have written to several supply houses and could not get them, I would like to know from you where to order them. The machines are several years old, but I am getting good projection with them but need these new parts very much and will consider it a great favor if you will give me an answer in the next issue of MOTOGRAPHY.

I would advise you to write to the Pathe Exchange Inc., 25 West Forty-fifth street, New York, N. Y., and they can either furnish you with the parts you want or be able to tell you where you can get them.

The editor of this department has received several letters in the last week from operators in different parts of the country requesting information as to becoming members of the I. A. and I request the writers to refer to Motography, issued February 3, 1917, and on page 247 you will find the desired information.

What can be done to improve the picture on the screen when you are working on 25 cycle A. C. current? At times when the machine is running the picture is bright and not much flicker but when it runs a little slow or fast it is almost impossible to see the picture because it flickers so bad. I am using two Simplex machines and a Ft. Wayne Compensarc. We get our current from an interurban traction company and have 25 cycle single phase current.

It is next to impossible to get good projection when using 25 cycle A. C. with a compensarc or rheostats and I would advise you to install a motor generator set or a converter set at once if you want to improve your projection. There are several makes on the market and your supply house will be able to quote you prices on the different makes. The flicker that you notice on the screen is caused by the shutter of the machine, when revolving at certain speeds, synchronizing with the cycles of the A. C. current.

I am having trouble with my light and would like a little information on the subject. I am using 60 amp. on 60 cycle A. C. current and I have been using 5/8x12-inch cored carbons. I have to carry a very short arc and the top carbon burns down to a sharp point. Can you tell me what to do to remedy it?

Your trouble with the carbon is this—the carbon is too soft for 60 ampers of current and I would advise you to try 3/4x12 cored carbons in the top with a 5/8 below and I think you will get satisfactory results with them.

I am having trouble getting a focus on the screen. I am using 40 amps. on 110 volts A. C. Using a 6½ and a 7½ condensers and a 4½ M. P. lens tube, 56 ft. throw from aperture plate to the screen. The cement in one of the combinations of the lens has melted but I have packed the lens and it does not help it any. Please suggest something to help me.

I would suggest that you send the lens tube to the firm that manufactured it and have them cement the combination together again. The smallest particle of cement or oil on the lens will produce an out of focus effect and I would not advise any operator to try to cement a lens combination. Send it to the factory and have the job done right.

Come on with your letters, boys.

BOOST LINDER COMEDIES

Complete Corps of Branch K. E. S. E. Managers of United States and Canada Meet in Chicago in Business Conference

Essanay has begun a gigantic national advertising campaign on the Max Linder comedies, the first release of which, "Max Comes Across," is dated February 26. One comedy a month will be released thereafter.

President George K. Spoor has set aside a big sum for a newspaper campaign that will be nation-wide for the benefit of exhibitors booking these comedies.

At a meeting of all the branch managers of United States and Canada at the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay offices in Chicago, Sunday, January 28, at which Mr. Spoor and George Kleine were present, the first of the Linder comedies was shown. The branch managers were very enthusiastic over the comedy. They were so enthusiastic, in fact, that they unanimously requested that a triple amount of paper issued on five reel features be gotten out on each subject and double the amount of all other advertising material.

President George K. Spoor of Essanay has launched an intensified campaign of advertising of Essanay-Linder comedies for the benefit of exhibitors booking the films. Since the famous European comedian came to this country three months ago, Essanay has been carrying on a wide and successful advertising campaign on him.

The intensified campaign just launched is to be co-operative with the exhibitors booking Max's comedies. President Spoor offers to go fifty-fifty with the exhibitors on newspaper displays advertising the productions. In other words, Essanay will pay half the expense incurred by every exhibitor in newspaper advertising of Max Linder comedies at his theater. Thus the exhibitors will get twice as much advertising for their theaters—at half price. By this means, a double amount of publicity will be obtained for Max Linder's productions and thereby exhibitors booking the films will enjoy double benefits from them.

Max Linder in his second Essanay comedy, "Max Wants a Divorce."

Every detail has been worked out to make Max Linder's first Essanay comedy the best ever shown on an American screen. The noted comedian himself declares "Max Comes Across" is the best photo-comedy he ever produced. One of the biggest attractions about it is that it is something entirely new in film fun. The scenes of the comedy, which deals with Max' trip across the Atlantic on the steamship Espagne, are practically all laid aboard ship in mid-ocean.

"Max Comes Across" will be released through the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay service. It has a screen time of approximately thirty minutes.

Marin Sais in Serial

At the Kalem Glendale studios two new series pictures are under way. Marin Sais plays leads in "The American Girl," which will be released in two-part episodes, each a complete plot in itself. Kalen will show Helen Gibson in a new railroad series called "The Daughter of Daring." It will be released in 1,000-foot lengths, each one a complete story. Copies of the opening episodes of both series will shortly be in the hands of the General Film exchanges.

Universal Director Worthington is filming a five-act drama, "The Clock," featuring Franklyn Farnum.

U. S. Firms After Bernhardt Play

FRENCH FILM, "MOTHERS OF FRANCE," STARTS HOT RIVALRY

LOUIS MERCANTON, the director of the war picture, "Mothers of France," of which the French government is part owner and Sarah Bernhardt is the star, was a recent visitor to New York with a view to arranging for the distribution of the photoplay in the United States and Canada. Mr. Mercanton departed, however, without concluding negotiations, for the quite unusual reason that competition for the rights was so keen as to make it advisable for him to consult further with his associates prior to taking final action. Before going abroad Mr. Mercanton said to a reporter:

"To tell the truth, my departure is somewhat in the nature of a retreat. When I came to New York to arrange for the photodrama here I had no idea of what was to happen. My supposition was that I should arrange the details in the ordinary course of business, sign the necessary contracts and go my way in peace.

"I did not even get a chance to open the negotiations. The process was taken out of my hands."

"'Mothers of France' is epochal in a number of ways. In the first place Mme. Bernhardt is its star. In the second, it was written by M. Jean Richepin, poet, dramatist and member of the French Academy. And finally, it was photographed in the trenches by arrangement with and the assistance of the government, which retains ownership in the war scenes and thus becomes a partner in the picture, unifying the intensely national spirit which is at the bottom of this undertaking.

Official Record of War

"This play will be a part of the official record of the present European war, and will be preserved through the generations. The authorities in France, civil and military, are deeply interested in it, for it carries to the world a genuine representation of France as it is—not merely Paris, with which most persons are familiar, but that provincial France of which the outside world knows little or nothing.

"Briefly, the story of 'Mothers of France' is woven about a woman, the wife of a provincial squire, whose husband and son are in the fighting line, and who for her patriotic part in the great struggle volunteers for service in the Red Cross, becoming a matron in the hospital at Rheims, at the front. The conflict deprives her of husband and son. Both expire from their wounds while she, having been informed of their injuries, is frantically searching for them in the trenches.

"It is a story of self-sacrifice and nobility of character against the grim background of war—an exalted poem of the screen.

"Mme. Bernhardt spent six days at Challons, about fifteen miles from the German lines, and from this base was taken to the forward lines of trenches every day in a military automobile under the protection of two officers of the headquarters staff.

"Upon two of these excursions she was actually under fire, and once she was treated to the spectacle of a German plane being shot down from the sky. We went on to Rheims, directly in the fighting zone, where extremely effective and dramatic episodes of 'Mothers of France' occur.

"When I left Paris the completed 'Mothers of France' was about to be shown for the first time, as a great national event, in the Trocadero, which seats 7,000 persons. The president of the republic and the heads of the civil and military departments were to be present, and the receipts were destined for the French Wounded Fund. A similar representation is shortly to be given in London in the presence of King George and the government chiefs."

Players Escape to Florida

Three World-Brady companies are finding relief at present from the fantastic climatic conditions of the current winter in New York. These are the organizations supporting Alice Brady in "Maternity," Kitty Gordon in "Forget-Me-Not," and Carlyle Blackwell in "Who Is Sylvia?"

Miss Brady and her company have proceeded to St. Augustine to "take" the finishing scenes, the picture having been completed in other details in the Peerless studio at Fort Lee.

Miss Gordan and her assisting players have started for Cuba for a similar purpose under like conditions. Mr. Blackwell and associates have gone to the Adirondacks.

"Forget-Me-Not," of which Miss Gordon's picture-play is an adaptation, was one of the most famous heart-dramas ever acted upon the American stage. It will be released on the World-Brady program in the early Spring. "Maternity" will appear on the screen April 23.

Lillian Walker in Special Features

Benjamin B. Hampton, president of the General Film Company, has selected Miss Lillian Walker of the Greater Vitagraph to be starred in special two-part features to be released on the General Film Program.

In making this selection Mr. Hampton did so, only after great consideration of what film star has the greatest popularity from the box office angle, finally selecting the well known "dimples" of the screen, Miss Walker.

Special scenarios have been purchased and no expense will be spared in exploiting these features, the first of which is entitled, "Dimple's Baby."

Brenon Directs from Wheel Chair

To complete a few remaining scenes of "The Eternal Sin," a Selznick picture, which Herbert Brenon was directing when taken ill recently, he was permitted by his physician to return to the studio and direct the production from a wheel chair. He is working daily again, having recovered his health and strength after three weeks' illness with typhoid fever. Mr. Brenon was stricken while at Wilmington, Delaware, and declined to remain there as his physicians had advised. He will go to Atlantic City shortly.

Harry Carey is co-directing and playing the featured lead in a five-act comedy-drama, "Red Saunders Plays Cupid," at Universal City.

Here are some peeps at Vitagraph's big serial, "The Secret Kingdom," featuring Dorothy Kelly and Charles Richmond. It was this unusual serial that Sidney E. Abel, Chicago Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. manager, showed to exhibitors and the public at the same time at a popular Chicago roller skating rink. 20,000 people saw the picture.

Novel Showing of "Secret Kingdom"

S. E. Abel, manager of the Chicago exchange of Vitagraph-V. L. S. E., has done a new stunt. He has used a very successful way of getting "The Secret Kingdom," Vitagraph's new serial starring Charles Richman and Dorothy Kelly, before not only the exhibitors in his territory but the public of Chicago.

Mr. Abel showed the first two episodes of "The Secret Kingdom" on January 15 at the Dreamland Roller Skating Rink, Chicago, permitting the public to see this exhibition as well as inviting exhibitors. In this way the theater manager was able to learn, at first hand and from a neutral audience, just what box office value "The Secret Kingdom" has.

In order to secure a really unbiased audience, Manager Abel advertised the showing in the Chicago American and arranged with that paper to carry coupons admitting the holder to the rink. The management of the rink volunteered to donate cash prizes to the best essays on "The Secret Kingdom" and why it was liked.

The result of the showing proved even more beneficial than Mr. Abel had expected. The rink was crowded to the doors and two shows, instead of one, had to be given to take care of the overflow. Many exhibitors attended the showing and the contracts now on Vitagraph's books, resulting from Manager Abel's original and successful display of "The Secret Kingdom," are concrete evidence of the great popularity of this serial wherever it is shown.

A. W. Goff, sales manager of Vitagraph-V. L. S. E., went to Chicago last week and spent a few days with Mr. Abel, going over policies, contracts, advertising, and other matter connected with "The Secret Kingdom," regular Blue Ribbon releases, and "The Girl Philippa," the picture that seems destined to be the greatest financial success to all concerned of all recent Vitagraph productions.

"The Girl Philippa" is scheduled for release in Chicago late this month.

Working with the conviction that the story itself is the most important thing in photoplay production, the new series of eight Crane Wilbur features which are being produced by David Horsley under the general title "The Morals of Men" will probably meet with greater success than any pictures in which Mr. Wilbur has hitherto appeared.

Many Book "The Secret Kingdom"

Almost co-incident with the booking of "The Secret Kingdom" by twenty-seven of the Marcus Loew houses and all the theaters in the Pantages circuit, three Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. branches have requested Walter W. Irwin, general manager of that company, to furnish them with additional prints of this new Vitagraph serial.

Chicago, where Sydney E. Abel is Vitagraph's branch manager, is making a record for bookings not exceeded, it is believed, by any photoplay serials so far released. Mr. Abel's reports show contracts on "The Secret Kingdom" for longer runs and at higher prices than have ever been the case in that territory.

Among the hundreds of theaters which have already booked "The Secret Kingdom," listed in the order in which the contracts were received at the local Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. office, are:

Mary Anderson, Louisville; Savoy, San Diego; Patricia, London, Ont.; Hamilton, Yonkers; Gordon, Rochester; Majestic, Schenectady; Regent, Minneapolis; Royal, Lowell, Mass.; Empire, New London, Conn.; Hathaway, Brockton, Mass.; Academy, Fall River, Mass.; Orpheum, Cleveland; Emery, Providence; Premier, Lawrence, Mass.; Strand, Haverhill, Mass.; Plaza, Worcester; Ziegfeld, Chicago; Central Square, Lynn; Bijou, Woonsocket; Burke, Kenosha, Wis.; Rex, Galveston; Imperial, Montreal; Crystal Palace, Montreal; Cataract, Niagara Falls; 77th Street, New York; Colonial, Stamford; Princess, Waterbury; Strand, Hartford; Avon, Decatur, Ill.; 20th Century, Chicago; Isis, Lynchburg, Va.; Della, Flint, Mich.; Frankford, Philadelphia; Tioga, Philadelphia; Hippodrome, Pittston, Pa.; Bijou, Wilkes-Barre; Manhattan, Scranton; America, Denver; Jewel, Sioux Falls, S. D.

These booking contracts were received in one day's mail at the Vitagraph offices.

Former Exhibitor Shot

While on an errand to the basement of the Kimball Theater, at Fullerton and Kimball avenues, Chicago, Frank Robinson, formerly manager of a picture theater, encountered a masked man, who shot at Robinson and wounded him in the abdomen when he refused to throw up his hands.

The circumstances surrounding the shooting fail to explain the occurrence, and it is thought that recent labor troubles may have lead to the assault upon Robinson. The injured man's condition caused some doubt as to the chances of recovery. He was living at the Y. M. C. A. hotel. He tells two different stories of the shooting and the police are puzzled.

ANITA STEWART PLAY

Some of the Many Moments in Vitagraph's "The Girl Philippa" Will Thrill the Spines of Your Fans

When Robert W. Chambers wrote "The Girl Philippa," he cast its time as August and September of 1914, when the nations of Europe were entering upon their terrible war, and the place as both the United States and Blowing up a barricade. Scene from "The Girl Philippa," Vitagraph's new Anita Stewart release.

France. A brief prologue is enacted some sixteen years before that, in one of the tumultuous Balkan states.

Full opportunity has been taken of these momentous times and places in Greater Vitagraph's production of "The Girl Philippa." It was produced under the personal supervision of Albert E. Smith, president of Greater Vitagraph, and here are a few of the many thrilling moments that Mr. Smith has supplied in "The Girl Philippa:"

A squad of mutinous soldiers storm the castle of their Balkan King.

The King makes a futile struggle for his life and the Queen, sacrificing herself to save her daughter—she is the girl Philippa—also falls in the debacle.

Two hussars fight a duel in the dark for possession of the Crown Princess.

The Crown Princess is kidnapped by the survivor.

A foreign spy enters the ordnance department headquarters in Washington at night and robs a safe of its most valuable secrets.

Two English spies, after a most bitter fight, overpower and bind two alien spies in a hotel room in Paris.

One of these English spies is fired upon in a moving railway carriage as he is bearing some papers to safety, the bullet shattering the car window and the door opposite.

The same automobile from which the English spy was shot at in a railway car, encounters an armed motorcycle and a furious battle ensues.

The cabaret of a peaceful French village is suddenly thrown into turmoil by an open fight between two bands of secret agents.

Hero and heroine escape from the upper story of a besieged inn attacked by machine guns, magazine pistols, and a battering ram, by the use of a scanty and improvised rope.

The first announcement of international hostilities comes to a peaceful village by the dropping of an aerial bomb.

Troops, while marching to a rendezvous, are scattered by enemy shells and aerial bombs.

Hero and heroine are trapped in a cellar by soldiers; the fight that follows sent eight of its participants to a real hospital.

Street barricades are destroyed by artillery fire and the use of hand grenades and liquid fire.

Soldiers, fighting from house to house and balcony to balcony, fall many feet into the burning street below.

A horseman, at full charge, jumps his animal over a barricade and captures the enemy's colors.

The grim execution of a traitor.

The biggest love scenes that have been staged for a long time.

And these are only a few of the many thrills in "The Girl Philippa," the picture which last week broke all box-office records at the famous Rialto Theater, New York.

Board Aids Children's Programs

Co-operation between the motion picture exhibitors of New York City and the public schools is the object of the National Juvenile Motion Picture Board, an organization similar to the Child's Welfare League. This board, as explained by its president, Mrs. Adele F. Woodward, was instituted to advocate the showing of pictures suitable for school children throughout New York City.

The plan of the organization is to select pictures from the different exchange programs and recommended them to exhibitors with the endorsement of the board. If the exhibitors consent to show these pictures at Saturday matinee or to run them two or three times a week after school hours, between three-thirty and five o'clock, as they would any other pictures, at regular admission prices, the board in turn distributes circulars in all the schools in the neighborhood of the theater, announcing the pictures and telling when and where they are to be shown. Attached to these circulars are coupons to be filled in by the children's parents, authorizing the members of the board (some of whom always were at the theaters) to act as the children's guardians, when the parents were unable to accompany them. Permission had been given the Juvenile Board by License Commissioner Bell and the Board of Education to use the coupons.

Already several theaters in New York City and Brooklyn were giving exhibitions of these pictures, in connection with the board, with great success, in some instances to as many as a thousand children in an afternoon. Many of these exhibitors have arranged to give a free exhibition of the pictures Monday morning to parents and teachers.

Ella Wheeler Wilcox Films

With bookings coming in rapidly from their territory, including Indiana, Wisconsin and Illinois, the Schwartz Films, Incorporated, people are highly gratified with the assured success of the Ella Wheeler Wilcox pictures. In Chicago among the first booking was the Lubliner & Trinz circuit of high-class theaters, covering the residence portions of the city, and including the 3,000-seat Covent Garden and the magnificent new 2,000-seat Michigan theater on the South side, together with eight other beautiful large-capacity theaters.

The territorial sales organization for Schwartz Films has been completed, and the road men are now out booking the Ella Wheeler Wilcox series. Jack M. Schwartz will be in charge of Indiana, William Weinshenker in Illinois, I. Maynard Schwartz and Paul De Oto in Wisconsin, and Louis Rosenthal, Ed Woski and William M. Schwartz in Chicago and surrounding territory.

A very complete and striking assortment of lithographs is furnished for each of the Ella Wheeler Wilcox dramas.

A comprehensive exhibitors' and newspaper clipsheet will be issued weekly hereafter by the General Film Service.

McCLURE'S FEATURE

New Idea in Feature Plays Is Treatment of "Sloth," with Charlotte Walker, Sixth of Seven Deadly Sins Series

McClure Pictures has made in "Sloth," starring Charlotte Walker, a drama of unusual appeal, notable especially because it uses a new way of presenting a motion picture play.

"Sloth" is the sixth of Seven Deadly Sins, the Charlotte Walker in "Sloth," one of the McClure series.

McClure series of seven five-reel dramas, the first of which was released on January 29.

"Sloth" is a stirring attack upon laziness, wielding a sharp sword upon the idle rich and pleading especially for patriotism among the women of today. Shirley Mason plays a young society girl who loves to loll in luxury. She is a sad contrast to the fine women who lived in years gone by, women who fought beside their husbands, who braved hardships uncomplainingly, in order that their families, their progeny and their country might prosper.

Shirley doesn't want George Le Guere to go to the front with the National Guard. Charlotte Walker comes to her in three separate dramas, each presented by novel methods so that the main thread of the story is never lost in the incidental plots, and in love and battle Shirley is saved from the sin of "Sloth." Brave women struggle for life and liberty in stirring scenes, in conquests of unknown lands and in conflicts with marauding pirates.

Awakened to her responsibilities, Shirley herself goes to war as a Red Cross nurse. There she is tested and found true to tradition and the sin of "Sloth" is conquered.

Miss Walker is supported by a splendid cast, including Miss Mason, Mr. Le Guere, D. J. Flannigan, Jack Crosby, Grace Williams, Charles De Mussett, A. Barrett, Curtis Cooksey, Emil Hach, Hattie Delaro, Harry McFayden and Helen Strickland.

Theodore Marston, the director, has produced an excellent play of an entirely new type. Hundreds of men were used in the battle scenes, which portray the modes of fighting in 1776 as well as the modern weapons of war.

"The Flowers of Doom" is a coming five-act Universal Chinese drama.

Director Holubar is completing a military drama, "The Reward of His Government," at Universal.

FOREIGN REPRESENTATIVE

Foreign Activities of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation Makes Imperative Creation of New Position for J. C. Graham

The extensive foreign activities already instituted by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and other plans which are now under advisement have rendered necessary the creating of a new office in that organization—a general foreign representative—to which J. C. Graham, one of the best known figures among motion picture executives, has just been appointed.

The engagement of Mr. Graham by the Famous Players-Lasky Company follows closely upon the sending of Alec Lorimore to Australia and of Ingvald C. Oes to the Scandinavian countries. Mr. Graham's commission is a roving one, however, as he will make the whole world his office, traveling to any and all parts of the world for the purpose of bringing to the immediate attention of the exhibitors of foreign countries the best points of Famous Players-Lasky-Morosco-Pallas productions, which might not be seized upon by the foreigner until they are drawn to his attention.

The engaging of these three men for work in the foreign field is a concrete evidence of the determination of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to place itself in the closest possible contact with the foreign field.

The Famous Players-Lasky Company's productions are already being widely distributed throughout Europe, Africa, the Antipodes, and other portions of the globe.

"The Crisis" Goes Strong

A trial of four weeks in Minneapolis has thoroughly tested the strength of "The Crisis," the photoplay feature spectacle founded by William N. Selig on Winston Churchill's novel of Civil War days in St. Louis and Vicksburg, Miss. Previous to the opening in Chicago it was decided to stage the spectacle in one of the leading theaters in Minneapolis. The result was that during the four weeks, "The Crisis" played to more money than any previous spectacle seen in Minneapolis with but few exceptions. So pleased are William N. Selig and Sherman-Elliott, Inc., with the showing that they have arranged to go into a "loop" theater in Chicago the first of May or sooner for an all-summer run. In the meantime, there will be two "Crisis" shows on tour, one in Minnesota, and the other in the far West. A Boston opening is also planned as soon as a theater is available.

Lammele Entertains

Thirty inmates of the Actors' Fund Home, West Brighton, Staten Island, were the guests of President Carl Laemmle, of the Universal Company, recently, when they saw the feature film, "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," at the Broadway Theater. Officials of the company loaned their automobiles for the trip to and from the theater.

Jack Cunningham, former newspaper man, who recently joined the staff of writers at Universal City, has been assigned to write comedies exclusively for the Joker Comedy Company of which William W. Beaudine is director. Cunningham has written many short stories in a humorous vein and some of these may be revived for the films.

DISCHARGES RIOTERS

Reel Makers in Real Scene in Real Court, When Attack on "Whom the Gods Detroy" Comes Before Bar

In a Brooklyn police court one day recently sat Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, director-general of the Vitagraph company. Beside him sat Frank Hitchcock, former postmaster general. A third member of the group was Cyrus Townsend Brady, the novelist. Harold Bolster, business manager of Great Vitagraph, was present.

They were part of the cast in a trial before the police magistrate. It was exactly such a trial as holds the suspense of picture goers in a theater, with stranger realities than many of the imaginary scenes in police courts.

The prosecutor arose. He presented the case of "the people." Edward Moore and William Patrick Nolan, charged with attempting to incite a riot at a performance of the Vitagraph picture, "Whom the Gods Destroy," were the defendants.

Mr. Hitchcock was present as a guest of Commodore Blackton, who, with Mr. Brady, is one of the co-authors of the piece. Their role was to thwart further malicious attacks on the picture, and to reaffirm that freedom of speech must not be curtailed or endangered for the moving picture producer.

It was charged that two defendants had gone to the Luna Theater, January 13, specifically to stop the showing of "Whom the Gods Destroy" by whatever means they thought necessary. It was further charged that they had used "stink pots" and violent tirades against the picture.

Attorney I. V. Schavrien, who prosecuted the case, brought out the fact that, among a limited number of American Sinn Fein agitators, there is a concerted movement to prevent public exhibition of this Vitagraph feature on the ground that it is anti-Irish.

It developed that Edward Moore is a brother of John D. Moore, national secretary of "The Friends of Irish Freedom," who has been writing letters to exhibitors vehemently protesting against their showing "Whom the Gods Destroy."

Frank Auditor, proprietor of the Luna Theater, testified that with the exception of the Irish agitators present at the showing, none but Italians were in the audience.

Another group of Irish spectators joined in the rioting, but it was not shown that they accompanied Moore and Nolan to the theater. Magistrate Walsh discharged the two defendants on the ground that it had not been proved beyond a reasonable doubt that these two men were two who incited the rioting.

Walter W. Irwin, general manager of Vitagraph-V. L. S. E., has addressed a letter to all the officers of "The Friends of Irish Freedom," asking them not to condemn a picture which they have not seen and inviting them to a private showing of "Whom the Gods Destroy." Mr. Irwin states that his company will spare no effort to protect, to the fullest extent of the law, any exhibitors who are annoyed or threatened for showing "Whom the Gods Destroy."

New Dorthy Gish Play

Dorothy Gish is concluding the final scenes in the Triangle Fine Arts comedy-drama, "Stage Struck," written by Roy Somerville and directed by Edward Morrissey. In this production Miss Gish portrays the role of a stage struck girl. Her interpretation of the young girl in the rural district, who thinks that she would be a second Bernhardt on the stage if she only had the opportunity and yet in reality having no dramatic ability whatever, is one of the best pieces of comedy work that she has done for some time. How this girl falls, and falls hard, for a fake school of dramatic acting when she gives them all her savings to teach her to act is handled in a particularly satirical, humorous vein that only Dorothy Gish knows how to characterize.

Here's a happy Triangle family. Kenneth Harlan, dancer and actor, of Chicago and Fine Arts is right up here, and below (where Vamps belong) is Louise Glaum, the Ince marriage-wrecker. Seena Owen, the Scandinavian beauty, fondles lucky old Rover, and way over is the fifteen-year-old Fine Arts gleamer, Mildred Harris, in her latest pose, taken for MOTOGRAPHY.

COMING PARAMOUNTS

Lou-Tellegen in "The Black Wolf" and Theodore Roberts in "The American Consul" on Program for February 12

Two of Paramount's most popular male stars, Lou-Tellegen and Theodore Roberts, in two Lasky productions, "The Black Wolf" and "The American Consul," respectively, will be the main features on the Paramount Program for the week of February 12.

The stirring tale of "The Black Wolf" which is laid in Spain, is the greatest romance in which this romantic actor has ever appeared. This production marks the actor's last appearance on the screen this season, as he will return to the stage for several months during the remainder of the theatrical season. During the course of the production, the star who is one of the most expert swordsmen in the country, has an opportunity of giving an exhibition of his skill.

For his leading woman in this photodrama, Mr. Tellegen has Nell Shipman.

The story of "The American Consul" has to do with a man interested in politics, and who is "kidded" by political leaders into believing that by obtaining sufficient votes, he can go to Washington and have anything in the country he desires.

Surrounding the program for this week, there will be three single reel features, the 53rd edition of the Paramount Pictographs, the magazine-on-the-screen; the 54th of the series of "Little Trips Around the World," personally conducted for Paramount by Burton Holmes, and a Klever Komedy, in which Victor Moore is starred.

The introductory Pictograph subject entitled "Skating a la Mode," shows how, in the last few years ice-skating has attained such popularity that as a social diversion, it is a close rival to the modern dance.

Directors of New York Organize

The Motion Picture Directors' Association of New York, a membership corporation, has been granted a charter by the state of New York. Its purposes are to maintain honor and dignity of the profession of motion picture directors, to exert every influence to improve the social and intellectual standing of all persons connected with the motion picture producing business.

Among the incorporators are J. Gordon Edwards, Barry O'Neil, William J. Humphrey, Robert G. Vignola, Edward Middleton, George Fitzmaurice, James Vincent, Joseph Kaufman, Oscar W. Eagle and M. Smiley, all of New York City.

Bill Against Sunday Pictures

Representative Houston, of Chariton county, Missouri, caused a great deal of excitement among exhibitors and exchange men in Kansas City recently when it was announced that he had introduced a bill in the house at Jefferson City, Missouri, that is drafted for the purpose of prohibiting motion picture theaters from Sunday operation all through the state. The bill also prohibits Sunday base ball and theatrical performances. The bill provides that any person engaging in a baseball game or operating motion picture machines Sunday shall be fined not less than $500 nor more than $1,000 and from six months to a year in jail.

The news hit Kansas City men that were interested like a bombshell explosion and they are now rapidly organizing for the purpose of lobbying against such a prohibitory measure. It is hardly believed, according to film men here, that the bill will have even a slight chance of getting by. It is the first attempt to prohibit Sunday moving pictures.

Invents Home Projector

The Movette Camera Corporation, organized recently at Rochester, New York, will manufacture a moving picture camera for home use, using narrow width films, and a small projecting machine to be known as the Movette. The camera is the invention of Frank L. Hough, of Chicago.

The Movette Camera Corporation has for its president, W. E. Gerry of Chicago, organized and sales manager; Frank L. Hough, the inventor, is vice president and manager of production; Dr. Wilbert Shallenberger, capitalist, of Waterloo, Iowa, is treasurer, and J. F. Shallenberger of Chicago is secretary.

Baltimore Men Hold Election

Officers of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Baltimore, Maryland, chosen at the annual election in January, are as follows: Frank A. Horning, of the Royal and Horn Theaters, president; Louis A. De Hoff, New Theater, vice-president; Eugene B. McCurdy, Lafayette and Eureka Theaters, vice-president; W. E. Stumpf, Goodtime Theater, treasurer; Thomas D. Goldberg, Goldberg and New Gordon Theaters, secretary. J. L. Rome was retained as the League's attorney. The members voted unanimously in favor of a motion that the Baltimore body unite with the national organization, and will send a delegation to the convention at Chicago next summer. F. C. Weber is chairman of the delegation.

Hodkinson Releases Edisons

It has been announced by Thomas A. Edison, Inc., that Conquest Pictures, the coming Edison productions based on a new idea and a new ideal, will be released on the direction of W. W. Hodkinson, an authority on the marketing of motion pictures.

Plans are being perfected for the establishment of distributing offices in all of the large cities, making the novel new productions easily available to all exhibitors.

Conquest Pictures will be released weekly in groups of five reels of clean dramatic material.

Two Fox Productions on February 19

On February 19, William Fox will release Theda Bara's second super de luxe photoplay, "The Tiger Woman," a stupendous production depicting a siren's intrigues. The film is probably one of the finest the incomparable Bara has ever made throughout her long career.

Another Fox screen subject will be issued on the same date.

Clune's Broadway Theater, Los Angeles, has booked the Mutual Weekly for a solid week's run. This is an exceptional honor for the Weekly as Clune's is one of the finest motion picture houses in Los Angeles. The Weekly will be used from Sunday to Saturday and be succeeded by the next issue.

Buys Quaker City Playhouse

One of the most successful of Philadelphia's theaters, the Family, located opposite the City Hall building on Market street, has been sold to Alexander R. Boyd. Besides its value for theatrical reasons, the site is rated among the choice realty properties of the high-priced real estate district. The transaction involves an amount reaching six figures, but the actual consideration is withheld.

The new owner expects to spend $50,000 for improvements. Mr. Boyd's policy in the management of the Arcadia Theater, at Chestnut and Sixteenth streets, of which he is manager, will be that of his new theater also. His connection with the Stanley Company will be continued.

Under his management the Arcadia Theater has become one of the best known playhouses in the city. It is attended by many prominent members of the social set.

Pathe Gets Famous Cartoonists

Development of its short reel program to keep pace with its big features and serials is an important part of Pathe's 1917 plans. The arrangement by which all International films are released by Pathe means in addition to a strengthening of the News Film, the entrance into the Pathe program of several of the most celebrated newspaper cartoonists in the world. The work of the majority of these artists is now appearing in the International's animated cartoons, released through Pathe, as part of a split reel cartoon and scenic.

Alternating weekly at the present time are the "Happy Hooligan" cartoons by F. Opper; "Bringing Up Father," by George McManus; "Jerry on the Job," by Walt Hoban; "Krazy Kat," by George Herriman; the famous "Joys and Glooms," by Tom Powers, and the original Katzenjammer Kids.

The Pathe sketching aggregation, according to one of them, George Herriman of "Krazy Kat" fame, is a happy bunch, who gladly share their affection for editors with the moving picture exhibitors.

Walt Hoban tells a sad story: Born in Philadelphia; color, white; unmarried, but reasonable; draws; throws and eats right-handed; smokes cigarettes.

George McManus admits that he was born in St. Louis, which has nothing to do with "Bringing Up Father."

Frederick Burr Opper was one of the first to win fame in the illustrated Sunday newspaper supplements, although T. A. Dorgan—"Tad"— got his start drawing fashion pictures.

Thomas E. Powers, who created "Joys and Glooms," hails from Milwaukee. His boyhood there, he says, was "spent principally in playing hookey."

Crane Wilbur with Mutual

Crane Wilbur will appear in a new series of five-part feature productions to be distributed by the Mutual Film Corporation. The announcement comes from the offices of President John R. Freuler of the Mutual who last week closed a contract for the series with David Horsley.

Mr. Horsley has completed the negatives of three of the productions, the titles of which are to be announced later, when release dates have been chosen in the Mutual's advance schedule.

"In these productions we are sure that Mr. Wilbur has done decidedly his best work," observed Mr. Horsley, "and I am sure that his reappearance will find a welcome among the exhibitors who have found Wilbur pictures of a distinct value at the box office. The production of these pictures has been particularly carefully handled, with an ample time allowance to the making of every scene. Mr. Wilbur has also personally supervised the cutting and final assembling of each picture, assuring himself that every effect was that at which he and the director aimed."

New Broadway star features on the General program. In the first miniature above is Ralph Ince in his remarkable characterization of Lincoln in "The Battle Hymn of the Republic." The next view is from the same play. At the right above, are Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew in "His Little Spirit Girl," which appeared January 26. Directly below is another glimpse from the same play. The wreck is in "The Valley of Lost Hope." January 29.

Charlotte Walker in "Pardners"

Charlotte Walker appeared on the schedule of the Mutual Film Corporation the week of January 29 in a five-reel production entitled "Pardners." Aslaska in the early 90's with its army of gold-seekers and the typical life of the wide-open mining town forms the background for the story of "Pardners," which is an adaptation of the novel of the name by Rex Beach. This is one of the most intensely dramatic of Mr. Beach's writings, and the story is said to have been founded on actual incidents brought to his notice during his Alaska journeyings. "Pardners" is the fourth of this author's novels to be picturized, the others which have proved so popular with the picture loving public being "The Spoilers," "The Ne'er Do Well" and "The Barrier."

"Heard melodies are sweet, but those unheard are sweeter," said Keats. Here's an unheard song from Mutual's "Pardners," with Charlotte Walker.

Charlotte Walker, who is one of the best known emotional actresses on the American stage, is given ample opportunity to display her exceptional dramatic talent in her portrayal of the character of Olive Troop, a brilliant young actress who believes her husband, who has gone to the Klondike to make a fortune for her and their small son, has proved untrue to her and fallen to the level of the habitues of the Alaskan gambling houses. Richard Tucker plays opposite Miss Walker in the character of Justus Morrow, the husband, and Leo Gordon as Alonzo Struthers and Charles Sutton as John Graham also appear in the supporting cast.

The scenes depicting the pioneering history of the great northern territory during the rush to the gold fields and showing the actual mining conditions during the early days on Caribou Creek will be most enthusiastically received by picture lovers.

On the Fox Fires

Gladys Brockwell, the Fox player, is busy and is keeping a staff of Fox players and her director at the Western studio busy also, upon a new feature which is now being filmed. She is working under the direction of Richard Stanton, who was the steersman at the wheel in producing of her most recent subject. William Burress plays an important role in the new piece.

At Fort Lee, New Jersey, Stuart Holmes, who has just finished "The Scarlet Letter," will come before the camera again for Director Carl Harbaugh, maker of the film version of Hawthorne's novel. Mr. Harbaugh a few days ago was hunting for a milk wagon, which he wanted as a starter for a scene in the new Holmes play.

Virginia Pearson commences acting in another subject this week, while out west, Otis Turner is nearing the completion of the photodrama in which George Walsh and Anna Luther are playing the principal parts. Mr. Turner expects to finish this, his third Fox picture, very shortly.

"Arsene Lupin" at Rialto

"Arsene Lupin," a five-reel Greater Vitagraph presentation of the famous detective novel and stage play, was selected by Samuel L. Rothapfel for the Rialto Theater, New York, as its attraction for the week beginning February 4. It will be released on the regular Blue Ribbon program through Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. on February 26.

To synopsize so meaty a story as "Arsene Lupin" is an unusually ticklish job. The Vitagraph production shows the assumption of Lupin, world-renowned crook, to the title and estate of the Duke de Charmerace, his betrothal to Germaine, daughter of Guernay-Martin, art collector, the role played by Billie Billings, the discovery of the deception, after Lupin's many robberies, by the great detective Guerchard, and, finally, Lupin's escape with Sonia Kritchnoff, secretary to Germaine, played by Ethel Gray Terry, herself a thief. Then comes the moral rejuvenation of the pair.

"The Courage of Silence," a Blue Ribbon release shown at the Rialto the previous week, proved popular.

New Signal Manager

Wesley Gray Gilmour, former superintendent of the Ince studios at Culver City, California, has assumed the duties of business manager of the Signal Film Corporation in Los Angeles.

Mr. Gilmour is one of the early pioneers of the picture industry on this coast. After having served as auditor and business manager of the Centaur and Nestor film companies respectively, he came west as business manager of the latter firm. Later he assumed the same office with the Universal, leaving that company to accept the position of superintendent of the Ince plant at Culver City.

Triangle Title Changed

"A Daughter of the Poor" will be the title of the Triangle Fine Arts comedy-drama formerly known under the working titles of "The Doll Shop," and later, "The Spitfire," in which Bessie Love is featured. Director Edward Dillon is adding the finishing touches to the production which gives all promise of being one of the best vehicles that Bessie Love has had for some time. Roy Stuart, who played the leading masculine role opposite Lillian Gish in "The House Built Upon Sand," plays the masculine lead in "A Daughter of the Poor." The other principals in the cast include Carmel Myers, Max Davidson and Carl Stockdale.

Burt King, formerly of the General Film in the South, has been appointed Branch Manager of the Mutual's Wilkes-Barre Office, succeeding Wm. H. Rippard, who has been transferred to the Mutual's Philadelphia exchange.

Efficiency in Big U. Production

The careful application of efficiency has reduced nearly one-half the time of producing plays for the screen at Universal City and at the same time the excellence of the finished product has been increased immeasurably.

H. O. Davis, vice-president and general manager, Universal Company.

At the present time about eighteen days are consumed in making the usual five-reel photoplay, whereas in the past from a month to six weeks, and, frequently, two months, was the time usually taken to complete a feature of that length.

When H. O. Davis, vice president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company and general manager of Universal City, assumed charge at the film capital he at once commenced a careful study of the production methods and finally evolved a plan whereby time and labor could be saved and at the same time avoid waits for sets.

As a result as soon as a photoplay of any character is turned over to a director for production complete scene plots are prepared in the office of O. L. Sellers, manager of productions. An arrangement also is made whereby the work on exteriors and interiors is alternated during the making of the picture so that there is continuous work by the company.

At night the sets are erected for the use of the director on the following day and if these require more time for construction work the director continues on location.

Under the former method long waits for sets were the usual thing, which resulted in serious and expensive loss of time for the entire company.

As it is now the erection of the sets is commenced even before the estimate of the cost of production is made in order that advantage may be taken of the night hours.

All the director at Universal City has to do now is to give the production manager an idea of the character of sets he needs and then the matter is laid before the art director, who has the drawings made at once for the stage carpenters. Without any confusion the arrangements proceed and when the director has his cast ready he finds a card with his name on it tacked to the walls of his sets.

Edward Jose Resigns

Edward Jose has handed in his resignation as a member of the board of directors of the Astra Film Corporation and, it is announced, will shortly sever his connection with that firm.

New Essanay Features

"Little Shoes," featuring Henry B. Walthall, and "Skinner's Dress Suit," with Bryant Washburn in the leading role, are Essanay's two Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay current offerings.

"Little Shoes" was released January 15, and got away with an immediate success. It is a drama presenting Mr. Walthall in an entirely different characterization. The great emotional actor has thrown all of his talent into the role of the great lover. K. E. S. E. headquarters report that exhibitors have packed their houses wherever this Walthall feature has been shown, and that advance bookings are more than satisfactory.

The screen adaptation is from Eleanor M. Ingram's "The House of the Little Shoes," a widely read novel which, in itself, forms a good basis for advance advertisement.

Mr. Walthall's leading woman is Mary Charleson, whose work in his last feature, "The Truant Soul," was praised throughout the country. The picture has been exceptionally well staged and photographed. It has a screen time of 1 hour, 15 minutes.

"Skinner's Dress Suit" will be released February 5. It is an adaptation from the story of that title by Henry Irving Dodge, which was published in The Saturday Evening Post. Mr. Dodge's writings are known to practically every person in the United States, and his name to the picture will prove an attractive advertisement.

Bryant Washburn announces that he has done his best work in this feature. It depicts him in the role of a poor clerk who finally won prosperity because he got dressed up. The settings and photography are excellent.

"Skinner's Dress Suit" has a screen time of 1 hour, 10 minutes.

Big New Railroad Serial

The Helen Holmes company, under the direction of J. P. McGowan, has begun the production of a thirty-reel railroad serial. The stories for this production are being prepared by P. G. Estee, a well known newspaper and magazine contributor of the east. As fast as the stories are received, they will be put into working form by Producer McGowan. The tentative title for the new serial is "Webs of Steel," although it is probable that this will be changed before the date of release.

Theater for Jews

Several well-known theatrical men of New York City have bought the ground on Pitkin avenue and will build a theater of large proportions, which will have a seating capacity of 2,000 persons on the main floor and 1,400 in the balconies. This theater is to be devoted to motion picture plays with the sub-titles in Hebrew. The theater is located in the heart of the Jewish district in Greater New York. The ground will be broken in May and it is expected that the theater will be opened the early part of September.

After more than five months of continuous work on it, the Helen Holmes company, under the direction of J. P. McGowan, has completed the production of the fifteenth and last episode of their big serial, "A Lass of the Lumberlands."

"A Girl Like That"

Famous Players-Paramount Subject in Five Reels. Reviewed by George W. Graves raised, and treading the narrow path. The picture is entertaining for its whole length, being the happy embodiment of good dramatic action and well flavored humorous touches.

Nell Gordon (Irene Fenwick), daughter of a prominent member of a band of crooks, is sent to a small town bank, to take up a position as stenographer, to learn the combination of the safe, and finally to aid the crooks in getting away with their loot. However, she falls in love with the reticent, countryfied cashier and "stalls" on the job. Her father, back in Chicago, repents of the way his daughter is being forced to live, and refuses to sign a note to her, the substance of which is that he is failing in health and must have money at once. Because of this refusal he is shot. When Nell finally hears of her father's fate, she decides to double-cross the gang, and this she does, the robbers being caught red-handed at the bank safe. So her romance with the cashier terminates happily.

The whole offering is handled with exceptional power by director Del Henderson, artistically and otherwise. Others in the cast rightfully demanding mention are Tom O'Keefe, Edwin Sturgis and Harry Lee. "A Girl Like That" is a finely proportioned piece of photodrama and we recommend it heartily as real entertainment.

Two Selig Plays

General Program Releases of January 20 and 29. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

"LOST AND FOUND." George Fawcett as Captain Steve Hendricks gives this two-reel picture its chief value. As for the story, a great deal of action and several dramatic situations have been crowded into the two reels. There is plenty of plot material in the offering and Al Green, the director, has used it effectively. It is frank melodrama and will be appreciated as such. In the work of George Fawcett, the picture rises above this plane. The old sea captain, disgusted with the foppish youth his daughter loves, would delight any audience in any sort of a play. This character, and the story's swiftness, will "put across" the picture. Its demerits are its weak title and the fact that the hero does not win the sympathy of the audience, although, true to form, he foils the villain and saves the girl. The viewer feels as the captain did when, no longer having a legitimate objection, he accepts the young man as his future son-in-law with very poor grace.

The Story: Captain Hendricks dislikes very much Joseph Morgan (Thomas Guinan) with whom his daughter, Vivian (Vivian Reed), is in love. A bracelet which the youth wears is the "last straw" and in a temper the captain forbids his calling on Vivian. The captain favors Charles Brook, son of a wealthy banker. Joseph saves Vivian from Charles' violence and is arrested. By means of the bracelet he wears he is proved the long-lost son of the banker and the brother of Charles. The story of Charles' brutality is disclosed; Joseph is freed, and marries Vivian.

The picture is released January 29.

"CUPID'S TOUCHDOWN." This is a one-reel college story featuring Jack Pickford, and is released January 20. It was directed by Frank Beal from a story by Marjorie B. Cooke. Clara Le Moyne, Scott Beal and Sidney Smith have the principal supporting roles. The popularity of Pickford and the interest which college stories usually have for juvenile audiences form its chief appeal. A "hazing stunt" which later causes trouble, a football game in which the hero makes a touch-down at the dramatic last minute, and a campus romance are the material from which the comedy drama is woven.

"Rum Cay"

Episode Eight of Greater Vitagraph's "The Secret Kingdom." Reviewed by George W. Graves

EPISODE 12 of this romantic story finds both the plotters and the plotted against at the mercy of pirates on a far off isle, the use of these sea terriers in the story serving as a groundwork for melodramatic action of a most pronounced sort. "Rum Cay," a title which seems more or less of an enigma until its mysteries are revealed, is the name of the murderous captain of this band. His character is as black as his primitively unkempt beard. With fiendish glee he makes his victims walk the plank, firing a bullet into the back of each unfortunate before he jumps. All these little diversions of the pirate, together with other premeditated ones developing with the story, make the final blowing up of the entire band on a schooner more sweet in the mind of the vengeful spectator. The dynamiting of this schooner, by the way, is an exceptionally well-handled thrill.

With its rapid action, embracing fights, captures and escapes, this episode is due to hold the attention. The story cannot be said to hold religiously to logic or the direction to convince absolutely, but in so far as the picture's appeal to the majority is not necessarily in these points, it will be welcomed as good entertainment. The fight scenes are certainly well handled. There is another thrill which we forgot to mention. This consists of a man chasing another up the foremast of the ship, and across a rope high above the deck to the main-mast, on the crosstrees of which occurs a struggle, the conquered man being hurled off into the water. We think there is a little unnatural acting in this episode. However, there isn't enough of this to weaken the hold which the stars, Charles Richman and Dorothy Kelly, have upon the public.

Both are accomplished portrayers of human emotion. Arline Pretty's work deserves praise for her part in "Rum Cay."

As far as the advancing of the story's main plot is concerned, this chapter doesn't leave us any further advanced than we were at the end of the last episode—that is, the contending factions are not any nearer the kingdom of Alania than they were. As the episode ends, Ramon and Savatz, the Princess and Phillip, are drifting towards an unknown fate on the seas in an open rowboat, whereas the finish of the last episode found the four in the same predicament in a larger boat. The action of this chapter serves to introduce the pirates and to blow them sky high as the climax.

"The Primitive Call"

Five-Reel William Fox Drama Features Gladys Coburn. Reviewed by George W. Graves

GLADYS COBURN, the "Kentucky beauty," has in this Fox release, dealing dramatically with betrayed redskins and unprincipled Whites, a part well designed to set off her manifold charms. The public is sure to be pleased with her. The part which the new Fox star portrays in this piece—that of a society butterfly, who, to show her father that she can really accomplish something, makes false love to an Indian and compels him to betray his people into the hands of a set of Eastern land-grabbers—doesn't impose upon her anything acutely emotional, but it gives her a chance to establish the fact that she possesses a good screen presence. She is a girl with a queenly manner easily alterable to winsome girlish moods.

The primitive, the setting; the call, Gladys Coburn; the play, "The Primitive Call."

The story, by Bertram Bracken, has been well produced by the author, who also has the role of director. Its interest is well sustained without the introduction of spectacular melodrama. The story is not new, by any means, but several original twists are given to a plot which always has its appeal. Some novel photographic effects are secured, and the whole production is "staged" amid suitable surroundings. Fritz Leiber makes a very stoical, composed, redskin and a virile leading man. Others in the judiciously chosen cast are John Webb Dillon, George A. Larkin, Lewis Sealy, Velma Whitman and Little Kittens Reichart.

Betty Malcolm, daughter of a wealthy gentleman who is a member of a group desirous of getting some valuable land away from the Indians at a small price, comes West and ensnares the tractable Indian leader, Elkhorn, with her wiles. While he is consuming with passion she tells him that to win her he must sign away the land of his people. He does this, and she, having gained her end, turns cruelly away from the man. The remainder of the story tells how the wronged Indian abducts Betty, takes her to a lonely place in the wilderness and metes out a full punishment to her, breaking her heart in the same way she broke his, although he forces himself to suffer also. The end shows Elkhorn accepting the love of his faithful Indian sweetheart, while Betty, at last awakened, watches them through the trees, then, with an empty heart, wends her way down the mountain side and toward the abode of her people. Through kidnaping and holding a child for ransom, the Indians have been able to come to terms with the Whites.

"The Primitive Call" make a pretty well rounded out piece of entertainment. It is the kind of thing that the average movie patron always "falls for."

"The Barrier"

Rex Beach Pictures' Ten-Reel Offering a Thorough Success. Reviewed by George W. Graves

"THE BARRIER," the first picture of the Rex Beach Pictures Company, is an entirely unusual offering. It is unusual in the fact that its story holds for ten solid reels with hardly the suggestion of a waver in the interest—and this without resorting to the purely spectacular; it is unusual in the splendid work of the entire cast; it is unusual as a representation of expert direction, and, in fact, it is out of the ordinary in a host of things of minor import. The acting honors go to Mitchell Lewis, who plays the part of 'Poleon Doret, one of the most noble characters that ever moved upon the screen, with the assurance, conviction and sympathetic power that is seldom equaled in the releases of the day. Mitchell Lewis' emotional rendition of this part will win for him no little fame. It is the part of the picture that stands out in one's memory as a distinct peak above the rest, after its other memories have faded from view.

"The Barrier" is deeply impressive from start to finish. Above all is the story human. It gets right at the finer feelings and gathers the sympathies of the spectator into the focus of concentrated attention. The story is produced accurately, chapter by chapter, upon the screen. If there is any protest against the length, it will not be because of lack of interest, but because there is so much of the elements of interest and suspense that the minds of some people may be slightly fatigued. However, the picture could be slightly cut, especially at the end. Here one expects that the next scene will be the final one and reaches for his hat, only to be fooled by the appearance of several more flashes.

Mabel Julienne Scott, who has the role of the half-breed (really a white girl, as indicated in the prologue and revealed at the climax) shows herself to be an actress of distinct ability. W. J. Gross, in the role of the picturesque character, "No Creek" Lee, is delightful. Howard Hall, Russell Simpson and Victor Sutherland are other prominent members of the cast. The make-ups employed in the picture are worthy of especial comment. They are supremely realistic. In fact, the only reason we ever would know they are make-ups is that several of the cast play double roles. A. Gilspear constructed the scenario—and this scenario has only one noticeable weak spot all through. The photography was in the care of Edward Earle.

To use the language of the "man on the street," "The Barrier" is "a whale" of a picture. It is a big feature for any house, and it ought to have the right to command big prices.

"Enlighten Thy Daughter"

Ivan Abramson's Production in Seven Parts Is Strong Drama. Reviewed by George W. Graves

"ENLIGHTEN Thy Daughter," written and directed by Ivan Abramson, had a brilliant opening at the Park Theater, New York, on Sunday night, January 28, the usual first-night crowd being present, in addition to a large paid attendance following the exploitation of the film.

A gripping scene from "Enlighten Thy Daughter."

The subject, while sensational in fact as well as in name, is brought out upon the screen in a way that is effective and not offensive. While showing certain phases of the seamy side of life in their sad but true light, the offering is lifted out of the sphere of things cheap and risque by skillful, delicate handling, appealing to what is best in people and not to any morbid, depraved sense. The picture is deeply pathetic, enough so, in fact, to incite the lachrymal organs of the ordinary person to action. There may be a little too much of this lugubriousness to suit many entertainment seekers, but its generous presence can hardly be counted as a fault, since it helps to impress upon one so strongly the baneful results of folly and ignorance. This is one picture that claims to teach something and carries out its claim. The same parents that neglect to impart protective knowledge to their offspring may think the case of the young girl is remote, but the hidden things of human experience do not so indicate, and at any events, the modern parent's sin of taking things for granted is not misrepresented. If one thing helps to augment the pathos of the picture more than another, it is the glaring moral discrepancy in the pernicious usage which demands payment of the woman but allows the man to go his independent way, scathless.

"Enlighten Thy Daughter" has a cast of eminent actors, but two players in particular stand apart from the rest in their deeply emotional portrayals—Zena Keefe and Katharine Kaelred. James Morrison, the girl's betrayer, is always effective. Others having important roles are Frank Sheridan, Arthur Donaldson, Marie Shotwell and Ruby De Remer.

As a whole, the picture is adequately "staged," but there are places where more artistic taste would have helped. Some of the sets have furniture dotted all over the floor in the most awkward fashion. Photography is of a general good quality. Mr. Abramson is to be lauded for his manifest genius both as a story-writer and director.

This offering is a fine one for the general class of audience. It gets below the surface and reaches the deepest human feelings. It is a feature picture in every sense of the word, and one which the exhibitor can bank on for results. "Enlighten Thy Daughter" is being sold state rights by the Enlightenment Film Corporation, 220 W. Forty-second street, New York, of which Henry J. Brock is president.

"Her Good Name"

Five-Reel Art-Dramas Play Produced by Van Dyke. Reviewed by George W. Graves

IF a person can wait patiently until the last reel of this subject he will be rewarded by the enjoyment of a climax of good dramatic intensity. The story, until it reaches this stage in its development, does not evolve in a manner calculated to hold the interest, and the acting being only of a fair rate, does not lend any material aid.

Jean Sothern rises to the occasion well at the story's climax but her complete rendition is not exceptional because of the fact that she seems aware of the camera's presence at times. One thing is certain—there are too many close-ups of Miss Sothern and her two little animal pets. That part of the story forming the light base-work of the beginning reels is rather monotonous in effect, but when things finally come to a head we have a heart-struggle situation of power.

Here the girl finds herself caught between two merciless powers. In order to save her father from the chair she must swear away her good name. This will give the desired force to her appeal for her father and move the jury to bring into action "the unwritten law." The father has killed the man he thinks has betrayed his daughter, while the truth in the matter is that she has not been betrayed. The father, intensely moved by his daughter's self-sacrifice, suffers a heart-failure in the court-room, and expires shortly after telling the court she lied to save him.

Jean Sothern in "Her Good Name."

This picture would have had more zest if contracted into shorter footage. As it is, much of the impertinent material only serves to delay the climax, and not to engender any keen appetite for the events of the denouement. As a whole, "Her Good Name" is not quite up to the standard Art-Dramas releases have set for themselves.

Arthur Houseman is the most convincing character in the support. Earl Metcalfe is appropriately cast as the artist. Other people helping in the picture's interpretation are William H. Turner, Ethel Tully, Barbara Castleton and Mrs. Parker Spaulding.

Ann Murdock in "Envy," one of McClure's "Seven Deadly Sins" series.

"Envy" and "Pride"

First of McClure's "Seven Deadly Sins" Series Reviewed by George W. Graves

"ENVY," to be released by Triangle Distributing Corporation January 29, will find favor because of its rapid, though none too smooth, action and its winsome star, Ann Murdock. Sometimes the star comes little short of portraying with realism the required emotional feeling, but she is always a charming figure to watch on the screen. Shirley Mason, another screen beauty, and George Le Guere, chief in the support, account generally well for themselves and so do the others in the cast, including Lumsden Hare, Jessie Stevens, William Wadsworth and Robert Cain, but the fact that some of these characters are a little too overdrawn to coincide with the customary or likely actions of every-day life, tends to depreciate the value of the actors' efforts.

The story, telling of how an unsophisticated country girl is violently cured of a chronic case of "Envy," embraces the qualities of a well-ordered melodrama in so far as certain pulse-accelerating situations are concerned, but it is hampered in its scattered development. After the final adjustment of values, however, it remains that the picture is interesting. Another fact stands out—that it is sure to please the multitude, for it has the prime constituents that precedent has proved to be "sure-fires."

"PRIDE"

In the second of this series, to be released February 5, action is again the outstanding feature, with genuine atmosphere a good second. In this release, two people are victims of the downward-leading, self-centered affliction, pride. Holbrook Blynn, whose popularity is more than a matter of speculation, is the rich banker, who, with a bogus count, lays his net for the foolishly proud girl in the story. She is finally rescued from a precarious position by the lover she has ignored, but who realizes that there is yet hope, and the story ends with the punishment of the banker, whose motives were pernicious, the exposure of the count, and a radical adjustment in the girl's mental outlook.

Shirley Mason's work in this is altogether likeable and George Le Guere handles his part well. However, both of these parts might be styled as only surface portrayals.

"Pride" doesn't get very far below the surface, in fact, on the whole it cannot be taken very seriously. It hasn't graduated from the class of "just movie" stuff. The popularity of the stars themselves will be a potent item in the exhibitor's forecasts. But towering above all in the line of the exhibitor's prosperity is the McClure publicity, a power behind the career of these "Seven Deadly Sins" which can not be lightly esteemed.

"Adventures of Buffalo Bill"

Issued in Five Reels by Essanay Through K.-E.-S.-E. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THE death of Col. William F. Cody, "Buffalo Bill," has given a special interest to anything pertaining to this picturesque figure, and, with every newspaper and magazine devoting space to recollections of his career and the old "wild west" days, there is little doubt of the timely value of this offering. It will undoubtedly have a special drawing power just at present.

The release consists of five reels, three of these issued before and representing the various incidents in "Buffalo Bill's" Indian battles. The last two reels are new material, pictures taken during the past few years and showing the home life of Col. Cody, and some of his later exploits.

The material has been edited and re-titled. Much of it is of interest and has historical value. The photography is in general satisfactory. But as a theater offering, the production would be greatly improved if cut down. A great deal of excess footage is apparent throughout. Too much space is given unimportant scenes and this tends to lessen the interest of the spectator, which would otherwise be keen. As offered, the picture has both timely and educational value and will please patrons interested in its subject matter.

"Glory"

Unity Sales Corporation Releases M. L. B. Comedy-Drama January 15. Reviewed by George W. Graves

KOLB and Dill, the comedians who hold forth in this picture as joint managers of a country hotel, are seen in the exercise of their full laugh-getting powers. The acting of the two is sure to cause smiles of all degrees of expansivness among the ranks of the spectators, and when we consider the picture's fortune in havinig a support, headed by the fascinating Juanita Hansen, which catches the spirit of the piece and shadows it forth in able portrayal it appears that at least one of the requisites of an offering of this kind is well cared for. It takes seven reels to tell the story, and although the developments keep one interested most of the time, "Glory" is no exception to the rule that seven thousand feet is too much for a subject of limited proportions.

Melodramatic action and farce-comedy action receive a skilful blending and the stars respond to these divergent moods without any loss of conviction. One is agreeably surprised to have the fact demonstrated that Kolb and Dill can figure impressively in straight dramatic scenes. The story, by Aaron Hoffman, has plenty of screenable material. Besides the general effectiveness of the direction seen in the supervision of the players' work, there is an exceptionally artistic side to the mechanical direction which stands out in bold form, the settings and properties showing that the producers were not chary of expense.

Juanita Hansen and Kolb and Dill in "Glory."

"Glory," a well produced and well acted picture, makes a tempting piece for the exhibitor who is looking for something with the right blending of the ludicrous and the dramatic to make for well-rounded entertainment. Its only serious limitation is the excess footage.

"Jim Bludso"

Triangle-Fine Arts Drama Released February 4. Reviewed by George W. Graves

BASED on John Hay's poem, telling a dramatic story concerning events in the lives of a handful of people out in Pike county, Illinois, immediately following the Civil War, this picture gives Wilfred Lucas an exceptionally pleasing part as Jim Bludso, a rollicking, carefree engineer of a Mississippi River packet. From beginning to end Mr. Lucas makes one feel the true, bighearted character of the man and it can be said without any hesitation that one watching his work loses all sight of him as an actor and sees him in the pure reality of the character being depicted. He is well supported by an effective cast in which Olga Grey, James O'Shea, Sam De Grasse, Winifred Westover, and little George Stone have important parts. Mr. De Grasse makes a good type of leering, foxy villain—the kind that resort to underhand tricks to gain their ends.

That convincing actor, Wilfred Lucas, in "Jim Bludso."

Tod Browning and Wilfred Lucas directed the picture in such a way that the direction stands out as a very prominent feature. Among the sensations they provide are the flooding of the little town of Gilgal and the combined burning and blowing up of a river steamer for some thrilling rescues. The picture's whole atmosphere is excellent. One feels transported to the accurate scene of activities—the river packets, the levees, the costuming, and what not, giving realism to the story's telling.

With a story of good entertaining power, well produced, and acted by a cast of uniform good merits, "Jim Bludso" ought to make a sound box-office proposition. If certainly should in cases where the picture is showing more than one day and people have a chance to recommend it to their friends. It makes a refreshing offering and can be truthfully referred to as a picture "of quality."

Jim Bludso's wife, a Southerner, has a quarrel with him just as the war breaks out and he joins the Union troops. She takes the child and returns to her home in Natchez, soon later to elope to New Orleans with Merrill, a man of few virtues. Merrill deserts her here and goes with a pal to put over a bad levee contracting deal at Gilgal, Illinois, the home of Bludso. The latter, meanwhile, has returned from war, found his child, and is living with little Breeches and Banty Tim, a negro who saved his life in battle. Bludso has no sooner become interested in Kate Taggart, a lifelong friend, than his deserted wife returns. The man's bigness is shown in the welcome he accords her. The wife dies, but not until she has exposed to her husband the identity of the unprincipled contractor, Merrill (now under an assumed name). After Merill has instigated some more villainy against Bludso and the latter nearly loses his life on its account, the villain's activities are arrested by fate. Bludso heroically saves him from the burning river steamer, but not in time to ward off the grim spectre of death.

"Money Magic"

Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature Released February 5. Reviewed by George W. Graves

THIS is a strong, deeply human and pathetic drama, offering a wealth of characterization by a splendid cast, at the head of which is Edith Storey. This accomplished star heightens the value of every scene in which she appears. Her emotional work is subtle, forceful, profoundly human. Without shadow of doubt she is the very woman the author wished to bring into being in his picture. A word of praise is also due William Duncan, whose work in this piece lifts him into a secure place in stardom. Antonio Moreno, Laura Winston and Florence Nye have the other roles.

Edith Storey in "Money Magic."

The story, by Hamlin Garland, is one susceptible of splendid effect on the screen. It relies not on suspense, melodramatic action or the superficially sensational, but on the sympathy that is adroitly directed toward the central characters, whom we find in a genuinely true-to-life situation. And the characters act exactly as noble and feeling people in actual life do.

An enormously wealthy man shortly after marrying becomes a helpless cripple and invalid. His wife, though absolutely loyal to him, is attracted strongly to a young lawyer, who visits their home. The feelings between her and the youthfully vigorous man are mutual, but the lawyer is engaged to marry a girl whose illness, as time passes, becomes more and more hopeless. Both the young people are strictly true to their obligations, voluntarily choosing to deny themselves rather than to bring unhappiness to the ones still holding their affections. Finally the sick girl has a heart to heart talk with the invalid husband and both resolve to make a sacrifice. The former releases her faithful fiance, while the latter, nobly giving up his wife, wanders off and up the mountain side, where the high altitude, according to his intentions, kills him (the doctor had told him the mountains meant sure death). So the story closes with the happiness of the lovers, for whose sacrifice a greater has been returned.

Excellent atmosphere at all times is one of the picture's rules. William Wolbert directed with the utmost pains and skill. Edith Storey playing an emotional part in a strong story is the assurance that the movie patrons the country throughout seek. And not only this can they have in this case, but the added assurances of a splendid cast, fine direction and all-round rich production.

"The White Raven"

Ethel Barrymore in Six-Reel Metro Drama. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

A STORY of the very romantic type, which is appealing and forms the basis of Ethel Barrymore's latest picture vehicle. A plot of this sort, well produced, with a player of Miss Barrymore's ability and drawing power in a sympathetic role, should please any audience, and there is little doubt of the reception "The White Raven" will receive. It is a worth while production, interesting, entertaining and satisfying.

The career of Nan Baldwin, dance-hall girl of Alaska, who sets out to avenge the wrong done her father by his former partner, leads her through many experiences to a happy conclusion of her romance. The latter part of the role, that of the prima donna, fits Miss Barrymore much better than the first part, for she is not well cast as the northern singer of the mining camps. However, her charm and emotional ability serve in general to make Nan a most likeable character. The supporting cast of players is a good one. Walter Hitchcock as John Braisdell, Nan's enemy, does especially good work. William B. Davidson as The Stranger, who makes Nan's career possible, is also satisfactory. Other players are Ethel Dayton, George A. Wright, Viola Fortescue, H. H. Pattee, Mario Majeroni, Phil Fansord and Ned Finlay. George D. Baker is the director of the picture.

"Three Ways Out"

Essanay Black Cat Comedy Drama Released January 30. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

SO far, each of the two-reel subjects released under the Black Cat brand have been worthy commendation. Moreover, they have been distinctive. This release is especially satisfactory. Frequently, in considering a short-length subject the reviewer's standards go down a bit and material which would be condemned in a longer picture is judged fairly good for a short length play. This leniency is not required for "Three Ways Out," nor for the Black Cat releases in general. They have a style of their own.

The swift, business-like way in which the situation is set forth and a climax arranged during the first reel of this picture denotes clever directing. A situation of real dramatic force is built up; then the denouement comes swiftly and in an unexpected way. However, after the brisk presentation of the main part of the tale, the dragginess of the closing scenes is rather annoying. The story is finished, having been well told and keeping its surprise to the end, and we expect the familiar Indian-head trade-mark to flash on the screen. Instead there are a number of anti-climactical scenes to show that each and every character was well pleased with the outcome. These concluding episodes could have been safely left to the imagination of the audience.

The acting, settings and photography are up to standard. Leading roles in the cast are taken by Gertrude Glover, John Cossar and Harry Dunkinson.

troubles by eloping with the man she loves. In doing this, she unwittingly solves the problem for her father, for the man she marries is the son of the politician and it was for this son and not for himself that Grogan was pleading. The politician replaces the money for the banker and everyone is happy.

The Story: When Bill Baldwin dies in Alaska, after having been ruined by his partner, John Blaisdell, who left him only a five dollar bill with the instructions to buy a gun and kill himself, Nan, his daughter, a singer in the dance halls, swears some day to ruin Blaisdell. Believing that she can do this by taking advantage of her unusually fine singing voice, she determines to obtain an education. She offers herself as the prize in a card game at the gambling resort provided the winner finances her musical education. The Stranger wins her Nan loses her courage and wishes to withdraw from the bargain and the stranger compromises by accepting from her a "I. O. U. myself, Nan Baldwin," to be redeemed when she has won success as a singer.

Years later, Nan is a famous opera star. John Blaisdell, now a well-known financier, is infatuated with her. She takes advantage of his love to learn his plans in business and to ruin him financially. When he pleads for aid to redeem his losses, she has the pleasure of handing him the note he once gave her father. Her revenge has been accomplished, but later she is moved by pity for his young daughter and relents.

Then she receives the summons to redeem the "I. O. U." which the stranger holds. She is in love with a man she has recently met, but in spite of his pleadings she goes back to Alaska. The audience knows that the man she loves and the stranger she fears are the same man. When Nan learns this, again in the Alaskan town, she is glad to keep her bargain, although the man offers her her freedom, and the two are married.

"The Darling of Paris"

AS the blithe, winsome French dancer, Esmeralda, whose very charm only leads her into the snare of most trying circumstances, like the bird with gayest plumage soonest to fall before the hunter's gun, Theda Bara is spontaneous, delightful. She paints the girlish side of the character as well as the womanly side with myriad hues of subtle impersonation. We never saw Miss Bara in a more advantageous role, and it is quite probable she never appeared in one more compatible to her personal as well as dramatic qualifications. In "Romeo and Juliet" it was hard to accept her as the Juliet Shakespeare wrote about, but in "The Darling of Paris" her impersonation of Esmeralda is accurate and satisfying. It makes a refreshing respite from the stereotyped Bara role, the type that made the vampire famous.

To begin with, the story of "The Darling of Paris" is a dramatically substantial one, capturing one's interest at the outset and deepening it in ascending progression to the climax of events. Tense moments there are many, pathetic moments, too, are in abundance, and neither is there any dearth of touches in a lighter vein. Above all in importance, sympathy is directed to the star, although she is not the only recipient of this—the hunchback character comes in for a great share. According to the Fox press sheet, the play is based upon Victor Hugo's "The Hunch-back of Notre Dame."

The production is not only lavish but manifestly costly. Immense sets, elaborate costuming, the employment of armies of "extras," etc., all have their part in earning for the picture the coveted name, "big." The cast selected to support the star is decidedly efficient—entirely equal to the story's demands. Every player is a splendid type for the part, Walter Law, Glen White, Herbert Heyes and John Webb Dillion all being a credit to the picture. It is our opinion that Walter Law outclassed himself in this. J. Gordon Edwards deserves laud for skillful work in direction.

There is more genuine drama in this picture than in two or three pictures of the mediocre or inferior class. With its forceful story, capable star, and high quality of production, "The Darling of Paris" is a tempting buy for the exhibitor who is trying to cultivate pleased patrons. In our estimation it is Theda Bara's best picture.

"A Lass of the Lumberlands"

Concluding Chapters of Signal-Helen Holmes Serial. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

AFTER viewing the closing chapters of this serial, the best thing one can say is that the production completely fulfilled the promise of its opening episode. It is an especially even continued photoplay, one which held its interest well. One of the reasons is that a real plot lay back of the thrills and exciting situations. The serial as a whole is very entertaining and has proved and will prove its box-office value in many theaters.

Chapter 14: The effects of the evil deeds of "Dollar" Holmes are coming back to him. The son of the Indian chief learns that he is the rightful owner of the land Holmes controls. Helen learns that she is the legal heiress to Holmes' fortune and that Stephen's mother is not married to Holmes. Holmes tries to kill the young Indian but only gets into further trouble and at last evidence against him is used to force him to marry Stephen's mother and to legalize Stephen's standing as his heir.

Chapter 15: Holmes is furiously angry when events turn against him. He forces his wife and son from their home, and he sends his gang to drive away the men working on the construction of the new railroad. He also gets possession of the warrant which Little Bear, the young Indian, had. This, however, leads to his death, for he is ordered by the sheriff to return the warrant. An automobile chase follows which ends in Holmes' machine crashing over the precipice when the chauffeur is shot. Holmes jumps, however, just before the machine turns turtle and escapes up the side of the valley, jumps upon a trolley and at the point of his revolver forces the motorman to a high speed. The pursuers flag a passing freight and uncoupling the engine give chase. The race ends with the engine crashing into the trolley and demolishing it. Holmes is killed in the wreck and after his death the evil he has done is righted.

"Bridges Burned"

Five-Reel Metro Release Starring Petrova. Reviewed by H. D. Fretz

ALTHOUGH the theme of "Bridges Burned," and many of its situations, are not new, the interest does not lag throughout this Metro production. The scenes are laid in Ireland, with the exception of one, showing the French firing-line. The settings and photography are fine, and the acting as a whole is extremely good. Mme. Petrova, as Mary, is well suited for the part and Mahlon Hamilton, as Randall, does very good work. Others in the cast are Arthur Hoops, Robert Broderick, Mrs. Mathilde Brundage, Mary Stewart, Louis Stern and Thomas Cameron.

Mary, the daughter of an Irish gentleman of declining fortunes, falls in love with Ernest Randall, the younger son of a baronet, while visiting them on a hunting trip. It is with difficulty that he forces himself to leave to continue his course in surgery. Mary has given her heart to him without reserve.

After his departure, Norah, the old family servant suspects the truth about the girl. Mary confesses to her father, who is enraged and upon the return of Randall, who has completed his college course, he forces him to marry her. Directly after the ceremony Mary leaves, not wishing to hold Randall to a forced marriage.

Mary obtains employment in a cotton mill after the birth of her son and here becomes the inspiration of the place, aiding one, consoling another. She organizes the Uplift Club for the benefit of the employees and becomes known as one of the most progressive women in the country. O'Farrel, the owner, promotes her to a position of trust and later asks her to marry him. She refuses saying she still loves her husband.

Randall at last locates his wife, and asks her to return to him, but she refuses, pointing out that while he has been wasting his life, she has accomplished some good in the world. Determined to earn her respect, he enlists as an army surgeon. O'Farrel, the mill owner, also enlists, leaving Mary in command to look after his interests during his absence.

At the front Randall saves O'Farrel from bleeding to death when his arm is shot away, and in turn falls and is reported dead. O'Farrel returns to Mary with the news that her husband's elder brother is killed and that her son is now the Earl of Randall. She feels no elation over this, but mourns the loss of her husband.

A great joy comes to her when she hears that Randall is alive but temporarily blind, and goes to nurse him until his sight is restored. O'Farrel, his last hope of marrying Mary gone, returns to the front.

Reunited to her husband, Mary's life is now perfect and her happiness is deepened when he gives her the deed to her old home, which went to strangers when her father died.

"His Sweetheart"

Five-Part Famous Players-Paramount. Released January 29. Reviewed by George W. Graves

IN George Beban's splendid characterization of the big-hearted Joe Piciarri, impulsive, radiantly cheerful, and through-and-through Italian, we have one of the most powerfully human, realistic characterizations yet to be recorded on the celluloid. Given a sympathetic role in a finely constructed story, Mr. Beban does the rest—that is, renders one of his irresistible impersonations of the typical product of the Latin countries.

The scenario, by George Beban and Lawrence McClosky, is a refined product. It provides stirring melodrama while allowing all the leeway necessary for the expression of human nature, in comedy vein and in the deeper subtleties. The types in the cast are splendid and the acting is a genuine study of foreign traits and habits, as anyone having the faintest acquaintance with picturesque foreigners will attest. The story keeps one closely attentive for the whole five reels. It is clean, appealing to the sense that appreciates the more ennobling things of life, and this is one of its greatest charms. The loyal devotedness of Joe to his lovable mother (his sweetheart) is simple enough of itself, but it strikes a deep chord which can only be appreciated by seeing the film.

Joe's mother, because of a valuable pin found in her washbasket, is convicted by an ambitious district attorney. Inflamed at the injustice done his "sweetheart," Joe is easily persuaded to ally himself with a group who are seeking to do away with Kelland. The latter being a notorious golfer, they hit upon the plan of filling a golf-ball with deadly explosive and substitute it for the one he is playing. Joe makes the substitution, but, to his dismay, the lawyer's wife and another woman come up at the fateful moment. With lightning speed, Joe throws himself upon the machine of death just as the attorney is to strike it.

A new feeling is at once formed between Kelland and the Italian, which results in the release of the latter's mother. At the same time the real cause of the jewel's presence in the clothes basket is revealed.

Sarah Kernan is the appealing "mamma," while Helen Jerome Eddy, Harry Devere and Kathleen Kirkham lend distinction to the other roles. Donald Crisp's direction is excellent. "His Sweetheart" is the finest Famous Players subject to appear in some time. It is a film well worth the time spent in its viewing and nobody leaving the theater will do so with any reflections of money or time wasted.

Handle Official War Pictures

A new motion picture company has just been organized, to be known as Official War Films, Inc., with Wm. K. Vanderbilt as president, Walter Scott, vice president; H. P. Davidson, treasurer; and Wm. DeForest Manice, secretary. Other directors are Wm. Sloane, James Logie, Charles Urban, Henry D. Sleeper, and G. McLeod Baynes, chairman of the board.

The real object of the company is to raise funds for the American ambulance corps and general war relief. Its entire gross profits will be devoted to this work.

The corporation has taken over the rights of the Patriot Film Company for the exhibition in the United States of the Official War Films of the British government, photographed as a part of the permanent records of the War Office. Those films include remarkable pictures of the great battle of the Somme, of Britain's army of 5,000,000 men, the Grand Fleet in the made on the firing lines and out between the opposing trenches, as well as pictures of the manufacture of munitions, the training North Sea, etc.

J. Warren Kerrigan on Tour

With the first four weeks of his scheduled three months' tour completed, J. Warren Kerrigan, the noted screen star, recently arrived in New Orleans for his first rest, after which he continued up the Atlantic coast to New York city.

Thus far the star had a strenuous time covering territory in Arizona, New Mexico and Texas and according to the figures compiled by the various exhibitors at the theaters in which he has appeared, more than one hundred thousand fans have heard Kerrigan's voice. In the meantime work is rapidly progressing on his new studio in Hollywood, and work on his first production, under his new contract, will begin early in April.

Kerrigan's schedule from New Orleans to New York, was as follows:

Mobile, Ala., Jan. 23; Pensacola, Fla., Jan. 24; Montgomery, Ala., 25; Birmingham, Ala., 26; Memphis, Tenn., 27; Nashville, Tenn., 29; Chattanooga, Tenn., 30; Atlanta, Ga., 31 and Feb. 1; Spartanburg, S. C., Feb. 2; Charlotte, N. C., 3; Norfolk, Va., 6 and 7; Richmond, Va., 8; Washington, D. C., 9, 10 and 11; Baltimore, Md., 12, 13 and 14; Wilmington, Del., 15; Philadelphia, Pa., 16 to 23; Newark, N. J., 24; New York City, 25 to March 5.

After appearing in New York city, Kerrigan will start out on the last lap of his tour and will visit the principal cities of the middle west, working up through the northwest and Canada and down the Pacific coast to Los Angeles.

Important Pathe Arrow in February

"Crime and Punishment," the first Arrow Gold Rooster Play on the Pathe program since "The Woman's Law," will probably be released the last week in February. Derwent Hall Caine, son of Hall Caine, the famous author, and himself a famous actor, is the star of the play which is adapted from the well-known book by Fyodor Dostoevsky.

Arrow has spared no expense in the production of this picture. The Russian atmosphere in the early scenes is noteworthy for its fidelity to fact. Various mob scenes are particularly well done and the scenario preserves faithfully the spirit of the book. The acting is particularly good. Mr. Caine as the young student gives a finished characterization. The supporting cast is excellent, including as it does Marguerite Courtot and Sidney Bracy.

Delaware Women Want Censors

Dr. Ellis P. Oberholtzer, secretary of Pennsylvania state censorship board, recently addressed a meeting of the New Century Club, of Wilmington, Delaware. The members discussed the question of a censorship board for Wilmington. It is understood that the members of the club strongly favor such censorship. Miss Emily P. Bissell, who represents the New Century Club on the State Federation Board, was authorized to place a motion before the State Federation urging action by the state organization.

Lois Weber is filming a five-act drama featuring Ben Wilson and Mignon Anderson.

Exhibitor Tickled to Death

Some idea of the high opinion in which exhibitors hold "Patria," the International's serial supreme, featuring Mrs. Vernon Castle, may be obtained from the following telegram which has just been received from W. T. Cox, of the Alamo Theater, Gasden, Alabama:

Some few months ago I booked Mrs. Vernon Castle in "Patria" for my theater in Gasden. Today I had the pleasure of witnessing this screen production at the Vaudette Theater in Atlanta where the crowds are breaking down the doors trying to get in and I want to say to you gentlemen, that beyond my personal satisfaction in catering for the wants of my patrons you could not buy my contract showing at Gasden back for any amount of money. Congratulations to you.

Complete Record of Current Films

This record is intended to give, for the convenient use of the exhibitor in booking films, all the information about each film that it is possible to present in a space limited to one line. The classification is indicated by the letter at the left (D for drama, C for comedy, T for topical, S for scenic, E for educational, etc.). Next comes the date and the title, followed by the names of the stars in parentheses. At the extreme right hand end of the line is the distributor's booking number, preceded by the name of the producing company. The figure appearing just before this name indicates the number of reels—the italic letter S meaning a split reel.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

General Program

The Hoodooed Story—Essanay—Black Feature—(Screen Time Twenty-eight Minutes)—February 6.—Featuring Richard Travers, Gertrude Glover and John Cossar supporting him. Smith, as a magazine writer, finds he has made a mistake. His "best story" is rejected by the editor. That evening highwaymen rob Smith of his last 30 cents and the manuscript. The following day the editor writes his stenographer has erred in returning the story; that he will pay the author ten cents a word for it. Smith borrows $50 from his friends, and offering it as a reward through advertisement induces the robbers to return his 'script. Then the editor finds his stenographer has erred again, and that Smith's story, after all, was not available. So many mistakes bring about a meeting between Smith and Perth Barlow, the typist. She discovers Smith has written other manuscripts which are available and puts him on the road to fame. Wedding bells ring out for Smith and Perth.

Five hundred weary Willies are there. The canimated camera also has filmed the celebrated pickle-hound at the Weiniewurst dog show. This dog reads Shakespeare, plays poker and eats with a knife and fork. The preparatory school for yound brides, in which is taught the proper way to bean a husband with a rolling pin, etc., is shown. Alaskan and the Yukon scenic, showing the beautiful White Mountain Pass and Dawson City scenes forms the other half of the reel.

Jerry's Big Raid—Cub Comedy—(One Reel)—February 8.—George Ovey featured. Jerry obtains a job with a motion picture outfit. The company proceeds into the slum section of the city to take pictures. Here Jerry sees a pretty girl leaning out of a window and starts to show off before her. He enters the house and finds that he has entered into a den of thieves. Later the whole motion picture outfit, together with the thieves are carted off to the police station. Here the cameraman photographs the police and because of this the motion picture outfit are freed.

The Old Sheriff—American Drama—(One Reel)—February 10.—J. Warren Kerrigan, with George Periolat, Pauline Bush, and Jack Richardson. Ben Gleason, the old sheriff, whose gun was decorated with seven notches was relpaced by a younger man, Clem McCarten. The old sheriff is forced to go to his grand-daughter's home to live, where he is warmly welcomed by her. Clem goes to call on the old man often and Maud's husband mistakes his purpose and is insanely jealous. Some time later Clem is wounded and taken to Maud's home where she proceeds to dress his wounds. The old sheriff gets out to capture the outlaw that had shot Clem and manages to kill him. He discovers that he has shot Maud's husband. The old sheriff returns to the house and being too weak to perform the task he asks Clem to cut the last notch on the gun for him. When this has been done the old man sinks to his last rest and Maud seeks shelter in Clem's arms.

Desertion and Nonsupport — "Is Marriage Sacred?" Series—Essanay—(Screen Time Twenty-seven Minutes)—February 10.—With Marguerite Clayton, Edward Arnold, Lillian Drew, Thomas Commerford and John Cossar. It was a eugenic marriage which united Mary Monroe and Charles Hayward. The medical test, however, proved apparently a failure. Charles, after the ceremony developed what seems to be symptoms of lung trouble. Mary, horrified, separates from him and he goes West to recuperate. Here Charles meets Nurse Gordon with whom he falls in love. After a year's treatment it develops that Hayward has nothing wrong with his lungs. He falls heir to a fortune. Mary, learning of this, comes to claim him. Charles tells her of his love for his nurse. She sues him for desertion and non-support, but the judge rules that since she separated from him voluntarily, she has no claim on him now.

Mutual Pictures

The Musical Marvel—Vogue Comedy—(Two Reels)—February 11.—With Gypsie Abbott, Ed Laurie, and Ben Turpin. The Piano Player falls in love with the wife of the Bad Man. The Bad Man meets the Piano Player and tells him that his wife is in the East and so they decide to go and find her, the Pianist not realizing who the girl is. Later Ben, the pianist, becomes the leader of the orchestra and gets into a fight with the violinist. The comedy ends with a chase, a wrecked theater and a bomb explosion which sends them all sky high.

Taking us through the whole method of operations till the boards are ready for shipment.

The Melody of Death—(Two Reels)—Rex—February 8.—With Douglas Gerrard and Maud George. Dennis is infatuated with the singer, Nina, a vampire type of woman, and breaks his engagement with Lorne. An organ grinder plays continually a certain melody and seems on the outlook for some one. One night he plays in front of Nina's apartment; the tune brings back to her the memory of the days when she was married, in faraway Italy, content with her husband, Ferrando, and their baby. She came to America with the maestro of the opera and had won the plaudits of the multitude. He catches a glimpse of her, steals into her room and there portrays for her the death of their child and his vow of vengence. They struggle together and Nina pays the ultimate penalty. When Dennis finds that Nina is dead his thoughts revert to Lorna. As he is making his peace with her, fate decrees that Ferrando shall play his oft-repeated melody in front of their garden.

Avarice—Imp—February 9.—Featuring Claire McDowell and T. D. Crittenden. An old ragpicker, living in a dirty hovel, possesses a bag of gold and a magnificent necklace. While worshipping her horde, Death appears before her and reviews with her the horrors of her past. All has been for worldly gain. When young and beautiful she auctioned her body to the highest bidder; she sold her son to the gallows for gold; and because of her monstrous greediness, throttled a young woman to get possession of her jewels. She staggers toward Death, thrusting the gold before him, gazing up into his face, which gradually changes into a skull. With a terrible shriek, the coins dropping from her hands, she falls dead at his feet.

"The Hoodooed Story" (February 6), "The Magic Mirror" (January 27) and "Three Ways Out" (January 30). All are brand new Essanay dramas.

The High Cost of Starving—(ONE REEL)—VICTOR—FEBRUARY 9.—With Eugene Walsh and Eileen Sedgwick. Becoming a fanatic on the subject of "Vegetarianism," Mrs. Simpson, much to the disgust of her husband and the servants, forbids any meat to enter the house. Upon reading that "Ricketts" is brought on by vegetarian diet and causes terrible blotches on the face, Sidney paints all their faces with iodine. Her alarm in the morning sends her to the telephone to order a plentiful supply of meat.

The Outlaw and the Lady—(TWO REELS)—BISON—FEBRUARY 10.—With Harry Carey and Louise Lovely. Major Carter is on the trail of Cheyenne Harry, a desperate character. Feature Programs

Art Dramas

Her Good Name—(FIVE REELS)—ART-DRAMAS—JANUARY 27.—Featuring Jean Sothern. The father of Nan, a simple country maid, thinks she has been betrayed by Bert Tyler, a man of not very good reputation, and murders the latter in a moment of madness. The girl makes a sacrifice for her father in the court room, but soon after she has done it the grateful father realizes the injustice of her sacrifice and clears her name. He then dies of heart failure.

Blue Bird

The Reward of the Faithful—BLUEBIRD—(FIVE REELS)—FEBRUARY 5.—Featuring Wedgewood Nowell and Betty Schade. A beautiful Russian princess marries an Italian adventurer and later rescues a letter girl from the streets. Her husband forms an intrigue with the girl and the couple plan to do away with the wife. The princess falls into a cataleptic trance and the two wicked ones think she is dead. They go to Italy to live on the money from her estate. The princess, in disguise revenges herself upon the two. The husband, in search of a valuable jewel goes back to his wife's tomb, only to find it empty. The princess now comes out, draped in her grave clothes and the terrified husband commits suicide by jumping off a cliff. The picture closes with the pricess, still in her shroud in the arms of Feodor, a faithful and philosophic friend. There is much foreign atmosphere in the picture.

Christie Comedies

Oh, For a Wife!—CHRISTY COMEDY—(ONE REEL)—FEBRUARY 12.—Billie Rhodes, Ethel Lynne, Harry Ham, Nolan Leary and Harry Rattenberry in the cost. Billie and Harry are about to be married when they quarrel over some small matter and Harry is sent home with his ring. Upon his arrival he finds a letter from Uncle John congratulating him and promising him $5,000 the moment the ceremony is completed. Now things happen. Billie won't make up and Harry must have a bride. Nolan, his room-mate, comes forward with the suggestion that they get a girl from the employment agency and a fake minister. The girl from the agency takes her time getting there and is delayed by an accident. In the meantime Harry, frantic, compels Nolan to dress up and impersonate the bride. Nolan has a miserable time with the feminine apparel and rushes out to find a girl for Harry. The first one will hardly do but the second one is Billie who is out taking a walk to relieve her feelings. She is rushed to Harry's and just as the ceremony is in progress, in comes the girl from the agency. Nolan explains that she is to be his bride, Uncle is satisfied, hands over the money and rushes for his train. Exit brides and grooms in search of a real minister.

Fox

The Darling of Paris—(SIX REELS)—WILLIAM FOX.—Featuring Theda Bara. A convincing story, well produced and well acted, giving Theda Bara her most advantageous role. It is a big production, viewed from all angles. Reviewed in this issue.

One Touch of Sin—(FIVE REELS)—FOX—JANUARY 29.—Featuring Gladys Brockwell. The story concerns the adventures of Mary Livingston who is deeply in love with Richard Mallaby, a gambler. Through a misunderstanding, she thinks that she has been deserted by the man she worshipped, when he goes West and leaves her and her baby in the East, to fight out the ouestion of life in their own unaided way. Heartbroken, she drifts westward herself and in a frontier village meets Watt Tabor. She is detected in a theft, which she is forced to commit to provide for her child. Tabor comes to her rescue, shoulders the blame and marries. She despises him because she thinks he has married her simply as a whim. Once more comes the man who first wronged her. The two men now open a feud, long drawn out and culminating in a furious battle in a flooded mine. They fight until Mallaby loses consciousness. Tabor rescues him and leaves Mary free to make her choice. She returns to Mallaby.

Reviewed in the next issue.

Paramount

His Sweetheart—(FIVE REELS)—FAMOUS PLAYERS—JANUARY 29.—Featuring George Beban in the role of an irresistibly appealing Italian, this story develops the best in dramatic as well as in light touches of true-to-life humor. The support is above criticism and the whole picture is a feature in the true sense. The scenario was by George Beban and Lawrence McClosky, while Donald Crisp directed. Reviewed in this issue.

A Girl Like That—(FIVE REELS)—FAMOUS PLAYERS—JANUARY 18.—Featuring Irene Fenwick and Owen Moore. An entertaining and absorbing tale of the working out of a young girl crook's salvation. She starts in bad, but, being helped to "go straight" by her sweetheart, finally turns the tables on the gang that has played unfairly with her. Reviewed in this issue.

Metro

Threads of Fate—(FIVE REELS)—METRO—JANUARY 22.—Featuring Viola Dana. Dorothea is the adopted child of Tom Wentworth and his wife. Wentworth comes into possession of a rich coal mine when Dorothea is about 17 or 18 and the ambitions of her foster mother are awakened. Dorothea finds herself an heiress, young and much courted. Mrs. Wentworth wants her to marry a nobleman and has nearly brought about a match between her daughter and the Marquis del Carnavacchi, when it transpires that he is the man who induced Dorothea's real mother to run away from Dorothea's father. After the denouncement Dorothea is left free to marry the man she loves, a fine young fellow but a plain Mister.

The Pest—(TWO REELS)—METRO.—With Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew. Buddy comes to visit his sister, but Henry objects to his forwardness in making himself right at home. He helps himself to Henry's clothes, his cigars, orders the servants around, and goes joy-riding in the car. Henry tries to find a job for him, but the hours prove too long to suit Buddy. A soldier friend of Henry's endeavors to help him out and summons Buddy to appear for duty. Buddy is frightened, but his sister and Henry tell him of the glory of fighting for his country. Buddy tremblingly goes with the officer and Henry declares a holiday.

Mutual-Chaplin Specials

Easy Street—MUTUAL—(TWO REELS)—FEBRUARY 5.—The inimitable Charlie Chaplin. Charlie, an outcast, enters the mission house on Easy Street with the intentions of purloining the collection box. After some time he manages to secure the box but his eyes have lit upon Edna, the organist of the mission, and from that minute Charlie decides to lead a new life. He returns the collection box to the much astonished minister and then tells Edna that she is the cause of his wishing to reform. Eric, the bully of Easy Street, has everyone cowed and when he attacks Charlie he is surprised to have the little fellow attack him and lay him out. Charlie's bravery attracts the attention of the chief of police and he is finally put on the force with his beat on Easy Street. Campbell kidnaps Edna and holds her in a low dive. Here Charlie finds the beautiful organist and after overcoming Eric and his henchmen, he takes Edna in his arms and escapes from the place. After this incident Edna lets Charlie pump the organ for her in the mission house, where she plays to him.

Mutual Masterpictures

Pardners—MUTUAL—(FIVE REELS)—FEBRUARY 5.—Featuring Charlotte Walker, in the story by Rex Beach. Justus Morrow, a young Englishman of family, married to a young Amercian actress by whom he has a child, goes to the Klondike to make his fortune, having been disowned by his family for marrying out of his class. To assist the family fortunes during her husband's absence, Mrs. Morrow returns to the stage. Morrow finds difficulty in locating pay dirt on Caribou Creek and drifts into Rampart City, where he cleans out a gambling house conducted by "Single Out" Wilmer and "Curley Bud," both had men of the mining frontier. In the course of Morrow's residence in Rampart City a photographer named Struthers, representing a newspaper syndicate with headquarters in San Francisco, makes pictures of the gambling and dance hall crowds. Later, having learned of Morrow's family connections, he substitutes the head of Morrow on pictures of men dancing with camp women and otherwise disporting themselves. These being printed in Sunday supplements in the United States, are seen by Mrs. Morrow, who at once begins suit for divorce. Morrow and "Big Bill' Joyce, his pardner, arrive in San Francisco just in time to drag Struthers, the crooked picture man, into court for a confession which scatters the divorce lawyers like a flock of crows and reunites the Morrow family.

Red Feather

The Scarlet Crystal — (Five Reels) — Red Feather—February 5.—Featuring Betty Schade and Herbert Rawlinson. Priscilla, an innocent country girl, visits her aunt, a typical society butterfly. There she meets Vincent Morgan, a wealthy bachelor, and they are married. He takes her on a wonderful tour of the world. Marie Delys, an old sweetheart of his, lures him to his old haunts. Alone in the big house, Priscilla gazes into the crystal they bought in faraway Egypt. She is horrified at some of the scenes she sees depicted there; but her love for the husband renews her faith in him. An artist's model, Peggy, in need of food for her mother goes to Morgan's apartments where he finds her asleep. As he removes the glass stopper from a bottle of whiskey, it becomes a crystal, and therein he sees Peggy sacrificing her to him. She finds her mother dead and to forget her dishonor she takes to the use of drugs. Seeking Morgan out she stabs him and Marie. The horror of this vision awakens his better nature and he sends her home unharmed. Repentant he returns to his child and the woman who has been his guiding star.

Triangle Program

Jim Bludso—(Five Reels)—Triangle-Fine Arts—February 4.—Featuring Wilfred Lucas. An exceedingly well produced and well acted drama of the middle west. Its action, transpiring shortly after the time of the Civil War, outlines a story in which a big-hearted Mississippi packet engineer is the central figure. An unscrupulous character elopes with his wife, upon whose forgiven return to her husband he tries to do away with Bludso. The wife finally dies, the villain is arrested by fate, and Bludso finds consolation in the love of a sympathizing girl who has always kept her love for him secret.

Unity Features

Glory—(Five Reels)—Unity Sales—January 15.—Featuring Kolb and Dill. Glory is the name of a girl adopted by the good people of the mining town of Glory. She finally meets Strong, the son of a wealthy mine operator, but refuses to marry him because of his father's injustice to the townspeople. After some struggles, financial and otherwise, the little mining town wins out, and there is a removal of the obtsacle between the lovers.

Vitagraph-V. L. S. E.

Money Magic—(Five Reels)—Vitagraph—February 5.—Featuring Edith Storey. A film in which Eidth Storey is seen at her best, supported by a cast of unusual excellence. It deals with unrequited love and noble sacrifice and makes a deeply pathetic, entertaining release. Reviewed in this issue.

Riley C. Chamberlin Dies

One of the earliest actors in motion pictures, Riley C. Chamberlin, a member of the Thanhouser company, died January 24 at his home in New Rochelle. He was 62 years old, an Elk, and had been seriously ill several times in the last few months.

Riley C. Chamberlin was in the first two-reel pictures produced, and after a notable stage career had appeared steadily in Thanhouser productions for more than five years. Mr. Chamberlin has appeared in many Thanhouser productions and was "Conductor 786" in the famous series of Thanhouser comedies. He played "Longfellow" in "The Children's Hour" and was the funny butler in Gladys Hulette's "Prudence the Pirate."

THE "INGENUE VAMP"

The happy combination of youth, beauty and an extensive experience is always pleasant to behold and in picture work amounts almost to success insurance. Louise Du Pre, the little leading lady in the Plimpton Epic feature, "Old Ways and New," is the fortunate possessor of these attributes.

Louise Du Pre.

Miss Du Pre had leading parts in such well known stage successes as "Bought and Paid For," "The Wolf," and "Hanky Panky."

Miss Du Pre has come to the screen with the stage title of "The Ingenue Vampire," but being of the diminutive demure type physically and mentally abhoring anything that is not pleasing she has determined to bend all her efforts to appear on the screen only in parts that call for emotional work without the element of questionable motives.

BUSBY WINS PRAISE

Albert Busby, character and comedy artist, lately has shown to advantage as a character actor in support of Harold Lockwood in the "River of Romance" and with Viola Dana in "The Light of Happiness."

Mr. Busby did his first picture over four years ago, after fifteen years in the opera. Entering the motion picture field, he appeared with the Edison Company long enough to learn the subtleties of the screen work.

He then joined the Pathe forces and worked in character and heavies under the direction of Frederick Wright. In "The Pearl of Punjab," "When Rome Ruled," "Bink's Bungling Buncoes" and other features, Mr. Busby did creditable work. When the war caused the scattering of the Pathe forces, Mr. Busby secured a place with the Universal company.

CREATIVE FILM OFFICES

The Creative Film Corporation, organized some months ago when the production of "The Girl Who Didn't Think" was begun, have taken offices in the Strand Theater building, 1585 Broadway, New York, and have begun an active campaign looking to the sale of the concern's initial release. Leon Wagner, president of the company; Jack Weinberg, the treasurer, and Donald Campbell, secretary, are to be found at the new offices. Jane Gale, whose past screen performances have attracted a good deal of attention, plays the leading feminine role in "The Girl Who Didn't Think."

ANNETTE SKATES ALONE

So that she can cut capers on the ice without interference Annette Kellerman has engaged the St. Nicholas Ice Rink, its orchestra, an instructor in fancy skating and a boy to adjust her skates and boots for one hour each weekday between the morning and afternoon sessions.

Her agreement stipulates that she is to have the exclusive use of the entire 16,000 square feet of ice surface so that she can waltz and master the difficult figures to the exclusion of everyone but the musicians and attendants.

STONE, OF AMERICAN-VOGUE, PROMOTED

A. E. Stone, for two years an executive at the Flying A studio has been appointed manager of the Vogue Film Company in Los Angeles.

This promoton is in line with the policy of President S. S. Hutchinson, of the American Company to advance those in his organization to positions of importance whenever the opportunity offers.

Mr. Stone, who is a native of Santa Barbara, has had wide experience both in photoplay and stage activities. On the completion of his studies at the University of California he was engaged in various amusement enterprises until he entered the Hutchinson organization, with which he has been connected ever since.

CONCEIVED NEW IDEA

"The Black Stork," a picture made about the widely known case of the defective child in Chicago, and who was allowed to die by Dr. Harry J. Haiselden, when an operation would have saved it to only a life of misery, will be released through Sherman - Elliott Inc. within the next few weeks.

R. H. Hadfield

R. H. Hadfield, a year ago conceived the idea, and through his efforts, obtained Dr. Haiselden to appear in films for the purpose of expanding the Doctor's propaganda. Mr. Hadfield has been actively at work since that time in making the picture, and through his efforts the deal with Sheriott Pictures Corporation has been consummated. It is reported that the price is well over the $100,000 mark.

The picture is unique in its idea and handling. It must not be confused with the so-called "white slave" or "sex pictures," and is neither comedy, dramatic, scenic or pathetic. It might be called educational, but is so different from this class of picture that it really does not come under this classification.

Mr. Hadfield has been associated with motion pictures for the past twelve years.

PACIFIC COAST NOTES

William D. Taylor, the Fox producer, has picked an excellent cast to support Dustin Farnum in the first feature they will make for Fox. Winnifred Kingston played opposite Mr. Farnum. Taylor has his old cameraman and assistant with him.

Myrtle Stedman is sending quite a number of small gifts to the kiddies who have been named after her. Among others are two small cullud pussons, a Japanese baby, two Australian babes and one in Honolulu.

Chester Conklin, the popular Keystone comedian, is working under the direction of Harry Williams, one time song writer and now a comedy director.

William Stowell is now a stock member of the Universal company. He is acting with Dorothy Phillips and Lon Chaney under the direction of Joseph De Grasse.

Margarita Fischer has a particularly trying role in "The Devil's Assistant. It is an emotional part which calls for all her dramatic powers.

Myrtle Stedman has returned from San Francisco to be co-starred with House Peters in a new Morosco film. Peters recently availed himself of a three weeks' vacation, touring during that time in Southern California.

Edith Storey got out to Los Angeles before "An Enemy to the King" did and was on hand for the premiere there of the picture in which she played with E. H. Sothern for the Vitagraph Company.

A Selig feature exposing the workings of a crime syndicate in the higher social circles is fast nearing completion under the direction of Colin Campbell.

Mrs. E. Magnus Ingleton, formerly in the scenario department at Universal City, has been given a company of her own, and will join the thin ranks of woman motion picture directors.

Rex Ingram, the Bluebird director who produced "Black Orchids," is a sculptor.

Charles Le Moyne, who appears in Selig Red Seal Plays, served in the Boer war.

Colin Campbell, the Selig Company's famous director, is the son of a Scotch clergyman.

The mother of Monroe Salisbury is visiting him at San Diego, where he is playing opposite Margarita Fischer.

Colleen Moore, a girl from Chicago, is a late addition to the Fine Arts ingenue class. She will be given roles designed for Mildred Harris before it was decided to send the latter to New York with Douglas Fairbanks.

Mignon Anderson, formerly a lead in Thanhouser's productions, has joined Lois Weber's company at Universal City. She is at present playing opposite Ben Wilson in a feature film.

That Grace Cunard and Francis Ford are very popular in Japan is testified by the receipt by them of many presents from that country. Miss Cunard has a hand painted calendar, a beauty too, a Japanese book translated into English, and a host of small pictures and postcards galore. She gets many letters from Japan too, and the journals there are full of her pictures.

Lamar Johnstone has returned from Central America, where he went to support Tyrone Power in "The Planter." Johnstone unfortunately took the fever just before he left Guatemala and arrived in Los Angeles thin and white, but is recovering fast.

Oscar Apfel will have the honor of producing the first film to be made at the new Yorke-Metro studios, which will be erected on a big tract in Hollywood, with Harold Lockwood and May Allison in the leads. Mr. Apfel will film a famous novel and has been spending all his time licking it into scenario shape with Richard Spencer, the scenario editor.

Edward Sloman, the director who has William Russell as his star, is well pleased with the new leading lady, Francelia Billington, who makes a great contrast to big Bill Russell. His story is written around the carpet bagging period of 1865.

One of the forthcoming Selig Red Seal Plays soon to be released in Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service is "The Little Lost Sister," filmed from the famous story of the same name. Mr. Selig is considering an all-star cast for the film drama.

The Universal Company recently paid $1,500 for the scenario of a five-reel comedy drama, entitled "The Cloak," written by Aaron Hoffman.

Lynn Reynolds, a Universal director, was remarried to Louise Lawlor Reynolds, from whom he was divorced in Denver, Colo., in 1913.

Director Al E. Christie is happy in the possession of some sparkling comedies, especially written for his comedians by Epes Winthrop Sargent.

Carol Halloway went to San Francisco recently to try out an act scheduled for Orpheum time, but an insistent call from the Keystone Company took her out of the musical act she was rehearsing and again placed her at the Keystone Studio.

William S. Smith showed recently in the projection room the Vitagraph picture featuring Edith Storey, Antonio Moreno and William Duncan in "Money Magic," a picturization of Hamlin Garlin's book of the same title. It is said to be a very smooth production, all around.

Henry Christian Warnock is writing in collaboration with Maitland Davies a new story for Nicholas Duneaw, who has just completed an exacting role in the Universal picture, "Seething Humanity." While awaiting this new production, Mr. Duneaw is writing a series of articles covering his colorful career as author. player and director.

Harvey Gates has been chosen at the Morosco studio as especial writer for House Peters.

Vola Vale, of the Lasky-Morosco forces, has been cast at the latter studio in a splendid role with George Beban.

Chester B. Clapp has been installed as the comedy scenario editor with the Fox Company. From-Keystone-to-Universal-to-Fox is the record made by Mr. Clapp within the past month.

Billie Rhodes has returned to the Christie studios from San Francisco, to which city she was called by the illness of her mother, who has now quite recovered.

Frank Borzage is seen as the dashing juvenile with a radiating smile in the Fannie Ward picture now in production by George Melford at the Lasky studio.

A short time ago Director Al E. Christie filmed scenes at the Ascot races for a future Christie comedy. Betty Compson, Harry Ham, Ethel Lynn and Eddie Barry concentrated their minds on car 13's racing first under the tape, but Al. E. had another inspiration. His script demands that car 13 should turn turtle. It did, with Harry Ham underneath—which wasn't in Ham's bond, but it showed up well in the film.

The continued grouchy weather has delayed finishing the desert scenes of the Vitagraph feature, "Aladdin of Broadway," with Edith Storey and Antonio Moreno as co-stars, but the next photodrama, "Captain Sunlight," is ready to film whenever the sun will permit.

Al. E. Christie has begun producing "Sauce for the Goose," the first of the Epes Winthrop Sargent series of comedies. Betty Compson, Ethel Lynn, Neal Burns, Eddie Barry, and Stella Adams are awaiting the inspiration of the sun.

Chester B. Clapp, now a staff writer for the Fox Company, last week provided each comedy company of that studio with picture material and also contributed an original feature comedy-drama for George Walsh.

Rena Rogers is again a Universal-ite. She is working under the direction of George Sargent.

Vola Vale has a triple role in the George Beban feature being made at the Morosco Studio by Donald Crisp.

Anna Luther has begun another Fox feature with George Walsh.

Nicholas Duneaw, the Russian star, is to play the role of a European artist in an unusual Chinese underworld picture, to be directed by Rex Ingram.

Ruth Stonehouse is playing the lead and directing a new Universal two-reeler, "Young Love." Director-star Stonehouse is supervising the erection of a duplicate of portions of her beloved Alma Mater, Monticello Seminary for Girls.

In the harem scene of his current Universal Oriental five-reel photodrama Director Charles Swickard's cameraman is having trouble to avoid the snow-covered mountains all around them, in the filming of the fountain wherein several houris are disporting. Between shivering nymphs, the snow in Southern California, and puzzling out light effects for his "Fountain of Light," the Universal "Lighting Wizard" is somewhat preoccupied.

New Universal Releases

Leading the program of Universal releases for the week of February 5 is the five-act Red Feather feature, "The Scarlet Crystal," an absorbing photodrama of human frailties and weaknesses, produced by Charles Swickard. Herbert Rawlinson, Betty Schade and Dorothy Davenport play the leading roles. The release date is February 5.

The seventh episode of the Universal super serial, "The Purple Mask," with Grace Cunard and Francis Ford, which will be released this week, is entitled "The Race for Freedom," is by far the most exciting episode of this serial story of love, adventure and mystery.

A Nestor comedy, "His Wife's Relatives," a one-act farce, is another release of February 5.

"Won by Grit," a Gold Seal, three-act human interest drama by Willis Woods, is the leading offering for February 6. The other release of this date is the Victor juvenile comedy, "The Valley of Beautiful Things."

The L-KO two-part comedy, "That Dawgone Dog," produced by Dick Smith with Sammie Burns as the arch funmaker, is for release February 7. The Big U Indian drama, "Red Vengeance," and the regular issue of the Universal Animated Weekly with its pictorial news also appear on this day.

Three reels are offered for February 8, including a Rex two-act drama, "The Melody of Death," with Douglas Gerrard, Maude George and Ruth Clifford, and the Powers educational, Giants of the American Forest," showing the big trees of California.

February 9 is the release date of the Imp drama, "Avarice," one act, with Claire McDowell in the lead. Victor's "The High Cost of Starving," with Eileen Sedgwick, and The Big U two-part drama "The Crimson Arrow," featuring Mona Darkfeather, are the other releases for that date.

The Bison two-part Western drama, "The Outlaw and the Lady," will appear February 10.

Other February 10th releases are the Joker comedy, "Out for the Dough," with William Franey and Gale Henry, and the Laemmle drama, "A Studio Cinderella," with Jane Gail and Matt Moore.

"When Thieves Fall Out," a two-act Imp drama, is the feature offering for Sunday, February 11. This is a novel photodrama of the underworld.

The other releases are the L-KO comedy cartoon "Fearless Freddie in the Woolly West" and the Dr. Dorsey animated lecture, "Joys and Tears of China," a split reel, and the Rex drama, "In the Shadows of Night," with William Shay.

General Film Releases

The General Film Company is preparing for an exceedingly active period during the month of February. Its new series, "The War," the British government's official motion picture records of the great European conflict will be launched very soon, the first installment being entitled "The Battle of the Somme." Exhibitors who have seen advance showings affirm that these pictures could only have been taken at the front by official photographers. "The War" will be released weekly in installments of two reels, the first three issues covering "The Battle of the Somme" in its various phases.

The various Kalem series will continue with the exception of "The Girl from Frisco," which is drawing to a close and will soon be followed by a new series featuring Marin Sais. "The Hazards of Helen" will still be issued weekly. "Grant, Police Reporter," with George Larkin, and "Ham and Bud" will be continued.

Other releases include Essanay's series, "Is Marriage Sacred," Essanay's "Black Cat" features, George Ade Fables, and its weekly scenic and cartoon single reels.

The Selig-Tribune news reel covers the current events field. Selig announces George Fawcett in some forthcoming short-length dramas. The Vitagraph will offer, through General, a single-reel drama each Monday and a one-reel series of "The Dangers of Doris" and a number of two-reel dramatic subjects featuring Brinsley Shaw. Melies releases through General, as usual, will be the Vim comedies "Pokes and Jabbs," the Kate Price and Babe Hardy weekly comedies, and Knickerbocker three-reel subjects.

SOME NEW THEATERS

California

Of even more modern construction is the immense Turner & Dahnken picture house at Eleventh and Franklin streets, San Francisco. This giant structure, of steel and concrete, with the entrance on Eleventh street, seats 3,000 persons at a single performance and boasts of an original interior arrangement unsurpassed among motion-picture houses in the country.

Colorado

Architect George Roe let the contract for the new Clynes-Walter Theater on Northern avenue, Pueblo, for $7,500 to A. F. Cherry.

Florida

C. H. Morse will erect store, moving-picture theater, reading room and apartment building, at The Winter Park; ordinary construction; built-up roof; ordinary floor construction; electric lights; F. H. Trimble, architect, Orlando, Florida.

Georgia

Mrs. A. Converse is reported to erect theater at Valdosta, to be occupied by Tyson Brothers, owners of Strand Theater; seating capacity, 800; ceiling and ventilating system to cost $2,500.

Idaho

A contract has been awarded to Garrison & Penland by Robert Lamont of Ahsahka for the construction in Orofino of a fireproof building with a seating capacity of 300, to be used as a picture house. The building will be modern, constructed of concrete blocks, and will cost upwards of $3,500.

Kansas

Oscar Evertson, local real estate dealer, has purchased a site on West Central avenue, El Dorado, and will erect theater.

Another picture house is in prospect for El Dorado. Mrs. M. S. Munson will erect at once a modern brick structure on West Central avenue for that purpose.

Louisiana

A new picture theater is being promoted by W. O. Rutledge, manager of the Economical Drug Store, who says work on the building will be started within the next few days. The theater will be on North Front street, New Orleans. It will have a seating capacity for 600 and will include a lower floor and balcony.

Sobel-Richards-Shear Amusement Enterprises will erect Carrollton Theater, H. M. Goldstein, architect, Title Guarantee Bldg., New Orleans; also having plans prepared for two other theaters.

Massachusetts

Work on the fine new theater building which will be erected at the southeast corner of Pleasant and Cash streets, Fall River, by J. P. Parent, proprietor and manager of both the Lyric and the Star theaters, Pleasant Street, will start March 1. The building will cost $55,000 and have a seating capacity of 2,000.

Mississippi

B. A. Heidenreich has plans by Harry Stewart, McComb, for lately noted picture theater; 55x76½ feet; composition roof; sloping pine floor; stoves; electric lights; cost $3,000.

Missouri

Willis Wood estate will remodel Willis Wood Theater at Kansas City, lately noted damaged by fire at loss of $40,000 to $50,000.

New Jersey

A syndicate headed by Jacob Fabian of Paterson is planning the erection of a picture theater on Broad street, Newark.

New York

A. H. Schwartz has purchased a site at Bedford avenue and Brevoort place, Brooklyn, and will erect a theater to seat 3,000 and cost $500,000.

New York Theater Company, 214 W. 42nd street, will make alterations to five story theater and stores at 1514-20 Broadway, New York City, to cost $10,000.

M. D. Steuer, 42 Broadway, will erect a theater at East Houston and Forsyth streets, New York City, to cost $25,000.

Another big theater for Watertown may be constructed in the near future to replace Wonderland owned by Papayanakos Brothers, in the LeRay Hotel.

A. H. Schwartz has purchased a site for a new theater at Brevoort place and Bedford avenue, New York City, from Bulkley & Horton Company in Brooklyn.

Two new picture theaters will soon occupy the north half of the block front on the west side of Broadway between Fiftieth and Fifty-first streets, New York City. The Wendel estate has leased to Messmore Kendall, operating under the name of the Moredall Realty Corporation, the property for a term of twenty-one years at an annual rental of of about $100,000 as a site for an office building and two theaters.

Oregon

Plans have been completed for the erection of a new theater at Marshfield.

Pennsylvania

The Champerlain Amusement Enterprise, Incorporated, controlling nine picture theaters in the central part of Pennsylvania, has purchased a site at Independence and Anthracite streets, Shamokin, and will erect a modern $75,000 theater.

Chicago News

THE annual election of the Chicago Branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America was held on Friday, February 2, at the league's headquarters in the Masonic Temple. There were a number of close races for offices. The returns were not in at the time of going to press.

Otis B. Thayer is directing a company in two and three-reel dramas at the Selig studios.

Russell Lewis, Triangle manager of St. Louis, came to Chicago during the week of January 29 on business.

Ralph O. Proctor, genius of the Art Dramas office in the College Building, last week made a business trip to Minneapolis.

That mighty popular little actress, Doris Kenyon, is in Chicago and is flirting with Essanay. Nobody knows as yet whether or not George K. will succumb.

The Irish are too much for Lubliner and Trinz. Owing to the agitation caused by the feature, "Whom the Gods Destroy," the film has been taken off the Lubliner and Trinz screens.

Censorship in Evanston is already notorious. Another bit of publicity is added to the picture business in that suburb. Hereafter, all films dealing with sex problems or displaying Garden of Eden figures, will be barred.

Frederick Wilde, son of Frederick Wilde, Junior, the well known Chicago film man, of 1435 Sherwin avenue, was drowned last week while skating on the lake at Rogers avenue.

Al Green, George Fawcett, Vivian Reed and others of the Selig Company, who have been working in the Chicago studios, have gone to Los Angeles to finish "Little Lost Sister."

Publicity Director Masters of Greater Vitagraph of New York, has been spending a few lively days in Chicago in the interests of his concern.

The F. I. L. M. Club legislative committee met on January 30 at the Hotel Morrison on the familiar Floor B. The proposed new tax on theaters was discussed. The executive committee met on Friday, Feb. 2.

Harry Leonhardt, western Fox representative, left on January 28 to swing around the Fox exchanges throughout the western half of the United States. In the meantime, Jack O'Toole will watch things in Chicago.

Manager Smith of the local Metro office, has put the Metro in Metropolitan by inducing that theater to open with the "White Raven," the Ethel Barrymore feature. A Drew comedy and Metro travelogue were shown at the same time.

James Travers, formerly of Pathe office of Toronto, is now a special representative for the dominion of Canada for Essanay, Max Linder's comedies. Mr. Travers was in Chicago last week and received his appointment from Elmer Pierson, the Linder sales manager.

The Frieder Film corporation has been organized in Chicago for the purpose of making children's pictures. Lule Warrenton, who formerly made juvenile films for Universal, will be in charge of productions.

Frank L. Hough, a Chicago man, is inventor of the "Movette" home motion picture camera and projector, which is now being marketed by the Movette Camera Corporation of New York. Mr. Hough is vice president and manager.

Henry B. Walthall and his Essanay company are in Louisiana taking some exteriors for the new Essanay feature, "Burning the Candle." Henry says he will be back in time to appear at the Reel Fellows' party at the Essanay studio on the evening of February 10.

W. J. West, who owns three screen houses in Kewanee, Illinois, two in Galesburg, and one in Cambridge, made the rounds of the Chicago exchanges last week, and when he saw a copy of MOTOGRAPHY, stole it to take home with him.

Harry Fox, gingery K. E. S. E. road man, is wearing his best "bonus" smile these days. Upon his return to town one day a short time ago, he was advised that K. E. S. E. would pay all of its employees a long expected bonus.

Two new salesmen have been put on by Manager C. P. Price at the local McClure's office in the Mallers Building. They are O. L. Winslow, former Pathe salesman, who will have charge of the Indiana territory, and Joseph M. Lyon, an experienced film man who will handle Wisconsin.

George Spoor of the Essanay had an interesting little party last week when he entertained all the branch managers of the K. E. S. E. service. The men were in Chicago to arrange the details of an extensive newspaper advertising campaign for the Max Linder comedies. The first of these appears February 25, but the advance showing will come on February 18.

Among the important visitors in the Zephyrous Village during the last few days, were E. D. Horkheimer, secretary of Balboa, and Silas E. Snyder, Balboa publicity man. Both men called upon MOTOGRAPHY and discussed various phases of the business. "Some day we'll have pictures of three dimensions, and in absolutely natural colors," said Mr. Snyder.

Answering the advertisements run in the McClure magazines, twenty women in the vicinity of the Open Square Theater at 40th and Drexel Boulevard, wrote in to the McClure offices asking for a place at which they could see the McClure "Seven Deadly Sins" series. This is something unprecedented in the way of film publicity.

Manager C. B. Price, the live piece of brain and brawn that sits in the manager's chair at McClure's, spent a few days in Kansas city a few days ago conferring with his Kansas City manager. The King's Theater, the Shenandoah and the Strand of that city have succumbed to the attractions of the "Deadly" McClure's series.

The Sunshine Film Corporation, 1524 Dearborn Bank Building, as announced by J. E. Willis, general manager of the American Bioscope Company, has leased the latter's studio for a term of one year and will, starting February first, produce two single-reel comedies each month. Full details regarding the Sunshine Film Corporation will be found elsewhere in these pages.

That staunch friend of the film industry, Attorney Dave Alexander, is hard at work in the attempt to prevent the development of a number of measures which threaten the business in Chicago and Illinois. Foremost of these is the proposed new theater tax and the new censorship ordinance which would eliminate entirely the films now run under pink permits. More power to you, Dave. We're all back of you.

Here is something new in the film business. Manager C. W. Bunn of the Pathe office has created the position of router, and the first incumbent is W. Hamm, formerly booker in the Chicago International office. Mr. Hamm will have complete charge of all films in transit. Every film that leaves the office will bear a label giving all the train times, connections and routes over which the film will travel to the theater and return. The router will know exactly where every film should be at all times. This move has been made necessary owing to the fact that local express companies have no one delegated to take especial care of the film service.

TWO ARTFUL PUPS

There are two awfully spoiled dogs going around with lifted eye brows and stuck-up noses thinking they're pretty smart these days.

But then it isn't every dog that can get a mention all by himself in an honest-to-goodness criticism written by a real live photoplay critic on a big newspaper. And, too, as every one knows, even a common dog that was never mentioned must have his day!

The two canines in question are Zippy Minter and Peter Fischer.

Zippy is a poodle, and he isn't much to look at, but he had quite a lot to do in Mary Miles Minter's first Mutual Star production, "Youth's Endearing Charm."

Maitland Davis of the Los Angeles Morning Tribune gave him a whole paragraph all to himself, when the critic was writing about Mary Miles Minter's appearance at Tally's Broadway Theater in that city. He said, "You will like Zippy. That happy canine is likely to make us forget our old friend 'Rags' who was a great aid to another star's popularity."

Peter, however, is a bull dog, who is very fond of showing his teeth and of his charming young mistress, Margarita Fischer.

Peter's particular claim to snob-dom just now is the fact that Mae Tinee of the Chicago Tribune, when writing about Miss Fischer's delightful Mutual "'Miss Jackie of the Navy," said that he made a hit with her and that he was a dog with a sense of humor.

ELEANOR BLACK IN "IGNORANCE"

Eleanor Black, the young actress who plays the leading feminine role in the picture "Ignorance," has made several successful appearances in recent releases, notably "The Green Cloak," (Kleine), and "The Soul of a Woman," (Rolfe). She is of English birth and has many abilities besides personal and screen accomplishments which qualify her to take a prominent position in the realm of the silent drama. To acting intelligence of a high order she adds the recommendation that she can shoot, ride horseback, drive an automobile, swim, fence, and negotiate any stunt which calls for fearlessness and decision of action. Miss Black besides has the inestimable gift of natural aptitude for the work, and will probably be heard of a great deal in the film field.

A TWENTY-FIVE DOLLAR FALL

Theodore Marston was directing Charlotte Walker in "Sloth," one of McClure Pictures' Seven Deadly Sins. It was a battle scene and a "stunt" man had been engaged to be shot off his horse in front of the camera.

The scene started, the rider dashed into the camera's range, threw up his arms and slid from his horse.

"No good!" cried Mr. Marston. "Make it a real one."

"You said you wanted a ten dollar fall," protested the "stunt" man.

"I want the best you have," said Mr. Marston. He smiled.

"What are your rates?"

"Ten dollars if I fall on my feet, twenty-five if I throw the horse and fall on my head."

"Give us the twenty-five dollar kind," said Mr. Marston.

The "stunt" man delivered a beautiful fall, landing on his head, unhurt. Two weeks later, making a ten dollar fall for another company, he broke one of his legs.

J. Allen Boone has resigned as vice-president and secretary of the Amalgamated Photo Play Service and has taken offices on the seventh floor of Aeolian Hall, 38 West Forty-second street, New York, where he will act as business representative for a number of well known screen directors, players and writers and co-operate with Charles Emerson Cook in general publicity. Miss Helen Christine Hoerle who has been connected with the scenario departments of the Equitable, Fox and Rolfe-Metro companies in an editorial capacity, and who is widely known as an authority on scripts and their value, will be associated with Mr. Boone in the handling of photoplay material.

Mr. Boone is well known in the film, newspaper and magazine worlds. Previous to his affiliation with the Amalgamated Photo Play Service he was publicity director for Lubin. His work as a newspaper and magazine man has taken him to all parts of the world.

Earl Gulick, who has occupied an executive position with the International for the past two years, has resigned for the purpose of embarking into the motion picture business for himself. Mr. Gulick, who did notable work for the International, will engage in the state rights end of the motion picture industry. He expects to announce the opening of offices within the next few days.

The wife of a William Fox photoplayer was engaging a nurse last week for their child.

"Have you had any experience with children?" she asked one of the applicants for the position.

"Sure, ma'am. I used to be a child myself," was the reply.

Goldwyn's Message to Quincy, Illinois

And 10,000 Towns Like It

MR. SOHM, of Quincy, does not know whether his Belasco Theatre will be able to afford Goldwyn Pictures because he is a "little exhibitor."

This announcement is to assure him and the thousands of other exhibitors like him that the big and powerful Goldwyn productions will be at his disposal and within his reach.

"Little exhibitors" are the backbone of the motion picture industry; they determine the success or failure of a producer. What could be more profitable and satisfying than producing big pictures for the "little exhibitors" as well as for the big ones?

Goldwyn expects to contribute to its own success and solidity in the industry by the cordiality and intelligence of its relationships with the owners and managers of the smaller theatres.

THE NEW TRIANGLE

There is a NEW TRIANGLE.

The word has taken on an added significance, with the entrance of the Triangle Distributing Corporation into the field of activities broadly included by the word "TRIANGLE."

The motion picture industry knows what the word "TRIANGLE" has stood for, and still stands for, in its reference to the grouping in one compact program of the pictures produced by three studios, each in a class by itself—which will continue as heretofore.

But now there is an added meaning, a NEW TRIANGLE—the Exhibitor, the Producer, the Distributor—joined firmly and solidly together by ties whose strength will stand every test.

The Triangle Distributing Corporation is composed of SPECIALISTS, men who appreciate the vital inter-dependence of producer, distributor and exhibitor whose breadth of vision comprehends that the needs of one are the needs of all. They will learn, through close touch with the exhibitor, his views and his suggestions, and thus be enabled to transmit to the producers of Triangle pictures information which will aid them in supplying a product even higher in standard and more satisfying in box-office efficiency than has been the case heretofore—and this is saying much.

Further announcements of very great importance to all exhibitors will follow.

Chicago Exhibitors Hold Election

OFFICERS-ELECT GO ON RECORD OPPOSING DEPOSIT SYSTEM

IT was a big election and brought everybody out. That means that when the Chicago branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America went through the throes of taking on a new set of officers for the coming year there was an interesting time in the zephyrous village by the lake.

The election brought out what is said to be the biggest meeting ever held by any branch of the national organization anywhere anytime. Two hundred and fifty exhibitors and film men, partners and proxies, were on hand at the headquarters in the Masonic Temple when the meeting was called to order by National President Lee A. Ochs of the M. P. E. L. of America. Judge A. P. Tugwell, of Los Angeles, national vice-president, was present as was also Thomas Furniss of Duluth, member of the national executive board.

William E. Heaney, vice president

Joseph Hopp, president

NEWLY ELECTED OFFICIALS OF CHICAGO EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE.

Sidney Smith, re-elected secretary

W. J. Sweeney, treasurer.

The New Officials

Joseph Hopp, of the Ideal Theater Company, a prominent theater man of Chicago, was elected president of the league, defeating George Henry, of the Palace and Iris Theaters. Out of the total of 154 votes cast, Hopp received 106.

William E. Heaney, owner of the Virginia and Crawford Theaters, is vice-president with 109 votes.

Sidney Smith of the Kedzie Amusement Company, received 111 votes, re-electing him secretary, and the well known William J. Sweeney, national secretary of the M. P. E. L., won out again as treasurer with 107 votes to his credit. William Rohe of the Ideal Theater Company was elected sergeant-at-arms. He polled 101 votes of the possible 154.

Following are the members elect of the executive committee and the number of votes received by each: Robert R. Levy, Revelry Theater, 110; Alfred Hamburger, Hamburger Amusement Company, 96; George Hopkinson, Hamlin Theater, 101; Max Schwartz, manager Hoyt Cinematograph Company, 98; M. S. Johnson, former exhibitor, 103; John Frundt, Claremont Theater, 101; M. S. Ludick, a Melrose, Illinois, exhibitor, 100.

The new officers enjoyed a banquet at the Sherman Hotel the day following the election. They assume office at the next regular meeting, on the first Friday in March.

The above officers elect were all presented on one ticket and a sweeping victory was won. The opposing—the "Exhibitors' ticket"—was composed of the following nominees: George Henry, for president, Palace and Iris Theaters; Samuel Gold, vice-president, Gold Theater; Anna Kesner, treasurer, Lyric Theater; Geo. M. Laing, secretary, Burton Theater; Chas. Rysdon, sergeant-at-arms, E-A-R Theater. Executive committee: E. Thos. Beatty, Linden Theater; August Krug, Park Manor Theater; Max Jesselson, Halsted and Olympia Theaters; Jacob Cooper, 20th Century Theater; H. L. Gumbiner, Bertha Theater; Adolph Powell, Rex Theater; H. A. Grundling, Bryn Mawr Theater.

Deposit System Main Issue

Perhaps the main issue at stake in the election was the question of the deposit system. The officials who were elected are openly opposed to that system of film rental. They hold that when men of established business standing pay for films in advance they should not be asked by the exchange for any further proof of integrity. The new administration will also immediately appoint a committee to wait on the film exchanges with a view to inducing them to be more careful in the issue of permits. Neglect on the part of the exchanges to furnish the proper permits for films is aggravating the already ticklish censorship situation in Chicago.

The judges of the election were Tom Furniss, chairman, Paul Sittner, of the Criterian Theater, and Louis Frank, Halsted and Coronada Theaters.

Other Business of the Meeting

Following the casting of the ballots, other business and discussions were taken up. Sixteen applications for new memberships to the League were acted upon favorably and that number is thus added to the local organization's roster.

A "Joker" Action

Another action, carrying a joker, was taken. With National League President Mr. Ochs, the man behind the new publication called the Exhibitors' Trade Review, in the chair, the motion was put through to endorse that paper as the official organ of the Chicago League. And here is the joker. One of the phrases of the resolution reads something like this: "Also, advertising by manufacturers in the Exhibitors' Trade Review will be considered a mark of good will on the part of manufacturers toward the exhibitor." If advertisers were not so keen, and were easily frightened, that might bring some support to Mr. Ochs' organ.

Judge A. P. Tugwell, national vice-president, who presided with Mr. Ochs, made the following statement for publication: "It is impossible for me to see how the meeting could avoid passing the resolution considering the manner in which it was put up to them." Chicago exhibitors also stated publicly that the note was taken after many had left the meeting and that the action does not represent the sentiments of the Chicago theater men as a whole.

At a former meeting a committee headed by Louis Frank, had been appointed to investigate the Trade Review, but that body had never reported.

Mr. Ochs also induced the League to uphold his request of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry not to appoint a representative of the Universal Company on the national censorship committee which is headed by David Wark Griffith. That Mr. Ochs and Universal heartily disagree with each other, due to some recent trouble, is a matter of common gossip.

Griffith Busy

D. W. Griffith's activities have been particularly varied of late. On Thursday, January 25, at Washington, D. C., he delivered an address to the members of the National Art League of America. The following day he was the guest of honor at a dinner given by the Hon. Champ Clark. From the capital Mr. Griffith went to Richmond, Va., in response to an invitation to speak to the Richmond division of the Daughters of the Confederacy. And on the Tuesday he was the guest of the Norfolk, Virginia, Chamber of Commerce. Mr. Griffith's visit to Richmond and Norfolk, his first since his boyhood, was welcomed by the newspapers of both cities as the occasion for lengthy interviews. "Intolerance" is now appearing in Richmond.

James Young Gives Bail

Magistrate McQuade of New York, who listened to the evidence against James Young upon his arraignment recently on a charge of assaulting Harry Garson, a Detroit theatrical manager, released the defendant under $1,000 bail. Mr. Young was arrested on complaint of the Detroit manager following an altercation outside the Astor Theater lobby in New York. Clara Kimball Young, wife of the defendant, witnessed the trouble. The causes of the dispute were not disclosed in court.

Illinois Convention Coming

According to plans already in the process of formation there will be held a state exhibitors' convention in Chicago sometime during the month of March. The meeting is subject to the call of Green M. Luttrell of Jacksonville, Illinois, president of the Illinois branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

Rose Tapley Flays Censors

Rose Tapley, the Vitagraph star, by means of a speech delivered to members of all the women's clubs of Chattanooga, Tennessee, obtained the withdrawal of a censorship bill which had been introduced in the Tennessee legislature.

Miss Tapley pointed out that "purple" or "vampire" films are dying a natural death and there is no need of legislation to exterminate them altogether. She suggested as a remedy, "Don't go to see them and don't advertise them by talking about them."

At Fort Worth, Texas, where Miss Tapley appeared to a number of crowded houses at the Egypt Theater, the exhibitors who presented Miss Tapley to their patrons report a highly commensurate return.

Censors Exchange Film Lists

At the request of a new trio of censors who have begun operations in Springfield, Illinois, lists of the films censored and the cut-outs in each will be forwarded to the Springfield board by the national board of censors and by the board of censors of Chicago. Whatever comes out under the hands of the Chicago censors will come out of the prints of the same subject for Springfield consumption. The censors will check up on the work of the national board to see that their changes have been obeyed. The question is suggested: When all the censors in all the cities begin making all the cuts that all the censors make, what will the picture look like?

Aim Law at Theater Owners

A bill has been introduced in the Illinois legislature, termed an injunction and abatement act, which would permit of prosecutions against the owners of theaters who allow their premises to be used for immoral performances, evil or obscene cabarets, or other indecent exhibitions. Another bill proposes a statute which would make the property owner subject to criminal prosecution. The measures bear the endorsements of the Church Federation and the City Club of Chicago.

General Men Meet in Chicago

Benjamin Hampton, the tobacco and film magnate, who now heads General Film, was in Chicago last week to attend the two-day convention of General exchange managers and salesmen called by Mr. Hampton for the purpose of "getting acquainted." Twenty-one men were present. The sessions were devoted to discussing past business and laying plans for the future.

"Civilization" Sold in South

J. Parker Read, Jr., general manager of the Harper Film Corporation, announces that the All Star Features Company, Jacksonville, Florida, have acquired the state rights of the Thomas H. Ince spectacle, "Civilization." The territory includes Kentucky, Virginia, Tennessee, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, and Florida.

Ohio Censor Scents a Skunk

C. G. WILLIAMS URGES ILLINOIS WOMEN TO CREATE STATE BOARD

CENSORSHIP of speeches has not yet been put into effect in Illinois. The remarks of Charles G. Williams, president of the Ohio board of censors, who lately told an audience of Chicago women that the men in the motion picture industry who talk of "cleaning up the business" remind him of a skunk, may be printed therefore with the same propriety in which they were uttered.

"The object of the national board of censors was to fool the public," said Williams in his address before the Women's Political Equality League of Chicago, February 3.

Financial phase blinds producers

He accused producers of letting the financial phase of their business blind them to the true demands of the public, thus bringing the curse upon themselves. The demand of the public is for censorship, according to Mr. Williams, and he called it not a curse, but "a blessing." He said:

Go back to the time when the public and the ministers and others were crying out against the early moving pictures and we see that the producers got together and said they would give the public clean pictures.

Every once in a while they organize some new body to regulate and pass on films. Some of the biggest men in the business had a meeting in New York just recently and they talked about "cleaning up the moving picture business." They are trying to fool the public again. They remind me of a skunk going about lecturing on sweet incense.

Mr. Williams said that his predecessor on the Ohio board of censors was a lobbyist and publicity man who made an attempt to block needed censorship legislation. He declared also that many Ohio exhibitors favor state censorship.

In concluding his references to the previous administration of the affairs of the censorship board of Ohio, Mr. Williams made the general remark that "If the power of censorship is placed in the hands of wise, intelligent and educated persons, then censorship is a godsend; but if placed in the hands of fools and fanatics, it is an outrage upon civilization." He did not explain how to tell the difference.

Committee Condemns Exchange System

The discussion of censorship came as a preliminary to the introduction of a bill in the Illinois legislature through action of the Women's Political Equality League, to create a state board of censors in Illinois. The bill is now in preparation by a committee of which Mrs. Guy Blanchard is chairman. A member of the committee is Mrs. Alfred Hamburger, wife of the Chicago theatrical manager and exhibitor.

Mrs. Guy Blanchard, chairman of the moving picture committee of the League, told of the committee's activities of two years. The one condition which has influenced the committee more than any other fact, in concluding that legal censorship is necessary, she declares to be the inflexibility of the exchange system. Exhibitors have told her they are willing to co-operate with the women of their neighborhoods in showing the type of pictures they desire, but find themselves unable to obtain the desired pictures from day to day on account of their contracts with the exchanges, requiring the showing of whatever pictures are released.

Mrs. Blanchard expressed her views on the fitness of the average films to MOTOGRAPHY in an interview.

Small Towns Demand Censorship

"The little towns of the state are crying out against the salacious, immoral pictures exhibited in their theaters. The cut-outs which our censors in Chicago make are restored in exhibiting the pictures elsewhere. We must stop it with state censorship laws."

"Can state censorship guarantee justice to the producers?" her interviewer asked. "Censorship, not like the kind we have now in Chicago, but a fair-minded, just form of censorship—will a state board do it?"

"It is the plain duty of educated, intelligent people to see that nothing harmful is allowed in films."

"Do you believe that was the theory of the Ohio censors in forbidding 'The Birth of a Nation' to be shown in Ohio?"

"If I were president of the United States I would see to it that that picture was never exhibited in any state. It prolongs the enmities of the North and the South and stirs up the old hatreds. It is an improper picture."

Ma and Pa as Censors

Mack Sennett has had his troubles with censors, like many an exhibitor, and knows whereof he speaks.

He believes that the only effective censors in the world are Ma and Pa. All other censor boards he considers unnecessary.

"Ma and Pa usually do a pretty good job of it, too," says the soliloquizing producer.

His recent expressions on the subject contain much food for thought for exhibitors who are seeking to win Ma and Pa to their side of the question. He says:

Experience has shown that a motion picture exhibitor can beat the censors in the courts in nine cases out of ten. The whole American legal system—the whole American theory of life—is opposed to the idea of censorship. But the exhibitor can't beat Ma and Pa.

And when he puts on a nasty picture, the exhibitor is taking a big chance with the only censorship he can't beat. And he knows it.

And that's all the censorship the picture business needs. And it is the only one that will work. Leave it to Ma and Pa; especially Ma.

When I was a boy, there used to be a number of respectable old ladies who delighted to go to funerals to see whether the corpse looked natural and to compare notes on the behavior of the widow.

Funerals are a little out of date now as a form of popular entertainment so the old ladies of both sexes censor motion picture films instead.

No doubt it is rather good fun thus to brandish sticks at the wicked motion picture people; to man-handle the story while the poor dejected author sits shivering in a dark corner and the demon producer howls aloud into the night.
